Precious is that Promise in Isajah 59.19. From the West they shall fear the name of IEHOVAH, and from the Rising of the Sun his glory. Some first-fruits from the East, we have heard already: from the West, here follows a Briefe: Of the Harvest from them both, we much long to hear, and earnestly Pray for it to the Lord of the Harvest.

Math. 9.38.

In the 2 yeare 1630. before the Birth of Christ, (according to H. Broughtons Computt) to enjoy temporall food, Israel with 70 Soules went down into Egypt. And in the Yeare 1630 from the Birth of Christ, To enjoy Spirituall food, the Liberties of the Gospell, a great number of our English Brethren were forced hence (to New England) by the Contrivers and Promoters of Destructive Designes for introduction of great Evills, both in Church and State. -- The Adversaries end was to suppresse, but God to propogate the Gospell. At length it was (about twelve yeares) before God let them see any further end, then to preserve their Conciences, and provide for their sustenance. But when providence invited their returne, he let them know it was for some further Errand, that he brought them hither: giving them some Bunches of Grapes, some clusters of Figs in earnest of the prosperous successe of indeavours upon those poore Out-casts those Wild Indian Natives. Whose Language Mr. J. Elliott of Roxbrie (who had lived in Elfrix nigh Cholmsford) and Mr Thomas Mahew junior had endeavoured to attaine.

Mr Winslow in the third Booke, called, The Glorious Progresse of the Gospell amongst the Indians in New England

In the yeare 1646, it seemed good to the most high God, to stir up some Reverend Ministers of the Gospell in New-England, to consider, how they might be serviceable to the Lord Jesus, in further-ing the Native Indians. Hence they sought the Lord, to direct them in a right way, and for a blessing upon their endeavours. Upon October 28. 1646. Foure of us (saith the Honoured Relator) (having sought to God) went according to appointment to the Wigwam (or Tent made of Bough, and Matt) of Waaubon, an Indian Governour: Where he found many Indians gathered together from all quarters to learne of us the Knowledge of God. P. 13, 14, 15.

There are two great questions Right Honourable, which have much troubled ancient and modern writers, and men of greatest depth and ability to resolve: The first, what became of the ten Tribes of Israel, that were carried into Captivity by the King of Syria, when their own country and cities were planted and filled with strangers. The second is, what family, Tribe, Kindred, or people it was that first planted, and afterwards filled filled that vast and long unknown Country of America. Now how I confess the question and former asked then resolved; yet let me acquaint your Honors, that a godly Minister of this City writing to Rabbi Aben-Israel, a great Dr. of the Jews, now living at Amsterdam, to know whether after all their labor, travells, and most diligent enquiry, they did yet know what was become of the ten Tribes of Israel He in answer was to this effect, if not in these words, that they were certainly transported into America, and that they had infallible tokens of their being there. Unto which if I may take the bold not to add what my self, with many others in New-England have observed in the practices of the Indians there, in relation to some things enjoyned in the ceremoniall Law of Moses, about the purification of Women, which no men at this day do observe, nor beside the Jews were ever known in that strictnesse to observe, as these Indians there daily do: As also if the principles of the most grave and sober amongst them, not only in reference to a Deity, the soule of man, the immortallity of the soule, and an eternity after death in happinesse or misery; but also their manifold daily expressions, bewailing the losse of that knowledge their Ancestors had about God, and the way of his Worship; the generall deluge, and of one man only that ever saw God, which they hold forth to be a long time since, (even with the greatest expression of length of time that may be) which certainly I believe to be Mosaicall. As also if many other Circumstances well known to many, (but not fit to be at large expressed in any Epistle) duly considered, It is not less probable that these Indians should come from the stock of Abraham, then any other Nation this day known in the World: Especially considering the juncture of time wherein God hath opened their hearts to entertain the Gospel, being to nigh three years, in which many eminent and learned Divines, have from Scripture grounds, according to their apprehensions foretold the conversion of the Jews.

AN APPENDIX TO THE foregoing Letters, holding forth Conjectures, Observations, and Applications of them.

THE works of the Lord are great, sought out of all them that love them, saith the Psalmist, Psal 111. 3. The word which we render sought out, hath a mighty Emphasis in it: It is a word often used sometimes to Denote the Elaborate care of digging and searching into mines. And sometimes it is made use of to expresse the accurate labors of those who comment upon writings. Indeed there is a golden mine in every work of God; and the foregoing Letters to a gracious eye, are as a discovery of a far more precious mine in America, then those Gold and Silver ones of India. For they bring tidings of the unsearchable riches of Christ revealed unto poor soules in those parts.

Or if thou wilt (Reader) thou mayst eye this worke of God as a full text: affording matter, both for Theoretick, and practick conclusions. I must professe for my self, I could not passe over so rich a mine without digging: nor let passe so full a text (as this work of God in America)

without some short comment: which the request of the worthy Publisher of these precious papers, hath prevailed with me to affix, and publish as an Appendix.

The palpable and present acts of Providence, doe more than hint the approach of Jesus Christ: And the generall content of many judicious, and godly Divines, doth induce considering minds to believe, that the conversion of the Jewes is at hand. Its the expectation of some of the wisest Jewes now living that about the yeare 1650. Either we Christians shall be Mosaicks, or else that those Jewes shall be Christians. The serious consideration of the preceding Letters, inclineth me to think, that there may be at least a remnant of the Generation of Jacob in America (peradventure some of the 10 Tribes dispersion.) And that those sometimes poore, now precious Indians (mentioned in those Letters) may be at the first fruites of the glorious harvest, of Israels redemption. The observation is not to be slighted (though the observer modestly said it was more choosefull than deepe) that the first text out of which Mr Eliot preached, was about the dry bones, Ezek: 37. 9, 10. That by prophesying to the wind, the wind came and the dry bones lived. It may be there is not much weight in the observation, that the word which the Indians use for wind, is Wauboon: and that an Indian of that name is, and hath been very studious for their conversion. Yet to me there is ground for a very weighty thought; that, that portion of Scripture should be first of all opened to them, which clearly foretold the conversion of Israel i.e. The ten tribes universally understood, and peculiarly meant by the name or notion of Israel, when distinct from Judah as in that prophesy it is. Why may we not conjecture, that God (special finger pointed out that Text to be first opened, which immediately concerned the persons to whom it was preached: Especially, (Its some credibly affirme) that the Jewes of the Nether Land (being intreated thereunto) informe that after much inquiry they found some of the ten tribes to be in America. When our Lord came to Nazaret, and standing up to read. Its said there was delivered unto him the book of Isaiah, and he opened the book, and found it written, The spirit of the Lord is upon me, &c. The bringing of that scripture to our Lords hands so providentially was a hint (at least) that the present hearers were in an eminent manner concerned in the prophesie. What ever may be in this observation (which I humbly offer to the searching thoughts of judicious Readers) I am much inclined to conjecture, that there is a Spirit of grace at least of Abraham's seed in these parts, The reasons of my inclination hereunto are these. Pag. 23.

(To omit other grounds of this conjecture) the better and more sober sort of them, delight much to expresse themselves in parables. A thing peculiar to the Jewes, as those who read their writings, or consider Christs manner of expressing himself, will easily see. These and the like considerations prevaile with me to entertain (at least) a conjecture, that these Indians in America, may be Jewes (especially of the ten Tribes) And therefore to hope that the work of Christ among them, may be as a preparitory to his own appearing. Pag. 4.

The Christians when scattered abroad, went to and fro preaching the word. And I wish from my hart, that all those Ministers of the Dispertion (as I may call them) in New England, would stirre up themselves to this work of the Lord, which (now it seems) he intended in his carying of them thither. Surely those tydings as they are grounds of rejoycing to others a far off; so they should be much more incouragements of putting to the hand of such as are there unto this harvest of the Lord. And so much the rather, because the Gospel in its advancement amongst those Western Indians, appears to be not in word only (as it was by the Spaniards among their Indians) but also in power, and in the holy Ghost, and in much assurance: Doe not those true reports show what manner of entrance the Gospel hath among them? how they turn unto God from Idols (from their pawwawes) to serve the living and true God, and to look for his Sonne from Heaven, &c. Pro

Applicatio What doe all those things declare? But this: That Christ hath made this day of his power to arise upon those poor soul: In making them a willing people: And what improvement should we make of this? comment upon the works of the Lord, if not this or the like; First, To study and search into the works of the Lord, to see how he counterplots the enemy in his designes: In making the late Bishops persecuting of the Godly tend to the promoting of the Gospel. Secondly, To take heed of dispising the day of smale things. It being Gods way to lay most glorious workes upon litle and despicable foundations: And to advance the Treasure of the Gospel in earthen vessels, even to the end of the earth, Thirdly, To be ashamed of and bewaile our want of affection to, and estimation of that glorious Gospel, and those great things of Christ which those poor Heathens upon the little Glymmerings and taste so exceedingly value and improve.

Lastly, Be incouraged to put to your helping hand unto the work of the Lord. And to that end, 1. Arise ye heads of our Tribes in Old England, and extend your help to further Christs Labourers in N: England. Rather steal from your sleep an hour, then suffer that good Ordinance to lye asleep so long; which if drawn into an act, will exceedingly further this blessed work. Surely if you were petitioned to in the name of Christ, and his Gospel, to give mony out of your own purse to exalt him in furthering it. Durst you deny it! How much lesse can you deny the passing of an act to enable some to receive and dispose what others would gladly give. The work is so cleare, that you need not many howres to debate it: And I hope you are so willing that I shall not need more words to presse it, only let me add this that as Ministers, so Statists do finde personall examples, the most powerfull motives to pratick doctrine. 2 Rouze up your selves my Brethren, ye Preachers of the Gospel, this work concerns you. Contrive and plot, preach for, and presse the advancement here of. Its cleare you may do much: Let not this be your condemnation, that you did nothing. 3 Come forth ye Masters of mony, part with your Gold to promote the Gospel; Let the gift of God in temporal things make way, for the Indians receipt of spiritualls. If you give any thing into Banke, Christ will keep account thereof, and return you hear of (things) what are necessary. Rest assured of this, what ever you

THE PREFACE, VVHEREIN THE AVTHORS OF THESE ANNOTATIONS ENSVING, PRESENT SOME IMPORTANT considerations of the happy progresse of the Gospel in this Kingdome; together with an account of their undertaking and performance of this Service for the clearing of the Sacred Text to the understanding of the Christian READER.

WE cannot but observe and take it to be our duties to acknowledge (if we make any good use of our reason, (as men) or of our Religion, (as Christians) that for the best meanes of holy information of our mindes, and the salvation of our soules, and for the most free and frequent use of such meanes (besides many comfortable Accommodations for our bodily welfare) no people of the world hath had more cause, to set up memorials of gratitude, for the goodnesse of God unto them, then we of this Iland, who have (for a long time) beene as the Inhabitants of the Mountaine of the Lord of Hosts, where he hath made unto his people, a feast of fat things, a feast of wine * on the Lees, of fat things full of marrow, of wine * on the Lees well refined: as the Prophet Isaiah 25. vers. 6. elegantly setteth forth the fulnesse and delicacie of his Spirituall provision.

* Or drawne from the Lees.

For since the reformation of Religion, almost miraculously wrought, (though we professe to beleeve Gods word, without the pawn of a miracle to make it good) for it prevailed against mightie Engines (all the power and policie of the Popish party) by weake instruments, (a childe and a woman) and being begun by him and (after a red parenthesis of persecution) by her brought onwards toward perfection; toward it we may say, not to it; for God reserved further advances and neerer approches, to that faire marke for aftertimes; we have since then, (we say) enjoyed, a superabundant measure of Sacred and secular blessings, above other Nations, and have had our greatest share of the best of both.

For what (for the one sort) more excellent then the Gospel of peace, the power and puritie of the meanes of grace? And what better for the other, then such and so long tranquillitie of Church and State (though not equally either pure or quiet in * both Kingdoms of great Britaine) and plenty withall, as (untill of late) have been continued to us; which if we have not duely valued in their fruition (while we had them) God may most justly (as he hath begun to doe) make us to know their price by their losse; and so upon our forfeiture of so great favours, the saying of the Wiseman may be wofully verified on our part, He that encreaseth knowledge encreaseth sorrow, Eccles. 1. 18.

* Est Ecclesiæ Scoticanæ privilegium rarum præ multis, in quo ejus nomen apud cæteros fuit celebre, quod circiter annos plus minus 54. sine Schismate, nedum hæresi, unitatem cum puritate doctrinæ retinuerit. Sic in Elogio præfatorio de confessio. in principio Syntag. confess. p. 6. edit. Genevæ, 1612.

That such infelicitie may not befall us, or fallen upon us, that it may neither encrease nor continue, untill it quite overwhelme us; it will much concern us, by a serious and considerate review of the times past, to note by what steps, and degrees, the good providence of God hath called and conducted us, out of darknesse into the marvellous light, 1 Pet. 2. 19. which our eyes have seene, and to the happy state (for spirituall proficiencie) which we have had, above that which any of our forefathers have knowne in his former times. For though God being omnipotent, could doe all things as perfectly at once, as in the duration and succession of many Ages: he is pleased, for the most part, by graduall accesses, to promote his owne operations, to the period of their perfect accomplishment.

We see this in the worke of the visible world, which he could have furnished and finished, so soone as he beganne it, the first minute of the first day, aswell as the last of the sixt; but he first made a grosse darke and confused masse of generall matter, out of which day by day, he drew the severall parts of the ensuing dayes workes. He could have made both Light and Firmament, and Sunne and Moone and Starres and all the rest in one instant, but (that we might not with too quicke and transient Cogitations passe over his workes) he tooke one day for the Light without the Sunne, and another for the Firmament, and another for the garnishing of it, with those glorious lamps, which shine unto the world by day or by night; and man the beſt of his creatures (diſcernable by ſenſe) he reſerved for the laſt day, and for the laſt worke of that day; and then (when man was made) what he had called but good before, he called (in concluſion) very good, Gen. 1. 31. and there ſetting up his reſt, he made no more.

Anſwerable hereunto, hath beene the progreſſe of his handmaid, Natures working, from that day to this; as we may trace her in her footſteps, from the ſeed time of conception of all her children (of what kinde ſoever) to the harveſt of their ripe and perfect growth; and we may obſerve the like graduall proceeding towards ſpirituall perfection (to which what we have now ſaid, ſerveth but by way of manuduction:) for evidence whereof, many particulars of moment might be propoſed, but we will ſingle out a few ſuch, as are moſt proper and pertinent to the matter in hand, and thoſe we will reduce to theſe ſeverall heads.

1. The firſt concerning Preachers, and preaching of the Word, and the adminiſtration of the Sacrament of the Lords Supper.

2. The ſecond the Tranſlation of the Scriptures into a tongue underſtood by vulgar people.

3. The third of the neceſſitie and utilitie of Annotations, for expoſition of difficult places.

4. The fourth, eſpeciall conſiderations upon ſome Notes and Annotations in particular.

For the firſt, in the beginning of the reigne of that renowned Queene (whoſe zeale and conſtancie to true Religion, hath embalmed her name to perpetuall memory) when the abomination of the Maſſe was baniſhed out of the Church, and Idols were demoliſhed rather by generall Decree then by generall execution of what was decreed; (for through the doting of ſuperſtitious indulgence, or through the negligence and unfaithfulneſſe of inferiour Officers ſome of them were reprieved from ruine, and (as it now appeareth) reſerved for a time of more exact reformation, and Idoll-Shepheards removed from the Sheepfold of Chriſt, and others to be choſen for the overſight of their Paſtorall charges: there were then ſo few able and Orthodoxe Divines to be found (in the Land) that there was a neceſſitie of admitting many ſuch into the Miniſtery, as was neither Preachers, (by profeſſion) nor Schollers, (by education) but meere reading Proteſtants ſincerely affected to the truth of Religion.

Then were there not ſo many well qualified Paſtours in all the Counties in the Kingdome, as now may be numbred in this one Citie of LONDON. It was then as rare a thing to finde a Pulpit with a clapper (to uſe the phraſe of * Father Latimers Sermons) as a Bell without one. For the Pulpit (in many places) was as ſeldome uſed, by the unpreaching Clergie of thoſe times, as the Sanctum Sanctorum, by the high Prieſts of old; and they might be called high Prieſts in conformitie to them, by reaſon of their locall exaltation of themſelves (about once a yeere) above the heads of the People.

In reſpect of whoſe famine of the word; ſome thought themſelves provided for (in a competent meaſure) if after many weekes faſting they might be ſure of a Sermon once a Quarter. After that, their proviſion was amended, and an augmentation of Sermons made, (from foure to twelve a yeere) by an Order from the higher powers, which more commended the care of the Governours, then th obſervation of it, did the zeale of the Miniſters, who failed of performance, (for that conſtitution notwithſtanding) the people in many places were not ſo conſtantly ſupplied, with one Sermon every moneth, as in moſt they are now, with two Sermons every Sabbath throughout the whole yeere: Beſides divers ſettled Lectures, Exerciſes, and other occaſionall preachings in the weeke dayes.

b That of the reading Pſalmes in the Service Booke.

So that in our dayes we ſee God hath ſpoken the word, and b great is the company of Preachers, (as one Tranſlation rendreth it,) Pſal. 68. 11. and Preachers ſpeake the word, and great is the multitude of Sermons: which have ſo much more abounded in number, and excelled in goodneſſe in our Church, as we have beene further removed from the Tyrannicall reigne of that Arch-hypocrite, who uſurping the title of principall Biſhop, Paſtor, and Doctor of the Church, doth ſeldome or never performe the principall Office of a Biſhop, Paſtor, and Doctor of the Church: which is (as the Pſeudo-Synod of c Trent is forced to confeſſe) to preach the word of God unto the people.

c Concil. Trident. Seſſ. 24. c. 4.

And if ever thoſe Maſters of the myſterie of iniquitie (having a long ſince, ſet on foote, their deſigne, to make this Kingdome retrograde in Religion, in turning toward the Tenets of Doctrine, and forme of worſhip of the Romiſh Church) have any cauſe to hope to mount it on horſebacke, it muſt be by putting downe the moſt ſound, ſincere and zealous preaching of the Word, as by ſome experimentall preparations we have ſeene of late, and our reaſon may fore-ſee, and fore-caſt for the time to come; for this hath beene, and it is like may be hereafter, their manner; who labour to extinguiſh (at leaſt to eclipſe) the light of Evangelicall Doctrine: Firſt by picking a quarrell, with the moſt ſufficient, diligent and conſcionable Preachers, to ſtop their mouthes, impriſon their perſons, or to drive them from their Countries.

Then by reſtraining of Sermons to Sundayes, Sunday Sermons firſt to once a day, then to once a moneth, to goe backward by a graduall Apoſtaſie, from leſſe to leſſe, till weekly preaching be turned into weekly reading of an Homilie, not of an Homilie againſt the perill of Idolatry, Idolatry, but for it, and of Legendary fables, which was the ordinary diet, provided for the ſouls of our forefathers in former times: A miſerable Ordinary, where the meat is either as bad as poyſon, or no better then huskes.

In this reſpect how our ſtock of Spirituall treaſure is increaſed, the Word of God dwelling ſo richly, as the Apoſtle requireth, Coloſ. 3. 16. (both in us, and among us) how much our portion is bettered, by plenty of the ſincere milke of the Word for the Babes of Chriſt, and of ſtrong meat for ſuch as are of more maturitie of age, and Judgement; How much more comfortable our Engliſh Communion is then their Latine Maſſe, and our Lords Table better furniſhed then their Altar, (though gorgeouſly ſet out with gilded or golden pictures) with Bread being ſolid, ſubſtantiall, not meerly ſuperficiall, as their leafe-like wafer; our Wine pure and generous (not embaſed as theirs) with mixture of water, and copiouſly powred out to all the people, (according to the Lords liberall allowance to the communion of Saints) not ſacrilegiouſly with-held; (as an eſpeciall priviledge of the Prieſts) how much our condition is amended by ſuch particulars, we may cleerely perceive, and ſhould never forget, with thankefull hearts, and affectionate expreſſions to acknowledge.

2. Our ſecond conſideration may be ſet on the Tranſlation of the Scripture into a Language underſtood by unlearned people, that they might ſearch the Scriptures, and by ſearching of them might finde in them, what is moſt to be deſired, eternall life; for they are Bookes not for the Clergie onely, (though for them eſpecially) for which cauſe ſome Councels have decreed, [d] That Biſhops ſhould have them ſo much in their eyes as not to looke beſides them in any bookes of Gentile learning: And that they and the [e] Gueſts at their Tables ſhould have them at their eares, ſome reading to them while they ſate at meate to prevent idle tales, and to miniſter occaſion of godly diſcourſe; (as [f] Nepotian was wont to doe) but for the common people likewiſe, yea for women as well as men: otherwiſe Saint Iohn would not have written one of his [g] Epiſtles to one of that Sex under the title of an elect Lady.

By his example, did that zealous and learned Doctor Hierome write many Epiſtles unto women, wherein he exhorted ſome of them to ſuch a ſettled and ſerious reading of thoſe Sacred writings, as not to lay them downe out of their hands [h] untill being overcome with ſleepe, and not able any longer to hold up their heads, they bowed them downe as it were to ſalute the leaves, below them, with a kiſſe: and he gave advice to mothers ([i] before their maides) to Catechize their daughters, out of the Scriptures, and to ſet them to learne by heart a [k] portion of them for a daily taske.

In this Sacred exerciſe they that with devotion and diligence beſtow themſelves (beſides many other Spirituall advantages) may finde a perfect direction, to their conſciences, for all duties, and infallible reſolution of all doubts in caſes which concerne them; yea an unſpeakable conſolation in all croſſes, that befall them: whereof Luther (doubtleſſe) had a moſt intenſive ſenſe and apprehenſion, when he ſaid he would not live in Paradiſe without the Word; but with that, [l] it would be eaſie for a man to live even in hell it ſelfe.

Which words though they import an hyperbolicall emphaſis, or a ſtrong impreſſion of his vehement and vigorous ſpirit; yet without either figure of Rhetorique or paſſion of minde, it may well be ſaid of every Booke of the Divine Oracles ſeverally taken (how much more of the whole Bible which containes them all?) that it is a Jewell of an ineſtimable price, in their account, to whom it is propoſed, not locked up in the Cabinet of a ſtrange Tongue, but laid open to evident view, in a true and intelligible Tranſlation thereof.

Not without great cauſe then hath it beene held ſo great an happineſſe to the Church of God, for children to read their Fathers minde, and good will towards them in their Mother Tongue; that a ſolemne Feaſt hath beene ſet up, and celebrated for it; ſuch an one was that of the Germane Proteſtants, which they made for a gratefull remembrance of the Dutch Tranſlation of the Bible among them: for which, though ſome of their Popiſh oppoſites [m] derided them, yet the wiſer ſort of that ſeducing Sect did not diſdaine (in part) to follow them, when (not without ſome contradiction to their owne received principles, and former practiſe) they tranſlated, firſt the New Teſtament at Rhemes, and ſince the Old at Doway in the Engliſh Tongue.

It was no doubt their new deliverance from the blindneſſe and bondage of the Romiſh Religion that made thoſe pious Proteſtants ſo much to take to heart that Light and Libertie. And if our longer enjoyment, of a greater light, have not dazeled our eyes, and our greater Libertie have not made us Libertines, and looſened the bond of gratitude to God, (our moſt gracious Benefactor) we will hold it our parts, to entertaine the apprehenſion of the like favour, with the like thankfull affections, though our expreſſes proceed not to ſuch a publique ſolemnitie. And we muſt conſider it not onely in kinde, but in reſpect of * continuance, and degree of excellencie for the Bleſſing is ſo much more precious as it draweth neerer to perfection in our dayes: whereof we ſhall preſent the Reader with a briefe Advertiſement, obſerving the order of the time, and degree of increaſe of ſupernaturall light, ſhining more and more, (through the ſeverall Tranſlations of the Word of God, into the Language of our Countrey) unto the perfect day, of the preſent Age wherein we live.

The firſt good newes of this kinde, which came to the notice of the Inhabitants of this Iſland, was in the yeere 700. or as ſome write, 709 when [n] Adelme Biſhop of* Sherborne (for both Biſhopricks and Archbiſhopricks were [o] anciently otherwiſe divided and entituled then now they are) tranſlated the Pſalmes of David, into the Saxon Language, which is thought to have ſuffered ſhipwrack by the Tempeſt of the [p] Daniſh warres, wherein the Churches (which were the learned Treaſuries or publique Libraries of thoſe times) were [q] burned.

About twenty, or at the moſt thirty yeeres after, Beda tranſlated the whole Bible into the ſame Tongue, as Maſter Fox obſerveth in his Epiſtle Dedicatory, to Queene Elizabeth, ſet before his Tranſlation of the Goſpels out of the Saxon Tongue, Printed Anno 1571. Yet * elſewhere he maketh mention onely of the Tranſlation of S. Iohns Goſpel as the laſt labour of his life.

After Beda about two hundred yeeres, King [r] Alfred undertooke the Tranſlation of the Pſalter, happily either to ſupply the loſſe of that of Adelme, or to better that of Bedaes: for * Bedaes Tranſlation was ſimple without any curioſitie of Stile; and of Alfred, it is ſaid of him that [s] none of the Engliſh was more acute in conceit, or more elegant in expreſſion then he was: which was the more to be marvelled at, [t] becauſe he was twelve yeer old, before he knew a letter on the Booke; but he * ended his life well-neere the beginning of his worke, having ſcarce finiſhed the firſt part of it.

The Tranſlation of the Bible of moſt note after theſe, (and whether any came betweene we doe not finde) is that of Iohn Wickliffe, which was beſt liked and moſt uſed, by the better ſort of Chriſtians in the reign of King Richard the Second, but ſo much maligned by the Popiſh party, that it was condemned in a Provinciall Synod at Oxford, held under [u] Archbiſhop Arundel, Anno 1406. and after he was dead and buried, by a Decree of the * Councell of Conſtance about the yeere 1412. his bones were to be unburied, and his Bookes to be burned: And ſo they were, not onely where the Decree was made, but in Bohemia, where [x] Subincus (Archbiſhop of Prague) making diligent inquiſition after them found to the number of two hundred Volumes of his compoſing, (moſt excellently written, and richly adorned with boſſes of gold, and rich coverings) and burnt them all. And in [y] England there was a ſtrict Proclamation for aboliſhing of them by King Henry the Eight, Anno 1546.

And though the Papiſts had an eſpeciall ſpight at his Tranſlation of the Bible, both becauſe it was a Tranſlation into the Vulgar Tongue, and ſuch a Tranſlation, as they accounted moſt Hereticall, yet (by Gods providence) ſome Manuſcript Copies of it (aſwell as of other of his Bookes) were preſerved, which are extant to this day, in divers [z] Libraries of this Kingdome, particularly mentioned in the Margent; which is atteſted by a very * learned Authour, much verſed in the moſt Authentick Records and Copies of ancient Writers.

Next unto Wickliffes Tranſlation, was that of Iohn [a] Treviſa, who undertooke and finiſhed the Tranſlation of the whole Bible in Engliſh at the intreaty of his Patrone the Lord Barkley, Anno 1397. in the reigne of Richard the Second, as * Balæus writeth, though ſome ſay it was in the yeere 1400. and in the reigne of Edward the Fourth.

In the yeere 1527. [b] Tyndall firſt tranſlated the New Teſtament; after that, he tooke in hand the Tranſlation of the Old, finiſhing the five Bookes of Moſes, with ſundry moſt learned and godly Prologues; the like alſo he did upon the New Teſtament. When he tranſlated the fifth Booke of Moſes called Deuteron: minding to print the Tranſlation at Hamburg, he ſayled thitherward, but by the way (upon the coaſt of Holland) [c] he ſuffered Ship-wrack, whereby he loſt all his Bookes and Copies, and ſo was compelled to beginne all againe anew; when (in another Ship) he was by the Divine providence ſafely conveyed whither he firſt intended: and [d] where Maſter Coverdale being there before him, tarried for him, who helped him in the Tranſlation of the five Bookes of Moſes, from Eaſter till December: and 'tis like he made uſe of his helpe, if not to compoſe, at leaſt, to reviſe his Tranſlation of the New Teſtament; which ſocietie in the ſame ſervice, may be the reaſon, that the Tranſlation is ſometimes called Tyndals, ſometimes Coverdales.

But what name ſoever it had, it had an ill name among the Popiſh Prelates chiefly for Tyndals ſake, thoſe [e] Spirituall Fathers cryed out upon it; bearing men in hand that there were a thouſand hereſies in it; and ſome ſaid it was not poſsible to tranſlate the Scriptures into Engliſh; ſome, that it was not lawfull for Lay people to have it in their Mother Tongue; ſome, that it would make them all Heretiques.

For prevention whereof a [f] Proclamation was publiſhed by King Henry the Eight, bearing date, Iuly 8. 1546. prohibiting after the firſt of Auguſt, all perſons to receive, take, or keep in his or their possession, the Text of the New Testament, of Tyndals or Coverdales Translation in English, or any Bookes in the English Tongue, under the names of Frith, Tyndall, Wickliffe, Ioy, Roy, Barill, Bale, Barnes, Coverdale, Turner, Tracy. But above all the name of Tyndall and his Translation were most traduced, which were exposed to more hate and contempt by meanes of Sir Thomas More, who used his wit (which was as sharpe as his Spleen) to cavill at his Writings, and his power, which was as great as both, (being Lord Chancellour of England) to suppresse them, especially his Translation of the Scripture: which that it might the more undoubtedly be done, (besides the Proclamation forementioned) there was an [g] Act of Parliament passed, to abolish Tyndals Translation by name, with divers other English Bookes, yet with allowance of other Translations, for private use, and with limitation and exception of severall sorts of persons to whom they were forbidden.

g 34, 35. of K. H. 8. c. 1. 4. Pollons Collect. p. 746 Edit. 1640.

Notwithstanding Tyndals Translation was not smothered, but came to light, and was more acceptable for the correction of it by Thomas Matthewes, which was published as his Translation with Annotations, and printed by speciall priviledge of King Edward the Sixt, An. 1551. and so was that of Coverdales allowed by publike Authoritie, which bore his name, because he made some corrections of Tyndals.

And from [h] the beginning of Edward the Sixt, Anno 1549. towards the twentieth of Queene Elizabeth, Anno 1577. the Bibles of the English Translation used in Churches, were either Tyndals or Coverdales; but that Tyndals was the chiefe and most warranted may thence be collected, for that the reading of Psalmes are in the Service Bookes to this day, according to his Translations, (as some have observed) the Epistles and Gospels are also conformable to the same Translation. In the yeere 1560. were the Geneva Interpretations, and Annotations set forth. And Ann. 1577. there was an English Edition of the Bible published by divers Bishops in a large Volume, yet that from Geneva was generally more used, and more esteemed then any of those that went before it, untill the yeere 1612. when the last Translation procured by King Iames was first imprinted, which for the Text thereof, may give better satisfaction to such as have abilitie, to compare the Originall of both Testaments and their Translations together.

There were other English Translations of the Bible, some of them very ancient ([i] as the phrase of them sheweth) though the time of their publication be not mentioned: as those two in the Kings Library at S[t]. Iames, and some later: but these sufficiently shew, what for this particular we have cause to observe (with thanksgiving to God) viz. how much our holy portion is improved to the benefit of common Readers.

i A little sowre dowe aperieth the whole gober, 1 Cor. 5. 6. and worshippers of Mammetts, vers. 11.

At the first only some parcels of the Bible were Translated; we have it all, we have it immediately Translated out of the Original by learned men in both Languages; the first Translations into English were for the most part taken out of the vulgar Latine, which was so false that Isido. Clarius a famous Papist, (first a Fryer, afterward a Bishop) professeth in the Preface of his first Edition of that at Venice, An. 1542. (which in the following Editions is left out) that he found no fewer then [l] 8000. places to be amended.

l Loca ad octo millia annotat. atque emendat. à nobis sunt. Isid. Clarius in Præf. Bibl. Sacrosanct. propositi. Præfat. edit. 1542. Venetiis.

In former times though the Bible were Translated into English, yet was it not to be read in [m] Churches, but only by particular persons at home, nor by all generally, for * no woman, Artificers, Apprentices, Iourney-men, Servingmen, none of the degrees of Yeomen, or Husbandmen, nor Labourers, were permitted so much as a private reading thereof. We have generally a free use of them both in private and in publique; There hath been a prohibition of Annotations to be Printed with the English Bibles by [cc] Act of Parliament, our Libertie in that respect is much enlarged, which is that, which we are more especially to note, and that is the next thing in order, and the third in number we are now to speake of.

m The Bible shall not be read in English in any Church, Stat. 34. 35. of H. 8. c. 1.

The third thing which improveth the price of our portion in Religion, is the necessary use and great benefit of Expositions and Annotations upon the Bible, to render the right meaning of the words of the Translation, as the Translation doth of the words of the Originall; for though the Scriptures may have their use, and force upon the affections of ignorant Readers, at first sight, without any serious search into their hidden sense, and may have a work upon the Will to encline it to good, or withdraw it from evill, (as it was with [n] Austin, in his casuall and sudden reading of the Apostle, Let us walke honestly as in the day, not in rioting and drunkennesse, not in chambering and wantonnesse, not in strife and envying, Rom. 13. 13.) yet what Peter saith of his beloved brother Pauls Epistles, there be some things which are hard to be understood, 2 Pet. 3. 15, 16. may be truly said of many other parts of holy Scripture, especially in the books of Genesis, Iob, Canticles, Ezekiel, Daniel, and the Revelation.

n Codicem Apostoli arripui & legi in silentio capitul. quo primum conjecti sunt oculi mei, non in cõmissationibus: nec ultra volui legere, nec opus erat platim, quippe &c. Aug. Confess. lib. 8. cap 12.

To which he that seriously reads them may apply the pathetick Admiration of Austin.[o] There is a wonderfull profoundnesse in thy words, a wonderfull profoundnesse oh my God, a wonderfull profoundnesse: it is a matter of horror to pierce towards the depth of them, an horrour of honour, and terrour of Love; So that if the Question were put to most of those (who are daily conversant in the reading of the Bible, and read it by course, from the one end to the other) which Philip put unto the Eunuch, Vnderstandest thou what thou readest? their Answer (for divers Texts) might be

be the same with his; How can I except some one should guide me? Act. 8. vers. 30, 31.

The Question implyeth, that he that readeth should (if it may be) understand what he readeth; and our Saviour his precept enjoyneth an endeavour to that purpose, where he saith, Who so readeth let him understand, Matth. 24. 15.

And the Answer directeth to the Reader to desire and to seek for a guide, and though now there be none to be found whose guidance is unfallible (for the best guide may be sometimes to seek, and seeking may be at a losse, for the proper sense of some obscure places of the Scripture) yet may he make such a probable interpretation of them, as may prevent a dangerous misconstruction of an imprudent inconsiderate Reader.

It is conceived (by some of eminent note) that if Origen had met with a sound Comment or Marginall Note upon Matth. 19. 12. it might have prevented his [p] Castration of himself, whereto he was induced, by taking (and thereby mistaking) the words in the extreamest rigour of the literall sense.

But in expounding of Scripture, he was a [q] Doctor to others, almost before he was a Disciple to any, and was so indeliberate in his Dictates and over indulgent to his wit, that as Erasmus said of him, he would make a Book, while a man might stand on one foot, which made the Books of his making to be numbred to no lesse then [r] six thousand.

Nor had those ridiculous heresies of [f] Peputians, [t] Seleucians, and [u] Ascites, and such like haply ever been hatched, if the places of Scripture, on which they founded their erroneous opinions, had been fenced with an Orthodox exposition, against misconstruction.

Nor had (it may be) such groundlesse and fond fantasies, as some have set abroach, and spread abroad, been the fruit of their familiar reading of the Word of God, if some Expositors or Annotationers, had been ready at hand, to shew them the sense of difficult sayings; In which respect (by the goodnesse of God) the moderne times are more happy, then many Centuries of anciently precedent ages.

Which leads us to our fourth consideration; And it is concerning some Annotations in particular, and (among them) principally to the Marginall notes of the Geneva Bibles, and of our own, which now we present to publique view, occasioned by them.

The Annotations of the Bible of most note untill of late, were those of Liranus, Strabus, Vatablus, Iunius and Tremelius, and since them Piscators and the Italian and Dutch Annotations (which we shall have occasion to mention again) have been much approved by the learned, in whom we may observe an advantagious proficiency by Succession of time; The later (they that came after, for the most part, making use of those that went before) advancing in clearnesse, and soundnesse of Interpretation, above the former.

In English those that have been best known, and most used amongst us, have been the Geneva Annotations, made by our zealous and laborious Countreymen, who in Queene Maries dayes, betooke themselves to that Citie (as to a Citie of Refuge from the reach of that persecution, which raged as hot as fire, while she reigned over this Realme, and the Pope over her.) In the time of their exile there (as they professe in their Prefatory Epistle to their Brethren of England) they were for the space of two yeers and more, day and night, with feare and tremling, occupyed in the Labour of their English translation with notes upon it: which when they had finished, in the yeere, 1560. they presented it, with an especiall Dedication (bearing Date the same yeere) to the incomparable Princesse Queene Elizabeth; which was received with such acceptation of Her Majestie, and generall liking of Her people, that from that time, untill the edition of the last translation of the Bible, it was Printed by Hers, and Her rightfull and Royall Successours Printers, above thirtie times over.

Though it was their mishap (without any merit) to be noted with a blacke Coale, as guiltie of mis-interpretation, touching the Divinitie of Christ and his Messiah-ship, and as Symbolizing with Arrians and Iews, against them both: and this was publikely charged upon them by an Academicall Doctor * in a solemne Assembly of the Universitie of Oxford; But of this crime they were more then absolved by * Sir Thomas Bodly (the famous Founder and Furnisher of the publique Library) his Letter written in their defence and praise, which was read by the [w] Doctor of the Chaire in St. Maries Pulpit, and by his and the Orthodox Governors of the Universitie silencing of the Doctor [x] for his Vnorthodox and Scandalous Sermons: whereby the Church and State were involved in an high and hainous degree of guilt, (if the Notes were so unsound as he had suggested) for allowing them to be passable, and publique by so many Impressions: and lastly by [cc] one of our Associates, who (about that time) wrote a Vindication of them from such infamous imputations, producing so many cleare attestations to Christs Divinitie, and Messiah-ship, against both Arrians and Iews, out of their Annotations on the Prophet Esay only, as if they had been forewarned of, and meant to be forearmed against, the assault of such Satanicall slanders.

Yet were not the Notes (for all that) admitted to the Margine of the Reformed and Refined Edition of the Bible, so that though that by correction of the errors of precedent Translators, ſlators, the light was ſnuffed, and ſo burned clearer then before, the people complained, that they could not ſee into the ſenſe of the Scripture, ſo well as formerly they did, by the Geneva Bibles, becauſe their ſpectacles of Annotations were not fitted to the underſtanding of the new Text, nor any other ſupplyed in their ſtead.

Hence were divers of the Stationers and Printers of London, induced to Petition the Committee of the Honourable Houſe of Commons, for Licence to Print the Geneva Notes upon the Bible, or that ſome Notes might be fitted to the new Tranſlation: which was accordingly granted, with an Order for review and correction of thoſe of the Geneva edition, by leaving out ſuch of them, as there was cauſe to diſlike, by clearing thoſe that were doubtfull, and by ſupplying ſuch as were defective.

For which purpoſe Letters were directed to ſome of Us from the Chaire of the Committee for Religion, and perſonall invitations to others, to undertake and divide the Taske among Us, and ſo cometh in our part, whereof we ſhall give the World a true and juſt accompt in that which followeth.

Firſt, as we had no thoughts of ſuch a ſervice, untill by Authoritie we were ſo called unto it, ſo ſince we have accepted of it, we have thought of nothing ſo much, as how we might diſcharge it, with beſt advantage to the glory of God, and the inſtruction of his people, and therefore we have put our ſelves to much more pains (for many moneths) in conſulting with many more Authors, in ſeverall Languages, then at firſt we thought of, that (for the propriety of the Originall Text, for pertinent and profitable varietie of verſions, for conſonancy of parallel Scriptures, and for perſpicuitie in clearing of the darkeſt places) we might bring in ſuch Obſervations, as might not only ſerve to edifie the ordinary Reader, but might likewiſe gratifie our Brethren of the Miniſtery, at leaſt ſuch among them, as have not the means to purchaſe, or leiſure to peruſe, ſo many books, as (by Order of the Committee) we were furniſhed withall, for the finiſhing of the Worke, committed to our hands.

Among which (as we were directed, by thoſe who gave us our charge) we have made ſpeciall uſe of the Italian Annotations of Deodat, and of the Dutch Bibles, the one lately againe ſet forth at Geneva, the other in Holland, by Order of the States; Yet ſo, that if we have borrowed ought of either, as they have done of thoſe, who did precede them, in the like Obſervations, we ſhall deſire but to take it to uſury, and to make our returne of what we receive, farre above the rate of ordinary intereſt: And in this holy buſineſſe we have none other ambition then to give better ſatisfaction to an apprehenſive Reader, for the ſenſe of the whole Bible, then (in this kinde) we have met withall, in any one Worke of ~~of~~ what Authors ſoever.

And therefore though we hold the Geneva Annotations, to be in the maine points of Religion, Sound and Orthodox in Doctrine, and guiltie of no errour, which may not be incident to Learned, Godly, and Well-meaning men, (and taking them for ſuch as for thoſe times wherein they were made, were very worthy of praiſe for their profitable uſe, for then they were the beſt that were extant in Engliſh) we conceive for our ſelves, that we ſhall better diſcharge the truſt repoſed in us, and doe more anſwerably to the intention of thoſe who ſet us on worke, and better ſatisfie the expectation of ſuch others, as ſet obſervant Eyes upon our aſſiduous and ſociable purſuance of the ſervice impoſed on us, if (being as repayrers of buildings to rip into an old houſe) we rather took it quite down, and built a new one, then patched it up, with here and there a new peece of our own putting in, which would not be decently ſutable to the other parts, nor any way anſwerable, either in meaſure or manner of Structure, to ſuch a Modell (as conſidering the advantage of the preſent age, for helps and means to exceed the precedent) ſome apprehenſive men have already prefigured to our performance.

Whereof though we faile (as what abilitie or induſtry can reach to the extent of an active fancie?) not only in falling ſhort of their conceits, or of our own deſires of what we would, and ſhould doe, but of acceptance of what we could, and have done, we ſhall have recourſe (for our comfort) to the ſinceritie of our hearts (whereto we may atteſt the Divine Omniſcience, and with warrant from both, may be allowed to profeſſe (with the bleſſed Apoſtle Paul) that we are not of thoſe that corrupt the word of God, 2 Cor. 2. 17. or who handle it deceitfully, Chap. 4. 2. nor who wreſt any part of it, to the patronage of any errour, of what denomination ſoever. Nor have we added to it any of our own preconceived opinions, to imprint a partialitie on our Expoſitions; Nor taken from it or ſmothered the leaſt tittle of Sacred truth contained in it; Nor yet have we either ſlightly, or ſubtilly paſſed over any difficult place with ſilence, as if it had no need of an Annotation to cleare it.

But beleeving that to belong to all Scripture of Divine inſpiration, 2 Tim. 3. which is ſpoken of under the title of Propheſie, viz. that none of it is of private interpretation, 2 Pet. 1. 20. we have not (notwithſtanding our moſt intentive enquiries after the true and genuine meaning of it) reſted in any ſingle conceit or conſtruction of our own, nor in any at all, as meerely humane; but (according to that of the Apoſtle, The Spirits of the Prophets are ſubject to the Prophets, 1 Cor. 14. 32.) have ſubmitted our private Dictates to the cenſure and correction of

And what doubts we met withall, which we thought (for the present) too hard to be easily resolved, we put into a particular Catalogue, and adjourned their resolution to a Day of more deliberate Discussion, when our readings were done, which could not without inconvenience be interrupted, by any long debate of difficulties coming in our way. And because we well knew it was Gods proper worke, to reveale the secrets of his own words, not only in our single and severall Studies, and Meditations upon it, but in our joynt examinations of each particular portion, (besides our severed Devotions) we joyntly, when we came together, implored the presence and assistance of Gods Holy Spirit, so to guide our mindes, and tongues, and hands in the prosecution of this Sacred imployment, that Gods word being our rule, we might not swerve from it by any crooked lines of erroneous digression; much more, that we might beware of making any foule blots of hereticall pravitie, upon so faire and glorious a ground-work, and of piling up upon that golden foundation, either wood, or hay, or stubble, fitter for burning then for such a building.

Whereof as we are not conscious to our selves in the least point, so are we confident in the Candor of all truely Religious Readers, (of Learned Divines especially) that (apprehending the imperfection of all humane knowledge, in this life, which the Apostle (notwithstanding the abundance of his revelations, 2 Cor. 12.) confesseth for himself, as well as others, 1 Cor. 13. together with the difficultie of some passages of the Divine Oracles, (as we touched before) that they will looke upon our aberrations, where they finde them, with pity and pardon, and where they shew us, that we have erred (as men) they shall see that as Christians, it was not our want of love to the truth, but want of light to discover it, that hath misled us from it.

And for the censures of such as would seeme, [y] learned, by captious exception at other mens Dictates, and contrary to the charitable Caveat, and Counsell of Hierom) are [z] desirous to raise a reputation to themselves, out of the reproach of others performances, (which for the most part are passed upon absent parties, and so are secrets to them, which should most know them) we shall desire no better securitie from them, then this wherein he rested, [a] the Sentence of the Tribunall of God, and of the Chaire or Stoole of Whisperers in Corners, is not the same.

And to that Tribunall, we may (with more confidence) make our appeale, while with good conscience, as in the presence of an omniscient Judge, we dare professe as [b] Saint Augustine once did, that what we have done, we have done with good fidelitie, without any disposition, either to contend with any, who have written before us, or to prejudice the more elaborate paines of any that shall come after us, in this kinde.

Now the Father of Lights, the Author of truth, the Giver of grace, enlighten the minde of the Reader, that he may distinguish the truth of God, from all the errours and mistakings of men, to encline his heart to embrace it, as a beame streaming from the Sun of Righteousnesse, whersoever it shineth; (whether in the Divine Text, or Humane Annotations) and having such a light and guide, the Lord grant, that he may walke, as a Childe of light, in a constant course of holinesse, untill it bring him to the happinesse, which God the Father, for the Merits of his Son, by the Sanctification of the Holy Ghost, hath prepared for those, who truly know him, and sincerely serve him to their lives end. To that God, ever to be worshipped in unitie of Essence and Trinitie of persons, all honour and glory, might and Majestie, be ascribed both now and for evermore, Amen.

TOUCHING

The Annotation on Phil. 1. 1. and on 1 Tim. 3. 1. & 5. 17. and the Argument of the same Epistle, on the Epistle to the Hebrews, Chap. 6. 2.

Wherein the Author may be thought to assert Episcopacy with some prejudice to the Truth, and to the Reformation of Church-Government now in hand: With a touch at some other particulars, for prevention of offence to the RELIGIOUS READER.

IT was the Authors own Note concerning the Tenet * of a worthy Divine, (now deceased) an erroneous Tenet (as he took it) that being dead, he thought it not fit to alter any thing he delivered therein; Therefore permitting it to passe, he directed the Reader to a Book (set out by publike Authority) for an Antidote against it. We shall do him the like favour, in forbearing to set a delcatur on his Dictates in the places forecited, and the like right to the Reader (the like in his intention, though in effect it would not prove so *) rectifying his judgement, Lest he should be misled (by his Annotations) to conceive, that such an Episcopacy is founded on the Scriptures; and so of Divine Right, as by the Solemn Covenant of the three Kingdoms hath been disavowed: And upon such a supposition, some have inferred, That where there is no such Episcopal Government, there are no Presbyters; and where there are no Presbyters, there are no Sacraments; so Francisc. a Sanct. Clarâ Apolog. Episcop. p. 151. And the next link of the Sorites will be, That where these are wanting, there is no Church: So far did the late Archbishop carry the consequence upon the defect of a Bishop (superior to Presbyters) in his conference with Fisher, p. 176. where he mis-interpreteth a saying of Jerom, to make it sound to his own sence.

* Master Nicholas Byfield his Book on the Creed, Artic. 4. pag. 445. in Marg.

* For he directed to a Book of another, not of a better opinion.

[But the truth is, The foundation of such a Prelacy is rotten, and the building upon it must needs be ruinous; for in Evangelical antiquity, (we mean the most antient, even that of the Apostles times) the words Bishop and Presbyter are used in a promiscuous manner, as Phil. 1. 1. 1 Tim. 3. 1. the Apostle passing from them to the Deacons, verse 8. without any expresse mention of Presbyters, because they were included in the word Bishop; and Acts 20. 28. and 1 Pet. 5. 2. the original word is ἐπισκοπῦντες, that is, Superintendents, there applyed to the office of Presbyters or Pastors over their Flocks. This community of Titles is observed and acknowledged not onely by Jerom a Presbyter, but by ancient Bishops, as Chrysostom and Augustine, (as Duarenus a Papist hath noted, de Minister. cap. 7. fol. 8.) and by some Bishops also of the present age, and Protestant Church; as by Doctor Downham Bishop of Dery, in his Defence of his Consecration-Sermon, Lib. 1. cap. 3. p. 64. and Doctor Hall, Bishop of Exeter, in his Book of Episcopacy, Part. 2. p. 10, 11, 20.

For this Titular agreement, Chrysostom rendreth a real reason: Because (saith he) there is in a manner no difference betwixt a Bishop and a Presbyter. Chrysost. in 1 Tim. 3. Homil. 11. Tom. 4. operum; and Jerom saith, A Presbyter and a Bishop were the same, until by the devils instinct, some turned Religion into Faction, Jerom Annot. in Tit. 1. Panormitan the great Canonist, with Jerom, denyeth the distinction betwixt Bishops and Presbyters by Divine right; for which he is taxed by that parasite of Prelates, Francisc. a Sanct. Clarâ, Apol. Episc. p. 64. And one of the later and most learned Bishops in the English Church, ingenuously confesseth, That the office of a Bishop is above the office of a Priest, (a title of contraction of the word Presbyter or πρεσβύτερος) not by authority of Scriptures (by Scripture then a Bishop hath none authority over a Presbyter, as the Note on 1 Tim. 3. 1. importeth) but after the names of honour, which the custome of the Church hath now obtained. Bishop Jewels Defence of his Apolog. part. 2. cap. 3. p. 101. A custome which though very ancient and neer the Apostles times, as Chamier truely acknowledgeth, Lib. 10. c. 6. de Oecumenico Pontifice, Tom. 2. pag. 353. hath for a long time far departed from the Golden Rule, the Word of God, and hath contracted much of the drosse and rust of humane corruption, and much troubled the peace of the Church: and though it were taken up as a remedy of Schism, it hath been found by experience a principal occasion, both of Schism and of Heresie also, for they mutually beget and produce one another: Heresie is the cause of Schism; for where Heresie is, it is commonly conceived a just ground of Separation; and where it is but in conceit, it many times produceth the same effect; for upon that ground (in part) that the Church of England was Popish, and Antichristian, in a conformity of Government and Ceremonies to the Church of Rome (how far mistaken, or rightly understood, we are not now to examine) the Brownists, with some other Sects, made a Separation from it; and the Archiepiscopal Patriarks (who were set up to prevent Schism among Bishops, as Bishops for the like end were set up above Presbyters) were all of them Hereticks, saith Bellarm. de notis Ecclesiæ, l. 4. not. 5 cap. 8. Tom. 2. p. 232. He excepteth the Roman Church, which we know to be guilty of a Masse of Heresies; and more Heretical then any, in that they hold it a perpetual priviledge of their Popes, (when they dictate ex Cathedra matter of faith to the whole Church) to be infallible, and free from all Heresie and Errour. Bellarm. de Rom. Pontif. l. 4 c. 2. Tom. 1. p. 984. & c. 3. princip.

And when Heresie is set on high, it causeth Schism many wayes, especially two: First, By ambitious competition for the dignity whereto it is advanced, as in the Rivalship for the Roman Mitre there have been manifold Schisms; Bellarmine himself reckoneth no fewer then twenty six, from the Schism between Cornelius and Novatianus, Anno 254. and that betwixt Eugenius the fourth, and Felix his Antipope, Anno 1439. in the later part of his Chronology, from p. 490. to p. 561. And secondly, By tyrannical domination, and that sometimes by rash and inconsiderate excommunications, by which Victor the Patriark of Rome, would have cut off from Ecclesiastical Union all the Churches of Asia, and neighbouring Dioceses, as Christians of another Faith, Faith, not truely Christian, because they kept not the Feast of Easter at the same time with the Roman Church; Euseb. Eccles. Hist. l.5. c.24. And sometimes men are induced (though not so violently inforced) to withdraw themselves from the Communion of Churches, by reason of the rigour of such Governours, and Prelatical Potentates, as take upon them to impose what they please, and urge what they have imposed, though either erroneous, or doubtful, or frivolous, with more severity then they do the known Laws and Commandments of God.

N.

And as Heresie is often the cause of Schism, so is Schism also the cause of Heresie; for when Religion, either by choice or force is propagated in corners, many Heretical Doctrines are hatched and Preached, and afterward it may be Printed also, which had not been conceived nor divulged, if the Authors of them had continued in the society of publike Assemblies: And it is not to be doubted, but divers of those Heresies were privately brewed under the predominance of the Prelates, which are now publikely broached betwixt the pulling down of the Prelacy, and setting up of the Presbytery, as in an Interregnum.

Object. But Chrysostom (where he maketh a Bishop and a Presbyter in a manner all one) maketh exception of the power of Ordination, wherein he giveth a preeminence unto a Bishop above a Presbyter, in the place forealleadged.

Answ. By that, 1. We must not understand a sole power of Ordination, no not in Chrysostomes dayes (though in his time Episcopacy was advanced to an higher elevation then at the first, (which at the most was but a priority in order, without majority of power, and that priority to prevent disorder and confusion in the managing of the action) for he flourished about the yeer 398. and the same yeer was the fourth Councel of Carthage, in the third Canon whereof it is decreed, That in Ordination, all the Presbyters that are present, should lay their hands on the Ordained, as well as the Bishop; Bin. Tom.1. Concil. p. 728. col. 1. & p. 751. col. 1. (which perhaps was the patern to the thirty fifth Canon of our English Prelates, in the yeer 1603.) for the Presbyters were joynt Governours of the Church with him, Jerom in Tit. 1. 5. Cyprian Epist. 6. Edit. Pamel. p. 12, 13. and op. 24. Presbyt. and Diac. which is acknowledged by Baronius (for the Papists) ad An. 58. an. 10, 11. Tom. 1. fol. 572. and by Bishop Downham for the English Prelates defence, Serm. Consecrat. l. 1. c. 7. p. 142, 143. and c. 8. p. 178. of such necessity to be joyned with him, that in the twenty third Canon of the forecited Councell, The Bishop ought not to hear any cause without the presence of the Presbyters; and if he did, and gave sentence in it, that sentence by their absence was made void, p. 728. col. 2.

Anno, 398.

Secondly, Nor must we conceive that without a Bishop Ordination is not valid: For first, There is no necessity of having a Bishop superiour to Presbyters (no not in the conceit of those who have been such Bishops themselves) as is plain by the general vote of the Bishops of the second Councel of Carthage in the fifth Canon, which is, That the Diocesse which never had Bishop, should have none still; Bin. Tom 1. Concil. p. 703. col. 2. Secondly, There is lesse cause to conceive a necessity of Ordination by a Bishop, since the faculty of Ordination is in the Presbyters, or Society of Presbyters, as Presbyters, 1 Tim. 4. 14. and therefore though the Ordination of Ministers by Presbyters, without Prelatical Bishops, be looked on as a novelty with us, it is no new thing in it self; but the old Ordination of the purest times renewed, by which a succession of Pastors may be continued, and Churches constituted, and the Ordinances of God sufficiently and effectually administred unto salvation: And so it is approved (as practised in other Churches) by such as professe a good opinion of, and great affection to Prelatical Episcopacy; [for in the Divinity School in Oxford, July 9. An. 1608. The Ordination of Ministers in the reformed Churches (where they have no such Bishops as our Covenant disclaimeth) was publikely maintained to be lawful: And King James, lest the sharp language which he used against some under the name of Puritans, should be interpreted to the prejudice or reproach of forrain Churches (whose Ecclesiastical Government is Presbyterial) he professeth (in a Monitory Preface Printed in Latine in Octavo, in the yeer 1609.) That he had no aym at those Churches, nor at their Government, but left them to the liberty of the Reformed Religion; whose constitution or standing is so plain without Prelacy, and their salvation so assured, that he wants his sight (saith Bishop Andrews) who perceiveth not the one, and is of an iron heart if he consent not to the other; Resp. ad 2. Epist. Petr. Moulin. opusc. p. 176. And he that served up the Episcopal power to the highest pegg (whereupon it brake) in his plea for Episcopacy by Divine Right, when he wrote against the Brownists, was so far a friend to the Reformed Churches, and their Government, as to expresse his minde towards them in this manner: I reverence from my soul (so doth our Church their dear Sister) those worthy forrain Churches, which have chosen and followed those Forms of outward Government that are every way fittest for their own condition. It is enough for you to censure them, I touch nothing common to them with you. So Bishop Hall in his Apology against the Brownists, Sect. 19. p. 588.

Object. But the Episcopal Government over Pastors, as well as over the people, may be proved Apostolicall, say some; For in the subscription of the second Epistle of Paul to Timothy, Timothy is called the first Bishop of the Church of Ephesus; and in the conclusion of his Epistle to Titus, Titus is called the first Bishop of the Church of the Cretians; in both which places there were many Pastors.

Answ. First, Timothy and Titus were not Bishops, nor could be; for to be a Bishop in their sence who stand for Prelacy, is to be a fixed President over divers Churches; but Timothy and Titus were Evangelists, such as were to passe and spread the Gospel from place to place, either as accompanying the Apostles, or as sent by them, where they might be of most use for the planting or establishing of Churches, 1 Tim. 4. 5. 2 Cor. 2. 13. and 8. 23. and 12. 17, 18.

Secondly, These Postscripts are not acknowledged to be any integral parts of the Canonical Scripture, not onely by Protestants (who do both deny them and disprove them, see Altare Damascen. p. 176, 177. D. Dixon, fol. ult. explan. Ep. ad Hebr.) but by Papists, who either passe them by without taking notice of them, (as Aquinas in his Comment, Menoch. in his Annot. on the Epp. of Paul) or expressely mention them, and censure them; so doth Estius, who saith of that in the second to Timothy, That it is an addition of an uncertain Author, and of no great authority; And of the Subscription or Postscript (as some call it) of the Epistle to the Hebrews (saith he) It deserves no credit, and sheweth it to be contrary to the truth of Story; and so do others.

Lastly, Whereas in the Annotation on Phil. 1. 1. there is alleadged the Synod of Nice, Forbidding two or more Bishops to have their seats in one City, and before that, Cornelius Bishop of Rome upbraided Novatus with ignorance (as Eusebius writeth in his sixth Book of Ecclesiastical story) for that he knew not that there ought to be but one Bishop in that Church, in which he could not be ignorant that there were fourty six Presbyters; and Oecumenius merius and Chryſoſtom affirm as much of Philippi, it being but one City, it cannot be ſuppoſed that there ſhould be at the ſame time more Biſhops. To all this it may be anſwered:

1. Concerning the Synod of Nice, it is not ſaid which of the two Synods of Nice it was, (for there were two, and no more) whether the firſt, which was held about the yeer ſince Chriſt 314. Bellarm. Chron. part. alt. p. 494 495. or the ſecond, of the yeer 787. Bellar. Ibid. p. 520, 521. If he mean the later, it is of little credit in the Orthodox Church, ſince it was a Synod of Idolatrous Prelates, who met together for the erecting and eſtabliſhing of Images in Churches, and of a Religious Reverence to be exhibited to them. If the former, he citeth no Canon of that Synod, nor is there any ſuch Canon among the twenty, which are moſt received as the juſt number of the Canons of that Councell (ſee Bin. Tom. 1. Concil. p. 340. ad p. 345. and Chanier, Tom. 2. l. 13. c. 8. p. 490.) nor among thoſe twenty four that were ſet out by Alph. Piſanus, which he laboureth (but in vain) to prove genuine Canons of that Councell, l. 3. de Concil. Nicen. apud Bin. Tom. 1. p. 405, 406, &c. or if there were an expreſſe Canon to that purpoſe, it is ſo much younger then the Antiquity alleadged for the parity, or rather the identity of Biſhops or Presbyters, that as to the point in queſtion rightly ſtated, as before, it makes nothing for the Prelatical preeminence.

And ſecondly, That of Cornelius and Novatus will make as little for that purpoſe, as the former allegation; for which, in the Annotation is cited the ſixth Book of Euſebius, but no Chapter; but the paſſage the Author meaneth, is in the thirty fifth Chapter, according to the Greek (the Latine Eitions count the Chapters in a different number) but not altogether as it is here cited; and it is probable the name is miſtaken, Novatus for Novatianus (wherein divers, both ancient and modern Writers are deceived) for Notus was a Presbyter of Carthage, Novatianus a Presbyter of Rome, and Antipope to Cornelius in the firſt Schiſm of the Romane Prelacy, Bell. Chronol. part. alt. p. 491. beſides, the words are not rightly cited in the Note in this reſpect; for that Cornelius imputeth ignorance to Novatianus, in that he knew not there ought to be but one Biſhop in the Catholike Church, yet the meaning muſt needs be in that Catholike Church; for which, he and Novatianus were then in competition, for the words following are, He was not ignorant that in that Church there were fourty ſix Presbyters, ſeven Deacons, ſeven Subdeacons, &c.

And if Cornelius (though a better man then his ambitious and fraudulet Antagoniſt (for Novatianus was both) ſpake big words to uphold the Prelacy he ſtood for (it being in his own caſe, and in ſo hot a conteſtation) it is no matter either of marvell or of moment, to maintain the Prelacy of Biſhops, either as agreeable to the Word of God, or to moſt pure and primitive Antiquity, ſince Cornelius was contemporary with Cyprian in the third Century, Bellarmine notes him upon the yeer 254, Bell. Chronol. part. alt. p. 490. which was betwixt the ſeventh and eighth perſecution, when Presbyters were as ready to give for their own eaſe and ſafety as Biſhops, to receive any part of Eccleſiaſtical Authority, which was (as the conditions of Chriſtians then ſtood) an undertaking of danger, as well as of honour; and that danger was a means of managing the power with more moderation and integrity; which when it was removed, and peace brought eaſe and plenty, the ſame men (if not in perſon, yet in office) which in bad times were good, in good times proved very bad; proſperity being commonly accompanied with pride and ſecurity, which makes (many times) a more dangerous ſhipwrack of the manners of many, then tyranny doth in mens perſons and eſtates.

With this Animadverſion of the uſurped power of the Prelates, is virtually involved an avoiding of the Epiſcopal Confirmation, undeſervedly honoured with the Title of an Apoſtolical Conſtitution by him who made the Annotations on the Epiſtle to the Hebrews, ch. 6. 2. who was not the ſame with the Expoſitor upon all the precedent Epiſtles: And for him (excepting what hath been noted already in his part of the work; and ſome other Notions of conformity thereto, as his Note on Gal. 6. 18. touching the Engliſh Liturgy, and the Note on Epheſ. 3. 18. concerning the Croſſe, and ſuch like, (whereof we finde not many) he hath taken very commendable pains in his part, and employed his good parts (which have enabled him to be very ſerviceable for defence of the truth in many publike Conteſtations, with Popiſh and Arminian adverſaries) to the profit of the Chriſtian Reader: [And for his Errours, and what others, a judicious peruſer ſhall obſerve, either in his part, or in the portion of his Colleagues, we beſeech him ſeriouſly to conſider, what we have profeſſed in the Preface, at the beginning of the Book; but towards the end of the Preface, viz. That wherein any ſhall ſhew that We have erred (as men) they ſhall ſee that (as Chriſtians) it was not Want of love to the Truth, but Want of light to diſcern it, that hath miſled us from it. And ſo we hope, what is amiſſe but in part, ſhall not redound to the diſparagement of the whole; and what is faulty in one, ſhall not be imputed to the prejudice of another, (though a Fellow-labourer in the ſame Vineyard) if he be not conſcious of, or conſenting to any erroneous opinion; which we reſolved carefully to decline in all our Dictates, and cordially to diſavow, if by better eyes then our own, any ſuch be diſcovered unto us. And howſoever our ſervice fall ſhort of others expectations, and of our own deſires, we beleeve, that he who ſhall diligently enquire after what others have done in this kinde, in what language ſoever, he ſhall not meet with any one Book upon the whole Bible, wherein more hath been endeavoured; and if our intereſt in it could be ſecured from ſuſpition of partiality to it, we would ſay performed alſo, for the full, clear, and true Expoſition of all the Canonicall Scriptures.

A Review and further Explication of the Annotations on Exod. 25. 16. and on Deut. 31. 26. For the better clearing of the seeming contradiction betwixt those places; as also of 1 Kings 8. 9. 2 Chro. 5. 10. compared with Heb. 9. 4.

WHen the Ark was made, commandment was given, that the Testimony should be put into it, Exod. 25. 26. By the testimony is meant the two Tables of Stone, written with the finger of God, Exod. 31. 18. called the Testimony, because by them was testified Gods will concerning their duty. Before the Ark, (wherein was the Testimony) and neer unto it, Aarons rod was laid and kept, Num. 17. 10. And the Book of Deuteronomy was to be put in the side of the Ark, Deut. 31. 26. that is, by the side of the Ark; for the proposition Hkjin there used, may be rendred by a, ab, de, e, and ex, which may note a difference from it, but withall a neer situation to it. Some Hebrew Writers say it was put into a case, or repository, placed close by it; for it is expressely said, Nothing was in it, save the two Tables of Stone which Moses put there at Horeb, 1 Kings 8 9. and the same is repeated, 2 Chron. 5. 10.

On the contrary (in appearance, the contrary not indeed) the Author to the Hebrews saith, After the second Vail was the Tabernacle, which is called the holiest of all, Heb. 9. 3. which had the Golden Censer, and the Ark of the Covenant overlaid round about with Gold, wherein was the Golden Pot that had Manna, and Aarons Rod that budded, and the Tables of the Covenant.

That which seems to be the difference (for the matter of it, as, Whether any thing but the Tables of the Law onely were in the Ark, or Aarons Rod, and the Golden Pot of Manna also) is of no great moment in it self; yet some piously affected towards the Honourable estimation of the Law, think it advanceth the honour of it, that nothing should be thought worthy to be placed with it in the Ark; and therefore they cleave close to the negative Testimonies, forenoted out of 1 Kings 8. 9. 2 Chron. 5. 10. And some conceive it an impeachment of the Authority of the Epistle to the Hebrews, if the words thence cited, be not taken to be literally true, as they seem to carry the sence at the first sight; and Cajetane (besides the Servatians and Anabaptists, Sixt. Senens. Biblioth. Sanct. l. 7. p. 491.) took occasion to deny the authority of that Epistle, because (as he thought) it contradicted the two Testimonies forementioned, as some of his own side have observed of him, namely Bellarm. de Verbo Dei, l. 1. c. 17. Jacob Gordonius on the 1 Kings 8 9.

Hence Commentators are divided, some resolving, that nothing was in the Ark but the two Tables of the Law; some, that Aarons Rod, and the Golden Pot of Manna, were there also. The reconciliation is made two wayes. 1. By Historical Narration. 2. By Grammatical Construction.

By Historical Narration, distinguishing the times, thus: While the Tabernacle stood, they were placed all in the Ark; but afterward, when the Temple was built, onely the Tables of the Law were placed in the Ark, (and therefore it was so punctually noted as a new thing in those two forecited Testimonies) and the Rod and Pot of Manna were kept in some other part of the Temple; and they might be safer in the Temple without the Ark, then without it in the Tabernacle, &c. And yet some are of opinion, that they were not in the Ark, neither during the time of the Tabernacle, nor in the dayes of Solomon, but afterwards in the time of Jeremy; when by reason of the hostility of the Caldeans, Jerem. 49. the Jews, fearing the losse of such pretious things, put them all together in the Ark, and that Ark into an hole or cave of the Earth to be hid; and afterwards, when the Temple was repaired, the Ark was digged up, and placed in it again, and those three things in it before mentioned: And as Adrichom Delphus reports, when Jerusalem was taken by Titus, he had that, the Ark, and Pot, and Rod, and the Golden Table, and Shew-Bread, and the Golden Candlestick, and other Utensils of the Temple, as a part of the spoils of that glorious Fabrick; Adrichom in Descrip. Jerus. p. 159. num. 77. And some hold that Paul might have the relation from Gamaliel, or by a Jewish Tradition, or by revelation from God, as he had the names of the chief enchanters of the Egyptians, Jannes and Jambres, 2 Tim. 3. 8.

Against this, viz. the placing of those other two things, besides the Law, in the Ark, Estius on Heb. 9. 4 objects, That Aarons Rod was too long to be lodged in the Ark, for that (saith he) was but two Cubits and an half long, Exod. 25. 10. And the Rod was a long Pastoral Staff, such a one as Moses used when he kept the Sheep of Jethro his Father in law. But that is but his fancy, which hath no ground; and two Cubits and a foot, being above a yard and a quarter, might be long enough for the Rod in respect of any use we finde that was made of it in the Scripture. And for the negative in the 1 Kings 8. 9. and 2 Chro. 5 10. which saith, That there was nothing in the Ark but the Tables: The answer which some learned men give unto it, is, That there was nothing of that kinde, viz. Nothing of the whole Law in it, but the two Tables, wherein the Ten Commandments were written

This Historical resolution reconciles the Epistle to the Hebrews, without varying a letter from the Text, or from the sense, which at the first blench the words import. The other Resolution is Grammatical, and that is twofold: 1. That, whereas it is said wherein, or in which, the original may be rendred with which; for in that sense we finde the proposition ἐν often used; As there was a man with an unclean spirit, in the Greek it is, ἐν πνεύματι ἀκαθάρτῳ, In an unclean spirit, Matth. 1. 23. His Word was with power, Luke 4. 32. in Greek ἐν ἐξουσίᾳ in power; The first Commandment with promise, Eph. 6. 2. in Greek ἐν ἐπαγγελίᾳ, in Promise; That I may come unto you with joy, Rom. 15. 32. in Greek ἐν χαρᾷ, in joy. Secondly, If we take the words to be in which, and with which, as these examples shew, then the words ἐν ᾗ may be in construction referred not to the next Antecedent, which is κιβωτὸς, the Ark, though that be of the Feminine gender; but to σκηνὴ, the Tabernacle, which is Feminine also; and so the sense is, wherein, or in which Tabernacle was the Manna, Aarons Rod, and the Tables of the Covenant (taking all three together) though the Tables of the Covenant were not onely in the Tabernacle, but also in the Ark; and this construction hath warrant both by Rule, whereof see Sixt. Amama, Hebr. Gram. l. 2. c. 2. p. 152. and by many examples of the Scriptures, as Gen. 10. 12. 2 Sam. 21. 14. Psal. 99. 7. Mark 2. 3. 2 Thes. 2. 9 In this variety of Reconciliations, the judicious Reader may make his choice; but none can be so simple, as against so many probable Resolutions, to impute contradiction to the forealleadged Scriptures.

Memorandum, I began to read these Annotations 7th day Novembr 3. 1716.

ANNOTATIONS ON THE PENTATEUCH OR FIVE BOOKS OF MOSES, AND PARTICVLARLY on the first of them called GENESIS.

THE ARGUMENT.

THE five Books of Moſes are ſometimes contained under one Title, and ſo from the moſt obſervable matter delivered in them, and diſperſed through them, they are called Thorah the Law; and from their number, and Iuncture, the Title given them by the Greeks is the Pentateuch, or fivefold Volume; for all five anciently made but one Book, as did the twelve ſmaller Prophets; and thence it is that the Books of Exodus, Leviticus, and Numbers, begin with words of Coherence, which carry on the ſubſequent matter as by way of orderly contexture, and connexion with what was ſaid before.

Of theſe the firſt Book in particular is called by the Hebrews Bereſhith, from the initiall words of it; after which manner they gave names to divers other Books: the Greekes call it Geneſis, becauſe it delivereth the Story of the Worlds Originall, the Creation of Adam and Eve, their lapſe, and off-ſpring in their degenerated condition, the multiplying of ſinne in their multiplyed poſteritie, whereupon followed the univerſall flood that overwhelmed all living creatures of the Aire and Earth, except a very few of each ſort, which were reſerved as a Stocke for a new Plantation in the next Age; With other memorable matters of the Patriarchs, eſpecially of Noah, Abraham, Iſaac, Iacob, and Ioſeph, with whoſe death Geneſis endeth; which was in the yeare of the World 2368. as they bring in the accompt, who have made it upon diligent peruſall, and comparing of particulars. 2368.

Object. All this time and about thirteen yeares more were expired before Moſes was borne, how then had he the knowledge of things done and paſt ſo many Centuries preceding his birth?

Anſw. He might heare much by Tradition from the ſonnes or nephews of Ioſeph, as they from Iacob, he from Iſaac, Iſaac from Abraham, Abraham from Sem, Sem from Noah, Noah from Methuſelah, and he from Adam: but the way of tradition was ſubiect to corruption, and at long running the ſtreame of that channell carryeth with it many dregs of erroneous additions; wherefore, though Moſes might receive ſome Hiſtoricall reports from ſome eminent perſons of the precedent ages, his penne was guided by the unerring Spirit of God, while he wrote this and the foure books following: whereof though Euſebius lib. 7. cap. 2. de præpar. Evang. ſuppoſed the booke of Geneſis was compoſed while he kept the flocke of his father in law in the land of Midian, yet it is rather to be beleeved, that that as well as the reſt was indicted by him, not when he was a private, but a publique perſon, inſpired and inſtructed by God for that purpoſe: but whether he received revelations from God for the contents of this and the reſt of the Pentateuch, when he called him into the Mount, Exod. 24.12. Or, whether Writing many things in the manner of a Diary (in all but the firſt) he had his informations daily communicated to him by the Spirit of God, it is not to be determined by any reſolution of man: yet this is moſt certaine, whereon we may reſt, that the Spirit of God, which to other Prophets revealed things to come, inſpired him with the Revelation for things already done, which is equally infallible in the knowledge of forepaſſed, and future perſons, matters, words, acts, or events, at what diſtance ſoever.

CHAP. I.

Verſ. 1. IN the beginning] That is, when God began to give being to the world, it was made in the manner and order following. Moſes in this beginning of his Story, ſhutteth out the conceipt of the eternitie of the world, (which the Chaldæan and Egyptian Aſtronomers and ſome other naturall Philoſophers, (as Plin. Nat. hiſt. lib. 1. cap. 1.) at leaſt for the firſt matter of it, have conceived to be coeternall with the Creator: an errour repugnant both to true Religion, and right reaſon; though we take the truth (which is contradictory to it) rather for an Article of faith [Hebr. 11. 3.] then for a maxime in Philoſophy, and doe acknowledge God had from all eternitie the ſame power of Creation, which now firſt of all he put into act and execution.

God] Of and by himſelfe, without any either ſociable or ſubordinate agent, Iſa. 44. 24. made the world, wherein conſiſteth the chiefe difference betwixt Creation and Providence; in that, God onely worketh; in this, the creatures are ſubſervient to his power and pleaſure, be they never ſo glorious, as Gen. 32.1,2. never ſo contemptible, as Exod. 8.17.21.

God created] In the Hebrew the word for God is Elohim of the plurall number; which ſignifieth ſtrong, potent, mighty: (See Annot. on Exod. 32.4.) and for [created] the Hebrew word is Bara of the ſingular number; Whence ſome learned and pious Expoſitors have deduced the Doctrine of the Trinitie of Perſons in the Unitie of the Divine Eſſence. Others (among whom are divers, who are likewiſe learned and religious, (to ſay nothing of the Jewiſh, Photinian, Arrian, and Socinian hereticks, who denying the faith of that myſterious truth, deny all proofe produced for it out of Scripture) conceive the words will not warrant any ſuch deduction; not, becauſe this pluralitie may be underſtood of Angels, (as ſome hereticks ſuggeſt) for they were not Creators with God, but creatures of God; nor, according to the ſtyle royall, when Kings ſay Wee and Us in a word of pluralitie, not meaning any communication of their prerogatives to others; for that Courtly phraſe is ſo much younger then the beginning of all things, that it was not taken up untill the tyranny of one perſon becoming odious to the people, ſucceeding Kings, to gaine the good will of their Subjects, made ſhew of moderating their Soveraign authoritie by ruling rather by others counsell then by their own self-wils; nor, because the word Elohim hath no singular number (as some have said) for it hath one, viz. Eloah; and if it had not, there be other names of God which are in their signification singular; But the proof of the Trinitie from this place is denyed by them, because, first, the phrase of joyning words of different numbers is an Hebraism, or manner of speech used by the Hebrews, not onely in construction of a verb in the singular number with a noune of the plurall number, but of a noune of the singular number with a verb of the plurall number, and of an adjective singular with a noune or participle plurall. Secondly, the words, though indefinitely they may import a pluralitie, they doe not precisely and determinately note or designe a Trinitie. Thirdly, the word Elohim with a verb of the singular number is ascribed to strange Gods, Exod. 20. 3. according to the Hebrew, though that numericall difference in English be not observed; nor can be expressed, as in the Latin, non erit tibi Elohim alieni. Fourthly, the word Elohim is used sometimes of a particular person in the Trinitie, as of the holy Ghost, vers. 2. of this Chapter, and Psal. 45. 6. it is used of the Sonne, and yet there is but one Son, one holy Ghost. Fifthly, those ancient Fathers, who were most skilfull in the Hebrew tongue, make no mysterious Exposition of the words Elohim Bara. For these reasons this place is no good proofe of the Trinitie against the Anti-trinitarians; especially, if it be taken alone, or set in the forefront of any conflict with them. Notwithstanding, it may be probably conceived to be the meaning of Moses to insinuate the Trinitie by this expression of the noune and the verb in a different number; Because, 1. He was not ignorant of the Doctrine of the Trinitie. 2. He well knew that God the Father made the world, as it is, 1 Cor. 8. 6. 3. That God the Sonne also made the world, as it is, Prov. 8. 24. 27, 28. Joh. 1. 3. Colos. 1. 16. and he expressely nameth the Spirit or third person (vers. 2.) as concurrent in the worke of Creation, as also Psal. 104. 30. Job 33. 4. It being true then that Moses beleeved a Trinitie of Persons in the Unitie of the Godhead, it is most like that by this phrase he meant here to mind the Jewes (for whose information he first intended and penned this holy History) of this high point of Doctrine. And though the word Elohim be sometimes given to creatures & false Gods in the holy Scripture, yet when it is applyed to the true God, it is usually joyned with a verb, noune, or pronoune of the singular number; usually, I say, not alwayes: for Gen. 20. 13. & Chap. 35. 7. & 2 Sam. 7. 23. we finde it otherwise; when to the creatures, or false Gods, it is commonly joyned with words of the plurall number; or, if with a word of the singular number, as Exod. 20. 3. it is to be taken figuratively by a Sylepsis, as, there shall not be unto thee any of the strange Gods; whereas applyed to the true God it hath a proper construction, as joyning one God and three Persons together: so in this place; yet so also, that it must not be unseasonably or indiscreetly urged against an Anti-Trinitarian adversary, nor made an occasion of uncharitable contestation among such learned and godly men as are found in the Doctrine of the Trinitie, though of different opinions about the phrase in this Text. See more on vers. 26. of this Chapter.

created] The Hebrew word Bara, translated Created, is a word in its proper sense proper and peculiar to God, and therefore should not be attributed to men, how great soever; yet it is a familiar phrase in the stile of the Court to say, Such a one was Created Earle, or Marquesse, or Duke of, &c. wherein as the parasites of secular Princes make them like God in power and greatnesse; so their Preachers and Chaplaines should doe their endevour that they may resemble their Maker in justice and goodnesse. See Annot. on vers. 21.

heaven and the earth] These words may be a summary proposition comprising briefly the whole Creation, as Exod. 20. 11. distributed into severall dayes workes afterwards: for all of it had its Originall from God alone without any concurring power, or fore-going matter, but that which himselfe made the first day as the common stock, out of which were deduced the ensuing dayes workes.

heaven] Thereby may be meant all the higher part of the world from the earth upward. But the heaven, (as perfectly distinguished from the nether world,) was not made until the second day, vers. 7, 8. Some take heaven here, for the highest heaven the place of Gods greatest glory and of the Angels habitation, with which it is thought by divers learned Divines that they were made, and were a part of the first dayes worke: for proofe of which opinion as probable (not as certaine) they alleadge the 38. of Job vers. 6, 7.

V. 2. earth] That is, that great materiall masse made up of the two heaviest elements, earth and water, with all the creatures on, or in them both: but the earth, as distinctly severed from other parts of the world, was not made untill the third day, vers. 10.

without forme and void] Without any proper and particular forme; and void and emptie of that distinct nature, vertue, and vigour; and of that comely order which afterward God gave unto it, when he separated the earth from the waters, distinguished it into hils and plaines, furnished it with fruits, clothed it with grasse, and garnished it with flowers.

darkenesse] The light not yet being made, darkenesse (which is nothing but the absence or want of light) covered that confused heape which was of an exceeding great compasse and depth in waters, and other materials contained in it: and it was so confused, not out of any defect of wisdome, or power in God to make the world distinctly and perfectly compleat at the first; for he could have done that in a moment: but he was pleased to doe his worke by degrees, and gradually to proceed from lesse perfect to more perfect workes, and to be doing that in severall dayes which he could have finished in a minute; to give the rationall creature occasion more deliberately to meditate on the parts and passages of the Creation.

the Spirit of God] The works of the Trinitie which are externall upon the creatures are undivided, so that where one Person onely is named as Creator, all three must be conceived to worke together in the production of the creature. The first Person is called the Father, not onely in relation to the Sonne the second Person; but to the creatures, who are all produced from his power and vertue; in which respect in the genealogie laid downe by Luke, and proceeding by way of ascent to the beginning of all things, Adam as created by God, is called his sonne, Luk. 3. last: and in this respect the Sonne may be called a Father, as Isa. 9. 6. for he also made the world, Joh. 1. 3. Colos. 1. 16. and here the Holy Ghost is especially mentioned as an Agent in the first Originall of all things. Whence he is concluded to be God, comparing this place with other Scriptures, as the 1 Joh. 5. 7. Matth. 28. 19. Job 26. 13. Act. 5. 3, 4. 1 Cor. 12. 4. 2 Cor. 13. 14.

moved] The word Merahhepheth in the Originall, rendered here moved, properly signifieth the hovering of a bird over her young to cherish and preserve them, according to that of the Eagle in the 32. of Deut. she stirreth up her nest, fluttereth over her young, spreadeth abroad her wings: vers. 11. and it importeth the effectuall quickening power of the Holy Ghost, which upheld, sustained and gave vertue to that great and generall heape, which thereby was formed into particular workes in the manner and order set downe in the rest of the Chapter.

face of] That is, that outward part, which, if there had beene light to discerne it, had beene most visible, as the face of a man is eminently conspicuous above his other parts; so the open sky, which is obvious to the eye, is called in the Hebrew phrase, the face of the firmament, vers. 20. And the shew-bread (which was set upon the table to open view of such as come where it stood) is according to the Hebrew, the bread of faces, Exod. 25. 30.

the waters] Which were in great depth spread over the other materials, or common stock of the first creation, whereby they were covered as with a garment, Psal. 104. 6. as all earthly creatures of the nether-world were covered by the flood in Noahs time, and the waters were uppermost, as being most fit and ready for the future generation: for the thicker part was most meete to concurre to the making of solid creatures below, and the thinner most easily rarified into aire, which was to be above, and to fill up the space from the earth upward to the place of the lowest Planet; and (as some thinke) to that also of the fixed starres; for they hold that the Planets move in the aire as fishes in the water.

V. 3. God said] God is said by his word to make not onely the light, but the whole world, Heb. 11. 3. not that he did use any articulate or audible speech, as we doe; for so he said not: because he is a pure Spirit, and not a bodily substance, as we are: but to note, first, the facilitie of the worke to him, who could make it without any toile at all; as easily, as quickly, as a word may be spoken, Psal. 33. vers. 9. Secondly, the Authoritie of the Work-master over the creature, Psal. 105. 34. as a King over his subject, according to that of Solomon, Where the word of a King is, there is power, Eccles. 8. 4. and to that of the Centurion, Matth. 8. 9. but with a supereminent degree of vigour above all created Agents; for he calleth the things that be not as though they were, Rom. 4. 17. and by this call he giveth them a being, which before had none, and can restore the being which before they had, and for the present have not, as Joh. 11. 43. Thirdly, the words God said, import a potent efficacie, or an efficacious decree for the present existence of the worke. Fourthly, they intimate the libertie of the Creator (for they that are endowed with the facultie of speech doe exercise it without constraint, or naturall necessitie) who made the world by his owne free-will, and not by a necessary emanation of Power from his Divine nature, (as some Naturalists have thought, and thence have inferred the eternitie of the World against the truth of Scripture and the light of reason).

light] This light was not any shining upon the nether world from the Heaven, called Empyreum, (the highest & most glorious Place of the blessed) which many have conceived to be made first of all the creatures, & to be understood by heaven in the first

v. 5. God called the Light, Day] h.e. Voluit DEUS ut esset aliqua Dierum & Noctium vicissitudo; quod etiam mox secutum est, quum primus Dies finem accepit. Lucis enim conspectum abstulit, DEUS, ut Nox Diem alterum inchoaret. Moses Diem a vespere incipit secundum usitatum Gentis suæ morem. An autem hic optimus sit et legitimus ordo, disputare nihil attinet. Scimus Tenebras fuisse tempore superiores; quum Lucem DEUS subduxit, hoc erat diem claudere. verse of this Chapter; for (besides that, that interpretation is not so probable as the interpretation upon the first verse) that heaven in their conceit (who understand this light to be derived from it) was made before the darke lump of the first matter. Secondly, neither was it the element of fire, (for if there be such an element, which some confidently deny, and some affirme to be placed under the Orbe of the Moone) it is more like it was made not the first, but the second day with the Firmament. Thirdly, neither was it the light of the Sunne, or the Moone or Starres: for this light was made the first day, vers. 5. and they had not any distinct being or appearing untill the fourth day, vers. 19. Fourthly, but it was a bright qualitie immediately created by God, and (not as the Papists pretend, an accident without a subject) but inherent in some meete subject, as the light of the Pillar of fire, Exod. 13. 21. and of the bright Cloud, Matth. 17. 5. Fifthly, or it might be some extraordinary brightnesse on the upper part of the waters receiving and reflecting light like a looking-glasse, for which purpose that element hath a fitnesse above any other.

V. 4. God saw] This is often after mentioned, as vers. 10. 18. 21. 25. 31. and is alwayes to be understood as a condescending in phrase and expression to the manner of men, who when they have effected, or obtained, or observed any good thing, upon sight or experience approve the profit of it, which God knew well enough without sight; for that is properly a sensitive and corporall facultie, which is not in God, being a pure Spirit; and before the creature was made, he knew the goodnesse of it as well as afterward; therefore God using this dialect (formally humane) when he speaketh of himselfe, meant to shew us how usefull and acceptable light and other creatures are; and hereby also he ratified their usefulnesse to the good of others, especially of man.

divided] The light is divided or separated from the darkenesse, not in Name onely, as Abenezra thinkes, but by a naturall repugnancie betweene them, so that they have no communion together, 2 Cor. 6. 14. but where the one is, the other cannot be, (at least in an eminent degree; in a remisse they may be for a while at least, as in the morning and evening twilight) for they drive out and succeed each other, and make night and day in severall parts of the world by alternate turnes; so it was by the motion of this new created light, which carried about by the vigour of that Spirit (which moved upon the face of the waters) from one part of the world to the other made the distinction and measure of the three first dayes, as the revolution of the Sunne hath done ever since. What became of it when the other lights, Sunne, Moone, and Starres were made, is uncertaine. God might incorporate it into the body of some of those settled lights, or otherwise dispose of it, as his wisdome thought most meete; though how in particular, Gods Word hath no where revealed, nor may humane wit presume to resolve.

V. 5. God called] Or, decreed it to be so called: for contrary things must be called by contrary names, Isa. 5. 20.

the light, Day] The word Day, in the former part of the verse noteth the day artificiall from morning till night, Exod. 16. 12, 13. which is the time of light measured out to twelve howres, Joh. 11. 9. Matth. 20. 3. 6. which were not more nor fewer, but longer or shorter according to the different proportion of the dayes in Summer and Winter: the first beganne with the Sunne-rising, and the last ended with the Sunne-setting; which division was in use not onely with the Jewes, but with the Romanes, Cæl. Rhodig. lib. 2. Antiq. Lection. cap. 9. but in the latter part the last word of the verse, the word Day is taken for the day naturall consisting of twenty foure howres, which is measured most usually from the Sun-rising to the Sun-rising; or, from the Sun-setting to the Sun-setting: for the use of the word day in this sense, compare Exod. 12. 29. with Numb. 3. 13. & 8. 17.

the first day] In the Hebrew it is one day in number, not expresly the first in order; the like expression we finde, Gen. 8. 5. Numb. 29. 1. and it is followed in the Greek, Matth. 28. 1. Joh. 20. 1. 1 Cor. 16. 2. This first day consisting of twenty foure howres had (as some thinke) for the first halfe of it the precedent darknesse, and for the other, the light newly created: the night they take to be meant by evening, a part of it, and the day by the morning which is part of it also: and accordiug to this the Sabbath (being as large a day as any of the rest, and so containing twenty foure howres) is measured from even to even, Levit. 23. 32. the Romanes, and other Westerne Nations reckon the twenty foure howres from mid-night to mid-night; the Egyptians contrariwise from mid-day to mid-day. Yet it may be with good probabilitie thought, that at the first (according to the Chaldean account, which is quite contrary to that of the Jewes fore-cited, measuring the day from Sun-rising to Sun-rising) the day naturall began with the light: for Even is the declining light of the fore-going day; and the morning may as well be called the end of the night past, as the beginning of the day following: and so divers of the learned by the evening understand the day, as the end thereof; and by morning the night, at which time it is at an end: for denominations are many times taken from the end, because thereby the thing is made compleat: so the whole weeke is called by the name Sabbath, Levit. 23. 15. & Matth. 18. 12. because with it the weeke is wholly made up and fully finished.

V. 6. firmament] The word in Hebrew is Rakiah, of the masculine gender without a plurall number; and it signifieth a thing spread out or extended like a curtaine, Isa. 40. 22. Psal. 104. 2. Or, like melted metals which (though with heat they become as like water in softnesse, moistnesse, and fluid motion, whereby they spread abroad (if they be not bounded by some other thing) as they are unlike water in its coldnesse doe settle in a firme soliditie, when the heat is spent: Or, like metals that are beaten out into bread th and length by the hammer, in that sense the word firmament may be attributed to the Orbs of the Stars and Planets, which may therefore be called the firmament, if not for such a solid firmenesse as is in metals, yet in regard of their durable natures, not subject to corruption, (as inferiour bodies are) untill the finall dissolution of the world, 2 Pet. 3. 12. But the word Rakiah, signifieth properly and immediately an expansion, or spreading out: and the word firmament is answerable to the Greek word Stereoma, which importeth firmenesse, rather then to the Hebrew word Rakiah, which signifieth expansion, extention, or spreading out: and therefore though the earth in regard of its firmenesse and stabilitie might be called firmament; the word Rakiah is applied unto it, not in respect of its firmenesse or stabilitie, but in respect of its extention or spreading out: Isa. 42. 5. & 44. 24. for which cause it may be also applied to the Region of the Aire, as in this place; though elsewhere such an acceptation or application of it be not very obvious in the Scriptures.

V. 7. which were] In the Hebrew there is neither were nor are, but thus, [the waters which under the firmament from the waters which above the firmament] but if a word be put in for the supplement to the sense, it should be rather are then were: for to say, were above, presupposeth the division made already, whereas this out-spread thing called firmament was made that they might be divided; and by it was the division made: So that according to the sense of the place (though the Originall will beare both readings alike) the words should be read thus, the waters which are under the firmament, from the waters which are above the firmament, meaning by the firmament, the out-spread aire from the earth to the clouds; and by the waters above it, the raine bound up in clouds, Job 26. 8. Psal. 18. 11.

V. 8. Heaven] That is, the region of the aire, and all that is above us which is called by the name of Heaven; as first, the fowles of heaven, vers. 30. of this Chapter, and Psal. 79. 2. Secondly, the clouds of heaven, Psal. 147. 8. Matth. 24. 30. to which properly belongeth the word Shamajim in this verse, signifying there waters, for the clouds poure out waters, Psal. 77. 17. Thirdly, and the starres of heaven, Gen. 22. 7. And fourthly, that which is above all these, the place of eternall happinesse, called Paradise, and the third Heaven, 2 Cor. 12. 2. (reckoning the whole region of the aire to the Moone for the first heaven, and from thence to the highest starres inclusively for the second) called by Solomon the heaven of heavens, 1 King. 8. 27. and by a greater then Solomon, our blessed Saviour, his Fathers house, Joh. 14. 2.

V. 9. gathered] Or, flow together; the Hebrew word Jikkavu, derived from Kavah, importing expectation, notes a fit place for their reception, as if it were so ready for them, as to expect their coming thither, and (according to its affinitie with the conjugate word Kau, which signifieth a line) it noteth the naturall disposition of the waters to runne to it (as by a streight line) the next way: See Psal. 33. 7.

one place] Their place may be called one in respect of their principall gathering together in the Sea, which is as a maine body (in comparison whereof other waters are but as armes or limbes) whence they run, and whither they have their recourse againe, Eccles. 1. 7. as God directeth their motion, and setteth their bounds, Job 38. 8. 10, 11. Psal. 104. 8, 9, 10. Prov. 8. 29. Jer. 5. 22.

dry land appeare] For before, it was for the most part covered with waters: it is like the earth at this time was, as in the second of Peter, Chap. 3. vers. 5. standing out of the water, and in the water: part out of it, and the greatest part under it, yet some part out of it, and above it; for there was a distance and division betwixt the upper waters in the clouds, and those below, which could not be at this time, if the whole earth were wholly covered; for there are some hils (as some say) higher then some rainy clouds, unlesse we say that hils had not their eminent existence untill the earth was wholly uncovered, but so the saying of Peter is not so fairly cleared. See Ann. on c. 7. v. 20.

V. 10. Earth] Though the Earth be firme and stable in it selfe, yet some derive the Hebrew word Erets from ruts, which signifieth to runne, because being made dry, it was meete for living creatures to runne upon it: some derive it from Ratson, signifying good pleasure; and so it importeth that not by any naturall neceſſitie or operation was this ſeparation made, but by Gods free-will & good pleaſure to make both elements more beneficiall and pleaſant to the creatures of ſeverall kinds.

Seas] The word here firſt brought in in the plurall number (as it is elſe-where) is uſed many times alſo in the ſingular; as Gen.22.7. Hoſ.11.10. Mic.7.12. Pſal. 8.10. (where alſo it is uſed in the plurall number) and though in every place where there is water, if it be but a baſon-full, there be a collection of waters, which is made up of many drops; as one loafe of many graines; yet it is applied onely, or for the moſt part, to a copious collection of waters. And it may well be uſed in the plurall number, becauſe of the pluralitie of ſignifications; naturall, artificiall, and figurative: naturall, as for the ſeverall ſorts of ſeas, the great Sea, Joſh.23.4. or Mediterranean Sea, called alſo the Occidentall, or Weſterne Sea, becauſe in reſpect of Jeruſalem that Sea is Weſt-ward; the Red Sea, called Mare Suph, or the Sedgie Sea, through which the Iſraelites paſſed, and in which the Egyptians were after drowned, Exod.14.22. 26, 27. the Salt Sea, Numb.34.3.12. called by Joſephus, the Lake Aſphaltis, or Aſphaltites, whereof he makes a memorable and admirable deſcription in his ſtory of the Warres of the Jewes, l. 5. c. 5. the Sea of Chinnereth, Num.34.11. called uſually the Lake of Genneſareth, Luk.5.1. and the Sea of Galile, and of Tiberias, Joh.6.1. which (as Pliny meaſureth it) is ſixteene miles long, and ſixe miles broad, Plin. Nat. Hiſt. lib.5. cap.15. And there is a pluralitie of Seas yet further varied according to the Countreys on which they border, as the Arabian, and Perſian, the Spaniſh, and Britiſh Sea, &c.

Againe, the word is applied to an artificiall collection of waters; for that great braſen veſſell, 1 King.7.26. was called a Sea, 2 Chron.4.6. for the hugeneſſe thereof, Joſeph. Antiq. l.8. c.2. It was made (ſaith he) after the manner of an Hemiſphere, or halfe-globe; and it was ten cubits broad from the one brimme to the other, 1 King.7.23. and an hand-bredth thick, and five cubits high, 2 Chron. 4.2. wherein the Prieſts were to waſh themſelves, 2 Chron.4.6.

Laſtly, by a figure, a multitude of men meeting together as drops in the Sea, is called a Sea, Jer.51.42. and by waters according to the interpretation of the Spirit, are ſometimes underſtood, multitudes, nations, and tongues, Revel. 17.15. But that acceptation which is proper to this place, is neither figurative, nor artificiall, but naturall; naturall in reſpect of the condition of the creature ſince the Creation, but miraculous and Divine in reſpect of the firſt ſeparation of the waters from the earth, and the collection of them into Seas.

God ſaw] The ſeparation of waters was but begun the ſecond day, but perfected on this third day: wherefore the approbation is not mentioned in the concluſion of the ſecond dayes worke, but reſerved till now, that it was perfectly made. So God made the out-ſpread thing called the firmament the ſecond day, verſ. 6.8. but he adjourned or put off the approbation of the worke till the fourth day when it was made perfect by addition of the Sunne, Moon and Starres, from verſ.14. to v.19.

V. 12. brought forth] There was both a kindly Spring in the growing of Graſſe, and Herbes, and Trees, and a mature Autumne in ripe and perfect fruits, as appears Chap.3.6. though yet the earth received neither warmth nor any other influence from Sunne, or Moone, or Starres; for yet they were not made: which ſheweth that Gods power depends not upon any means, but all meanes upon it: ſo that the godly, though they have no pawne of precedent proviſion, nor any ſurety of the aſſiſtance of the creatures for future increaſe; may confidently relye upon his promiſe for neceſſary ſupply, Pſal.37.19.

whoſe ſeed was in it ſelfe] That is, either in the root, or in the fruit, or in the leafe, or in the branch, or in the bud; ſo that it hath a vertue to bring forth its like for the conſervation of the kinde, without borrowing of any helpe from conjunction with any creature, as in the mixture of male and female; which difference of ſexe, in proprietie of ſpeech, is not in Plants, but in living creatures onely.

God ſaw that] This ſentence is often repeated, as verſ. 4. 10. 18. 21. 25. 31. to make a deepe impreſſion in mens mindes of the goodneſſe of the Maker, and of the creatures made for the glory of God, and the benefit of man; and to note that they prove bad onely by ſinne and unto ſinners; yet by the goodneſſe of God, and his mercy in Chriſt, (in whom the elect have a right reſtored to the things created, 1 Cor. 3. 21,22,23.) even the worſt ſort of them may be of good uſe; for poiſon may be ſo tempered as to be turned into medicine, (and to ſome creatures, poiſonous hearbes and plants yeeld ſome nouriſhment) for recovery of health to man-kind, whether good or bad; though not for the bad, but for the godlies ſake.

V. 14. Let there be lights] In the Hebrew the Verbe is of the ſingular number, the Noune of the plurall: So alſo Exod. 8.17. So there were lice, in the Hebrew, there was lice, lat. fuit pediculi: the like Enallage of number elſewhere.

to divide the day from the night] Heb. to divide betweene the day, and betweene the night. By day is meant the artificiall day from the Sun-riſing to the going downe of it; though in the concluding approbation of each dayes worke, it be put for a day naturall, conſiſting of twentie foure howres.

ſigues] Of the weather: as the Sunne, when it ſetteth with a red skie, fore-ſheweth a faire day to follow, Matth.16.2. and the Moone according to the varietie of its colour and figure, ſignifieth a difference of weather; and both of them, by their Eclipſes, betoken the temper of the enſuing ſeaſon, at leaſt for ſome naturall qualities and events; and ſtarres ſhining cleere in the winter ſignifie froſts. Plin. Nat. Hiſt. lib. 18. cap. 35. By their naturall and ordinary operation, and by an extraordinary and ſupernaturall ſometimes, they import terrible Comminations to the nether-world, as Luke 21. verſ. 25,26. Act. 2. 19, 20. whereat the wicked throughout the world, Pſal. 65. 8. not the godly, Jer.10.2. Luk.21.28. may be afraid; which yet giveth no warrant to the preſumption of Prognoſticators, or judiciarie Aſtrologers, to fore-tell the fortunes of men, or fates of Civill States by the Starres; or to make any prediction of any other ſupernaturall events from the face of the heavens, or the impreſſion of the Planets, or from the temper, figure, colour, or poſture of the Celeſtiall bodies; for ſuch Arts of Divination are condemned by the Word of God, Deuteron. 18.10. Iſa. 47. 13.

and for ſeaſons] Chiefly thoſe ſpecified, Gen.8.22. but withall they conduce for diſtinction of times, when to worke, and when to reſt; when to ſow, and when to plant, and prune, and reape; and when to doe other affaires with beſt conveniencie and advantage both for Naturall and Civill good; and they ſerved alſo for the difference of ſacred ſeaſons; as for the Sabbath, the Feaſt of Pentecoſt, New Moones, &c.

V. 16. two great lights] To wit, the Sunne, and the Moone; the Sunne the greater indeed, for it is one hundred and ſixty ſixe times greater then the Earth (as Aſtronomers reſolve, though rather upon probable conjecture then certaine demonſtration). Amongſt the Celeſtiall lights the Moone in appearance ſeemes the greateſt next the Sunne, and is called a great light, as the Sunne is (without any difference) when it is thirty nine times leſſe then the Earth, and is the leaſt but one (that is Mercury) of all the Planets; and of farre narrower compaſſe then the fixed ſtars; for ſome of them as Aſtronomers affirme, are an hundred and ſeven times greater then the earth, though they ſeeme much leſſe: Nevertheleſſe the Moone being the loweſt of theſe ſhining bodies, and ſo neerer to the earth, as it appeareth to be bigger in quantitie, ſo it miniſtreth more light to mans uſe, then any of the ſingle ſtarres of the greateſt magnitude, yea then all of them together, when it is at the full; yet this fulneſſe of light, is for a great part of it but a borrowed brightneſſe from the body of the Sunne, which the moone receiveth and reflecteth like a Looking-glaſſe.

to rule] The Sunne, Moone, and Starres, by their motions, light and influences under God, Jer. 31. 35. ſerve much, not onely for diſtinction of times, and for qualification of the creatures for naturall operations, (whereof ſee Deut.33.14. Hoſ. 2.21. Job 38.31.) but for ordering of Civill and Eccleſiaſticall matters with moſt conveniencie, both for the doing and forbearing of them: In this rule their commiſſion and power depends upon the Almighties pleaſure; for when he will have it ſo, the Moone ſhall not give her light, and the Starres ſhall fall from heaven, Matth.24.29. See alſo Joel 2.31. Act.2.20.

V. 17. God ſet them] He did not firſt create them, and after place them there, as he made man out of Paradiſe, and afterwards put him into it, Chap.2. verſ.15. but made and placed them both at once; as it is ſaid of the ſoule, that it was at the ſame time created and infuſed, infuſed and created.

V. 18. to divide] The time betwixt light and darkneſſe, by their preſence and withdrawment; and by alternate courſe or turnes to make their diſtinction betwixt night, which without light is darke; and the day, when the light baniſheth darkneſſe into the other Hemiſphere, or part of the world.

V. 20. moving creature] Heb. creeping thing. The fiſhes are called creeping things, (for ſo the Originall word Sherets importeth) becauſe as creeping things on the earth move with their bellies cloſe to the element they live on, ſo doe fiſhes in the water. The difference betwixt creeping and going creatures is properly in the feet, though if they be ſuch ſhort feet as bring their breaſts or bellies neere the ground, they are ſaid to creepe, (as a Lizard, or Neut; and ſo we ſay of ſome other creatures, whoſe legs doe lift them up but a little way above the ground they goe on;) now becauſe commonly ſuch things as creepe, doe move but ſlowly, and fiſhes move very ſwiftly in the water; we commonly call their motion not creeping, but ſwimming, rather according to what we perceive by ſenſe, then what the Originall word doth ſignifie. There are ſome ſwimming creatures called amphibia, that have their abode partly on the land, partly on the water, as the Crocodile, and the fiſh called the Sea-horſe; but though they have feet, and uſe them on the land, yet in the water they move with their bellies on the water, and uſe their feet but as oares to ſwimme withall, as doe

v. 22. blessed] Non dictum est benedixit Cœlum. vt. Augustin. Ps. 66. col. 692. B.

Swans and such like. There be many other kindes of creeping things, of which see Annot. on vers. 24.

V. 21. and every winged fowle] According to our Translation and the Vulgar Latine, the fowles and fishes seeme to have had the same Originall, vers. 20. & 22. and indeed it is probable they were rather made the fifth day with the fishes, then the sixth, with the beasts; because the fowles and fishes are thrice mentioned in the fifth dayes worke together, and no mention of the making them on the sixth day among the beasts; and though they be brought in among the beasts, Chap. 2. 19. it is but occasionally, to wit, that they might bee named by Adam, as the fishes were not: But yet it may be they were made rather of the earth, then of the water, though they were made the fifth day, because it is said, Let fowle multiply in the earth, vers. 22. of this Chapter; and though some of them live much in the water, and of what they get out of the water; the most of them flying in the aire, have their consistence upon the earth, or some solid body resting upon the earth. And yet there may be a third opinion as probable as either of the former, which is, that the fowles, as they live, so they were formed in the aire, and of it, other elements necessary to constitute mixt bodies (by Divine power) being tempered with it. Of which three Opinions there is none either demonstratively true, or dangerously false, if untrue.

created] To create in property of speech (as is noted before in the Annot. on vers. 1.) is to make a thing out of meere nothing, as the word Bara is used, vers. 1. The same word is used of the making of Whales though they had their being from precedent matter, because that matter was originally nothing; and such as it was, so unapt for such a worke, that without an infinite creating power it could never have beene formed into a Whale.

great whales] The Hebrew word Tanninim, rendred Whales, is taken in generall for all great creatures, whether of the earth, or of the water, Plin. Nat. Hist. lib. 32. cap. 11. writes there are one hundred seventy sixe kinds that live in the watery region, and he setteth them downe in an Alphebeticall order, among which the Whales are the greatest, being like moving mountaines in the Seas; for some of them (as he giveth in the measure in the same Chapter) are sixe hundred foot long, and three hundred sixty foot broad; they may then well be called great whales, as the Sunne and Moone, great lights, v. 16. yet as great as they were, they could not make themselves, no more then the little Gnat, or Pismire could give a being to it self. Of this creature much is said in the Book of Job under the name of Leviathan, so is he called, Chap. 41. which name in the Originall is a compound of two words, Lavah which is to couple, and Thannin a Serpent, or Dragon; because by his bignesse he seemes not one single creature, but a coupling of divers together; or because his scales are closed, or straitly compacted together.

V. 22. blessed] That is, by the vertue of his word he gave them power to ingender, beget, and bring forth their like in kinde: for that is a blessing, Gen. 8. 17. & 9. 1. & 24 60. Psal. 127. 4, 5. & 128. vers. 3. and therefore, (as some observe) God is not said to blesse the Sunne, or Moone, or Starres, or any other creature that hath not life; because they are not to increase and multiply like living creatures, which were made male and female for that purpose: This blessing of the fishes and fowles is not so expresly mentioned as conferred upon the beasts of the earth; nor omitted concerning them, because (as some Jewes imagine) the Serpent is among them; but premised in the former blessing, or presupposed in the difference of sexe, whereby they multiply, which is their blessing.

V. 24. earth bring forth] This bringing forth was meerely miraculous, and so extraordinary, that as the like was never after this time; God having ever since set the creatures (which have difference of sexe) in a regular way of multiplication of their kinde by procreation. How many of each sort of fishes, fowles, or beasts were formed at the first, and whether in the like number wherein they were received and reserved in the Arke, Gen. 7. 2. God hath not revealed in his Word, and what he is not pleased to teach in such Points, we must not be curious to learne, much lesse peremptorily take upon us to resolve.

living creature] The creatures now made in the generall are living creatures, and are distinguished into two kinds, going and creeping things; the going againe, are of two sorts, cattell, and the beasts of the earth; the word for cattell in the Originall is Behemah, which in the generall acceptation may signifie any living creature, especially great, wilde or tame; and in particular some take it for the greater sort of beasts, and therefore render it in the plurall number by Pecora; and some for the lesser sort, and translate it by Pecudes: but the most understand by it such as are usefull to man, either for his food or clothing, drawing, or burden-bearing, and therefore in Latine have their name from helpe, for the word is Jumentum, as it were Juvamentum: and Hhajiah, which is rendred beast, when it is put in the same sentence with Behemah, it is taken (as some learned Hebrewes observe) for a wilde beast, such a one as Jacob thought had devoured Joseph, Gen. 37. 20.

creeping things] Some creeping things had their originall from the waters, vers. 20. some from the earth, as here; and though now some of them be generated by corruption, all of them had their first originall by creation, at least the principall kinds of them; and for others, they might since be multiplied severall wayes, yet by vertue of the principles of the first production or creation of all things: and though many of them may seeme to be of little or no use, yet they serve by comparison to set forth the excellency of other creatures, and to shew the power of God as well as the greatest: by them was God much glorified in the miraculous contestation betwixt Moses and the Enchanters of Egypt, Exod. 8. 19. and in his judgement upon the Egyptians and upon other wicked persons, who are sometimes devoured by crawling and contemptible vermin; so was Pherecydes. AElian. Var. Hist. lib. 5. cap. 28. See also Plutarch in the life of Sylla.

V. 26. Let us make] This is spoken after the manner of men, as by way of deliberation and advice for a worke of great weight and moment: but besides this word of pluralitie [us] may intimate the Trinitie, distinctly noted in the first Epistle of John Chap. 5. vers. 7. In this manner (that is, plurally) God speaketh of himself foure times in Scripture, as besides this place, of this Booke, Chap. 3. 22. & Chap. 11. 7. & Isa. 6. 8. and in divers of them not by way of deliberation or advice, (as here) but so, as to minde us of the mysterie of the three Persons in one Godhead; and in this place God the Father seemeth to speake as communicating by way of consultation with God the Sonne, and God the Holy Ghost, concerning the creation of man. See Annot. the second on vers. 1. of this Chapter.

make man] Man is made on the last of Gods work-dayes, and the last worke of that day; and as the last, so the best; that is expressely mentioned (as the angels are not): as the first dayes worke was most imperfect, not that God increased in skill by continuance in working, nor that he could not have wrought up his handy-worke to perfection the first moment of Creation; but he meant by his example to teach us both patience in the expectation of proficiency, and diligence and perseverance to bring it on by degrees, from good to better, and best of all; and withall he shewed his fatherly beneficence and providence to his eldest sonne Adam, Luke 3. last, in furnishing the world and making all things ready for his entertainment before he put him into it.

man] The word Adam (put for man in the Hebrew, standing for the whole species of mankinde, as Chap. 9. 6.) signifyeth (as Josephus rendereth it) Ruddy; and he giveth this Reason of that name, because (saith he) he was made of earth tempered with red or yellow: for the earth which is elementary is of that colour; Joseph. Antiq. lib. 1. cap. 2. This name is given by God to man, Gen. 5. 2. rather then to other creatures though they were of earth also, because he was in danger of pride by his preheminence, and because he was capable (as they were not) of an humble and holy consideration of his meane originall, being made of that element on which every creature may set his foot and lay his dung.

Image] Chap. 5. 1. & Chap. 9. 6. 1 Cor. 11. 7. Colos. 3. 10. The Image of God in man consisteth not in any bodily shape, (as some hereticks have thought, and some simple people too easily beleeve; which errour is nourished by Popish pictures of God set forth in the resemblance of man, contrary to Deut. 4. vers. 15, 16.) but in the nature of the soule, as it is a spirituall and immortall substance, and indued with three faculties, understanding, will, and memory, as the Deitie hath three Persons, Father, Son, and holy Ghost; and in the now supernaturall indowments of divine knowledge, righteousnesse, and true holinesse, Eccles. 7. 29. Eph. 4. vers. 24. and lastly, in authoritie and government of the creatures, in which respect are Governours chiefly called Gods, Exod. 22. 28.

likenesse] Image and likenesse are not two diverse things, but the same more fully and clearely expressed in two words then in one; and that after the Hebrew manner in two substantives, whereof the one is of an Adjective construction: So, Let Us make man after our own Image, after our likenesse; is in effect thus much; Let us make man after our Image, very like unto us: the like Hebraisme may be observed, in Jer. 29. 11.

let them] The word man, or, the Hebrew, Adam, taken not personally or individually for one single person, but collectively in this verse, comprehendeth both male and female of mankind: and so it may well be said, not let him, but let them have dominion: which if it be considered negatively, as not extended to the ruling of the Aire, Meteors, or Stars above him, (for he hath no power at all over them) it may admonish him of reverence and obedience to his Maker, to whose power and Government alone they are reserved, and so are not subject unto man; but are as fellow-subjects unto God.

dominion] The Dominion which man had over all the creatures

tures (the fishes, even the great whales, and fowles, not excepted) was at first like that which the Centurion saith of his Military Command over his souldiers, Luk. 7. 8. For they were obedient to him with readinesse, and reverence, ready to come or goe at his Command; but this obedience to man was forfeited by his disobedience to God; and mans rebellion against his Maker is punished with the creatures rebellion against him, even to his ruine, Ezek. 14. 21. Though here be no mention of Dominion among mankinde over one another, but only over the other creatures; yet it is most like that Parents should have authoritie over their children, which as it would have been exercised without any rigour, so it would have been obeyed without repining or grudging. Of the Dominion of man over the creatures, see further, Annot. on Gen. 9. 2.

V. 27. male and female] Matth. 19. 4. Mark. 10. 6. Not at once, or in one person, but severally; that is, though he united them in participation of his image, he distinguished them into two sexes, male and female, for the increase of their kinde: their conformitie in participation of Gods Image is clearely manifest by many particulars, for in most of the respects fore-mentioned, Annotation 3. in vers. 26. the image of God is equally communicated to them both, and Eve was so like to Adam (except the difference of sexe which is no part of the divine image) in the particulars fore-mentioned, that in them, as she was made after the image of Adam, she was also made after the image of God: as if one measure be made according to the standard, an hundred made according to that, agree with the standard as well as it.

V. 28. be fruitfull] These words were rather a benediction, as vers. 22. then an injunction for procreation; yet that also, so farre as man was bound to doe his part for multiplication of mankinde: how farre this agreeth to the condition of man since his fall into sinne, may be gathered by the words of our Saviour, Matth. 19. 10, 11. and of the Apostle, 1 Cor. 8. 9. whereby all are allowed, and those necessarily required to marry, (who have not the gift to continue in chastitie without that remedy) whether they be Civill or Ecclesiasticall persons, since the difference of callings makes no difference of naturall inclinations; and that marriage is honourable in all, Heb. 13. 4. without distinction or exception.

subdue it] Not as by conquest, as if it were rebellious from its creation; but by subduing is meant a keeping of it in a state of subjection and service to man, as if he had gotten the mastery of it by force, as Jer. 34. 11.

V. 29. bearing seed] See Annot. on vers. 12. Whether there were any flesh eaten by the fathers before the flood or no; See Annot. on Gen. c. 9. vers. 3.

V. 30. and to every beast of the earth] Psal. 104. 14. Though now divers sorts both of beasts and birds doe live on flesh, so as it seemes naturall to them, yet at the first it is probable there was no such antipathy betwixt the creatures, nor such an appetite to devoure one another, as since the fall, which caused not only a falling out betwixt God and man, but betwixt man and man; man and the creatures; one creature and another; and the same creatures which now live upon flesh, are observed in want of it to feed on figs and chesnuts, as Aug. sheweth, de Civ. Dei lib. 15. Chap. last: and no doubt in the like defect they might and doe make use of other things which grow out of the earth, which in the beginning, before sinne had brought a curse upon the creatures, were both more nutritive, and more delightfull to the appetite of every creature, so they needed not to desire any other diet.

V. 31. very good] Every particular creature was good taken by it selfe; good as from God; for as from his mouth proceedeth not evill and good, Lam. 3. 38. so from his hand proceedeth no evill at all, either of sinne, or of paine; but good onely, though since the corruption, the evill of paine be his work, Amos 3. 6. as the evill of sinne was mans, Eccles. 7. 29. Secondly, good in their qualities and effects, without any either guilt or hurt: But now taken all together, they are very good; and very good, because their goodnesse is diffusive, and mutually communicated all over the world; and the more good, because man the most excellent of all Gods visible workes was made, who onely among them knowes the goodnesse of the other creatures, and how to make good use of them all; and without knowledge and use, they could not be so good either in estimation or in deed, as with them both: and God might call them good and very good, because of his owne complacency in the creatures, Psal. 104. 31.

In all this History of the Creation, there is no mention of the creation of Angels, whence some have supposed them to be eternall; but against that may be alleadged, Col. 1. 16, 17. Some, that though they had a beginning, yet it was long before the creation recorded in this Chapter; but in the same place of the Apostle, all things in heaven and in earth, visible and invisible, are wrapped up in one originall, and that distinguished from the eternall duration of the Creator who was before all things, and by whom all things consist; and this according to the judgement of the soundest Divines in all ages. For the time of their making, this is certaine, they were made before man fell, but on what day, whether the first day with the highest heavens, (as some conceive: See Annot. last on vers. 1. of this Chap.) or the second day (as others think) when the Firmament was made, by which they understand all the three Heavens, whereof one is the habitation of Angels; or the fourth day, when some hold, that as the visible heavens were garnished with stars, so the invisible were furnished with Angels; which might be the more probable, but that it seemes the Angels were made before the stars; for the sonnes of God, by which are meant the Angels, are said to shout for joy at the first appearing of the morning stars, Job 38. 7. In this diversitie of opinions for the time of the creation, we conceive that in the sixe dayes space, and before the last day, there is no errour of danger which way soever we take it. If it be asked why their creation was not more punctually expressed, the answer may be, not as commonly it is, that the Jews were too dull to be informed of spirituall beings, for the mystery of the Trinity is divers times insinuated in this Book of Genesis, and Cherubims are mentioned, Chap. 3. 24. and afterwards we read of Angels, Gen. Chap. 19. 1. 15. & Chap. 28. 12. & Chap. 32. 1. but because this first History was purposely and principally for information concerning the visible world; the invisible, whereof we know but in part, being reserved for the knowledge of a better life, 1 Cor. 13. 9.

CHAP. II.

Vers 1. THus the heaven] This verse might more fitly have beene made the close of the precedent Chapter, then the beginning of the present; for it summarily containeth what is particularly set downe in the first Chapter; as also that (all Gods specificall workes finished on the sixth day) he rested on the seventh. The like inconvenient division of Chapters may be observed betwixt 1 Cor. 12. & Chap. 13. where the last vers. of the 12. Chapter might well have beene made the first of the thirteenth; and the last verse of Act. 21. the first of Act. 22. Which incongruitie is not to be charged upon the Word of God, which originally was not so divided into Chapters and verses as now it is, both in the Greek and Hebrew Text, and in the Translations out of them.

all the hoste of them] Psal. 33. 6. All the creatures in heaven and on earth, in number, order, power, and service are unto God, and under God that made them, as a great Hoste and Armie of souldiers under a Generall, Isa. 40. 26. & 45. vers. 12. and of this Hoste the Angels are a chiefe part; as Gen. 32. 1, 2. Numb. 22. 31. Josh. 5. 13. 2 King. 19. 35. Matth. 26. 53. and the weakest kinde of all his workes (if mustered to warre by his command) will make a puissant Army, and will prevaile against the proudest Tyrant. See Exod. 8. And in such service the inanimate creatures (those which have no life) upon an impression of his power and pleasure will doe the office of valiant warriers. See Judg. 5. 20.

V. 2. on the seventh] Not inclusively, or including the seventh day among the number of work-dayes; but exclusively, as ending, or having ended all his workes on the sixe dayes, and then beginning his cessation on the seventh; which was not out of wearinesse to worke any more, for he giveth power to the faint, and to them that have no might he increaseth strength, Isa. 40. 29. therefore he neither fainteth, nor is weary, vers. 28. not weary of his owne works, which are all done without difficultie or pains to him, though he be said in a figurative sense to be weary of our workes, Isa. 1. 14. & Chap. 7. 13. & Chap. 43. 24. Jer. 15. 6. Mal. 2. 17. After the Greek Translation of the seventy Interpreters it is on the sixth day for the seventh; but the Originall Text must not be mis-translated, but rightly interpreted: a like expression and meaning is in the book of Esther concerning the Jews slaughter of their enemies, and their resting from slaughter, Est. 9. vers. 15, 16, 17.

ended his worke] So that that day he wrought not, as before; or the words may be read, he had ended his worke; for the Hebrews have but one pretertense, which comprehends the sense of the preterperfect and preterpluperfect tenses.

rested] He rested from making any more kinds of creatures; for all kinds were either actually or vertually made already; but he rested not from concurring in operation for production or making of individuals or singular creatures; nor from creation of the soules of mankind, nor from the orderly government of the world (already made) by his continuall providence, which never ceaseth, Joh. 5. 17. nor did he so stint himselfe by his sixe dayes worke, but that when he pleased he would worke new works of wonder, above or against the ordinary operations of nature.

remembrance of his blessing in the abundance and variety of usefull creatures made in the precedent sixe dayes; and for a day of blessing to the soule of man by the spirituall exercises of that day, which well observed, bringeth with it a great portion of blessing, not onely in spirituall, but in temporall things, Isa. 58.14. as the profanation of it is the cause of a curse, Neh. 13. 17,18. Jer.17.24,25,26,27.

sanctified it] That is, appointed it to be kept holy by holy meditation of God, and of his works, with reference to him, and holy intercourse with him in performance of all holy duties of devotion to him, in the acts of charitie and mercy to man, which are as sacrifices presented to God, Heb.13.16.

it] That is, not onely that seventh day wherein God rested after all his works, in sixe dayes, were finished, and which was the first Sabbath of the world, but a seventh day in weekly recourse, according to that which was 2544. yeares after written in the fourth Commandement.

because] This sheweth that the Sabbath is not here mentioned by anticipation, as a thing not in being from the beginning, but destinated to be in time to come; for the creation of the world in sixe dayes, and Gods resting the seventh, being the cause of the Sabbaths institution, the observation of it was not to be put off untill the time of the gathering of Manna, Exod. 16. where (after this place) it is first spoken of by Moses; for that were to cast the effect 2544. yeares behind the cause, and to begin the memoriall that the world was made (which most concerned the people of the first ages of the world to remember and regard) not untill 888. yeares (or thereabouts) after it was mar'd; for so many yeares after the Flood was the raining of Manna, and the strict charge concerning the keeping of the Sabbath occasioned thereby.

V. 4. generations] (Matth.1.1.) That is, the story of the generation, originall, or beginning of the heavens and the earth, and of all the creatures contained in them both.

in the day] The day is not here taken (as in the first Chapter and in the beginning of this) for a seventh part of the weeke, but with more latitude for a time in generall wherein a thing is done, or to be done; as vers.17. & Luk.19.42. 2 Cor. 6. 2. Ruth 4.5.

the Lord God] The Name God hath beene mentioned, from the beginning of Genesis to this verse, thirty three times, or thereabouts; but he is not called Jehovah before now the creation was perfect; yet as if he were not so called now, it is said, Exod 6.3. by my Name Jehovah was I not knowne. See Annot. on that place.

V. 5. before] The meaning is not that plants and herbes were first made, and then put into the earth, (as man was first made, and then placed in Paradise) but that God made the plants which before were not in the earth, nor could have been but by his fore-going and fore-given power to produce them. See Gen.1.12.

raine] The fruitfulnesse of the earth came not by the ordinary concourse of second causes, as raine from heaven, nor by humane labour on the ground.

V. 6. But] Some for But a mist, read, Or a mist: some, nor a mist, continuing the negative of the precedent verse: and so the fruitfulnesse of the earth was by Gods immediate power, without any other meanes naturall, or artificiall, from above, or from below.

But a mist] Which went up, and came downe in a dew whereby the earth was softned, and disposed to let out the seminall vertue, wherewith God hath endowed it, for putting forth plants, and fruits; and whereby those that were already brought forth were cherished; and if they were not produced and perfected in an instant, (which God might easily doe) they might have a further degree of proceeding to perfection by meanes of this mist.

V. 7. dust] This meane originall of mans body, though it serve to exalt the Power and Wisdome of the Creator, who out of such indisposed materials could make such a curious worke, yet it serves to humble man in regard of the baseneſse of his beginning; and in regard of his now transitory condition, which is like to dust before the winde, Psal. 18. 42. not durable as marble, or the rocks against which the winds blowing, and waves beating cannot prevaile, Matth.7.25. See Gen.3.19. & Chap. 18. vers. 27.

formed] The word Jatsar in Hebrew signifieth the act of a Potter when he formeth somewhat out of clay: See Isa.64.8. Jer. 18. from the first to the sixth verse, and Rom.9.20,21.

breathed] The Lord animated, or inspired him with a living, and reasonable soule, or spirit, which presently appeared by breath at his nostrils; for the soule of man is not educed, derived, or fetched out of any power in the matter of the body, nor made of any matter at all, as the body is, but as it is a spirit, immateriall, and immortall, so it had its immediate originall from the Father of Spirits, Heb.12.9. See Numb.16.22. & Chap. 27.16. Job 27. 3. Chap. 33. 4. Eccles. 12. 9. Zach. 12. 1.

breath of life] (Chap.7.22. Job 27.3. Isa.2.22. Heb.) breath of lives. For man hath a vegetative life with trees and plants; a sensitive life with beasts; and above them both, an intellectuall, or reasonable life with Angels; though theirs be of a more excellent degree then his: there is also a life of grace and of glory to which Adam was created, and his posteritie restored by faith in Christ.

a living soule] That is, a living man, by a Synecdoche of the part (commonly the better part) put for the whole. See Annot. on Gen.12.5.

V. 8. a garden] Though the whole earth was pleasant, and fruitfull, and Garden-like, in respect of what it hath been since the fall; yet God was so good and kind to Adam, that he planted him a Paradise, choicely furnished with excellent Plants and fruits, wherein he might live in a condition of dignitie and delight: See Gen.13.10. Ezek.28.13. in which respect it was a figure of Heaven, Luk.23.43. 2 Cor.12.4. and into this Paradise he put him, having formed him before in some other place. This Paradise, though mentioned after the seventh day, was made before, viz. the third day, as man was the sixth day, though his creation be particularly reported after the seventh day by a figure called Hysterologia, whereby that is set downe after another thing, which in strictnesse of order should be mentioned before it. Or, it may be said, that the matter of the creation, or the materiall parts, or severall kinds of creatures were delivered in the first Chapter, and the maner of some particular works (more eminent then the rest) recorded in the second Chapter, and so there is no inversion of order; or if there were, God is not tied to Logicall rules either for the course of his working, or for the discourse and history of his works.

Eastward] From Canaan and Arabia-petrea, where Moses is thought to have beene when he wrote this story; so was Mesopotamia situate (whereof in the next note) See Numb. 23.7. compared with Deut.23.4. & Gen. 28. from vers.2. to vers.8. inclusively, compared with Chap.29. vers.1.

Eden] The Hebrew word Ghneden signifieth pleasure, or delight; whence it is like the Greek word Hedone (which signifieth the same) is derived, & so it may be an appellative, not a proper name, and may be taken for a very pleasant Garden, or Orchard, without any particular designation of place, where it was planted. But it is more congruous to the holy Text (and thereto the best Expositors agree) to take it here for a proper name of a place, as Gen. Chap.4.16. 2 King.19.12. Isa. 37. 12. Ezek.27.23. & Chap.28.13. There were two Edens of especiall note, the one a Province in Syria called Celosyria; the other is that Region which first named Eden, was afterwards called Aram-fluviorum, or Aram Naharaim, Psal.60. tit. Or, Mesopotamia, Gen.24.10. In the lower part of this Eden, (as we may probably conceive) was the Orchard or Garden of pleasure here spoken of; probably, I say, for certainly none can tell: nor by reason of the great change of the world both for the earth, and water, the change of Rivers in their course, and names, was it haply knowne in Moses time, except by revelation from God.

V. 9. tree of life] (Prov.3.18. Revel.2.7. & Chap. 22.2.) So called, either because it was of use, and had the force and vertue of supporting food, to nourish and cherish mans nature, and of preventing, Physicke to preserve it from diseases and decay; and consequently (if man had not sinned) to prolong his life also to many hundreds of yeares: (but whether Adam were to use it as his dayly diet is uncertain) Or, because it Sacramentally signified, that if a man persisted in obedience to God, he should continue in perfect health and strength in that place, and state, untill thence (without disease or death) he were taken up to the place and state of everlasting life in the Paradise above, as Enoch was, Gen.5.24. and Eliah, 2 King. 2. 11. and (God who gave it the name foreseeing both mans misery, and his remedy by redemption of Christ,) it might be so called as a Type or figure of him, who brought life and immortality (to those whom sinne had killed) by beliefe in his merits to obtaine Gods mercy; whence he might (as he is) be named the tree of life, Revel.22.2.

in the midst] Not Mathematically, as if it were precisely and punctually in the midst, as in the center of Paradise, (for the tree of knowledge of good and evill was there also) but [in the midst] in the Hebrew phrase is among others, as Exod. 3. 20. Deut.11.3. 1 Sam.16.13.

tree of knowledg] Not so called in respect of God, as if thereby he should experimentally know somewhat of the disposition of Adam and Eve, which he did not foresee; but from the event in respect of them, who by tasting of it against the revealed will of God, would learne and know by wofull experience a vast difference betwixt the good of obedience, and the evill of disobedience, thereafter as they kept or brake the Commandement given unto them. By this prohibition God witnessed his owne originall right to dispose of his creatures, both for use and for forbearance; and put them to the practice of submission to their maker in indifferent things; so farre is God from from allowing man to live lawleſſe in any ſtate, that he would have him be under law in the ſtate of Innocencie: what Tree this was for kinde, whether a fig-tree (as ſome thinke (becauſe fig-leaves were ſo ready to cover their nakedneſſe, Chap. 3.7.) which is not like, becauſe a figge is not a fruit ſo pleaſant to the eyes, as that is ſaid to be, verſ. 6. or an apple-tree, for which ſome alledge, Cant. 8. 5. but with little ground of proofe; or whether of this tree, and the former, there were onely one or more of the ſame kind, we need not enquire, nor can we determine, ſince the Scripture is ſilent: the onely fruit we can reape of this Tree, is a leſſon of Caution againſt too much deſire of denied, or forbidden knowledge.

V. 10. out of Eden] The Garden being in the lower part of the Countrey of Eden, a River ranne downe out of Eden to water it.

foure heads] From the garden the River was branched out into foure ſtreames; the Originall of theſe foure ſtreames or rivers, here meeting together, and afterward parted, verſ. 11. is now not known nor found in any part of the earth: and no marvell, there having been ſo great mutation of things both by the flood, and ſince by earth-quakes, which have changed the courſe of waters, and the names of rivers; and divers of them, as the rivers Alpheus, Arethuſa, Ana and ſome others running a great way under ground, ſeeme to have their Originall in ſeverall places; whence if the deſcriptions of places and rivers in later times agree not with this of Moſes, we ſhould not conceive there is any contradiction to the truth of this Story, ſince as it is moſt ancient, ſo it is moſt infallibly true, though in all points it appeare not ſo to humane reaſon, or experimentall obſervation of the degenerated world. Joſephus Antiq. lib.1. cap. 2. makes theſe foure heads to bee foure famous rivers. Firſt, Ganges the greateſt river in India. Second, Nilus which runneth through Egypt. The third Tigris, a great river in Armenia the greater. Fourth, Euphrates, another renowned river of the ſame Countrey. But theſe rivers; eſpecially the three firſt, are ſo farre diſtant, that there can be no ſuch affinitie in their ſtreames, as here is implied; beſides if all theſe foure rivers ſhould be ſuppoſed to be in Eden, it would make the portion of land much larger, then either out of Scripture or other Authors, whether Hiſtorians or Geographers, can be collected or ſuppoſed.

V. 11. Piſon] The maine river being ſuppoſed to be Euphrates, the firſt chanell here noted is Piſon, or Piſchon, which the Greeks call by the name of a kingly river; this falles into Tigris and gives the name of Paſitigris or Piſotigris to the concurrent ſtreames.

the land of Havilah] So called (as ſome thinke) from Havilah the ſonne of Cuſh, of the poſteritie of Cham, Gen. 10.7. but by obſervation of Hiſtory, it is more probable that it was ſo called of Havilah of the poſteritie of Shem, Gen. 10.29. This land of Havilah is thought to be in Eaſt India, the Geographers call it Suſiana.

V. 12. gold is good] Yet commonly where there is gold below, there is the barreneſt ſoyle above: the earth therein is no hypocrite with the beſt ſide outward: and yet, (as many uſe the matter) gold how good ſo ever in it ſelfe, is not good for them; for where as God hath placed it below their feet, they make it the Idol of their hearts, as Achan did, Joſh. 7. 21. which they would not doe, if they conſidered that for the moſt part thoſe countries which are furniſhed with gold, are deſtitute of better proviſion both temporall and ſpirituall; and that the people who inhabit the places where it abounds, are ſlaves to the covetous, and as the Indians to the Spaniards, who are ſlaves to this yellow Idol, taking gold for their god; a weake and unworthy God, which in time of famine would not be ſo much ſet by as a morſell of bread, and a cup of water.

Bdelium] Hebr. Bedolahh; is a cleare gumme ſweet to ſmell to, but bitter in taſte, iſſuing out of a tree in colour blacke, and of the bigneſſe of an Olive tree, with leaves like an Oake, and fruit reſembling the wild figge. Plin. Hiſt. lib.12.cap.9. To the colour of this gumme is Manna likened, Numb. 11. 7. and Manna, (though in figure it were like Coriander ſeed, which is blacke or of a darke colour) was in colour white, Exod. 16. 31. wherefore ſome take the word Bdelium not only for a yellow gumme like Amber, but for a white gumme, like Cryſtall; yet the beſt kinde of Bdelium was yellow, as Plinie affirmeth in the place fore-mentioned.

Onyx ſtone] Of that ſee Exod. 28.20.

V. 13. Gihon or Gibhon] The ſecond river or chanell, which is deſcribed by the countrey which it watereth; whereof ſee the next Annot.

Ethiopia] The land of Cuſh, (ſo it is in the Hebrew) and that land is a part of Arabia, neere unto Meſopotamia, which fell to the inheritance of Cuſh the ſonne of Cain: this is the Weſterne Ethiopia, ſo called, for diſtinction from another Ethiopia neere unto Canaan.

V. 14. Hiddekell] The third river or chanell called (in Plin. hiſt.) with ſome conformitie, though with too much deflection from the Originall, Diglito, Plin.lib.6. cap.27. for Hidclito, (as ſome thinke) hath its name from the ſwiftneſſe of the ſtreame.

Euphrates] So called by a Synecdocle of the whole for a part; ſee the Hebrew name of Euphrates is Perath from Pera which ſignifieth to fructifie or make fruitfull, becauſe (after the manner of the river Nilus) by overflowing its banks it waters the fields and meadows, Plin. Nat. hiſt. lib. 5. cap. 26. It is called the great river Euphrates, Deut. 1. 7. & Job 1. 4. not for that it was the greateſt of thoſe that were known to the Jews, but becauſe of its broad ſpreading, when it overflowed the chanels; wherein it exceeded the river Nilus; the ſpring-head of it is ſaid to be Niphate an hill in Armenia, whence it floweth through the middeſt of Babylon, and at laſt runneth into the red Sea.

V. 15. to dreſſe it] Notwithſtanding the dignitie of Adams excellent condition, the variety and plenty of proviſion he had without any coſt or paines of his owne; he was not to live an idle life, but to exerciſe his body in the worke of a Gardiner, to prune and dreſſe the trees, and herbes of the garden; and to keepe it from the breaking in of beaſts that were without it, and from the annoyance of thoſe that were within: for it is like, that ſome beaſts were conſtantly in it; or at leaſt had ſometimes admittance to it; for there they were when Adam gave names unto them, verſ. 19,20. and there was the Serpent that tempted Eve, Chap. 3.1. and the preſence of other creatures ſerved both for addition to his delight, and for augmentation to his knowledge, and for exercile of his dutie in honouring his Creator, and of his owne dominion over the creature: for which it may be, the awfulneſſe of his preſence, but certainly a word or a beck was ſufficient. Now though he were to worke in the weeke-dayes, it was not with wearineſſe, and ſweat (which came upon him as a curſe afterward, upon the commiſſion of his ſinne, Chap. 3.19) and yet on the Sabbath (by Gods example, if not by his command) he was to reſt from that worke, to give himſelfe more intentively to the worſhip of God, and communion with God, which he could not ſo well doe, if he did any thing elſe at the ſame time.

V. 16. the Lord commanded] The words next following are a precept in forme, but in effect a permiſſion, or indulgence rather, as is that of the Apoſtle, 1 Cor. 10. verſ. 25.27. and yet in every intimation of the mind of God, there is a vertuall command for man to be, and to doe according to Gods revealed will therein, whether it be for duty or for libertie; and where he alloweth the uſe of any thing, there he forbiddeth a ſuperſtitious forbearance of it; as Coloſ. 2. 21.

V. 17. thou ſhalt not] An Enallage of number, putting the ſingular number for the plurall; for it appeareth, Chap. 3. verſ. 1, 2. that the prohibition was given to Eve as well as to Adam; unleſſe we diſtinguiſh of the manner of giving, and ſay, that it was given to Adam immediately, and to Eve mediately by Adam; as Chriſt is ſaid to baptize, not immediately himſelfe, but mediately by his Diſciples, Joh. 4. verſ. 1.2.

in the day that thou eateſt thereof, thou ſhalt ſurely die] Which ſeemeth to be contradicted by the deferring of Adams death, and the reprieve of his life untill he was nine hundred and thirty yeares old: (for he lived to that age, and then died, Gen. Chap. 5. verſ. 5.) But the meaning of theſe words is, as if God had ſaid unto him, So ſoone as thou takeſt and taſteſt of the forbidden fruit, thou ſhalt ſurely come down to a condition of mortalitie; thy body ſhall be ſubject to be ſeiſed on by ſuch diſeaſes and harmes as will deliver thee up to death; and thy ſoule (ſtained and wounded by ſinne) (when thy body is dead, unleſſe my mercy upon thy repentance pardon it) ſhall periſh by a perpetuall ſeparation from the grace and glory of my preſence; which is another death much worſe then the former. Adam then was not abſolutely immortall, and without all poſſibilitie of dying; for ſo to be immortall is peculiar to God alone, 1 Tim. 6.16. becauſe he onely is incorruptible, and man corruptible, Rom. 1. 23. For God is a moſt pure and ſimple Eſſence, and man is compounded many waies. Secondly, Nor was he immortall by any freedome from death, flowing from the principles of his nature, as the Angels are, who are ſpirituall creatures not conſiſting of any materiall ſubſtance at all; and ſo the ſoule of man alſo is immortall, Matth. 10.28. Thirdly, he was not immortall onely by ſingular or ſpeciall grace and favour as Enoch, Gen. 5.24. Heb. 11.5. and Elijah, 2 King. 2.11. Fourthly, nor was he immortall as thoſe who are raiſed from the dead ſhall be; for they in their bodies, as well as in their ſoules become immortall by divime ordination, and ſuppert, ſo that they cannot die, having neither need nor uſe of meats, 1 Cor. 6.13. though Chriſt to aſſure his Diſciples of the certaintie of his reſurrection, did eate, Luk. 24.43. as the Angels did, Gen. 18.8. that they might be knowne to have bodies indeed, and not in appearance onely, and might not yet appeare to be others then men as their ſhape ſhewed them. Fifthly, but his immortality was a condition ſafe from ſickneſſe and death, (if he had not ſinned, Rom. 5.12.) untill God ſaw it good to advance

Questionless therefore man's nature is justly ashamed of this act; for that disobedience whereby the genital members are taken from the will's Rule, and given to Lust's, is a plain demonstration of the reward of our first father had for his sin; and that ought to be most apparent in those parts, because thence is over nature derived, which was so depraved by that his first Offence.

vance him from earth to heaven: so he had a power not to have died, but after the resurrection from the dead, death shall have no more power over the bodies of men, then over their soules; which in that respect, besides others, may be called spirituall bodies, as 1 Cor. 15. 44. this Commination of death was given by God (though not so taken by man) as a caveat against sinne: for as in the state of innocencie, there was use of a law for exercise of obedience, and for a tribute of dutie unto the Creator; so was there cause and use for threats unto the creature, (though in his most holy and excellent condition) to keepe him from sinne: how much more needfull are both in our degenerate state, for restraint of our corruptions, and the repulse of temptations; from which the grace of the Gospel doth not free us; for the members have no priviledge which the head hath not. See Matth.4. from vers. 1. to the tenth.

V. 18. It is not good] (Ruth 3. 1.) That is, first, not so profitable for increase: secondly, not so comfortable for a mans selfe, Eccles.4. 9,10,11,12. thirdly, not so conformable to the communitie of living creatures, who as male and female sort together for the increase of their kinde: fourthly, nor so honourable for the Creator, for his service will be more and more solemne by company, then by any one alone; yet in times of persecution it may be better to be single then to be yoaked in marriage, as the Apostle resolveth, 1 Cor.8.26.28. To this purpose see also Jer.16.2.

meet for him] As gracefull in his sight above other creatures, and grateful to him both as a companion in the comforts of life, and as a partner for the propagation and increase of mankind.

V. 19. fowle of the ayre] See Annot.on Chap.1.vers.21.

and brought] By moving them to come and present themselves to Adam, as their Lord to whom they were to be in subjection, Psal.8.6,7,8. So they came to Noah to be kept in the Arke, Gen.7.9. by Gods appointment, Chap.6. vers.20.

to see] Not that God was doubtfull what prudence was in Adam, nor how he would make use of it in this particular; but after the manner of men God speaketh here, as Chap. 18. 21. whereby he putteth him to give evidence of his wisdome, in giving the creatures names according to their natures; or otherwise, as in discretion they might most fitly be distinguished.

that was the name] The giving of names to the creatures is an act of authoritie over them, and the acceptation of those names is an acknowledgement of that authoritie. See Gen.5.2,3. & Chap.17.5.15. Luk.1.63. & Chap.2.21.

V. 21. deepe sleepe] Gen.15.12. 1.Sam.26.7.

one of his ribs] Not a bare bone, but a rib with flesh on it, vers. 23. It was not superfluous, nor monstrous, if he had one rib more then ordinary put into his side for such a purpose; and if it were one of the ordinary number, which goeth to the composition of mans body, God might soone make him another by his multiplying power, as Luk.9. vers.13,14. Or he might harden the flesh to the strength of a bone, as the gums of such as have lost their teeth are sometimes so hardned, as to be able to chew the hardest meate: and it must needs be easie to him to uphold the strength of Adam, though he wanted the ribbe, who could put such vigour into the haires of Sampson, Judg. 16. 17.

V.22. the rib] Womans originall was not so high as the head, nor so low as the foot; becaus she was to be neither her husbands Mistresse, nor his Slave; but betwixt both: and it was neere unto the heart, that his authoritie might relish more of loving respect, then of rigorous power; and that her observance of him might be rather heartily then grudgingly performed: her making is mentioned now after the Sabbath, though she were formed the sixth day, Gen.Chap.1. vers.27. as well as Adam, becaus in the first Chapter their creation in the generall was noted with other creatures, but in regard of the excellencie of mankind above them all, God is pleased to make a more particular relation of the manner of their making, first of the man, vers.7. and here of the woman.

brought her] God brought the woman to the man as a wife to her husband, and joyned her to him as an helper, and thereby shewed the sanctitie and dignitie of marriage being ordained, and the first marriage made by God himselfe in the best and holiest estate that ever man enjoyed upon earth.

V. 23. This now is] How knew Adam this, he being in a deepe sleepe while the rib was taken out of his side, vers. 21. of which she was made? It was an absurd, as well as a sinfull compact of the Priests and Elders, that the souldiers should say the Disciples of our Saviour stole him out of the grave while they slept, Matth.28.12,13. for if they were asleepe how could they tell he was stollen? but for Adam, though it be said he was asleepe, untill the rib was taken out, and the flesh closed up; it is not said he was asleepe while the woman was made; or if he were, he might know her originall by him that made her: Some hence inferre that at the resurrection of the dead the knowledge and acquaintance of friends shall be renued; which if it be true, cannot yet be concluded from this example.

woman] Or Manneſſe. (as in the Hebrew Iſh is man, and Iſhah woman) that is, so neere of kinne to man being bone of his bone, and flesh of his flesh, that he cannot contemne her; but he must dishonour himselfe.

V. 24. leave] Psal. 45. 10. Whether these words be the words of God, or of Adam, or of Moses is somewhat doubtfull; but it seemes most probable that they are the words of Moses applying the duty of cohabitation, and bond of union betwixt man and wife, as fit to be preferred before the cohabitation and union of parents and children, whether the parents be kind or unkind unto them, as Gen.31.14. though the duties of these relations (so farre as they may consist with the necessitie of matrimoniall interests) must not be omitted, nor slightly performed.

one flesh] (Mat 19.5. Mark.10.8. 1 Cor.6.16. Ephes.5.31. Matth.14.15.) The man is to be as chary of his wives body, as if it were his owne, Ephes.5.28,29. and the woman of his, as if it were her owne; and both, so peculiarly and properly their yokefellowes, as not to account their owne bodies at their own disposall, 1 Cor.7.4. and in the production and procreation of children they be so one flesh, that it cannot be distinguished in the children, which part is the mans and which the womans; and consequently in sundry respects they are as one person.

V. 25. not ashamed] Shamefastnesse is not properly a vertue, but a perturbation of the mind arising out of the apprehension of an ignominious or disgracefull evill, Arist. Eth.l.4.c.9. and out of feare of a just reprehension for it; Gell. Noct. Attic. l.19. c. 16. yet they are commonly most vitious who are least apt to blush, or to be ashamed of what is said or done amisse, as we may observe by the aggravation of sinne set downe by the Prophet Jeremiah, Chap. 6.15. & 8. 12. Before sinne, all things were honest and comely, so that there was no cause of shame to Adam or Eve either before God, or betwixt themselves; their bodies as Gods handy-work, were perfect and glorious pieces, to which before their fall, the bravest apparell would have been as a cloud spread over the Sunne; or as a black maske over a beautifull face; but having sinned, they felt an inward guilt which made them ashamed; and yet when sinne is utterly abolished, the primitive naked beauty and boldnesse will be restored, and be glorious againe in all those who by the second Adam have redemption and deliverance from all the evill that came upon them by the first Adam. See 1 Cor.15.43.

CHAP. III.

Vers.1 Serpent] There is a great difference of Serpents noted in naturall history, Plin. Hist. l.8. c.14. for some are very little, some exceeding great; some (according to the signification of the Latine word) creepe, and some flye: the flying Serpents are called Dragons; and the Devil having the malignitie of both, is called both a Serpent and a Dragon, Rev. 12.9. & 20.2. and some are in the mixture of colours very specious and delightfull to the eye; and such a Serpent it is like the Devil used when he tempted Eve to transgresse Gods prohibition of the fruit of the Tree of knowledge of good and evill.

subtil] (Gen.49.17.) The word Nahhash, here used, in the Originall importeth a searching, observing, and knowing by experience, Gen.30.27. in which kinde of knowledge (so farre as the sensible creature was capable) the Serpent excelled others, that were not endowed with reason, as man is: this subtiltie is noted by our Saviour, Matth. 10.16. and by the Apostle, 2 Cor. 11.3. whereto naturall Historians give witnesse, as Plin. Hist. l.8. c.27. By this creature the Devil tempted, and deceived Eve, as by an Asse an Angel reproved Balaam, Numb. 22.28. 2 Pet.2.16. For he was a murderer from the beginning, Joh.8.44. and he began his murder by subtill deceiving, thereby bringing Adam and Eve under the doome of death, Gen. 2.17. And as a murderer desirous to wound deeply, that he may strike deadly, will look that his weapon be sharpe; so the Devil chooseth the sharpest and subtilest wits for his instruments of mischiefe, that having seduced them, he may by them prevaile the more for seducement of others.

and he said unto the woman] In beginning with the woman he shewed his subtiltie, for by her he had a double advantage, the one was, in that she was of the weaker sexe, and so the easier to be overcome; the other, in that she was alone, for where two are, there is helpe, Eccles.4.10. yet Eve had beene better alone, then with the Serpent; and Adam better alone, then with tempting Eve; it is not company simply, but good company which is good for man or woman. Some inquire how it came to passe she was not with her husband; it might be that walking in the Garden, and gazing on the variety of plants, and fruits, and flowers, her eye and fancie settled upon some pleasing object, which Adam passing by with lesse liking, or looking on, got so farre before her, as left her behinde, whereby she was overtaken by the Serpent.

Yea, hath God] If this were the beginning of his speech to the woman it was very abrupt; and so might the more astonish her; especially putting her so strange a question on the sudden: but some think the words presuppose a precedent parley, wherein he made his entrance into the matter in a more rhetoricall manner; and there is no doubt but he used all his art, both in the proposall and pursuit of his plot; and his aime was in this interrogation to weaken the authoritie of Gods Word, and to wrest the sword of the Spirit out of her hand, or to blunt the edge of it; which, if it had been held, and weilded as it should have beene, would have put Satan to flight, as he was by the same weapon by our Saviour, Matth.4.10.

V. 2. And the woman] The knowledge of Eve was very great the first day of her being, much more of Adam, which appeareth by his giving of meet names unto the creatures, Chap. 2. 19,20. yet in some things it was to increase by experience; and it may be this was one thing wherein Eve was ignorãt, viz. whether the Serpent could naturally speake or no: for she confesseth she was beguiled by the Serpent, vers. 13. which might be by making her beleeve, that speech was naturall to that Creature; or if not, that it was no evill spirit that spake by him; (for it is not like she knew any thing yet of the fall of Angels, though what good thing it was that made use of him she could not tell) otherwise it would have astonished her (and it may be it did so at the first, for a while at least) to heare such discourse from such a creature; against which she should have done as the Psalmist saith of the deafe Adder, which is, that he stoppeth his eare, and will not hearken to the voyce of the charmer charme he never so wisely. Psal.58.4. or if she would give him the hearing, she should have made him none answer, at least have given no consent before she had consulted with Adam; and if they both had beene of one minde, she should against both have pleaded the prohibition of God, and grounding her selfe on that, should have resolutely persisted in refusall of the motion which was subtilly first made unto her, 2 Cor.11.3. as being more weake to resist the temptation then Adam was, and yet strong enough to blow the sparkes which were kindled in her heart to enflame his affections to the same offence. It is not safe for any man, much lesse for any of the weaker sexe, to lend an eare to a seducing tongue.

V. 3. touch it] This seemes to be an addition to the Divine prohibition, for onely eating of it is forbidden, Chap. 2. vers. 17. as lest ye die in this third verse, a diminution from the word of God; for the commination was peremptory, beyond peradventure, thou shalt surely die, Chap. 2. vers.17. This adding to, and taking from the word of God, is that sinne which is doomed to a fearefull curse, Revel.22.18,19. Some thinke she made this addition with a good intention; and if that were good, the addition for all that was naught: it is not lawfull to doe evill that good may come thereof, Rom.3.8.

V. 4. not surely die] Heb. not dying die. That is, certainly ye shall not die; or ye shall not die at all. The woman diminished the Divine Commination, making that danger doubtfull, vers. 3. which God denounced in words of certainty and assurance, Chap. 2. vers.17. the Devil wholly denied it, and was as confident in his slighting the sentence of death, as God was serious and severe in threatning it before; setting Eve free from feare, that she might be free to sinne.

V. 5. For God] As if God had put this prohibition upon them out of envie, (his owne proper sinne) or feare, lest by eating thereof man should become as wise as himselfe; (so abusing the name of the Tree of Knowledge; for he would make the woman beleeve it would give intelligence of all things) he makes the Tree much better then it was, or could be; that God might be thought as bad, and they might become as miserable as himselfe, by ambitious affectation of a Deitie, which was not possible to be obtained any way; or if it could be at all, it was most improbable it should be that way.

as gods] (Not as Angels, as the Chald. Paraph. hath it). We have a Trinitie of Persons in one Godhead (as before hath beene noted) but no pluralitie of Gods, till the Devil taught it: and here is his first broaching of that Idolatrous Doctrine, which since this time hath multiplied to an innumerable rabble of false gods; for in China there are no fewer then an hundred thousand Idols. China.

V. 6. saw] Her curious gazing on this goodly fruit, made her liquorish to taste of it; her pride, upon her hope to be a goddesse, incited her to a present satisfaction of her desires; wherein concurred the three grand causes of sinne mentioned by ~~Saint~~ John, 1 Joh. 2.16. her eares before were as open doores to let in lying detraction against God; now her eyes are as glasse-windowes to conveigh the species of a lovely object to the concupiscence of the palate: sinne is a speedy graduate, quickly passing from one sense to another, from one facultie to another; and the Devil drives it on like Jehu with a furious pace, 2 King.9.20. It were well we had shuts for all our senses, as we have to our eyes; and that we would make a covenant with them against inticing objects, as Job did, Job 31.1. and that we would keepe aloofe from the occasions of sinne, wherein Satan sets his baite: It is not safe to be at his messe, though our spoone be never so long.

V. 7. the eyes of] The Devil promised the opening of their eyes, as an addition of Divine knowledge, which yet they had not, vers. 5. but yet he spake ambiguously, and deceitfully, meaning to make them know by experience both sinne and misery, of both which their state of innocencie was happily ignorant: and whereas God saith, vers. 22. Behold, the man is become as one of us, it is no attestation to Satans promise, but an ironicall derision of mans miserable condition for his ambitious presumption.

of them both] What distance there was betwixt Eves eating and Adams, or whether Adam came in while Eve was tasting, is uncertaine: it appears that untill he had eaten, she was not apprehensive either of her sin, or of her shame, and sorrow that belonged to it; haply because her sinne was not compleat, untill (by seducing her husband to societie in it) it had begotten, or brought forth another in its owne image or likenesse.

were opened] The opening of the eyes in Scripture signifieth either first a cure or recovery of blindnesse, as Joh. 9. 10. 2 King. 6.20. Or secondly, the discovery of an object not yet discerned, as Luk.24.31. Gen.21.19. Nunb.22.31. Or thirdly, an intentive looking on, marking, or minding, of a thing; and so it is applied sometimes to God, Dan.9.18. The opening here spoken of was different from all these; for here was not onely a new act of discerning, but a new object to be discerned, which before had no being: they were naked before, and they knew that they were so, yet untill they had sinned, they apprehended no corruption in their natures, no sense of concupiscence, no rebellion in their flesh against the Law of their minde, no indecorum or uncomelinesse in any of the parts, though naked; which now on the sudden, upon commission of sinne had both existence, and appearance.

knew that] (Rev.3.17.) They now apprehended their nakednesse with the guilt of sinne as a ground of shame; and knew also by wofull experience, that Gods words were true, and the tempters false.

sewed] That is, fastned them together with thornes, or stalkes of flowers, or fruits, for there was no artificiall sewing, nor instruments to sew withall at that time.

fig-leaves] Which were broad, and haply nigh at hand. to such poore shifts they betooke themselves to cover their shame, when they should have confessed and craved pardon for their sinne, Job 31.33. but we read not a word either of confession of a fault, or deprecation of punishment; yet before God left them it is like he brought them to both; and hereupon to comfort them he made the gracious promise, vers. 15.

aprons] Some Translations say breeches; aprons are now most used by women, and breeches by men; but the originall signifieth properly neither the one nor the other, but things to gird or bind about.

V. 8. voyce] Walking and locall motion, and voyce here ascribed to God, and heard by Adam and Eve, have occasioned some to conceive, that our Saviour at this time appeared to them in an humane forme; which may be so, though there be no proofe in Scripture that it was so: and both speech and motion might be heard without any such corporall or personall apparition unto them; for God could easily forme articulate words in the aire, and make a sound as if some body walked neere unto them.

coole of the day] Heb. winde of the day. That is, toward the evening, when the aire useth to move with a refreshing gale of winde, especially where there is any vicinitie or neerneſse of trees, and waters, as in Paradise there was: then when lust had conceived and brought forth sinne, and sinne was finished and brought forth death, James 1.15. at least in desert, God came as a just Judge to a solemne tryall and doome against all the offendors: his eare and eye were open to heare and see all the passages of this wicked conspiracie against himselfe; but his silence and patience were no dispensation for sin, but rather a preparation for punishment, that sinne going before, he may pursue it with sorrow and shame afterwards; and so by his own justice he may make himselfe amends for mans disobedience.

hid themselves] The sinfull conscience seeketh to shunne Gods presence, with as much folly as faultinesse; for he that formed the eye shall he not see? Psal.94.9. See also, Psal.139.7. Besides, unlesse they could runne away from themselves they could have little comfort; for the guilt of their soules will goe along with them whither so ever they goe; and if so, they are but as the fish which swimmeth to the length of the line with an hooke in the mouth.

V. 9. Where art thou?] God asked this question not needing Adams answer for his information; for there is not any creature that is not manifest in his sight, Heb.4.13. See 2 Chron. 16. 9.

3.15.— bruise thy Head] — Non enim propter Serpentem, sed propter parentes præcipuè hanc concionem Deus instituit: et quin fiducia hujus Promissionis servati sint, dubitari non potest: alioquin desperatione absorpti fuissent. Pareus, p. 130-col-2.

v. 14. Cibus serpentis esse non vis, noli esse terra. Augustin. Psal. 103. col. 1217.

16. 9. Psal.139 1,2,4. but because he meant judicially to proceed against him, he would not condemne him before he heard him.

V. 10. naked] His hypocrisie here appeareth, imputing his hiding to his nakednesse; for before sinne they were both naked and were not ashamed, Chap.2.25. whereas he should have said, I have sinned, and therefore as a guilty person am ashamed and afraid to appeare in the presence of a powerfull and righteous Judge. See Annot. on Exod.32.25.

V. 11. Who told thee---- Hast thou, &c.] By these questions he should have beene guided to a free, and unfained confession of his sinne, and to a deprecation of Gods displeasure; but he sought to hide his iniquitie, Job 31. 33. and when that could not be, he sought to shift off his fault from himselfe to his fellow, or associate in sinne.

V. 12. The woman which thou gavest] By this he makes as if it were Gods fault in giving him the woman, rather then his owne in taking from her hand the forbidden fruit, and eating of it against the expresse prohibition received from God; as if he were more just then God, more pure then his Maker, Job 4. 17. A great aggravation of his precedent sinne, and a just ground of the severitie of the punishment which God brought upon him afterwards: yet the Apostle seemes to acquit him from fault, where he saith, Adam was not deceived, but the woman being deceived, was in the transgression, 1 Tim. 2. 14. but though Eve did not deceitfully seduce him, as her selfe was deceived, 2 Cor.11.3. and therefore he saith not (by way of excuse) the woman deceived me, yet it was his great fault so to take up the sinne at the second hand, as he did; when he should rather have rebuked her boldnesse, then followed her in it.

V. 13. The serpent] (Revel.12.9.) She confesseth the fact, saying, she did eate; but denieth the fault, imputing that to the Serpents deceit, rather then to her owne ambitious minde, and rebellious appetite. Thus Adam and Eve make wofull worke for themselves and their unhappy posteritie; she tempteth him to disobey God; he teacheth her by his example to delude God by shifting evasions, which were but like their figleaves, too narrow to cover their sinne, too thinne to ward off the stroke of Gods justice.

V. 14. Because] God questioneth and conferreth with Adam and Eve, because he meant to bring them to repentance; but he putteth no question to the Serpent, or rather to the Devil in the Serpent; because he would shew him no mercy; for that he sinned of himselfe, without any to seduce him, and against a greater measure of light, and stronger obligation of love, and with hatred to God, with blasphemous slanders of his goodnes, and out of desperate envie, that mans condition was better then his, and that he was to possesse the happinesse which to him was unrecoverably lost; hence is his misery left without all helpe or hope of remedie.

thou art cursed] This curse was denounced against the Serpent not as guilty of sinne, (for the law was given to man, not to him, and where there is no law, there is no transgression, Rom. 4.15.) but to shew Gods hatred, and to stirre up detestation of sinne, by Divine severitie shewed against the instruments of it, as Exod.32.20. Levit.20.15,16.

upon thy belly] The Serpents posture, though before his curse it was not upright, like unto mans, yet it might be lifted up by legges some distance above the ground, as in Geese, and other fowle; such serpents are mentioned by Plin. Nat. Hist.l.11. c.46. or by the artifice of Satan who possessed him, he might be erected so, that he might with more decorum conferre and converse with the woman; and this seemes the more probable, because Chap.3.1. he is sorted to the beasts of the field, which are distinguished in kinde from creeping things, Chap.1.25. But upon his service to Satan in this seducement to pride of the spirit, and concupiscence of the palate, he might be brought down to creepe and crawle upon the earth; or if he crept on the earth before, that motion might from henceforth be a paine to him, though before it were not; as Adams labour before sinne, was enjoyned as an exercise, Chap.2.15. but after, it was imposed as a penaltie, Chap.3.vers.19.

dust shalt thou eat] That is said of the Serpent, Isa.65. last. & Mic.7.17. Deut. 32. 24. which, if it be not his ordinary diet according to the letter, yet his moving and crawling in the dust raiseth dust up to his mouth; and having his food where every foot doth tread, it cannot but have much dust or other filth upon it, or sticking to it. In this curse of the Serpent, the Devil hath his share, and in a figurative sense, the worst part; for he is much more debased then the Serpent; for the Serpents place is the superficies or surface of the earth, the Devils a great way below it, even in the nethermost hell: and as the Serpents food is vile and filthy, so is the Devils much worse; for if there be any thing which is to him, as meat is to the hungry; it is the Impiety of blasphemers, the impuritie and pollution of such sinners as are like filthy dogges licking up their owne vomit, and as swine wallowing in the mire, 2 Pet.2.22. which is much more vile then any dust or dirt, whereby either man or beast may be defiled.

V. 15. enmitie] (Matth. 23. 33. Joh. 8. 44. Act. 13. 10. Prov.29.27 1 Epist.Joh.3.8.) The brood of Serpents and the generation of Mankind are irreconciliable enemies to each other: See Plin.lib.2. cap.20. & lib.2. cap.63. but the greatest and sharpest hostilitie is betwixt the godly seed of the woman, and the wicked seed of the spirituall Serpent Satan; who, so farre as he is discovered to be what he is indeed, is hated and abhorred of mankinde in generall, as he hates all mankinde without exception, though he be so crafty (in concealing his cruell wrath, and putting on appearances of good-will to man, as here to Eve) that over a great part of the world by the power of his Impostures, he ruleth as a God, 2 Cor.4.4. This enmitie had here its beginning; but it is never to have an end, neither in this world, nor in the world to come.

it shall bruise] The word in the Hebrew Hu, and in our Bible translated [it] is of the masculine gender; that is, Hee (if applied to a person) not [Hi] which is she in the feminine; and Zera, which is seed in Hebrew, of the masculine gender also: So is the Verb Jeshuphechà (shall breake): all concurring to confine the promise to Christ the promised Seed; and confuting the Translation which putteth shee for it or hee; and giveth the glory of our Saviour to her, who was saved by his vertue and victory, as well as others, Luk.1.47. Yet in a secondary sense not onely she, but all the members of Christs mysticall body, shall partake of his triumph; for by him shall Satan be trodden under their feet, Rom.6.20. and so shall all those that are of Satan (as the godly are of Christ) be trodden downe with him.

thy head] The life of a Serpent rests most in his head, and his head by creeping on the ground is neere the feet of his enemies, and so ready to be trodden on and crushed in pieces: the Devill the most dangerous Serpent is in the like danger from Christ, and true Christians; as it is in the fore-cited place, Rom.16.20.

his heele] The Serpent hath but one head, but the Seed of the woman hath two heeles; so that the one may be some helpe, while the other is hurt, as is wittily observed by a late learned Divine. Besides, an hurt in the heele is farre from the head and heart; and though it may be painfull, it is not mortall: such are the afflictions and persecutions of the godly by the Devil and his agents, from whom whatsoever harme they receive in their bodies, goods, or good names; is in comparison of their better part (which they, whether men or devils, cannot reach) but as a bruise in the heele, which cannot indanger the spirituall life of their soules, Matth.10.28. and the safetie of them will by consequence bring in the recovery of the body from any wound or hurt; yea from death, and the closest prison of the grave, or coffin.

V. 16. and thy conception] The multiplying of Conception soundeth like a comfort; but the meaning may be, (as is before noted of the Hebrew phrase, using two Substantives for a Substantive and an Adjective, as Chap.1.vers.26.Annot. 5.) that he will multiply her sorrowfull conceptions, which shall be many by often abortions, or untimely births; whereas, but for sin, she might by one conception have beene a happy mother of many together, as we see by experience in other kinds (and sometimes in women-kind) and that without pain, whereas now a womans child-breeding, and child-bearing, is more grievous then to the females of any other kind, Arist.hist.de Ani.l.7.c.9. which (though it proceed of a naturall cause) God would have so ordered and overruled, as to have made it not onely safe, but easie also, but for precedent sinne, without which death had neither way-laid the child, nor mother in the passage into the world, nor sent any out of the world afterward, nor had there beene any pain either at the first appearing in it, or finall parting from it.

rule over thee] The subjection of the woman to her husband was not repugnant to the state of Innocencie; but then as the authoritie of the man would have beene used with justice and kindnesse, so the obedience of the woman would have beene pleasant and cheerfull; whereas now for holding a conspiracie with Satan, and abusing her familiarity with her husband, she was like to find lesse comfort in her communion with him; for by sinne, conjugall kindnesse is turned to austeritie, justice to injurie, willing obedience to reluctancie and frowardnesse; and so the yoke which would alwaies have beene sweet and easie, becometh many times (especially if any be unequally yoked in respect of their conditions) hard and bitter to be borne; yet borne it must be, 1 Cor.14.34. Tit.2.5. 1 Pet.3.6.

V. 17. cursed] The earth was deprived of its former fruitfulnesse, yeelding neither so much fruit, nor so good fruit, nor with so much ease as before it did: since which there was need of the help of husbandry with toyle, to till it, though of it selfe without tillage it abounded with hurtfull increase. Of the curse on the creature. See Isaiah 24.5,6. Rom.8.20,22.

V. 18. thornes] If thornes were the naturall fruits of the earth before the fall, which ſome affirme, ſome deny (ſaying the roſe was before, the thorny hedge only ſince): yet by ſinne they were ſharpned, and converted to a curſe in their ſuperabundance, and growing where they ſhould not, and tearing mans fleſh ſometimes caſually, and ſometimes inſtrumentally and purpoſely, (as Gideon threatned the men of Succoth, Judg. 8.7.) which but for ſinne ſhould never have been.

herbe] Under this word is comprehended corne of ſeverall kinds, as well as ſuch things as growing out of the earth are uſually called herbs, by way of diſtinction from corne; of ſuch he muſt now take his diet, which were neither ſo pleaſant, nor ſo wholeſome, nor ſo eaſie to be had, as his proviſion in Paradiſe, out of which God purpoſed to expell him, and to put him to a larger paſture, but to ſo much poorer commons, as the common field is worſe furniſhed in proviſion, then a pleaſant garden.

V. 19. ſweat] By the ſweat of the face is underſtood all manner of labour whether of the body, or braine, Eccleſ. 1. 13. as alſo whatſoever is grievous to man in this life either to doe, or to ſuffer; yet the Prieſts in their miniſtrations were to take heed of ſweat, and therefore they might not ſo gird them, either up to the arme pits, or below towards the loynes, as might occaſion it, Ezek. 44. 18. which was a part of their ceremoniall puritie, figuring that which was morall and ſpirituall, Pſal. 103. verſ. 14. Job 34.15.

to duſt return] Not by any neceſſitie of his created nature, but becauſe he had ſinned, God threatneth to make his end as baſe as his beginning; whereas otherwiſe decay, or ſickneſſe, caſuall miſhap, or violence, ſhould not by death have brought down his dignitie, who had rule over the birds of the aire, Gen. 1.28. to be ſubject to be devoured by the wormes of the earth. Sinne is the wicket that let death into the world, Rom. 5.12. and hath given it ſo much advantage and victory over humane nature, that the kernell of a raiſon, yea an haire in milke, hath choaked and killed a man, Plin. Nat. Hiſt. lib. 7. cap. 7. and laid him lower then the beaſts of the earth; for they lye upon the ground while he is laid under it.

V. 20. Eve] Hebr. Hhavah from the word Hhajah, which ſignifieth, hath lived.

becauſe ſhe was] Adam gave her her name, but Moſes gave the reaſon of it; for when ſhe was ſo named by Adam, ſhe was not a mother at all; but ſhe was the mother of all both before and ſince Moſes his time; and if Adam gave the reaſon, it was a Propheſie what ſhe ſhould be, ſignified (for more aſſurance) in the Preter tenſe, which is uſuall in Prophetick ſpeeches; yet becauſe ſhe was the cauſe of a naturall death to all that live, ſome take the words in a ſpirituall ſenſe, as implying the birth of him, (among her Poſterity) who ſhould be the authour of a better life, both to her and them.

V. 21. did the LORD God make] Immediately by himſelfe, or by the miniſtery of Angels, or gave them knowledge how to make them.

coats of ſkins] What ſkins they were, is not ſet down; it may be they were ſheep and goat skins, Hebr. 11. 37. their firſt covering was by their own proviſion, of leaves, which would doe them little ſervice, and but for a while: God provides better for their ſecuritie againſt the offence of heat and cold, and is (notwithſtanding their ſinne) ſo reſpective of their welfare, as to kill or permit other creatures to be killed, that they may be cloathed: when God put this livery upon their backs, it is like he gave them inſtruction to ſerve him by ſacrifice of ſlain beaſts; for their children learned that from them which they practiſed, Chap. 4. 4. and they from God; and the ſacrifice foretokening the death of Chriſt, the skin might (as ſome of the Ancients note) ſignifie their covering in the Robe of his righteouſneſſe, and might alſo minde them not only of Gods benignitie, but alſo of their own mortalitie, ſince they could not be covered with the skinne of any beaſt that was not killed. But the Originall of raiment, though ſo long agoe, ſhould never be forgotten by the ſonnes of Adam; but be remembred as a checke to the vanitie and pride of apparell; which, whatſoever it is, it carrieth with it a character of reproach to him that weares it, and an implicite confeſſion of guilt and ſhame; whereof we have no more cauſe to be proud, then of a plaiſter of maſtick worne to ſtay the rheume from annoying the eyes or teeth; or of a ſcarfe about the arme when it is put out of joynt; or a paire of ſpectacles to help the dimneſſe of the ſight.

V. 22. as one of us] That is, one of the Trinitie, God the Father, God the Sonne, and God the Holy Ghoſt. See the firſt Annot. on Chap. 1. verſ. 26. Which is ſpoken in the ſenſe of that flouting figure called an Ironie, or a Sarcaſmus, like that of Elijah, 1 King. 18.27. and of the Preacher, Eccl. 11.9. whereby God declareth his high indignation and diſdaine of their impious preſumption, and affectation of an impoſſible preheminence.

live for ever] Having ſinned, it is not like that by ſuch a meanes his happineſſe ſhould be recovered, or that he thereby ſhould be made immortall; (though haply he might thinke ſo) this ſpeech therefore may well be thought another Ironicall taunt, as that in the precedent part of this verſe; yet he might ſeriouſly be debarred of the uſe of that Sacramentall tree, having by his ſinne croſſed the end of it, defrauded himſelfe of the hope of that benefit he might have had by it: See the forenoted Annot. on Chap. 2. verſ. 9.

V. 24. drove out] In the precedent verſe it is ſaid; God ſent him forth; Here, he drove him forth. It is like at firſt God bade him goe, and then ſhewing himſelfe unwilling, and begging that he might abide there ſtill, God with ſome evidence of wrath denying him, drave him out: on what day this was done, whether the ſame day of his Creation, or the next day after, or that day ſeven-night in which he was made, or on the thirteenth day, (as many Popiſh Chronologers hold) or fortie dayes after, (as ſome have imagined) is not revealed by God, nor can it be ſafely reſolved by man: though of theſe ſeverall conceits that which ſets his fall upon the Sabbath day, and that which adjourneth it untill the fortieth day, are moſt improbable; and of them all that which ſeemes the likelieſt in the judgement of many learned and ſound Divines is, that man fell the firſt day of his Creation, for which they cite, Pſal. 49.12.20. where they take the Hebrew word Adam, for the particular name of the firſt man, not for the name of man in common; which is the more probable, becauſe if Adam and Eve had lodged in Paradiſe one night, his firſt child had not been begotten in his own likeneſſe (that is, in the ſtate of corruption into which he fell) as he was, Chap. 5. 3. Obiect. Againſt this is objected that man was made the laſt of all the creatures, on the laſt day of the weeke, and that there were too many particulars betwixt his creation and excluſion out of Paradiſe, to have their paſſage in a piece of a day, as all that we read, from Chap. 2. 15. to the end of the third Chapter. Anſw. But firſt, excepting the giving of names to the creatures, which was done before the woman was made, Chap. 2. 20. and done ſo much the ſooner, as Adam was the wiſer, (and his wiſedome and knowledge of the creatures was very great at the firſt) all the other things mentioned had an orderly connexion one with another, and would eaſily follow one another; and conſidering that the devill was watchfull to take the firſt and fitteſt opportunitie to tempt, which was when Eve had leaſt experience of the world; and that concupiſcence of a Deitie kindled, would be very quick & active to obtaine it; and that God for his part could make as much haſt with his juſtice, as the tempter or tempted with their ſinne; it might be probable enough that all might be done to their caſting out of Paradiſe the firſt day, of which eight or nine houres might be allowed for all the occurrences betwixt their beginning and baniſhment. Some are very punctuall, both for the day of the moneth, and of the weeke, and for the houre of the day, affirming that it was on Friday the twenty ſeventh of March the ninth houre of the day; ſo in the Manuſcript Annalls of Eutychius Patriarch of Alexandria, cited by Mr. J. S. Chap. 8. pag. 44,45. of his booke Of the civill yeare and Calender of the Jewiſh Church; but no man is bound to beleeve that which no man can prove by any Record that is competent teſtimony in ſuch a caſe.

Cherubims] Angels, ſo called (as ſome conceive) of knowledge; the fitter to bee deſigned to that ſervice under that name, becauſe the ſinne of Adam and Eve was an ambitious deſire and endeavour to equall God in Omniſcience, and univerſall knowledge. Of their figure or ſhape, ſee Annot. on Exod. 25. verſ. 18.

a flaming ſword] Or, ſwords; For the word Cherubim is of the plurall number, and if there were more then one Cherub, it is like there was more then one ſword: it is called a flaming ſword, becauſe it was bright and cleare, ſhining like a flame of fire; or, becauſe it was fire, in the forme and faſhion of a ſword; for Angels are Gods Miniſters, and his Miniſters come ſometimes with flames of fire, Heb. 1. 7. and with the ſword, Numb. 22 23. Joſh. 5.13. 1 Chron. 21.16. Either fire or ſword coming ſingle, is terrible; both together, much more; and moſt of all, by motion every way, which might make them more penitently apprehenſive of their hainous ſinne againſt the Majeſtie of God, and of their notorious folly againſt the felicitie of man, who ſo ſoone, and for ſo ſmall a matter loſt ſo happy an eſtate, which once loſt, could never be recovered.

turning every way] Or, two-edged; To terrifie Adam (and, as ſome conceive, the devils alſo) from returning to the place from which he was driven; which ſome myſtically apply to the excluſion of the wicked from Chriſt the Tree of life, Revel. 22.2. and from the Celeſtiall paradiſe, or garden of that tree, the Kingdome of heaven, Revel. 2.7.

is, unknown, or hidden: and so were virgins usually vailed, that they might not be easily seene, as Rebekah, Gen.24.65.

I have gotten] Obtained, or possessed a man: for Kana, (whence the name Cain or Kain is derived) signifieth a possession.

from the Lord] That is, as his gift, by ratifying his blessing of multiplication, Chap. 1. 28. to her in particular. See Gen. Chap. 33. vers. 5. & Psal. 127. 3. And not onely blessing her conception of a child, but her child-birth also without the assistance of a Midwife, or of any such helps as necessitie sought, and ingenuitie found out in after-times.

V. 2. again bare] Because her bearing again is mentioned, but not her conceiving before it, as vers. 1. it might be thought that Cain and Abel were twins; save that the name Abel (signifying vanitie) may imply, that upon some sad experience of the vanitie of the world betwixt the birth of her two sonnes, she called the later of them by that name: yet might it be that at the beginning births might be double, both in number and in sexe, for the more speedy and copious increase of mankinde.

Abel] Hebr. Hebel. There is a double writing of this name: the one with Aleph, (as Josephus writes it) signifying mourning, as he expounds it. Antiq. lib. 1. cap. 2. The other with He, Hebel, signifying vanitie, Eccles. 1. 2. Wherein, as it carried a memorandum of History, (as in the precedent note) so it might point by way of prophecie to the untimely end which afterward befell him.

V. 3. in processe of time] Hebr. at the end of dayes. The like phrase we finde, Gen. 41. 1. at the end of two full yeares: and, Ezek. 3. 16. At the end of seven dayes. By [at the end of dayes] here, may be meant the Sabbath; for that is the end of the dayes of the weeke; and being a day especially sanctified from the beginning, Chap. 2. vers. 2. for the honour of the Creator, it might be seasonable on it to offer sacrifice of the creatures as a tribute due to the Lord of all: but usually the words are taken for a distance of time of greater extent then the compasse of a weeke; yet might it be a certaine time either by constitution or custome, which now being compleat and runne up to the period of the Accompt, they both made their Oblations to God, as followeth.

Cain brought] It is not said to whom, or what; whether to Adam as the Priest of the Family, or to the place (which, it is like, was certain) where the Sacrifices were to be offered up unto God; for though in after-time the Father of the Family was the Priest to the Church in his house, and in his stead the first-born had the Priest-hood as a part of his birth-right; yet it may be at this time indifferently supposed, either that both brought their sacrifice to their Father on earth, to be offered to their Father in heaven; or that each of them did by himselfe offer up his own oblation.

fruit of the ground] Cain was an husbandman, and his employment was to till the ground; yet he must not so minde the earth, as to forget his dutie of devotion to his Maker in heaven.

V. 4. firstlings of the flocke] Which were first killed, and then offered up unto God by fire; the flame whereof ascended up towards heaven, while the offerer by the elevation of his soule towards God either did, or ought to doe the like: and thereby he made an implicite confession of his sinne as deserving death, (a severe and painfull death by burning) and a profession of his faith in Christ as a Redeemer from death: by this faith Abel offered a more acceptable sacrifice then Cain, Heb. 11. 4. and it was of the firstlings of the flocke which he offered, (whether of sheep or goats, the Hebrew Text distinguisheth not, for the words will serve for either) because it was fit that God should have the first fruits of his own increase: what was here in practise, (and it may be by precept also, though not here expressed) was afterwards prescribed by an expresse Law, Exod. 13. 2. Numb. 3. 13.

and of the fat thereof] Here again is the practice of that for which we may in some sort or other presuppose a precept, (for sacrifice is worship, and without a precept it is will-worship condemned by God) which in Moses time was expressely delivered, Exod. 29. 13. 22. Levit. 3. 3. but withall the meaning may be that Abel did not sacrifice like those profane niggards, who thought any thing good enough for God, Mal. 1. 13. but he gave him of the best and fairest of his flocke: for that which is best in any kinde is commended under the title of fatnesse, as Gen. 45. 18. & Chap. 49. 20. Nehem. 8. 10. They that suppose there was no feeding on the living creatures untill the flood, conceive here was offered onely the wooll of the Sheep, and the milk of the Cow, the best of the milk, which they call the fattest, (though the fat of the milk be properly the butter) but that supposition will hardly be made good if turned to a position, for it is more probable that the eating of flesh was allowed and in use before the flood, then the contrary. See Annot. on Chap. 9. vers. 3.

had respect unto Abel] And first to Abel justified by faith, Heb. 11. 4. and then to his sacrifice as a fruit of that faith: this respect appeared by some visible signe from heaven, especially by fire falling upon the sacrifice to burn it, as Lev. 9. 24. Judg 6. 21. 1 King. 18. 38. 1 Chron. 21. 26. 2 Chron. 7. vers. 1. 3.

V. 5. not respect] Not such to Cain as to Abel, and to his sacrifice, through his want of faith and sinceritie in Gods service; or no respect at all; for he would have a naughty or vile person contemptible in the eyes of such as are good, Psal. 15. 4. See 2 Kings. 3 14.

very wroth] At God and Abel both: at God, as Matth. 20. vers. 15. his eye was evill, because Gods was good; and at Abel, because, being his yonger brother, he got the blessing of his heavenly Father from him: and if (as some Divines conceive) this sacrifice were tendred for election and consecration of one of the two upon divine choice and acceptance to be head of the holy race, by whom Gods Church was to be extended to after ages; it was the more displeasing to Cain to bee refused, by how much more honour it had beene to be received.

countenance fell] From a cheerfull to a churlish looke; from an upright to a down-cast aspect; which bewrayed the malignitie of his minde: for the countenance, which (in propriety of speech) is onely in man, (as the Oratour well saith, lib. de legibus, p. 325.) is formed and varied according to the minde, from whence it hath its mould, Tusc. q. lib. 3. p. 353. and therefore though it alone be obvious to the eye, it makes discovery of that which is out of sight; so that it is a good witnesse against the wicked, Isa. 3. 9. for that bewrayeth sometimes their pride, Psal. 10. 4. sometimes their feare, Dan. 5. 6. sometimes their envie and grudge against the good, as Gen. 31. 2, 5. and as in this place.

V. 7. doe well] In the outward act of offering unto God, they both might doe well, and much alike; yet there was this difference of their oblations; Cains sacrifice seemed rather gratulatory, as looking back to Gods beneficence for the yeare before; then propitiatory, as looking forward to reconciliation to be made by Christ in time to come, which was better typified by the bloody sacrifice of Abel, then by the unbloudy sacrifice of Cain, which might be of eares of corne, as Levit. 2. 14. But there was more difference betwixt them for inward acts of faith and love, then for outward acts of sacrifice: the former sort is meant by doing well in this place.

Shalt thou not be accepted?] Or, is there not forgiveneſſe? Or, shalt thou not receive? Or, shalt thou not have the excellency? Or, a lifting up? So many wayes are the words rendred, because of the ambiguity of the Hebrew word Seeth, and of Nasa, from whence it is deduced: according to this varietie the sense is various. 1. Shalt thou not be accepted? the words are interrogative, but vehemently assertive or affirmative in sense; and their meaning is this; thou shalt surely be accepted, if thou dost well, both thou, and thy sacrifice. 2. Is there not forgiveneſſe? Yes, if yet thou wilt repent and amend. 3. Shalt thou not receive? Yes, thou shalt receive an evidence of mine acceptance as thy brother did; I will not be partiall; if thou offer with as good a mind as Abel did, my favour shall come upon thy sacrifice in a celestiall flame, and it shall ascend unto me in a sweet smelling fume, as his did. 4. Shalt thou not have the excellencie, or lifting up? Yes, the right of primogeniture, and the preeminence of the Priesthood shall be thine; and thou shalt lift up thy countenance with chearfulnesse in the affiance and fruition of my favour.

sinne lyeth at] Some take these words for a commination either of the revealing of his secret sinne, so, as that it should not still lurke and lye hid in the bosome, closet or chamber; but be made so manifest as if it were laid at the doore for every eye to look upon it; or of the punishment of his sinne by inward vexation of spirit, and pangs of conscience, which (though for a time it lie asleep like a Mastive-dogge at the doore) will not rest long: for at the doore, where there is much passing, often knocking, opening and shutting, the Dogge will soon be awakened; so will the conscience; and when it is awake, it will barke most clamorously, and bite most furiously, so that none can beare it, Prov. 18. 14. Or, by outward vengeance; which will (as it were) lie in waite for him at the doore, when he steppeth either in or out, to set upon him.

unto thee shall be his desire] Or, its desire. That is, (as some take it) the desire of sinne, to enter into thee to possesse thee, and prevaile with thee, and rule over thee; but thou contrariwise must strive to suppresse it, and bring it under thy subjection; and by grace (not by the power of free-will) thou maist so farre overcome the dominion of it, that it shall not tyrannize over thee; but at last by mine assistance thou shalt have the mastery and perfect victory over it: and in speciall in this sense of the words he is admonished of his dutie to keep under, and to beare down the indignation and envy he had raised up against God and his brother. But in our last Translation answerable to the Originall, it is personall, unto thee shall be his desire, and thou shalt rule over him, as Gen. 3. 16. wherein from arguments of pacification of his incensed spirit in general, God cometh down to a removall of the cause of his indignation in particular, ticular, which, by the words here used, may seeme to be a conceipt that his younger brother so much in Gods favour would be like to deprive him of the dignitie of his birth-right; and God taketh off that conceipt by speaking to him to this effect; Though thou hast forfeited the preeminence of thy primogeniture by thine evill heart towards me and thy brother, yet upon thy repentance and amendment thou mayest still enjoy it; and thy brother, against whom thou art so much incensed, shall have a desire to please thee, and to be ruled by thee, if thou rule and governe thine affections by Religion and reason, as thou oughtest to doe.

V. 8. And Cain talked] What talke passed betweene them, whether it were chiding with Abel, because for his sake he was chidden by God; or whether by some simulation of favour and love, he allured him to walke with him into the field; it is uncertaine.

when they were in the field] Whither Caine had drawne Abel for fitter opportunitie to effect his wicked designe; for there he might act it out of sight and noise, and so none was like to rescue his godly brother out of his bloody hands. Whether there (though not before he walked out) he picked a quarrell with him or no, or whether there were any words of offence at all betwixt them, it doth not appeare in the sacred story; much lesse what words passed betwixt them before his malice came to blowes: and it may be he was as crafty as cruel, and so gave Abel no warning by words of what mischiefe he meditated to commit with his hands.

rose up] Not as having taken a fall by Abels striving with him before, (as some have supposed) for the phrase imports but the beginning, preparing, or present addressing of a mans selfe to any act or businesse, as Deut. 13.1. Judg.4.9. and in many other places.

and slew him] Had God rejected his sacrifice, because it was not bloudy, vers.3. as Abels was, vers.4. he could have done no worse, if he meant both to mocke and anger him for the choice, and refusall of their oblations. How he slew him, it appeares not in the Text; but negatively that it was not by strangling, because his bloud was shed, vers.11. Popish Painters setting out this story to the eye, faine the instrument of murder to be the jaw-bone of some brute creature; but it might be rather some instrument of husbandry wherewith Cain was accustomed to walke, or a stone which might be taken up without suspition on Abels part, and so suddenly throwne, or driven at him, that he could not avoid it.

V. 9. Where] God questioneth with Cain here, and vers.6. as with Adam, Chap.3. vers. 9.11. and he putteth the like interrogatories to his creatures elsewhere; not as needing any information from them, for he knoweth more of any man, then his owne heart can tell him, 1 Joh.3.20. but to convince them by their owne answers, and to set a patterne for humane justice, which should not condemne any before they be called in question, and have libertie to answer for themselves. See Act. 25. 16.

I know not: Am I] By this answer he sheweth himselfe not onely to be of that wicked one, 1 Joh.3.12. who was a murderer from the beginning, but as ancient a lier as a murderer, Joh. 8.44. for he murdered by lying, Gen.3.4. and he addes to these sins high contempt against God, making as if he had asked him an impertinent question; or had put upon him an office not belonging to him; he thought it was not his duty to be his brothers keeper; but thinkes not it was against all duty to God and man, to be his executioner, without any desert of death, or any precedent sentence from an authorised judge; and this with as much madnesse as malice, (for the Devil, the god of this world, 2 Cor.4.4. had blinded his eyes as well as hardned his heart) he thinkes he can blinde the eyes of the God of truth with his lies, and escape his conviction with his frivolous evasions.

V. 10. What hast thou done?] God not onely makes inquisition for bloud, Psal.9.12. but pursueth it, and will require it to requite it, 2 Chron.24.22.

bloud] Heb. blouds. Because it issueth out by many drops; or when it is shed by violence and malice, it is let out by many wounds, which make so many severall streames of bloud: thence a cruel man is called a man of blouds, Psal.5.6. according to the Hebrew; and David prayeth to be delivered from bloud-guiltinesse: Heb. from blouds. Psal.51.14.

crieth] It is crying bloud here, and speaking bloud Heb.12. 24. A voice and crying is ascribed to bloud as to the stone out of the wall, and beame out of the timber, Hab.2.11,12. and as the valleys are said to shout for joy and to sing, Psal.65.13. all by a figurative speech; and the meaning here is, that bloud-guiltinesse cannot be concealed, but that God will take notice of it, though no man see it, or say any thing of it; as though the ground that had received the bloud that was shed, uttered a voice, and put up a clamorous accusation, and petition for vengeance against the murderer, as Revel.6.10.

V. 11. cursed from] From the earth (whither thy brothers bloud sunke, being sucked in by the pores thereof, and so as it were, buried in a grave) shall spring a curse to thee for thy cruell act; whereof in the next verse.

V. 12. When thou tillest] This was a second curse, whereby the earth became worse for Cains sinne, then it was for Adams; which if it were not generall, might be a particular curse upon Cains portion whersoever he was; so that when he tilled it as an husbandman, it might upbraid him as a murderer.

a fugitive] Cast out from communion with his kindred and former friends and acquaintance; excommunicated from the Church, the societie of the faithfull professors and sincere sacrificers, and through guilt of conscience having his heart moved as the trees of the wood with the winde, Isa.7.2.

V. 13. my punishment] Heb. mine iniquitie: as Gen. 19.15. Psal. 69.27. Prov.12.21. in which places sinne, or iniquitie is put for the punishment of sinne, by a Metonymie of the efficient for the effect; for sinne is the naturall parent of punishment. In saying his punishment is greater then he can beare, he bewrayeth the wrathfulnesse of his spirit, which before made him a murmurer against God, and a murderer of his brother: he could not then forbeare to sinne, and now he cannot beare what is due to him for his sinne. If we take the words after the other reading [mine iniquitie is greater then can be forgiven] they shew his desperate distrust of pardon for his sinne, and therein he becometh as injurious to Gods mercy by his diffidence, as to his justice by his impatience.

V. 14. from the face of the earth] Hee seemeth by this speech out of feare to speake now (as out of wrath and envy he acted his part before) like a distracted man: for how was he to be driven from the face of the earth, when he was to be a vagabond upon it? vers.12. and how could he be hid from the face of God, who saw into the secret corruptions of his heart? But if his words have any sound sense in them, it is this: from the face of the earth, that is, from the place of my birth and abode hitherto; or from the face of that earth (as the word Haadhamah will beare) on which I have dwelled untill now: Or, from the face of the earth, that is, from societie with the inhabitants of the earth, as Psal.33.8. who will abhorre my company, and I shall be afraid and ashamed to come in their sight, or to looke them in the face.

and from thy face] That is, from thy favourable countenance: so that thou wilt not vouchsafe a gratious glance towards me, nor accept of any oblation from me. Some thinke there is an Hypallage in the words, that is, a kinde of mistake, as if he would or should have said, I shall hide my face from God, as not daring to come before him to offer up any sacrifice or service unto him; for otherwise there is indeed no hiding from God, nor flying from him, Psal.94.9. & 139.7.

every one that] Though hitherto we have read but of foure persons in the world, Adam and Eve, Cain and Abel, this being about one hundred and thirty yeares from the Creation (as Chronologers account it) there might be now many, of whom he might stand in bodily feare; or, if there had been none of his owne kind to avenge the bloud of his innocent brother, his guilty conscience might raise fearefull apprehensions of death from the beasts of the earth. 130.

slay me] Being more carnally then spiritually minded, he feareth more for his body then for his soule; and his owne wickednesse makes him imagine he should meet with a murderer in every place; selfe-guiltinesse in some, is the chiefe motive to suspition of others, Psal.50.21.

V. 15. seven-fold] That is, (as the Chaldee Paraphrase hath it) unto the seventh generation; or, he shall have manifold punishments: a certaine number used for an uncertaine: as Levit.26.28. Job 5.19. Psal.79.12. Prov. 24.16. & Chap. 26.25. Jer.15.9. and this God saith, not for any love he bare to Cain, to whom life with the guilt of such a sinne, and sense of the Divine wrath, was worse then a temporall death; but because he would have him live to be a living memento, or warning against murder; which with the death of the malefactor is commonly buried in oblivion, as Psal. 59.11. Eccles. 9. 5.

marke] There are many, and some foolish conjectures of this marke: It is most like that it was a trembling not onely of his heart, but of his head and other parts, with a gastly countenance imporing guilt and terrour in him, and imprinting it so farre in others that they durst not doe by him as he did by his brother.

V. 16. from the presence] Some thinke these words are fitted to Cains conceit, who now Atheist-like, thought he could get out of the reach of Gods revenging hand; but it is more probable that by his going from the presence of the Lord, is meant his going from the place where God gave evidence of his presence in his conference with him: See Jonah 1.3. Or, from his presence: that is, from that part or quarter of the world where God had his Church, which is the place of his speciall presence: and so the phrase intimates Cains banishment from his native ticular, which, by the words here used, may seeme to be a conceipt that his younger brother so much in Gods favour would be like to deprive him of the dignitie of his birth-right; and God taketh off that conceipt by speaking to him to this effect; Though thou hast forfeited the preeminence of thy primogeniture by thine evill heart towards me and thy brother, yet upon thy repentance and amendment thou mayest still enjoy it; and thy brother, against whom thou art so much incensed, shall have a desire to please thee, and to be ruled by thee, if thou rule and governe thine affections by Religion and reason, as thou oughtest to doe.

V. 8. And Cain talked] What talke passed betweene them, whether it were chiding with Abel, because for his sake he was chidden by God; or whether by some simulation of favour and love, he allured him to walke with him into the field; it is uncertaine.

when they were in the field] Whither Caine had drawne Abel for fitter opportunitie to effect his wicked designe; for there he might act it out of sight and noise, and so none was like to rescue his godly brother out of his bloody hands. Whether there (though not before he walked out) he picked a quarrell with him or no, or whether there were any words of offence at all betwixt them, it doth not appeare in the sacred story; much lesse what words passed betwixt them before his malice came to blowes: and it may be he was as crafty as cruel, and so gave Abel no warning by words of what mischiefe he meditated to commit with his hands.

rose up] Not as having taken a fall by Abels striving with him before, (as some have supposed) for the phrase imports but the beginning, preparing, or present addressing of a mans selfe to any act or businesse, as Deut. 13.1. Judg.4.9. and in many other places.

and slew him] Had God rejected his sacrifice, because it was not bloudy, vers.3. as Abels was, vers.4. he could have done no worse, if he meant both to mocke and anger him for the choice, and refusall of their oblations. How he slew him, it appeares not in the Text; but negatively that it was not by strangling, because his bloud was shed, vers. 11. Popish Painters setting out this story to the eye, faine the instrument of murder to be the jaw-bone of some brute creature; but it might be rather some instrument of husbandry wherewith Cain was accustomed to walke, or a stone which might be taken up without suspition on Abels part, and so suddenly throwne, or driven at him, that he could not avoid it.

V. 9. Where] God questioneth with Cain here, and vers.6. as with Adam, Chap.3. vers. 9.11. and he putteth the like interrogatories to his creatures elsewhere; not as needing any information from them, for he knoweth more of any man, then his owne heart can tell him, 1 Joh.3.20. but to convince them by their owne answers, and to set a patterne for humane justice, which should not condemne any before they be called in question, and have libertie to answer for themselves. See Act. 25. 16.

I know not: Am I] By this answer he sheweth himselfe not onely to be of that wicked one, 1 Joh.3.12. who was a murderer from the beginning, but as ancient a lier as a murderer, Joh. 8.44. for he murdered by lying, Gen.3.4. and he addes to these sins high contempt against God, making as if he had asked him an impertinent question; or had put upon him an office not belonging to him; he thought it was not his duty to be his brothers keeper; but thinkes not it was against all duty to God and man, to be his executioner, without any desert of death, or any precedent sentence from an authorised judge; and this with as much madnesse as malice, (for the Devil, the god of this world, 2 Cor.4.4. had blinded his eyes as well as hardned his heart) he thinkes he can blinde the eyes of the God of truth with his lies, and escape his conviction with his frivolous evasions.

habitation, and his excommunication from the house of God: for the place of his especiall presence may be called an house, though it be not made with wals and windowes, and roofe, as ours are. See Annot. on Chap. 28. 17.

Nod] So called here by the figure Prolepsis, or anticipation in respect of the order of things: for it was called the land of Nod, not before, but after; and that by occasion of Cains comming thither, and dwelling there upon his fugitive and vagabond condition: Nod is derived from an Hebrew root signifying to wander, or to be a vagabond: as vers. 12. God doometh him.

V. 17. builded a citie] After he had wandred about from place to place such a time as God thought meet, for the punishment he imposed on him, he suffered him to set up his rest in a Citie which he built; and he built the Citie (as some compute the time) in the one hundred and fifth, (as others) in the three hundred, or foure hundred yeare of his age, by which time his posteritie might become so populous, as not onely to build, but to people a Citie with inhabitants: and he built this Citie for societie and securitie to himselfe and his progenie, and (as Josephus conjectures) that he might be more able to exercise rapine and tyranny upon others.

after the name of his sonne, Enoch] Rather after his sonnes name then his owne, because his owne was odious and infamous; and rather in his sonne Enochs name then any other of his children, because by this it appeares, he loved him better then the rest; haply because he was worse then his brethren, in being liker in manners and disposition to his father then any of them all; yet for all this earthly glory swelling up to the magnitude of a Citie, the name of the other Enoch of the Line of Seth who walked with God, vers. 24. and had no Citie, is more honourable then the name of this Enoch of the race of Cain with his Citie, though the structure of it were never so magnificent.

V. 19. two wives] This is the first man that had more wives then one at once; a Cainite by descent, and a man as fleshly as Caine was bloudy; sinning by lust, as he did by hate: by this dualitie of women he broke loose from the first institution, which was that two and no more should by marriage be made one, Gen. 2. 24. Mal. 2. 15.

V. 20. of such] Or, of them that dwell. Heb. of him that dwelleth. By an Enallage of number; for by this him, not one alone, but many are meant.

V. 21. organ] That is, the inventor of musicall Instruments. By Organ is not meant such an instrument as in our age hath beene most commonly noted by that name; for that was not found out, or made up, untill some thousands of yeares afterwards: the same word, here rendred Organ, is found in the booke of Job Chap. 21. 12. & Chap. 30. 31. & Psal. 150. vers. 4. in this sense: whatsoever the forme of it was, the word importeth lovelinesse and delight, for naturally men love and delight in musick: See Psal. 81. 2. where we see that for such things as conduce to the comfort of an humane life, as ordering of Cattell, manuall Arts, building of Cities; the wicked by Divine providence, were made serviceable to the good.

V. 22. Tubal-Cain] From this name (as sundry Commentators observe) might the name Vulcan the heathen God of Smiths, be taken; as the name Jove from Jehovah; and as Adonis from Adonai, [Lord] often used in the Old Testament, (as some learned men conceive, though others derive it from the Greek word Aeido, which signifieth to sing: or, from Hedone, in the same Language, signifying pleasure).

instructer] Heb. whetter. Which may imply a sharpenesse of wit, piercing into the minds of those that receive instruction from him; and withall an incitement, or whetting of the affections to put such Arts into practice.

V. 23. I have slaine a man] The words are very difficult both to translate, and to expound: they are rendred two waies: first, as in the Text; secondly, as in the Margine of our last Translation: the former reading is either affirmative, or interrogative: according to the first the sense is two-fold; the one, that Lamech makes boast of his valour in that he had slain a man; yea, a young man, in the prime of his strength and youth; or it may be, (as the words will also beare) two men, whereof the one was eminently younger then the other. to my wounding: that is, by an Hebraism, (as some take it) by my wounding or hurting of him; or, though I have beene fighting to my wounding, or my hurt; I have gotten the better of it; for I have slaine those that fought with me. The second is, that he speakes of these slaughters as fore-dooming himselfe to a worse condition then Cain, and so deserving farre greater punishment then he did, because Cains was but a single slaughter, Lamechs a double one: Taking the words interrogatively they seeme in effect an emphaticall answer to some suspition his wives had of him, with a mind to depart from him; as thinking God would curse the family and posteritie of such a wicked man as he was; against which he pleades his own innocencie and Cains impunitie: Have I slaine a man to the wounding or hurt of my conscience as Cain did? If I had, yet you see Cain, though he had killed his brother, and stubbornly stood out against his Maker; had yet a marke of protection set upon him, that no man might kill him; and if he that should kill Cain was to be punished seven fold, he that shall kill Lamech (who hath committed no such crimes) shall be punished much more. The other reading (which some thinke fitter to be placed in the Text, then in the Margine) is, I would slay a man in my wound, and a young man in my hurt: according unto this, the meaning may be, that his wives fearing lest being hated for his crueltie some would take heart to kill him, he meaning to over-awe them, both to keepe them observant of himselfe, and quiet among themselves, tels them in a bragging manner, that he had so much might and manhood in him that he durst undertake any enemie, yea to slay a man, a young and lusty man, though he had received a wound or hurt before; (for the words (as the Marginall reading hath it) may be rendred in my wound, in my hurt) This exposition is most received by many of the most learned expositors; yet some rather thinke that these words of Lamech are a passionate and penitent confession of his cruell rashnesse; as if he had said, that I have slaine a man in my wrath, it is to the wounding of my heart, and to my great hurt, for the griefe of that fact is a sad affliction to my soule; and thereupon the next words threaten a greater punishment to him that should kill Lamech then to the killer of Cain.

V. 24. seventie and seven fold] Some take the words for seventy times seven, which make up foure hundred and ninetie times; but it is seventie times and seven times, as Gen. 7. 2. According to the Hebrew the words are, of every cleane beast thou shalt take thee seven seven, that is, not seven times seven, nor two sevens, though the word be doubled; but it is, (as it is well rendred in our Translation) by sevens: so in the sixth of Marke, vers. 7. when our Saviour sent out the twelve by two and two, he sent them not out by fours, but by severall twoos. The meaning of Lamechs words may seeme to be this, that Cains impunitie might be his securitie, since though he had had his hand in bloud, it was not in the bloud of his naturall brother, nor with contumacie against God after the manner of Cain; and therefore if any one should kill him, he should be punished much more, seventie and seven fold; a certaine number put for an uncertaine: as vers. 15. See the Annot. there. Thus a wicked man turnes the Divine patience into humane presumption.

V. 26. then men began to call, &c.] Some Hebrew Rabbines translate the words then men profaned, or profanely called upon the name of the Lord, as if in the time of Enosh Idolatry were taken up; but there is an errour in the Grammaticall construction of the word Hubhal, which in the conjugation Kal, (besides other acceptions) signifieth to profane: but in the conjugation Hophal as here, it signifieth they began, or men began: besides for grammaticall construction, when the word is followed with a Noune it signifieth to profane, as Numb. 30. 3. Ezek. 39. 7. but when it is followed with a Verbe of the infinitive Mood (as here) it signifieth to beginne, as Gen. Chap. 6. 1. & Chap. 41. 54. & 2 Chron. 3. 1. and so the sense is, then beganne men, that is, in the time of Enosh men began, not to set up the profession of a Monasticall life (as some Papists would have it) or some speciall Sect of professions called Enositei, or by contraction Essenî or Essæi (as some others); or that then men first began to call upon God by the Name Jehovah; (whereas before they called upon him by the Name Elohim, or Adonai) but then God moved mens hearts more sincerely to separate from the profane society of the wicked, (such as were the posteritie of Cain) to serve God, not as before in private families onely; but in more publique societies, and that in a more solemne manner, and with more zeale and boldnesse then in former times; and so to intitle themselves unto the Lord with especiall relation and devotion, as Chap. 6. 4. And these for the most part, who did this were the posteritie of Seth, who was borne in stead of Abel, not onely as a sonne to his parents, but as a Priest to Gods Church.

Vers. 1. THe Booke] The Hebrew word Sepher, a Booke, is derived from the word Saphar, importing number; and it noteth here a catalogue or number of persons descended by generation one from another; and therefore it is called the Book of the Generations: So Matth. 1. vers. 1.

likenesse of God] See the Annot. on Chap. 1. vers. 26.

V. 2. their name Adam] Adam is sometimes taken for the first man, as Chap 2. vers. 23. Sometimes collectively for the species of mankind, male and female, as Chap. 3. 24. Sometimes indefinitely for any man, Gen. 9. 6. Psal. 49. 20. And by this communion of name is shewed, not onely the union of both sexes in nature; but their communion, both in duties and privileges, Gal. 3. 28. here Adam is taken in the second acception

V. 3. in his owne likenesse] Here seemeth to be an opposition betwixt betwixt Gods Image and mans: God by creation made man in his Image, but man by procreation begets one not in Gods, but in his owne Image; that is, not onely like him in condition, as a man, but in his corruption, as a sinner, Job 14.4. for generation in the flesh, and regeneration in the spirit proceed from different principles, that being humane, this divine; nor so in his owne likenesse, as that his soule was begotten by Adam as well as his body; for as at first the soule had a different originall from that of the body which was not deduced out of the matter of which it consisted, but infused into the body afterwards; so hath it beene in the generation of man ever since: wherefore the fathers of our flesh, and the fathers of our spirit are expresly distinguished, Heb. 12.9. See Numb. 16.22.

V. 4. sonnes and daughters] Some take upon them to tell how many, as Philo the Jew, and Epiphanius a Christian; the first assignes him twelve sonnes, the second thirty, and as many daughters, but how could either of them make proofe of their number, for there were no Registers in Adams dayes?

V. 6. Seth lived] Though Cain were elder then Seth, Moses draweth the descent from Adam by the Line of Seth; and so sheweth the progresse of the Church, rather then the race of a meere carnall generation; for the true Church had its succession in the posteritie of Seth, though in an unequall degtee both of piety, and of appearance, or visibilitie.

V. 24. walked with God] This expression imports a btiefe description of a truly religious man, who is not idle, stands not still, but makes a progresse forward as they that walke: and he walks not inordinately, but by a rule, Gal. 6.16. And his walking with God sheweth his sinceritie, in ordering his life, not so much for applause and approbation of men, as for acceptation with God.

and he was not] Not dead, (as is said of the end of all the rest that are mentioned in this Chapter) or, Heb. and Not he, that is, not he died, or it was not with him as with others, by the common course of mortalitie; or he appeared not in the sight and societie of men. So Heb. 11.5. the like phrase you may see Gen. 42.36. & Jer. 31.15.

for God tooke him] God translated him body and soule, from this life to a better, from earth to heaven, that he might not see death, Heb. 11.5. that is, not come under the expectation of death by sickneſse or decay, or under the power of it by parting his soule from his body.

V. 27. dayes of Methuselah] We find no register of any one who out-lived Methuselah since the creation of the world, or who lived nine hundred sixty nine yeares, as he did; yet some would make Adam of a longer life then he by equivalence, adding so many days to his age as passed in Methuselahs before he came to the ripenesse and perfection of his growth and strength; which from his birth they account to be about sixtie years; these added to Adams age will make him twenty one yeares elder then Methuselahs: but that is a conceit of much curiositie and little certaintie. It is more considerable, that neither of them, nor any other by their long lives could make any prescription of time against the doome of dissolution into dust; Chap. 3. v. 19. and their death is so often remembred in this Chapter, to put the Reader in mind how God made good his commination of mortalitie, Chap. 2.17. & 3.19. whereof we (who in comparison of the long-lived Patriarchs, are but dwarfes in years) should be mindfull every moment, since we are neerer our graves at our births, then they when they had measured our seventie yeares (allotted to our lives, Psal. 90. 10.) seven times over.

V. 29. And he called] That is, Lamech: not he of the posteritie of Cain, of whom see Gen. 4.23. but another Lamech descended of Seth.

shall comfort us] The name Noah if it be derived from Nahham, signifieth comfort: if from Nuahh, it importeth rest; and so it may note comfort derived from rest; or rest derived from comfort: but what manner of comfort is here meant, see the note following.

toile of our hands] Lamech here uttereth an hopefull presage concerning Noah, by whom he foretelleth some comfort to come to man-kind, wherein if he were guided by the Spirit of prophecie, (as the most learned conceive he was) he might fore-see, not onely that Noah would prove a good man, for whose sake God would be good to others, as Gen. 18. vers. 26, &c. But secondly, that by Noah would be found out some more ready and easie way of tilling the ground; and it might be that before his time, the earth was broken up, and tillage made with mans handy labour, using Spades or other such like Instruments: and Noah might invent the Plough and Harrow, and the drawing of them by Oxen or other beasts.

V. 32. five hundred yeares old] Heb. a sonne of five hundred yeares. Not compleat but current, that is, now living on towards the end of the five hundreth yeare since he was first a sonne to his father; as when a Levite entred upon his service of the Tabernacle, being a sonne of thirty yeares, Numb. 4.3. the meaning is, that his age passeth on towards the end of thirty yeares.

Noah begat] That is, began to beget: For he had not all three in one yeare; nor now first of all: for it is not like he continued five hundred yeares single, but that he was a father before this time, though his former children (it is like) were dead before the Flood.

CHAP. VI.

Vers. 1. Men began] Heb. man began. Enallage of number. began to multiply] To a very great number: for they multiplied from the beginning ever since the first benediction, be fruitfull and multiply, was pronounced upon them; Gen. Chap. 1.28. but now the increase of man-kind began to be very great, haply by Lamechs practise of Polygamie or having many wives together, Gen. 4.19 which from the Cainites might become a custome among the sonnes of Seth.

daughters were borne] The mentioning of daughters doth not exclude or deny the generation of sons, any more then the mentioning only of sons of Adam excludeth or denieth the generation of daughters; but here the children of that sexe are particularly spoken of, the other being presupposed or implied, because they were the occasion both of the corruption and calamity set forth in the ensuing story.

V. 2. That the sonnes of God] The most received sense of the words is, that by sonnes of God is meant not any of the Angelicall nature (though Angels be sometimes called the sonnes of God, as Job 1.6. and though the suppositious prophesie of Enoch expound this place of them,) but rationall creatures of humane kind; yet in this place distinguished from the daughters of men, not onely by their sex, but by their qualities, or by their relations; by their qualities, as persons of some eminent endowments, or estimation above others (as what is excellent is in the Scripture phrase especially, intituled unto God, as the garden of God, Ezek. 28.13. & Chap 31. vers. 8, 9. the hill of God, Psal. 68 15. Or by their relations, as such as descending from Seth and Enosh professed the true worship of the true God, and so became capable of the title of the sonnes of God, Deut. 14.1. 2 Cor. 6.18. As on the contrary, the wicked are called the children of a strange god, these being such as descended from Seth and Enos, but more remisse in Religion then their godly Ancestors, fell from their zeale for God, and against sinne, and sinfull persons; and so they were not onely willing to converse with them, but so farre fell in love with them, as to take their daughters to be their wives.

daughters of men] Heb. of man; by Enallage of number see the Note on vers. 1. By daughters of men are meant those that are come of the corrupt race of wicked and accursed Cain; who are called the daughters of men, as having little of the Image of God in their minds, or manners; and though there be mention onely of daughters, it is like they made mongrell marriages of the daughters of God with the sonnes of men, the women choosing as wicked husbands, as the men did wives.

that they were faire] They had no respect to spirituall, either beauty or deformitie; but a fond and fleshly affection to outward comlinesse of person.

which they chose] They chose them for wives whom their affections had chosen to be their bed-fellows, without any respect to that fitnesse which is requisite in marriage; whereof see 2 Cor. 6.14. or any care or feare of being corrupted by unequall and wicked yoke-fellowes; Exod. 34. 16. 1 King. 11. 2, 3. or any regard of scandall to their profession, or griefe to the godly. See Gen. 26. last.

V. 3. My Spirit] That is, the Spirit of God, or of Christ in those few good men who lived in that corrupt and incorrigible age; by which Spirit they opposed the evill minds and manners of the wicked; and the same Spirit suggested good motions to the soules and consciences of sinfull men, which they resisted and rejected.

not alwaies strive] As before by Noahs preaching, admonishing, reproving, protesting against the wickednesse of the times, and striving with the stubbornesse of the world, 1 Pet. 3.18,19. and by the inward operations of Gods Spirit urging the conscience to repentance for sinne, and reformation of life: thus for God not to strive, is a judgement; as not to chastise and correct for amendment, Isa. 1. vers. 5. and this he here threatneth being weary of their rebellious obstinacie, which moves him to make a finall resolution for their utter ruine; yet sometimes he professeth he will not strive, in mercy to man-kind, Isa. 57. 16.

he also] If the word also be not completive, (as some words are also in the Greek and Latine) it may imply a diversitie of person, with a conformitie of offence; as if not onely the wicked stock of Cain were here accused of corruption, but that he also, that is, the posteritie of Sem did partake in their prevarication.

Cap. 5. 3. Own likeness] Quales ipsi post Lapsum erant, tales progenuerunt. Melanchth. de peccato Originis, p. 379.

5. 24. Walked with God] When his Summons came, he was not found idle, but doing his Master's Will, in his proper place & Business; while he visited the sick committed to his charge: Which doubtless was as safe to himself, and as acceptable to God, as if he had expired upon his knees in his Closet. Mr. Shower's Funeral Sermon on Dr. Grew, p. 12. Ano, 1712. April, 24. 1723. ÆT.

Walked] indefinenter ambulavit, Tremel.

Gen. 6. v. 3. [he also] The meaning is, I see my children that they also are corrupt, and degenerat, as well as ye rest of Mankind, and my Spirit hath striven wth them. Dr. Godwin's folly of Relapsing P. 97.

is flesh] That is, (for the most part, if not altogether) fleshly, and relishing little or nothing of the spirit, but with dislike and resistance. See Gal. 5. 17.

an hundred and twenty yeares] By this God makes not the limits of mans life, as appears by many examples of men living much longer, Gen. 11. and a good while after the flood, Abraham lived one hundred seventy five yeares, Gen. 25. 7. Isaac, one hundred eighty, Chap. 35. 28. and Jacob, one hundred fourty seven yeares, Gen. 47. 28. and Jehojada, whose time was one thousand five hundred yeares after this, lived to one hundred thirty yeares, 2 Chron. 24. 15. but by these words God giveth an hundred and twenty yeares space of repentance to the world; Noah the while preaching and preparing the Ark, and thereby warning the wicked of their approaching perill, if they did not by repentance prevent it. See 1 Pet. 3. 20.

V. 4. Giants] Our English word Giant, cometh of the Greeke word Gigas, and that signifieth one borne of the earth: so fabulous antiquitie reporteth of a sort of mighty men, monstrous in their manners, and making warre against heaven. Macrob. Saturn. lib. 1. cap 20. For particular Giants by name we read of Goliah and his greatnesse, 1 Sam. 17. vers. 1,4,5. Of Og of the race of ancient Giants, Deut. 3. 11. who is said to remaine of the remnant of the Giants before the flood, (as the Jewes faine) that what with his owne height, and the height of an hill, was saved from drowning in the Deluge: but he was a mighty Tyrant of a later rise and race, as of wicked Cham; and he is said to be left as a remnant in that Countrey where all but himselfe were destroyed, or driven out, of Ishbibenob, 2 Sam. 21. 16. who is said to be the sonne of the Giant, or Rapha, as in the Margine, (whence are the Rephaims, Gen. 14. 5.) which signifieth to cure; as some render it, who will have a Giant to be so called by the contrary, as in Latine mons a non movendo, a mountaine; lucus a non lucendo, a grove; bellum quasi minime bellum, warre; but it signifieth sound, also strong, potent, boisterous: the word here used is nephilim, which some take in a good sense, and make the nephilim to be men of honourable note and renoune: it is derived of the radix naphal, which signifieth he hath fallen: and so we may take them for men of stature, mightie in power, fierce of nature, Apostates from God, fallen from true Religion, and falling upon such as were weaker then themselves with Tyrannicall violence and oppression. See Job 16. 14.

of renoune] To be renouned is to be named againe; so that men of renoune are those whose names are iterated, who are often mentioned, or much spoken of: so are such persons who are either notable or notorious for any eminent difference from ordinary men.

V. 5. every imagination] So also, Chap. 8. 21. imagination of the thoughts; or, every figment; or, all the cogitations, (as some render the originall). The figment of the thought is what the mind fashioneth or frameth by thinking within it selfe: the Hebrew word Jetser, signifieth not onely the imagination, but also the purpose and desire of man: and hereby is meant that internall taint of corrupt nature, which makes a mint of evill imaginations in the head, a sinke of inordinate affections in the heart, useth the memory as a closet or store-house of sinfull fancies and impure impressions.

V. 6. it repenteth] This is spoken of God by a figure called Anthropopathia, whereby humane passions for mans better apprehension are ascribed to God; & wherby we are to understand that as man, when he repenteth, changeth his act; so God when he changeth his act, is said to repent; the cause by a Metonymie being put for the effect: for repentance being properly a trouble of minde or conscience for some fault, over-sight or impotence to effect what one would; cannot consist with the infinite goodnesse, and wisdome, or power of God; who is not as man that he should repent in a proper sense, 1 Sam. 15. 29. in whom there is no variablenesse nor shadow of change, Jam. 1. 17. since there is no frailty or fickleneese in him; no error in his counsels, no deceiving of his expectations, no disappointment of his purpose; and though there be in him a will, many times, to change his owne act; yet is there not at any time in him a change of his will.

grieved him at the heart] In property of speech God hath neither heart, nor griefe; for he is a most pure and uncompounded Spirit, impossible to suffer any thing that can afflict: this therefore is a continuation of the former figure. See the precedent Annotation.

V. 7. both man and beast] Heb. from man unto beast. The punishment beginneth at man, who did deserve it; and goeth on to beasts, which for his sake are punished, as well as for his sake they were created. See Annot. on vers. 17.

V. 9. just and perfect] Noah was just and perfect, not simply, but in his generation: that is, compared with those of his time: or, he was just and perfect; that is, sincere in his profession of Religion without hypocrisie; but not perfect; that is, free from all sin; so that it was of grace, not of right, that God accepted him, vers. 8. and he was justified not by workes, but by faith before God, Heb. 11. 7.

V. 10. Sem] See Annot. on Chap. 5. last.

V. 11. The earth was corrupt] That is, all People or Nations of the earth were corrupted with sin, as an infected body with putrefied sores, Isa. 1. 6. with all sorts of sinne, especially with lust, violence, and idolatry; though God by his absolute power might marre all creatures that he had made, for he may doe with his owne as he listeth, as the Potter may doe with his vessell, yet he that made man without his helpe, will not destroy man without his fault: So that his wickednesse makes Apologie for Gods Justice, though nothing in man be meritorious of mercy, and he hath none to charge with his calamitie but himselfe, Hos. 13. 9. Isa. 1. 19.

V. 12. all flesh] That is, of all the living creatures that live not in the waters, especially man, so called chiefly in regard of the opposition in man of the flesh to the spirit, against which it lusteth. See Annot on vers. 5. & Psal. 14. vers. 1,2,3. & Rom. 3. from the 10. vers. to the 18. and this corruption being generall in all flesh, is a ready preparation and provocation on mans part, for a generall perdition from the Justice of God.

V. 13. before me] I have resolved upon the ruine of all flesh, it is so before me, or in my view, that I will not looke besides it, untill my Decree of destruction be put in execution.

through them] That is, the sonnes of men, or the people of the earth called before by the name of flesh.

I will destroy] Or, am corrupting, or, ready to destroy or corrupt.

with the earth] Or, from the earth; The substance of the earth was not destroyed by water, as it shall be by fire, 2 Pet. 3. 10. and it may be many of the strongest buildings (and perhaps some plants also) might remaine unruined, or not wholly demolished; but the richest fruits were so overwhelmed that they were for the most part utterly destroyed.

an Arke] Though it were to doe the office of a ship, it had the forme of an Arke or Chest, plaine below, on each side, and almost above also, save that towards the top, it had a little rising up like the cover of a coffin; and this rising was about the measure of a cubite, vers. 16. which was made ridge-wise as the slooped roofe of an house, that rain might rather slide down from it then rest upon it; this cubite was above the measure of thirtie cubits, which was the altitude or height of the Arke.

Gopher wood] This word is used but once in the Scripture, some take it to be a Pine tree, some a Firre tree, some a Cedar tree; the Firre tree would serve for boards and planks, Cedars for Masts, Ezek. 27. 5. and it may be any of them; or in generall any tree that yeelds gumme or Rosin, and so it is of neere sound and signification with the word Gopher which signifieth bituminous or rosinous, that is, of brimstone or rosin; and such wood is both of good sent and of long continuance.

Pitch it] Not onely for closenesse, but for better and wholesomer sent.

V. 15. three hundred cubits] The length is ten times the height of it; for ten times thirtie is three hundred, and fixe times the breadth of it, for fixe times fiftie is three hundred, which some conceive to be in proportion of mans body rightly framed, measured from head to foot for the length, from the right side to the left for the breadth, and from the outside of the breast to the outside of the backe for the depth of it. The Arke may seeme greater or lesser according to the difference of cubits, which was of three degrees: 1. The common cubit containing five palmes of foure fingers breadth: 2. The cubit of the Sanctuary, which is one palme more, Ezek. 40. 5. and the third is the Geometricall cubite, six times as great as the common cubit. If the first or second sort of cubit be too little for capacitie for all the creatures with their provision, which were to be lodged in it from the beginning untill the ceasing of the flood; the last will be sufficient and to spare.

V. 16. A window] This was some especiall window towards the top of the Arke by which light might be derived into the roomes, which it is like had other windows besides this (though as some thinke) the lowest roome had none at all for that they suppose, most of it was sunke into the waters; which yet might be otherwise, for the Arke being flat below, not ridged as a ship, it might float upon the surface of the water, for which purpose it had that figure; however, God might easily keep it up for the better use of the creatures within it. The windows might have some transparent cover to keepe out wind or raine, as of glasse or horne, or some other thing, by which light might be let in; for either the Ancient Patriarchs might by the experience of their long lives, finde out many excellent helps to any purpose; or to such a one as this, revelation might make out what observation or invention could not devise to doe.

finish it above] The Arke, not the window; (for that measure would be too little) which shall be raised in the roofe of it a cubit. See 1. note on vers. 14.

a doore] Which was wide enough, and high enough to receive an Elephant or a Camel: of the capacitie of the Arke most doubt, many dispute, and some deny that it could containe so many creatures with necessary provision for them all for so long a time as the flood prevailed; but if there were more in the matter then is consonant to common reason, there was so much miraculous in this destructive judgement, and preservative prudence of God, that faith may goe on where reason is at a stand; yet reason may reach it so farre as to evict it not onely possible but probable; but the word of God doth make the truth of it infallible.

V. 17. I, even I] An emphaticall doubling of the person importing both the proprietie of the Author and certaintie of the act, as Gen.9.9. Exod.14. 17. Levit. 26. 28. Numb. 3. 12. Ezek.5.8. & Chap.6.3.&c. 34.11. & Hos.5. 14. in these places God useth the repetition of himselfe: the like is used sometimes by men, as by Eliah, 1 King.18. 22. by Artaxerxes, Ezra 7.21. by Daniel, Dan.8.15.

doe bring] The commination of judgement to come, is set down in the present tense, to expresse assurance of event; as being as sure to be done, as if it were now in doing: for the same end propheſies are many times set down in the preter tense, as if they were already come to passe, because they shall assuredly be fulfilled, Revel.18.2. and many other places.

every thing shall die.] Death is the reward of sinne, Gen.2.17. Rom. 6. 23. and this a proportionable reward; for as sin was generall, ver.12. so is death in this place; yet here the punishment goeth further then the guilt; for those must die that never sinned, because they that sinned deserved the curse, not onely in their own persons, but their appurtenances, Gen. Chap. 3. 19. and 6. 7. & 8. 21. Psal. 107. 34. Mic. 3. 12.

V. 18. my covenant] Because Noah was now not onely by word, but by a strange work, to forewarne a whole world of wicked ones of imminent destruction, and therefore was like from men to receive much discouragement by derision, both of his commination of danger, and preparation against it; God, to confirme him in that great enterprize, maketh a covenant with him, that his faith might not faile, and so he might be assured both that he who made the world, could marre it if he pleased; and that he who was able both to make and marre it, could save whom he pleased from perdition.

[and thy sonnes] Ham as well as Shem and Iaphet: Bad children, if they have good parents, are partakers of some temporall favours for their parents sake, 1 King.Chap.11.12,13. None besides these; no, not the Carpenters that made the Ark, had any entertainment in the Ark: They wrought, it seems, as Noah's workmen for their hire, not apprehending their work as a service to Gods providence, in preservation of a seed-plot for a second world: It may be so with some Preachers, who preach others into the Church, and live themselves out of it; so it falleth out with them, as Paul feared of himselfe, 1 Cor. 9. 27.

V. 19. of every living thing] That lived in the aire and earth; for fishes and such other creatures, as lived in their element, would be as safe in the water, as those that were reserved in the Arke.

V. 20. Of foules] In probability the foules first entred and were placed highest, next below them were the beasts, and lowest of all, according to their naturall habitation, were the creeping creatures; all which came in to Noah by a divine instinct, or by the ministery of Angels, as they came before Adam to receive their names, Ghap. 2. 19. so that he needed neither to goe on hunting for the beasts, nor on hawking for the birds.

V. 21. all food] Such as was suitable to the nature of every living creature; therefore flesh for the Lion, who feeds most on it; wherein (as there was need) God instructed Noah both in the quality and quantity, which was proportioned to their continuance in the Arke, (the time whereof was known by God onely) and to the time of the earths barrennesse afterward; for after Noah's returne to land, and his sowing of the ground, there must be time to ripen the corne before reaping in harvest. In all this, God serves his own providence by humane meanes, without which he could have easily saved man either from the water, on the water, or in the water.

V. 22. according to all] So also Chap. 7. vers. 5. he obeyed Gods command in all the particulars prescribed, without adding or diminishing; yea, without doubting or disputing: and though many things were very strange, and full of difficulty to be done, (the attempt whereof was like to be entertained with opposition and derision of the whole world) yet by his faith he overcame them all, Heb. 11. 7. for faith is a victorious grace, victorious over the world, 1 Joh. 5. 4.

CHAP. VII.

Vers. 1. Come thou] When the Ark was ready, and the provision for those that were to be received into it brought in, and the hundred and twenty yeers run out, Chap.6. vers. 3. and Gods patience abused, and Noah's preaching of repentance, and forewarning the world of approaching perill, by preparing the Ark for safety, contemned; then was Noah to enter into the Ark.

and all thy house] Thy family, all the persons of thy house specified vers. 13. to wit, himselfe, his wife, his three sonnes, and their three wives: he had divers servants no doubt, but they were neither within the Ark, nor within the Covenant, which is made, as the promise is, to the faithfull and to their children, Gen. 6. 18. Acts 2. 39. Though saving grace descend not by generation, from the parents to their children; many temporall blessings are bestowed on them for their sakes, Gen. 17. 20. and Chap. 19. 12.

into the Ark;] Though God could have saved Noah and his family, either upon the water, or in it, as well as the fishes; yet he is pleased to prescribe a likely means of safety; and the meanes prescribed must be used, though he could save without it, as well as with it.

righteous] In respect of the rest of the world. See the Annot. Chap. 6. vers. 9.

before me,] His service to God was not an eye-service, to be seen of men, or applauded by them; what he did, was so done, that it might be accepted and approved by God, who likes that goodnesse most, which is least in sight; and that others may do the like, they may observe in this example, how happily sincerity and safety meet together. See Prov. 10.9.

in this generation.] The race of man in Noah's time, called by S. Peter, the world of the ungodly, 2 Pet. 2. 5. was generally so degenerated from God, so wide out of the way of Enoch's holy walking with him; that Noah was among them as a lillie among the thornes, Cant. 2. 2. which rarity doth not onely set forth his sincerity, but whets the edge of his zeale, to be so much more faithfull, and serviceable unto God, as to make some supply for others failing.

V. 2. Of every cleane beast] The distinction of cleane and uncleane creatures, before the flood, was principally observed in respect of Sacrifices to God; yet in respect of sustenance of man there was difference also; for some of them were of wholesome nourishment, some not; but of those that were wholesome in themselves, some kinds were after the flood forbidden to the Jews, Levit. 11. which upon the union of converts of the Jews and Gentiles into one Church, were allowed as a part of Christian liberty, Acts 10. 12, 13. 1 Tim. 4. 4. Tit. 1. 15. and of Gods liberality, which was more to man then to himselfe in this respect, that he would be served but with a few kinds of creatures; as of beasts, onely with Kine, Oxen, Sheep, and Goats; and of birds, with Doves, or Pigeons, Turtles, Sparrows. See Levit. Chap. 1. vers. 3. and Chap. 14.4. and Chap. 22. 19. whereas he allowed man more variety of good creatures, not onely for his necessity, but for his delight, and gave him the greatest store of those which are of most use; and to make them more usefull, he made them familiar to him, and sociable among themselves; the contrary disposition in savage creatures, is of the mercifull dispensation of God, for both their averseness from cohabitation with man, and their dis-union among themselves, (ranging rather alone, like single theeves or spoilers, then in great herds like armies) make much for the safety both of mankind, and of the creatures most serviceable to him.

by sevens,] Hebr. seven seven. The Hebrews expresse distribution by duplication of the same word, so Chap. 32. vers. 16. Numb. 7. 11. and Chap. 29. 10. so doe the Greeks, (though not so frequently) as Mark, Chap.6. vers.7,39,40.

by sevens,] That is, one for sacrifice, as Chap. 8. 20. and the rest, partly for food, and partly for breed to preserve the kind; therefore they were fewer of the uncleane, because they were taken into the Ark onely for increase, that the kind might not perish: and whereas it is said, Chap. 6. 20. that two of every sort must be taken into the Ark, the meaning is, that they should be taken by couples, one of each sexe; but here besides the difference of sex, the distinct number is set down, which is more of the cleane, then of the uncleane, that there might be most increase of those which were of most use and comfort to mankind; and therefore God hath so ordered their number, and habitation, that the wild and lesse profitable creatures doe not so abound, as the tame and more profitable; or God so disposeth of the abode of such as are savage and cruel, that they desire to live apart from the society of man, and to keep as much as may be out of his walk and sight. See Job Chap. 37. vers. 7. 8. Psal. 104. 20.

the male and his female] Hebr. Isch, Veischeta, that is, the man and his wife; the distinction made in termes belonging to noblest kind, and by a figure called catachresis, applied to the severall sexes of other kindes; so are they said to have families. See Annot. on Chap. 8. 19.

V. 3. Of fowles also] As the beasts that were to be taken in by sevens were cleane beasts; so are the fowles that are of cleane kinds to be taken in, by sevens also.

V. 4. yet seven dayes] God yet shewed mercy when he executed judgement, in that he sent it down by a graduall increase, that it might warne them of the danger, and worke upon them for repentance, whereby some might be saved from the fire of hell, though none escaped the flood of water that were not in the Arke: and it is not unlike, that some reserved in the Arke were damned; as well as some saved that were overwhelmed in the flood.

yet seven dayes] Hebr. to yet seven dayes. That is, the seventh day from hence or after this; so vers. 10. compare Text and marg: the like expression is of the same construction, 2 Chron. 10.5. which Gen. 40. 13. is rendered within, as within three dayes shall Pharaoh lift up thine head.

I will cause it to raine] To send or withhold raine, whether in mercy or judgement, is an act of power peculiar to God, Gen 2.5. Job 28.25,26,28. Esa.5.6. Amos 4. 7. and therefore though Elijah said there should be neither dew nor raine but according to his word, 1 King.17. 1. and according to his word, it was restrained for three yeares and sixe moneths, and afterwards according to his word, restored; yet that was not by a word of command, but a word of prayer, Jam. 5. 17. he prevailed with God by a petition, else he could not have either kept backe, or sent down one drop upon the earth.

V. 5. according to all] All Gods commands are just in themselves, and justly commanded unto men; nothing so great which he bids, but we are bound to doe it; nothing so small, that we may be allowed to slight it, when the stamp of divine authoritie is upon it; then what ever it is, there is weight and worth in it to make it regarded; and he that obeys not God in all things, as Noah here, and David, Psal. 119. 6. Act. 13.22. but with choice and exception, obeys him not at all, Jam. 2. 10,11. See Annot. on Chap.6. vers. last.

V. 6. sixe hundred yeares old] Hebr. a sonne of sixe hundred yeares: as Chap. 5. 32. sixe hundred yeares were past since the time he was first a sonne, and born into the world.

V. 7. and his sonnes, &c.] None but they; which confutes the account of the seventie Interpreters, which extend the age of Methuselah beyond the flood, which cannot be true, because he was none of those that were preserved in the Arke; and it is not like he perished in the flood, therefore it is most probable, he dyed before it came upon all flesh.

because of the waters] Hebr. from the face of the waters.

V. 9. there went in two and two] They came in not by any pains or compulsion of Noah, nor by any skill or art of hunting or hawking; for that would not serve to bring together so many sorts in so short a time; but by such an inward motive or instinct from God, as brought the creatures before Adam to receive their names, Chap.2.19.

as God commanded Noah] The Lord signified his command to Noah, when he told him they should come unto him, Chap. 6, 19, 20. and when they offered themselves unto him, Gods command was that he should take them in, and dispose of them fitly in their cells and cabines.

V. 10. And it came to passe] Gods promises, how faire so ever; his threatnings, how fierce so ever, never faile of an answerable effect; because he is immutable in his counsell and purpose, Heb.6.17. and unresistible in his power, Job 9. from vers.4. to the tenth: But they who are led more by sense, then by faith or reason; will not beleeve it untill they feele it; and when they are foretold it, with confidence and rage they reject the premonition, Prov.14. 16. and passe on to their punishment Prov.22.3.

V. 11. second moneth] The moneths before the captivitie of Babylon had their distinction (as some think) only by number and order, as the first, second, &c. after the return from Babylon they had more particular appellations. Carol. Sig. de Rep. Hebr. lib.3.cap.2. But that they had them much sooner, is manifest (at least for some of them) by Scripture, as

1	Abib, Exod.13.4.& 23.15. & 34.18. Deut.16.1.	March.
2	Zif, 1 King. 6. 1. 37.	April.
7	Ethanim, 1 King. 8. 2.	September.
8	Bul, 1 King.6. 38.	October.

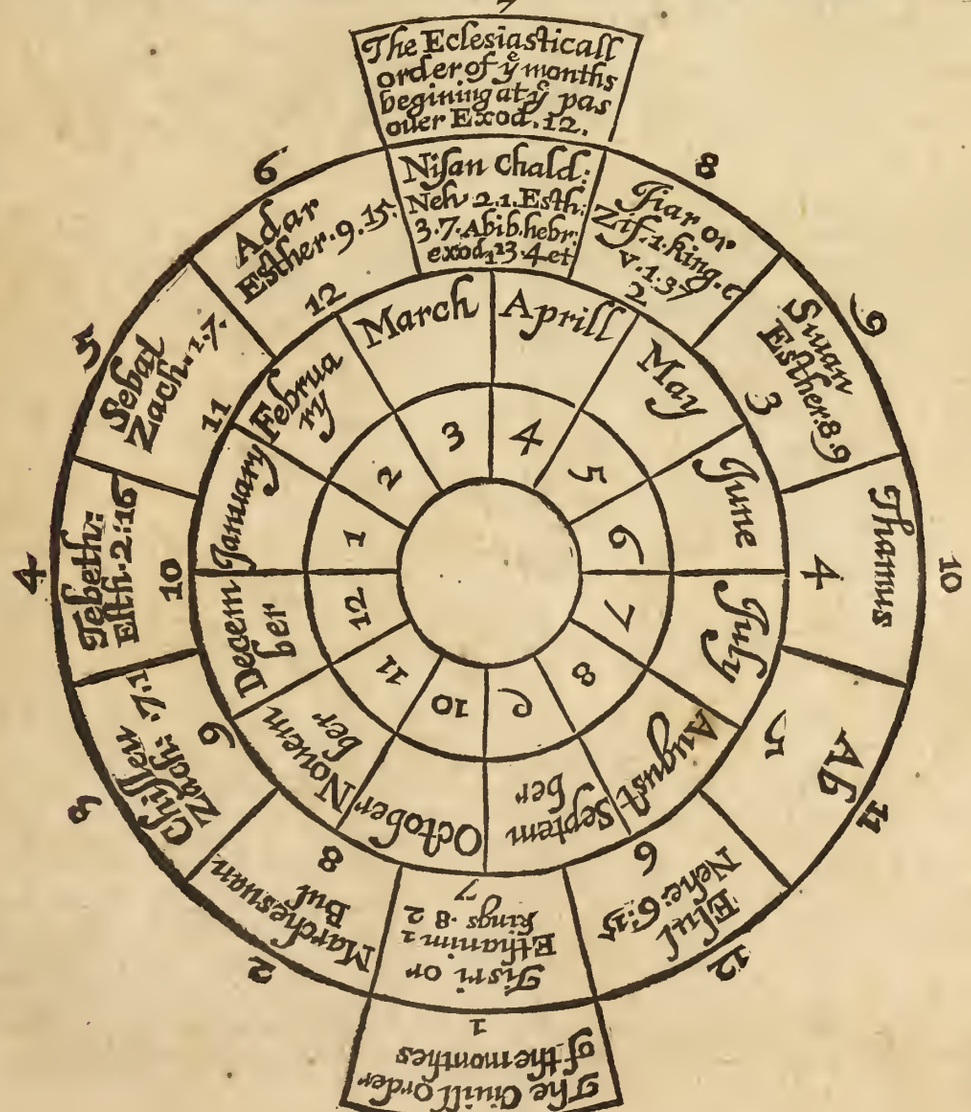
Although in exact correspondence Nisan or Abib, the first Moneth, answereth rather to part of March and part of April; and Iiar or Zif, the second Moneth, answereth to part of April and part of May, &c. This reckoning of Moneths was Ecclesiasticall, observed for the ordering and celebrating of the Feasts; see Exod.12,1. but there was another accompt of the yeare for Civill affaires, and that began at the Moneth Tisri or Ethanim, which was part of September and part of October; and so the second Moneth was part of October and part of November. This second Moneth some take according to the Civill accompt; for till after the dayes of Noah the Ecclesiasticall accompt was not observed: some take it rather according to the Ecclesiasticall accompt, because Moses (by anticipation in respect of the contexture of story) writes according to what was in use in his own age; and so the second Moneth may be the Moneth Iiar, which contained part of April, and part of May, the pleasantest time in the whole yeare; a time (no doubt) of most secutity to the world, and of much hope of an happy yeare to insue. How they differed in their order, (both agreeing in the number of twelve) and what correspondence is betwixt their accompt and ours, may be represented in this Figure.



fountains of the great deepe] Both the waters of the earth and under it did overflow, swelling up, and finding issue out by a miraculous operation of divine power; and also the clouds made returne of showers for vapours received in the aire, and there formed into water; so that sinfull man is betwixt them both, the one above, the other below, as Pharaoh and his host betwixt the waves of the red Sea, which stood severed to receive them, and met again to drown them, Exod.14.28.

windows of heaven] Or, the flood-gates of heaven. We finde the like phrase, Chap.8.2. & 2 King. 7. 2. 19. Psal.78. 23. Esa. 24. 18. Malachi 3.10. though in proprietie of speech there be neither windows nor flood-gates in heaven: the meaning is, that the waters bound up in the clouds, which now were extraordinary bigge and black, were let loose into continuall raine in such an extraordinary manner and measure, that it might appeare to men to be a judgement from God; which (as some conceive) came not down in drops, but as from spouts, in streams; or that the clouds did not distill down water as sweat through the pores of the skinne, but as it were vomited out a great measure of waters at once; howsoever, the raine came down so fast, and in such abundance, as brought the deluge to the highest cubite within the space prefixed: to this height or depth of waters some conceive there was no need of any new creation, but of a condensation of aire, which from waters returned to aire again by rarefaction of the wind sent for that purpose, Chap.8.verf. 1.

V. 12. fourtie dayes, and fourtie nights] The pitie and patience of God appeare in this soft and slow pace of his judgements, compared with the worke of his goodnesse and power in making the world; which in sixe dayes space he perfectly finished; but he tooke fourtie dayes space, when he meant to destroy it, after he had given an hundred and twentie years warning, Gen.6.3. And when he threatned the Ninevites, he premonished them of their perill fourtie dayes, before it was to fall upon them, Jonah 3.4. who tooke warning by words, and so Gods displeasure against them went not on unto deeds, Jonah 3.10.

V. 13. in the selfe same day] Viz. When the raine began to fall; Hebr. In the bone, body, substance, or strength of the day. So Gen.17.23. Levit. 23.14. Josh. 10. 27. when it was cleare day, and while the day was in its strength; so that it was certainly the selfe-same day, and not a morning, or evening twilight, which might seeme to belong to the day before, or the day following.

V. 14. every sort] The Hebrew phrase, of every wing, imports a difference of fowles by their wings; and so there is; for most have wings of feathers, yet some have skinny or gristly wings without feathers, so have bats.

V. 15. two of all flesh] That is, of either sexe one of all kinds, not only of the tame creatures, but of the wild; even those which were at greatest antipathy or hostilitie to each other, were (out of a naturall desire to escape danger) content to lay all quarrels aside, and quietly to come and continue together (as Esa.11.6,7.&c. & Chap.65.25.) where they might be preserved from destruction: wherein the wisdome of brute and savage beasts may upbraid the madnesse of men, whom no apprehension of outward perill will keep in peace, or bring to a truce among themselves.

V. 16. shut him in] Not so much to confine him, as to secure him; for when he shut him in, he shut out the waters that they might not follow him: herein how doth God favour and honour his servants, who (though he be the high and loftie one who inhabiteth eternitie) will come down to dwell with the humble, Esa. 57. 15. and doe such meane offices for them, as to shut their doores, as here; to make their bed, as Psal.41.3. and (which was a condescending of the same Deitie in the forme of a servant, Phil.2.7.) to wash his servants feet, Joh. 13. verf.5. What office or service of God then, whether to be a doore-keeper in his house, as David desired, Psal.84. 10. or any other how low so ever, can be too base for the worthiest of the sonnes of men?

V. 17. the flood was fourtie dayes upon the earth] That is, the waters by the fourtie dayes raine swelled up to the height of the flood, but they prevailed over the earth one hundred and fiftie dayes, verf.24.

V. 18. waters prevailed] When they daily increased, those that more feared drowning then their damnation before, used no doubt many meanes for their safetie, removing from the lower roomes to the higher, from the floores to the tops of houses, and from houses to trees, from the valleys to the hils, and some swimming towards the Arke, desired that refuge which before they derided; but the waters so prevailed against all their preservatives, that none of them would serve either to save them altogether, or to reprieve their lives while the raine powred down; and so the water floods did overflow them, and the deepe swallowed them up, though (as David prayed, Psal.69.15.) Noah and his family were preserved from them.

V. 20. Fifteen cubits] There was no refuge then for Giants, or the greatest land-creatures upon the highest hils, or any resting place for Enoch upon the Earth (as the Papists faign his preservation in some high place of the earthly Paradise.) Some will have it that some hils are in their tops above the middle region of the Aire, and so above clouds and raine, and windes; in so much that Solinus writeth that on Olympus, letters written in ashes will remaine a whole yeare, as legible at the yeares end, as when they were made; which appeareth to be fabulous both by reason and experience; by reason, because that vapours which cause both raine and winde doe ascend fifty two, or at least fourty five miles in height, as Clavius sheweth in his Booke de Crepusculis: but the hill Olympus ascendeth not in a perpendicular line above a mile and a quarter, as the dimension was taken by Anaxagoras, and reported by Plutarch in the life of Paulus Aemilius; so that if the mountaines Athos, Atlas, Caucasus, Casius, Pelion, Ossa, Tenerissa, and divers others had beene set one upon another, and all upon Olympus, it would not have afforded a safe repose for Enoch, or any else, the flood swelling up fifteene cubits above the highest mountaines: and for experience, Francisc. Philelphus a learned Knight of Italy ascended the hill Olympus to try the truth of that of Solinus, and found the relation to be false, as Ludov. Vives hath reported on August. de civ. Dei.l.15. cap. the last: yet (how high soever the flood swelled) the Papists will have it that Enoch was secured from drowning in some part of Paradise; and for that purpose the waters (say some of the learnedst of that side) stood above the hill, and about the place where Enoch was, as Exod.14.22.

V. 22. the breath of life] Heb. the breath of spirit. By this it is thought that fishes are excepted, because they breath not; and they are said not to breath because they have no lungs, and live in the water where aire cannot come; yet Pliny saith that fishes breathe: Nat.Hist.l.10.c.65.

died] There is no doubt of the death of those that were drowned, but a great question whether all that were drowned were also damned; some are for the affirmative: 1. Because they were generally corrupt and cruell, Gen.6.11. 2. Because the preaching of Noah, and preparing the Arke for one hundred & twenty years together wrought no repentance in them. 3. Because the Arke was a figure of the Church, 1 Pet. 3. 20, 21. out of which there is no salvation. 4. For that they that were drowned were called the world of the ungodly, 2 Pet.2.5. Notwithstanding as all were not saved that were in the Arke, so it is probable that all were not damned that were out of it; for there were millions of infants, of whom some might belong to God by his Decree of Election; and though most were so hardned in their sinne as to die in it, and be damned for it; yet the danger coming upon them by degrees, might worke upon some of them to salvation of their souls, though they miscarried by the drowning of their bodies; as Eli, though he brak his neck, 1 Sam. 4. 18. did not lose his soule, as judicious and godly Divines have judged of him. N.

V. 23. every living substance] Except the fishes, which perished not; for the judgement being inflicted for the sinne of man, those creatures were destroyed, who lived on and in the same element with him; that is, those of the earth and aire, and with which he had most to doe; and not the fishes, who lived out of all communion with him, in that element, out of which they could not, and in which man could not live: unlesse then the flood had beene made up of such raine as fell upon Sodome and Gomorrah (as some Jewes faine somewhat like it, viz. that it was a raine of scalding water) they might survive the destruction of other creatures. And of those that were destroyed, the first were men, women, and children; then beasts, and birds last of all, who might flie above that danger when they could neither by going (though it were climbing) nor by swimming deferre their drowning any longer. This generall and deepe inundation may serve to make sinne abominable, and the Justice of God terrible to all man-kind; if the creatures (besides man) who are alive were apprehensive of the destructiō of those which the flood hath swallowed up, they would be very fearefull to provoke his indignation any more; the more should man beware of incurring his displeasure, since his sinne involveth the unreasonable and insensible creatures under a curse, as well as himself, Exod. 9. 19. Josh. 7. 24,25. Jonah 4. 11.

Noah onely remained, &c.] 2 Pet.2.5. Now it was evident to the surviving part of the world (and that they that were overtaken with the waters before they were overwhelmed with them, might see it, and acknowledge it) that it was safer to goe against the streame, with a few godly persons; then with a multitude of ungodly ones, to be carried along with it, and overwhelmed by it.

V. 24. an hundred and fifty dayes] Which are to be reckoned not from the end of the fourtie dayes raine, but from the first day of the falling of it, which was the seventeenth day of the second moneth, verf. 11. from which day to the seventeenth day of the seventeenth moneth (on which by the asswaging and decreasing of the flood, the Ark rested on Mount Ararat, Chap. 8. verf.3,4.) are just one hundred and fifty dayes.

CHAP.

CHAP. VIII.

Vers. 1. Remembred] Remembrance in proprietie of speech, is applied to such onely as may forget; yet by a figure of conformitie betwixt God and man, (whereby God is spoken of after the manner of men) he is said not onely to remember, Gen. Chap. 9. 15. Exod. 32. 13. Ezek. 16. 60. but to forget also, as Psal. 13. 1. Isa. 49. 14. and both these with a various respect to the godly, and to the wicked; though indeed he apprehends all things past, present, and to come at one act, and so doth not properly remember, much lesse forget any thing: but by his remembrance as applied to the godly, is meant some act of Divine favour, Heb. 6. 10. as the granting of their requests, Gen. 30. 22. Job 14. 13. Psal. 132. 1. the performing of his promises made unto them, Gen. Chap. 19. vers. 29. Exod. 32. 13. Deut. 9. 27. Ezek. 16. 60. and the rewarding of their workes, Neh. 13. vers. 14. 22. not for their merit, but for his owne mercie: Lastly, his remembring of them is his relieving them in distresse, when in the opinion of men they are thought to be neglected, as if they were quite forgotten by him; and he is said not to remember the sinnes of such, Jer. 31. 34. Heb. 10. 17. when he doth so freely and fully forgive them, as if he did altogether forget them: and he is said to forget them, when he with-holds his favour from them, or deferreth to send succour to them in their necessitie, Psal. 13. 1. and with reference to the wicked, his remembrance is a recompencing them after their misdoings, Psal. 137. 7. and his forgetting a forbearing of punishment, as if they were both out of sight and out of mind with him, Psal. 10. 11. and now it was seasonable for God to manifest his remembrance of Noah, who had beene many moneths in a state of sadnesse, though of safetie; and might well by this time be weary of his close prison, his unsteady dwelling, and of his cohabitation with brute creatures, unfit (save in case of great necessitie) to lodge with him under the same roofe.

and all the cattell] Gods benignitie extendeth to man and beast, Psal. 36. vers. 6. & 147. v. 9. Jonah 4. 11.

a wind to passe] The wind, as God pleaseth to employ it, either driveth away raine, or bringeth it; see Prov. 25. 23. Text and Margine; so it sometimes maketh a flood to swell bigger, Psal. 107. 25. Jonah 1. 4. and sometimes (and that most usually) it dryeth up small waters, and lesseneth or abateth the depth of great ones, though it ruffle them up into boisterous waves: but in the slacking and asswaging of this great flood, there was (besides the naturall operation of the wind) a supernaturall and miraculous power to make this high Tide to fall to an ebbe; as in the drying up of the sea by the East-wind, Exod. 14. vers. 21.

V. 2 fountaines of the deepe] To make the flood there was as it were a secret conspiracie and concurrence of waters under ground with the Rivers and Seas above; betwixt these there is such commerce and communion that from the Sea the Rivers runne, and to it they make their returne againe, Eccles. 1. 7. yet whether the Sea made any augmentation of the waters on the earth, it is uncertaine; and though some affirme it, others deny it upon this reason, for that the Sea was to swell higher as well as the waters on the Land; but now with the passage of this wind, and Gods powerfull cooperation with it, that passage of secret confluence of and entercourse betwixt the waters, was stopped to make the flood to asswage, which before was opened to make it swell. See Annot. on Chap. 7. vers. 11.

restrained] The raine was of Gods sending, Chap. 6. vers. 17. Chap. 7. vers. 4. and the restraint of it was of his making; second causes are so stinted and confined in their operations, that they cause not contraries, unlesse by accident; as the fire burnes the hotter when the aire about it is the colder; and the middle Region of the Aire is so much the colder, as that on both sides it is the hotter; but the first cause equally produceth the most repugnant effects; as in the generall good and evill, Job 2. 10. good without exception, evill with distinction; for the evill of sinne is from man or Satan, the evill of paine or punishment from God; of this evill the words of Job are to be understood, and of Amos, Chap. 3. 6. and in particular in the creatures that bring forth he causeth fruitfulnesse, Gen. 1. 28. Mal. 3. 10, 11. and barrennesse, Deut. 28. 38, 39, 40. Joel 1. 10, 11, 12. in living creatures, health and sickenesse, Exod. 9. 9, 10, 11. life and death, 1 Sam. 2. 6. to men he dispenseth as he pleaseth riches and povertie; advancement and debasement, 1 Sam. 2. 7. peace and warre, Isa. 45. 7. in the aire he maketh light and darknesse, Gen. 1. 2, 3. Isa. 45. 7. in the water, calme and tempest by his word, Matth. 8. 26. Jon. 1. 4. and he hath them all so subject unto him, that, as the Centurion said of his souldiers, Matt. 8. 9. they goe at his command, and come at his call; if then we desire any good thing let us addresse our devotions to him from whom is every good and perfect gift, Jam. 1. 17.

V. 3. returned continually] Heb. going and returning. That is, with all speed, running and recoyling to their proper places and channels from whence they were gathered to make up the flood; which sheweth their readinesse to obey the command of the Creator; an obedience observable throughout the whole creation from the winged Seraphims, Isa. 6. 2. the flying Angel, Revel. 8. 13. to the crawling vermine, Exod. 8. 17, 18. Act. 12. 23. Psal. 148. 10. Onely men betwixt both, and contrary unto both, are disobedient and rebellious to their Maker; who should follow the example of the one sort, as expecting hereafter to be their partners in glory, and goe beyond the other, as much as they are behind him, or below him in faculties and favours from God, both to enable them for, and encourage them in his service.

after the end of the hundred and fifty dayes] That is, from the beginning of the flood (so long the waters prevailed, Chap. 7. vers. 24.) and after that time they began to be abated.

V. 4. seventh moneth] Not from the beginning of the flood, but from the beginning of the yeare, 1656. wherein the flood was sent upon the world; and this not according to the Ecclesiasticall account which was not in use before Moses time, (for so the seventh month was Tisri, September) but according to the civill account which began at September, and from thence the seventh moneth was Nisan (as the Chald. call it) Esth. 3. 7. Abib, (as the Hebr.) Exod. 13. 4. that moneth answering to part of March, and part of Aprill. 1656.

mountaines of Ararat] Upon one of those Mountaines called Ararat, the highest sort of hils, over which the flood prevailed, Gen. Chap. 7. vers. 19. There is a kingdome called Ararat, Jer. 51. 27. (whither the sonnes of Senacharib fled when they had slaine their father, 2 King. 19. 37.) Isa. 37. 38. where the word in the Hebrew Text is Ararat, but in the English Translation Armenia in both places: and by Armenia is meant Armenia the greater, situate neere unto the Caspian Sea: some take it to be the same with Aram, and that Hebrew word the Vulgar Latine renders Mesopotamia which borders upon Armenia. These Mountaines of Ararat are called by Curtius, and by Berosus the Chaldean, Cordian mountaines, Epiphan. hæres. 66. which Ptolomy placeth in that part of Armenia the greater that looketh toward Assyria. Nicholaus Damascenus cited by Josep. Antiq. lib. 1. cap. 4. cals the Mountaine Baris; but howsoever there be difference in the name, the most agree of the place that these hils are an hilly tract of ground in the Countrey of Armenia the greater.

V. 5. decreased continually untill the tenth moneth] The Arke rested on the mountaine of Ararat, while the waters covered it; for at the first, the Mount was felt, but not seene; yet the waters then were so much abated, and did day by day so abate, that, whereas before they stood above the Mountains, Psal. 104. vers. 6. yea fifteene cubits above all high hils, Chap. 7. vers. 19, 20. within seventy three dayes space (from the first repose the Arke had upon Ararat) not onely that, but the tops of other lower hils were seene, the waters partly being sunke downe and swallowed up by the hollow places of the earth, and partly drawne up and rarified into aire: this God could have done in a moment, but he workes by degrees, that we may not too suddenly passe over the acts of his power, justice, or goodnesse; but may exercise our faith in a deliberate waiting on his will, without precipitation, or too much hast, Isa. 28. 16. There be some who precisely set downe the graduall abatement of the waters; and they say, that while they were above the mountaines, they abated but one cubit in foure dayes, but that afterwards they asswaged more swiftly: if it were certaine how deepe the Arke descended into the waters, whether (according to the phrase of ship-men) it drew water eleven, (as some say) or thirteene cubits, (as others) we might better resolve the doubt at the first dayes decrease; for the seventeenth day of the seventh moneth was the first day of the waters abatement; for from the beginning of the flood, till this seventeenth day, are but one hundred fiftie one dayes; and of them for one hundred fifty dayes the waters prevailed, Chap. 7. vers. 24. whence it will follow that the Arke drew water thirteene cubits, that the waters abated two cubits in one day; for that seventeenth day it touched and rested on Mount Ararat, and when at the highest it was above it but fifteene cubits; but if it drew water but eleven cubits, it fell foure cubits the first day: these conjectures are both doubtfull, neither dangerous.

V. 6. at the end of fourtie dayes] Making the account from the first appearance of the dry land upon the mountaine tops, which was on the first day of the tenth moneth; the end of these fourty dayes was the eleventh day of the eleventh moneth called Sebat, the same which we call January.

V. 7. to and fro] Heb. going forth and returning. Not into the Arke, but fluttering about the Arke, and resting on the top of the Arke; for the Raven accustomed to live at large was weary of the straitnesse of her cage, and finding many bodies dead, but not devoured by the fishes; she was ravenous after such prey, and would no more be confined to the Arke, neither for diet nor lodging.

untill] This doth not signifie that she returned when the waters were dried up, but that she returned not before they were dried up; so the sense is negative to the terme particularly mentioned; not positive for the time afterwards; as 2 Sam.6. last. Psal. 110. vrse.1. Matth.1.25.

V. 8. dove] The Dove was sent out the seventh day after the Raven, as vers. 10. sheweth; Noah was very desirous, and hopefull also to receive some good newes by such messengers, though they were mute; and he hoped the failing of the Raven would be recompenced by the faithfulnesse of the Dove, who by the manner of her flight lower and longer then that of the Raven, would make a better discovery of the state of the the earth; and being more wonted to humane habitation, and societie (but especially out of love to her mate left behinde) would returne againe, and bring with her some token of good tidings, if there were any.

to see] See Note second, on vers.5.

V. 9. found no rest] For though the mountaine tops were bare, it may be they were muddy, or farre off, and not within the compasse of the course she tooke; besides Doves (as was noted before, Annot. on vers.8.) flie low, and therefore may be called the Doves of the valleys, Ezek.7.16. as the Ravens are called the Ravens of the valley, Prov.30.17. because they feed on the carkasses which are most frequently found on the lower grounds; for in such especially are battels pitched, and the greatest slaughters made.

pulled her to him] Heb. caused her to come by opening a window: And it may be, shewing her mate, and so inviting her to the place where she had beene before, and where she might be with more comfort, untill the world were better; and when she came within the reach, he took her in his hand, to trie whether her wings or legs were besmeered with dirt or mud, which might signifie the asswaging of the flood.

V. 10. other seven dayes] That is, foureteen dayes after the sending forth of the Raven; for he waited so many dayes in expectation of her returne; and when seven of them were expired, and the Raven not returned; he sent forth the Dove the first time, and after she came back, he staid other seven dayes, and sent her fourth againe.

V. 11, in the evening] Having solaced her selfe in flying abroad, and resting upon trees, the tops whereof did now appeare, she returned to the place of her rest and repast; for there was better diet and lodging for her, then yet she could find any where abroad.

olive leafe plackt off] Not a loose leafe floating on the water, but a little tender sprigge, such as a Dove with her bill might break off, which now was the easier to be done, because it was softened and weakened by being long in the water; and the Olive branch was the more likely to remaine, because it is greene all the yeare, Plin. Nat. Hist. lib.16. cap.20. yet it was an especiall providence also in preserving it together with the seminall vertue of other Plants, and Hearbs, for the repleni shing of the world with these kinds of creatures, whereof we doe not read there was any seed reserved in the Arke.

V. 12. yet other seven dayes] Some make a mysticall observation of the number of seven with reference to the Sabbath, and suppose that Noah on that day performed his most solemne devotion to God with prayers for good newes to be brought him concerning the ceasing of the flood; and by this third sending, and his intermission betweene, we may observe not onely his great desire of removall of the curse from the earth, but his patient waiting on Gods time for obtainment of the thing desired. See James 5.7.

returned not] Which might be by going so farre as to lose her way back againe; but it was rather by finding (that which before she did not, vers.9.) a resting-place for the sole of her foot, and food for her sustenance; which together with a more free aire and libertie then before she could have, made her neglect both her mate and her Master yet prisoners in the Arke.

V. 13. first moneth] See Annot. on Chap.7. vers.11.

first moneth] Heb. in the first, the first of the moneth. Where after the former first the word moneth is understood, after the latter the word day; the moneth and day are expresly mentioned before, vers.4. and after, vers.14. yet sometimes the substantive of time is omitted, and vertually comprehended under the adjective of number and order, as Matth.26.17. in the Greek, the first of the feast, the word day is left out; but Mark. 14.12. it is supplied, and the speech made full thus, the first day of the feast. This was the first moneth according to the sacred account, to wit, the moneth Nisan answering to March; see the Annotation on Chapter. 7. vers. 11. and the first day of that moneth.

the face of the ground] The ground is said to have a face as the waters, Chap. 1, 2. and the firmament, a face, vers. 20. of that Chapter, by which is meant the open and most visible part called the superficies, or surface, which is most obvious to the view, as the face of a man is more visible then his other parts, which are commonly covered, when the face is commonly bare.

was dry] That is, the ground which before was quite covered with waters (except the hilly part) was now generally bare, so that it appeared all earth; yet was it not so dry but that it was soft and muddy; and so not firme enough to afford a solid subsistence to hard and heavie bodies, as in the twenty seventh day of the next moneth it did, vers. 14. untill which Noah kept in the Arke, notwithstanding the dryenesse of the earth in the sense fore-mentioned.

removed the covering] That is, took up a board or two in the top or roofe of the Arke, to look round about him; for through the window he could not see so farre every way.

V. 14. in the second moneth] The moneth Jiar, that is, the moneth which answereth to part of Aprill, and part of May.

seven and twentieth day]. Hence we may make the compleat account of the continuance of the flood; which, if the moneths and dayes were reckoned according to the course of the Sunne, make up a whole Solar yeare and tenne dayes: whereof the raine continued fourty dayes; the flood in its full height one hundred and fifty dayes; in its diminution or decrease one hundred twenty nine dayes; in the end whereof the earth was bare all over, but muddy, so that Noah continued after that fifty six dayes; which cast up into a totall summe, make up the number of three hundred seventy five dayes; that is, ten dayes above, the Solar yeare consisting of three hundred sixtie five dayes. For this account compare, Gen.7. vers.11.13. with the first and fourth of that Chapter, and the first of this. But it is to be noted, that according to an account usuall among the Hebrews, six of the moneths of the yeare had thirty dayes, and the other six had twenty nine dayes apiece, which put into one summe make three hundred fifty foure dayes, to which adding the eleven dayes (viz. from the seventeenth till the twenty seventh of the second moneth inclusively) the whole will be a Solar yeare, after our ordinary reckoning, to wit, three hundred sixty five dayes.

Flood.

V. 15. God spake unto Noah] Whether by a dreame, or vision, or secret motion of his spirit, or by assumption of an humane shape, it is not said here, nor Chap.6.13. nor Cha.7.1. but which way soever it it was, it was evident to Noah not onely what it was he was to doe, but who it was that made it knowne unto him; so that he did not mistake the Authour of the revelation, as young Samuel did, 1 Sam.3.5,6,7,8.

V. 16. Goe forth of the Arke] At Gods command he came into the Arke, Gen. Chap.7 vers.1. and by his command he is to goe forth againe; in time of danger he shut him up like a prisoner, but it was to preserve him; Gods restraints are mercies not in this case alone; see Isa. 26. 20. and now the danger is past, and libertie safe, he is set free to goe abroad; he continued his confinement untill the Lord inlarged him: It is good to have his warrant for our movings to and fro; our coming in, and going out, and walking in such wayes as we may comfortably expect to have Angels to attend our steps, Psal.91. vers.11. And if we take the Arke for a type or figure of the Church, (as Divines use to doe, and may well agree with ~~Saint~~ Peters comparison, 1 Pet.3.20.21.) it may point us to a duty of importance in our Christian practise, viz. that none must be admitted into the Church, or excommunicated out of it, but for causes, and in a manner warrantable by the Word of God.

V. 17. breed abundantly in the earth] In the Arke was the stock and store both of man-kind, and of other creatures, for repleni shing the whole earth; not that all places should breed all kind of creatures, for in America there are yet (as some write) no Lions, Beares, nor Tygers; and though some parts of the earth be separated from others by great waters, and by the maine Sea; such creatures as could not by swimming passe from one to another, might by Navigation be transported; for from Noahs Arke the use of Ships might be occasioned; and that they were ancient, may be collected from Gen. 49.13. Deut.28 68:

V. 19 after their kinds] That is, they went out, not confusedly, but in order, (as they came in) and sorted themselves together according to their kinds; that is, men and their wives together, vers. 16. the male and his female, the cleane beasts, and birds by themselves; the uncleane by themselves, as they were sorted, Gen. 7. vers. 2, 3. The Hebrew (rendred after their kinds) is, after their families: whereof see the last Note on Chap.7. vers.2..

V. 20. builded an Altar] We finde no mention of an Altar untill now, yet it is not unlike but that the sacrifices of Cain and Abel, Gen 4. were offered on an Altar. This is the first thing Noah did after his deliverance from danger, and inlargement from his long restraint; religious gratitude must be performed upon the first opportunitie that may be taken; God would have the thankfull memoriall of the worlds creation in six dayes solemnly observed the next day after, Gen. 2. 2. by whose exemplary direction the faithfull have been very forward to make remem-remembrances of of his mercies, and to testifie their thankfulnesse, by their offering in tribute to him some part of his own; as to the Lord of all; This was Abrahams practise, Gen. 12.7,8. & Chap.13.18. & Chap. 22. and Isaacs, Gen. c. 26. v.25. and Jacobs, Chap.35.7. of Moses, Exod.17.15. and of others; and in such services they professed their faith in Christ, and expressed it by works in their gratefull oblations to God.

burnt-offerings] Those offerings were usually called burnt offerings, which were wholly burnt, no part reserved for food to any; and those being of every kinde of cleane creature, it sheweth Noahs religious and liberall heart to God, who of so small store was willing to offer unto him so great a sacrifice.

V. 21. smelled] This is a figurative speech, whereby that is applyed unto God, which in proprietie of phrase, is not found in him, but in man, and the other creatures; for this smelling is the exercise of a sense which requires a materiall organ or instrument, which cannot be in God who is a pure spirit; yet for mans instruction the expressions of God are thus brought down to his capacitie. See Annot. on Chap.6. vers.6.

sweet savour] So Exod. 29. 18. The savour of broyled or burned flesh and fat is not very sweet in it selfe; and so this seemeth to be as the Commination of the Prophet, Esa.3. 24. a stink for a perfume; but the ordinances of God are not to be censured by carnall sense, for so circumcision would be rather a contemptible, then an honourable seale of mans Covenant with God; nor would the Sacraments of the New Testament be much set by, if we should value them by what our senses discerne of them; for, for the one, what is more common or more weake then water? for the other, how little worth is a bit of bread, or a sip of wine; if our sight or tast be Judges of them; but yet as the ordinances of God, and the representations of the grace and vertue of Christ, and our reconciliation with God thereby; they are sweet and savoury, not only to men, but to God himselfe; for in him he is well pleased, Matth. 3.17. Isa. 42. 1. and in him, and for his sake is the sacrifice of a very sweet savour, Ephes. 5. 2. though in it selfe it were never so unsavoury to humane sense: in Hebrew, it is a savour of rest, for that which affecteth with much delight, stayeth and setleth the minde and heart upon it; and if there were any offensive agitations before, it quiets them and makes them to rest and cease.

said in his heart] This is also spoken figuratively, as before: see Annot. on the word smelled. The meaning is, that God had decreed and resolved with himselfe, that he will not again curse the ground, &c. and this he said heartily and sincerely; for all the sayings of God are heartie, none faigned or hypocriticall; for such are abominable to God in men, and so impossible to be in God towards men, 1 Sam.15.29. Or, the words may be rendred God said to his heart, that is, God spake this comfort to the heart of Noah by his spirit, to incourage him in his godly course.

curse the ground no more] He doth not here cancell the generall curse inflicted for the sinne of man, Gen. 3. 17. nor give securitie against burning of the world, whereof ~~Saint~~ Peter Prophecieth, 2 Pet.3.10,11. nor promise that particular places shall not be drowned, but that there shall be no such generall flood as this was, any more.

for the imagination] The like reason is rendered why God will bring a flood upon the earth, Gen.6. vers. 5,6. here why he will not: if we read the words, though the imagination (as the Originall will beare) &c. there is no appearance of repugnancie that is not easily answered; and if we read for the imagination, there is so much difference betwixt the reason, as it is rendred there, and here, as excludeth contradiction; for there he is moved to wrath by a generall aggravation of sinne in all persons, parts, and faculties, vers. 5. 12. and by some hainous sinnes of particular kinds, as Apostasie in the families of the godly, lustfull affecting of marriages with the wicked, Chap. 6. vers.2. and horrible crueltie wherewith the earth was filled, vers. 11. and all this with a Giantlike and sturdy contempt of God, which was a just ground for a generall Judgement, there being so many who did evill with both hands earnestly, Micah.7. 3. But here God moveth himselfe to mercy by consideration of mans native corruption even from his childhood, as Psal. 103. v. 13. Like as a father pitieth his children, so the Lord pitieth them that feare him; and in his next words, he knoweth our frame and remembreth that we are but dust, vers. 14. So he knoweth that even the best are shapen in iniquitie and conceived in sinne, Psal. 51. 5. And hence he will take occasion to shew mercy to mankinde; for if he should send generall Judgements whensoever there is a generalitie of sinne, he should doe nothing but marre what he hath made; and yet as the wicked shall deserve; and his wisedome thinke meet, he will have wayes enough to be meet with them: Besides, now his justice being glorified in the destruction of the old world, his mercy in regard of mans nature and unavoydable corruption, was seasonably promised, especially being now reconciled to the new world by the sacrifice of Noah, which moves him to bring in that as a motive of mercy, which in Justice he might aggravate to severitie: see the like pleading, Isa.48.8,9.

while the earth remaineth] Heb. all the dayes of the earth. It is a question whether the substance of the earth shall not remaine when the use of seed-time and harvest is ceased, which will be at the end of the world, when ~~Saint~~ Peters fiery Prophecie is come to passe, 2 Pet. 3. 10. yet God makes it certaine by his Decree, that while he is pleased to continue man-kind and earth together, there shall be such difference of seasons as are after mentioned.

seed-time and harvest] God maketh this Decree for the generall, but not so but that he may curse some places in particular; so that there be neither seed-time nor harvest in their seasons as in 1 King. 17. 1.

day, and night] The meaning is not that there was not day and night during the flood; for it appeareth there was, by Noahs numbring of the dayes, vers. 10. but that both in the preparation of the flood, by darke black clouds, as 1 King.18. 45. Joel 2.2. Zeph.1.15. and stormy weather, Act. 27. 20. and by continuall raine, the day was darkned, and Noah shut up, and suspended from the workes both appertaining to the unreasonable creatures, and humane to commerce was as it were benighted; for when night cometh no man can work, Joh.9.4. such and so long darknesse, and cessation from their labours of the day by such a restraint by black clouds, long raine, and a deepe and generall flood, for so long a time, shall be no more.

CHAP. IX.

Vers. 1. BE fruitfull and multiply] (As Chap. 1. vers. 28. & Chap. 8. vers. 17. & vers. 7. of this Chap.) Though we read not that Noah had any children after the flood, the blessing of fruitfulnesse in his issue, was a blessing to him, Psal. 128.6. for grand-children are children in whom the grand-father lives, and whom he loves as well as those that are his by immediate descent, Gen.31.28. & Chap.48. vers.15,16.

replenish the earth] These words as the former, are in forme a command, in effect a blessing; wherein Gods word and his worke goe together, as Gen. 1.v. 3. 7. 11. and though it be spoken expresly of man-kind alone, yet herein is implied also Gods blessing upon other creatures; for not onely mankind, but beasts and birds were to increase, and by their fruitfulnesse to replenish the earth and the aire. It is much doubted how all kind of creatures could be brought from the place where Noah landed his carriage in the Arke, all over the earth, to overspread it, (as vers.19.) especially into the remote parts, as America? Answ. 1. It is not necessary that all kind of creatures should breed in all parts of the earth, as in the Ilands, Cuba, Margarita & Dominica there be no Lions, Beares, nor Tygers, as many Countreys have no breed of Elephants or Camels. Secondly, they might goe very farre by land, and from one Land to another by some narrow passage of water, which they might swimme over; or they might be carried in Ships from one Countrey to another, and by that time they were multiplied so as to be too many for that Continent on which they were first landed from Noahs Arke, the art of making Ships and of Navigation might be invented; for though we find no mention of Ships untill the benediction of dying Jacob, Gen. 49. 13. which was sixe hundred years after this generall flood; yet there might be use of them long before: for it is not necessary nor usuall in the Scripture, that all things be mentioned that are done; much lesse that their originall should be precisely noted; for in sixe short Chapters (the first sixe of the Book of Genesis) we have the compendium of the story of the world from the Creation to the Floud, containing the terme of one thousand sixe hundred fifty sixe yeares, wherein it must needs be that many more matters are omitted then are mentioned.

V. 2. the feare of you] (Gen.35.5.) The dominion of man since sinne, is not like that of Adam over the creatures at the first, (for their obedience to him was in proportion such as his to his God, free and unforced, and rather out of love, then out of feare) but by prevailing of force and art, as now it is; yet neither can he subdue the nature of the wilder sort, for as it is in the thirty ninth of Job, Will the Unicorne be willing to serve thee, or abide by thy crib? vers.9. Canst thou bind the Unicorne with his band in the furrow? or will he harrow the valleys for thee? vers. 10. which words though they be an interrogation in forme, are in effect a vehement negation: But Noah and his sonnes (with whom the unreasonable creatures were In-mates in the Arke, and by whom they were governed and succoured as a part of their family) might have more power over them, and more obedience from them, then his posteritie in after-times; for it is like they were more at command whilest they were afraid of the flood, and confined in the Arke, then afterward; and yet man (especially the elect, as in Christ) hath a generall dominion over the unreasonable creatures, compare Psal.8.6. with 1 Cor.15.27. even to the taming or over-awing of the wildest of what sort soever, James 3.7. as of Lions, Leopards, Tygers, and Elephants, as we may see in Plin. Nat. Hist. lib.8.

lib.8. cap.16,17,18. whereof the Elephant is the greatest, Ibid. lib.8. cap.1. which have beene brought so farre under the yoke, as to be yoked together to draw a Chariot; Ibid. cap. 2. and in some places to draw the Plough, Ibid. cap. 1.2. and to the taking of the subtilleſt; and for those that are not tamed nor taken, the dread of man is upon them, so that they shun his presence as much as they can, Psal.104. vers.20.21,22,23. And this is true as well of the birds of the aire (as experience proveth) whereof see Plin. lib. 9. cap.8.) as of the beasts of the earth; yea and of the fishes of the waters; for in the fish-pooles of Cæsar, some fishes were so tamed that they would come at the calling of their name, Plin. Nat. Hist. lib. 10. cap. 70. and the greatest of them, the Whales, God hath subjected to the power and prudence of man in great measure, though sometimes for his rebellion against his God they be in rebellion against him to his ruine; as God threatneth, Levit.26.22. and hath sometimes executed, as 1 King. 13. 24. 2 King. 2. 24. and he can take as great revenge by the least and weakest creatures, as by frogs, and flies, and lice, Exod. 8.5.17.24. and by wormes, Act.12.23.

V. 3. Every moving thing] Or, creeping thing. That which creepeth moveth, but not contrariwise all that moveth creepeth; for man, and beasts, and birds do move, but do not creep; therefore the originall word is well rendred moveth, which is a word of a larger extent then the word creepeth, and so more meet to expresse the beneficence of God in this concession of sustenance to man.

that liveth] That is, that dieth not of it selfe, Levit. 22. 8. but being alive is killed by your hand, and not found dead already, as that which is torne by beasts in the field, which is to be cast to dogs, Exod.22.31. for many of the ceremoniall laws given to Moses from God, and by him to the Jews, were in use long before: See the Annot. on Gen.7.2. Object. But many living things are not mans meate, as Lions, Beares, Tygers; and many birds, as Hawkes, or Kites; and many fishes, as the Whale, and others; but for creeping things many of them are not onely loathsome to man, but very unwholsome; and some of them no better then plaine poyson; as Toads, Scorpions, Spiders: for answer hereto see the next Note.

shall be meat] As by bread in the Lords Prayer is meant not onely bread it selfe, but all necessary food and Physicke which is of use to preserve or recover the health of man, and to prolong his life; so here many of the creatures by way of ordinary diet, and some of them by a physicall vertue shall serve to sustaine the life of man, even Vipers, and Scorpions, and Lice, and the excrements both of men and beasts have their use in physicke for mans good, whereof see abundant instance in the Preface to the Sanctuary of a troubled soule: Here is the first mention of mans feeding upon the living creatures, and the first grant of that libertie, as divers learned Commentators conceive; which yet might be in use before, as corne, and bread, and drinke, though they be not spoken of before; and as the Raine-bow was from the beginning, though not mentioned untill after the floud. And here was especiall cause to mention the allowance of eating the living creatures, both because herbs and fruits were spoiled with the flood; and for that God would by this grant the more oblige them to forbearance of bloud, vers.4. as he did the more binde Adam to abstinence, from the fruit of one tree, by his liberall beneficence and allowance to eat freely of all other fruits that grew in the Garden of Eden: and this not by command, for though it be given in a terme of command, Gen.2.16. is in effect but a concession or permission, as Levit.11.3. See also and compare Matth.19.7. with Mark. 10.4. where what is called a commandement in the former Evangelist, is said to be a suffering or tolerating in the other; and of this permission the godly it is like, made use as well as the wicked; for it is not probable that Abel being a keeper of sheepe kept them onely for the wooll, or milke; and left their flesh being as pleasant and as wholesome then as since, to be devoured of wild beasts, or to rot either above or under ground; and it is very probable that generally before the flood there was rather an excesse in the use of lawfull meats, because our Saviour, Matth.24.38. noteth the old world for their eating and drinking, that is, for being too much addicted to delicacie, varietie, and plenty of provision for the flesh, at the time when the overflowing scourge came upon them; yet a moderate use was then allowed and taken into practise, which might be put into an expresse permission or concession now, not onely with respect to the refreshing of man; but withall for a religious consideration referring to the glory of God, viz. for restraint of Idolatry, or worshipping, or honouring the creature more then the Creator, against which the killing and eating of them for ordinary diet, was a practicall preservative; and it was not without need in respect of mans pronneesse to Idolatry; whereof see Psal.106.19,20. Rom.1.23. nor without fruit; for though some did so abuse themselves and other creatures also as to make gods of such things as they did eate, yet to those who made use of their reason, it was a great conviction of the vanitie of such Idols that they might be so devoured, and turned as well to excrement as to nourishment; and therefore did Moses enjoyme the drinking of the water wherein the powder of the golden Calfe was put, as a potion for the peoples cure of that brutish Idolatry, Exod.32.20.

as the greene herbe] That is, as freely as the greene herbe, Chap. 1. vers.29.

V. 4. But flesh with the life] That is, living flesh with the bloud in the veines; or, the bloud let out of the veines, wherewith the life and soule of the creature is powred out; for the soule of a beast, or fish, or fowle hath no existence without the body (as the soule of man hath) being rather a vitall facultie then a substance; and the life is called the bloud, and the bloud the life; because the spirits which are the liveliest parts of the creature are produced of the purest part of the bloud, and with it diffused throughout the whole body, by the operation and activitie whereof the members are lively, & active; and without which there is no bodily life in man or beast, though the bloud continue in the body, as in creatures strangled. By this in Gods intention is, first, morally forbidden all crueltie, not onely to man, but to other creatures. 1. Secondly, the eating of flesh and bloud together, or either of them raw, whereby men might become (by degrees) to feed upon mans flesh, as those who for such a barbarous manner are called Anthropophagi, that is, men-eaters, Plin. Nat. Hist. lib. 6. cap.30. 2. Thirdly, afterwards the eating of all manner of bloud was expresly forbidden, Levit.7.2. & Chap.17. vers.10. and that not onely because the bloud is the life of the flesh; as here, and Levit. 17. 14. or the life of the flesh is in the bloud, as the reason is expressed, Levit 17.11. but there is a reason mysticall against the eating of bloud in the same verse, and that is, because in sacrifices, the bloud was to be let out and sprinkled, to signifie that the life of man by sinne is forfeited to God, and to be offered to him, as the Authour from whom at first it was derived, and to whom at last it is to be presented, and for that mans life was to be redeemed by the bloud of Christ; To these two some adde a third, viz. a Physicall cause of forbearance of bloud, which may serve for all times, and it is because the bloud of beasts is somewhat grosse, and yeeldeth not very wholesome nourishment to the body of man, and therefore the beasts which were to serve for food were not to be strangled, but to be killed; that the bloud might be let out and parted from the flesh. 3. And from this prohibition of bloud in this Chapter, before the ceremoniall law was ordained, and the decree of the Apostles for forbearance of things strangled and of bloud, Act.15.20. after the obligation of it was expired, some inferre a perpetuitie of prohibition of all such meats, especially since in the Apostles decree pollution of Idols, so vers.20. or, meats offered to Idols, vers.29. and fornication are forbidden, and all in one tenour, as necessary things to be forborn, vers.28. so that to this day they hold it unlawfull to eate any thing made of bloud, though mingled with other materials, and broyled and dressed as other meats are: and therefore the Christian Greeks find fault with the Latines for using their Christian libertie herein, as Theod. Balsamon on the 63. Can. of those suppositious Canons which are intituled to the Apostles.

But first for answer to the Position, it may be alledged that all meats which are wholesome (though some be more wholesome and nutritive then others, and to some stomachs and constitutions grosser meats may be more sutable then fine) are by Evangelicall liberty lawfull to be eaten; for that see the fifteenth of Matth. vers.11. Act.10. from v. 10. to the 16. 1 Cor. 8.1.8. & Chap.10.25. Tit.1.15.

Secondly, this prohibition of the Apostle touching the eating of meats strangled, and bloud, was occasionall, and in case of scandall, that the converted Gentiles should not be offended with the converted Jews for their forbearance of such meats, nor offend them by their use.

Thirdly, for the forbidding of bloud, besides the present reason concerning the state of the Church, and the antiquitie of the abstinencie prescribed soone after the floud, there might be a reason of it from the future, viz. a slander of the Christians for bloudy and unhumane banquets of humane flesh, such as are reported of the Tyrant Phalaris, Arist. Eth. lib.7. cap.6. and are sometimes threatned and inflicted by God as a curse; whereof see Deut.28.56,57. 2 King.6.28,29. Lam. 2. 20. & Chap.4.10. which the holy Ghost fore-saw would be charged upon them, and meant to meet with it by this decree, and the observation of it for a time, out of which the Primitive Christians made their Apologie, convincing their accusers of falsehood, and acquitting themselves from all just suspition of such a crime by their forbearance of all use of bloud in what kind soever, as we find their defence set downe in the writings of Minutius Fœlix Euseb. Eccles. Hist. lib.5. cap.1. Tert. Apologet. cap. 9.

Fourthly, for the sorting of this prohibition of bloud and things strangled, with forbearance of meates sacrificed to Idols and fornication, it followeth not that they should be alike lawfull full or unlawfull; for the same punishment, much more the same prohibition, may be set upon things of a very different nature; as death is the penaltie of murder, Gen.9. vers.6. and of having leavened bread, Exod.12. vers.15.19. yet the one is forbidden by a morall, the other by a ceremoniall precept; yet for the sinne of fornication, divers of the Gentiles held it but for a thing indifferent.

Fifthly, for calling of them necessary things, they were so, and alwaies will be, so far as the obligation is from a morall precept, as the caution against Idolatry and Fornication; and for those things which are in their owne nature indifferent, as the abstinence from things strangled and from bloud, the forbearance of them was necessary for a time; in case of scandall to any beleeving Christian, 1 Cor.8.13.

V. 5. I will require] That is, the Magistrate my deputie shall require bloud for bloud; or if he doe not know or punish homicide or manslaughter, some hand of violence like that of the manslayer shall repay him like for like; or mine eye shall discover it, and mine owne immediate hand avenge it: See Exod.21.12. Levit.24.17. Numb.35. from vers. 16. to the 19. Deut.19.21. Ezek.35.6. Matth.26.52. Revel.13.10. See also Joseph. Antiq. lib. 1. cap. 4. but especially Philip Lonicerus Theat. Hist. à pag.392. ad pag.513.

at the hand of every beast] A man commonly when he killeth another, useth his hand to that wicked worke; so that which other creatures use in stead of an hand, is figuratively called by that name; so the Spider is said to take hold with her hands, Pro. 30. 28. And the beast must be put to death to put a feare of murder upon man, as the Dog beaten before the Lion, to make him afraid: See Exod.21.28.

every mans brother] The former prohibition is a preparative to this, the moderation towards beasts that were to be killed by abstinence from their bloud prescribed by God, Levit.17.14. was to be restraint of cruelty towards man, whose life was more pretious, since he was made after the Image of God; see vers. 6. and this an universall Law inforced with an impartiall penaltie, death for death, bloud for bloud, whosoever he be that sheddeth it without just cause and lawfull warrant.

V. 6. by man] Murder or killing is to be punished with death, like for like, Exod. 21.12. Levit.24.17. Mat.26.57. Which is to be understood of witting and wilfull murder, Numb.35.31. for if one had killed another at unawares, there was a Citie of refuge for the slayer, to save him from the hand of the pursuer, vers.11. otherwise, he that sheddeth mans bloud, by man shall his bloud be shed. Some read the words, whosoever sheddeth the bloud of man in man; and the Originall Text dam haadam haadam, will allow it, which may be rendred, the bloud of man in man, and so the sense may be, Whoso letteth that bloud out of man which is and should remaine in man, his bloud shall be shed. But the first letter Beth in the latter word signifieth variously according to the sense of the place, either in, or with, or for, or by, and that instrumentally, as in this place both the construction of the words, and the Hebrew accent Zakeph-Katon doe import; so that we may read the word, as our last Translation doth, by man, that is, ordinarily by the Magistrate to whom is committed the sword of justice for that purpose especially, Rom. 13.4. and extraordinarily God in his justice useth the hand of one murderer to doe execution upon another, when humane justice (as either blind or lame, either wanting eyes to see it, or hands to punish it) doth passe it over with impunitie; or some way or other he shortens the life of the bloody man, so that he liveth not out halfe his dayes, Psal. 55.23. It is questioned by some whether murder or any other crime were punished otherwise then by excommunication, (or casting out of the society of men,) whether sacred or civil, before the floud; but especially whether death were inflicted on any offendor before Noah his returne to Land againe. The chiefe cause of the doubt is, the reprieve of the first murderer by God himselfe, though guilty of the greatest cruelties against man, and of the stoutest contumacie against God of any professing service to him (as he did by sacrifice) in the Scripture, on whom God set an especiall marke that man might not meddle with him, Chap.4.15. But his case of reservation was extraordinary, (as was his crime) too high and heinous to be rewarded with the sword of justice, somewhat worse then death, a wretched life (which for his greater punishment was prolonged) was a more meet recompence for such a transcendent malefactor; yet many times it might be otherwise. If it be said, we find neither any ordinance or example of the inflicting of capitall punishment on any offender before that of this Chapter: It may be answered, that many things might be in use before the flood, though not recorded in the fore-going Chapters; whereof see the second Annot. on vers. 1. of this Chapter: and though there were no such politicall power as was exercised after the floud, when Nimrod had raised himselfe to the height of Monarchy, whose ambition and tyranny hath beene followed ever since in many parts of the world, yet it seemes there was an œconomicall or domesticall power of life and death in particular families by the story of Judah and Thamar, Gen. 38. 24. The Anabaptists (who deny the legall and military use of the sword, yet sometimes use it against those who favour not their fancies; see Philip Lonicer. Theat. Hist. pag.107,108.) will have the Texts for punishing offenders to be taken not preceptively but prophetically, because they are phrased in the future tense, and so they shall imply not a command, but a bare commination; whereas, if so, being generall, they would containe an untruth; for many bloudy malefactors often doe escape the sword they have deserved: besides, it is usuall in the Hebrew, to put the Future tense for the Imperative mood, as Exod.20.13. and elsewhere: and this and such like Texts doe not onely justifie the use of the Magistrates sword as lawfull, but require it as a dutie; and in such a case mercy to a bloudy man may become cruelty to many innocent persons; as where pardons for murders are easily granted, there murders are exceedingly multiplied; as in France in tenne yeares space no fewer then sixe thousand Gent: have beene slaughtered, and the bloud-guilty sheltered from suffering justice by the Kings indulgence, as apeareth by the Court Roll of the Kings pardons: against which mercifull crueltie (for there be cruell mercies, Prov. 12. 10.) the Chaplaines of Kings should often remember them of the story of Ahab and Bennadad, and the Prophets commination against Ahabs remissnesse, 1 King.20.42. and of the Law, Deut. 21. from vers. 1. to the ninth. 18 N. France.

for in the image] Therefore to commit murder or manslaughter, is not onely an injurie and crueltie to man, but an impietie against God; and though it be greater sinne to kill a good man, as Cain did, Gen.4.8. then a bad man, as the servants of Absolom by his command did, when they killed incestuous Amnon, 2 Sam.13,29. yet since a bad man hath some remainders of the Image of God in him, God is dishonoured if he be killed any other way then is warrantable by his authoritie. And by adding this reason, for in the Image of God, he meant to put a greater awe upon the minds of men, against the sinne of murder; as if he had said, If common humanitie will not worke upon you, to with-hold your hands from shedding of bloud; let my Majestie, the reverence of mine Image in man, make you afraid to lay violent hands on any; for the contempt of mine Image, I shall take as a contempt to my selfe, and shall accordingly punish it. By this argument did Macedonius dissuade the Emperour Theodosius from a slaughter of the Antiochians, which he intended against them, pulling downe an image of the Empresse Placillaes, and dragging it contumeliously about the streets: Theodor. lib. 5. Hist. Eccles. cap. 9. for the living Image of God was of much more estimation, then the lively image of the Empresse.

V. 7. be fruitfull] See Chap. 1. vers. 28. Chap.8. 17. v. 1. of this Chapter.

V. 9. my Covenant] Mine, that is Gods, not mans; for man neither brought that flood, nor can keep off such another, if he please to send it. By this Covenant as by an Oath God giveth assurance unto man, that the world shall no more be destroyed by an universall deluge as of late it was, Isa.54.9.

your seed after you] This Covenant is not like that Chap. 6. 18. for that was but for a few: this is generall both for the present age and for posteritie; but this is but for a temporall blessing: the spirituall Covenant likewise, if the conditions be kept, is hereditary, made to beleevers and to their children, Acts 2. 39.

V. 10. every living creature, of the fowle] Though they were not capable of the Covenant for their part, yet God for his part maketh the promise for their preservation for mans sake, for whom they were made at the first, and afterwards upon his provocation of God, for his sake destroyed: and this Covenant is the more comfortable, because it is generall, for the kinds and individuals or particular creatures; and perpetuall for time, comprehending both the present stock, and future increase throughout all generations. Some alledge this place against the Anabaptists, and thus it may serve to refute their fancy, viz. that the Covenant of God may be made with, and the Seale of the Covenant applyed to creatures that have not the use of reason, which they deny in denying the Administration of Baptisme to Infants.

V. 13. my bow] The rain-bow was now first made, as some affirme; others (and that more commonly and more probably) conceive, that from the beginning it was in its causes, which are clouds and the shining of the Sunne; and those causes did sometimes produce that effect before this time, and so it is like the rain-bow was often seene before the flood; but now God made choice of it for a signe of his covenant with the world, that there should be no more an universall flood as before there was: this was no naturall but an instituted signe, and therefore it may seale the assurance of the promise, though there were no correspondency betwixt it and the thing signified; and yet it was the fitter to be a signe of securitie from a future flood; First, because of the place, which is in the clouds of heaven, whence came the raine that drowned the world before. Secondly, condly, becauſe the bow is bended upward towards God, not towards the creature below; as when it is taken in hand to ſhoot at a marke; nor is there in the bow any arrow which is ſaid to be made ready upon the ſtring when hurt is intended, Pſal.11.2. Thirdly, becauſe the Rain-bow appeareth commonly with rain, and ſo where men might begin to feare the Judgement, there they may take comfort againſt it in that it is a ſigne of his Covenant for ſafetie. Fourthly, becauſe the Rain-bow appeares not but when there is a clearneſſe and brightneſſe in ſome part of the skie, but at the generall flood it was all black with raine: ſee the Annot. on Chap.8. verſ.22. To which ſome adde a fift reaſon, which is, that in the Rain-bow conſiſting of divers colours (to the admiration of ſome of the wiſeſt Heathens) by the water colour is repreſented the overwhelming raine paſt and not to returne, and by the fiery colour is prefigured the deſtruction of the world by the element of fire, as it is foretold by ~~Saint~~ Peter, 2 Pet. 3. 10. And ſome by theſe colours make a myſticall intimation of the two Sacraments of the New Teſtament, with reference to that of, 1 Joh. 5. 6. And, laſtly, a ſixt reaſon, becauſe the Rain-bow where it toucheth upon any ſhrubs, leaveth a very ſweet and fragrant ſmell behind, Plin. Nat. Hiſt. lib. 12. cap.24. which anſwereth to that pleaſant acceptation of God obſerved before. See Annot. on Chap. 4. v. 21. Laſtly, though this Rain-bow here be a ſigne of a temporall covenant, in the generall extent of it, to all creatures; yet the godly may looke upon it with reference to Chriſt, in whom all promiſes of what ſort ſoever are yea and amen, and who is repreſented ſitting in his Throne compaſſed with a Rain-bow in ſight like unto an Emerauld, Revel. 4. verſ.3. ſee alſo Revel. 10. verſ.1. Piſcator, Ha. 54. 9.

V. 14. when I bring a cloud] Not whenſoever I bring a clould; for it may ſuffice that it is ſeene at ſometimes to make it remembred at all times.

V. 16. that I may ſee it and remember] God needeth not any tokens or marks of remembrance for performance of his promiſe, becauſe he cannot poſſibly forget any thing of how ſmall moment, or how long date ſoever it be; this therefore is ſpoken after the manner of men for their better apprehenſion of the firmeneſſe and ſtedfaſtneſſe of God in his Covenant; for this remembrance imports a reall and aſſured ratification of his promiſe; and hereby may men call to minde what he hath covenanted, and with undoubted confidence relye upon it; for his faithfulneſſe will make good what his favour hath ſaid. See Exod.28.12.29. & Annot. on Chap.8.verſ.21.

V. 17. This is the ſign of the Covenant] Gods often repeating of his Covenant is for further confirmation of faith, and for intimation of mans dulneſſe duly to remember and conſider of his juſtice and mercy to man, and of mans both diſobedience and dutie towards God.

V. 19. the whole earth overſpread] The habitable part of it was peopled by Noahs poſteritie, a very plentifull increaſe of a very poore-ſtocke; this manifold multiplication of mankinde from ſo few as eight perſons, is a manifeſt evidence of the vertue of the Divine benediction, Gen. 1. 28. & verſ.1. and 7. of this Chapter.

V. 20. began to be an husbandman] It is not unlike but he uſed husbandry before, as a ſonne of Adam, Gen. 3. 19. but all that was at an end, his husbandry was drowned in the flood; now in the new world he was as a new beginner, and ſo of thoſe vines which (preſerved by the Divine providence) he could meet with diſperſed here and there, (as the earth brought them forth) with diligence and induſtry he planted a vineyard, and preſſed the grapes to make drinke of them, which before (as ſome hold) were eaten only as they grew in cluſters.

V. 21. was drunken] Whether through ignorance of the ſtrength of the juyce of the grape, or through weakneſſe being accuſtomed to drinke water before the flood, or whether through intemperance of appetite, or weakneſſe of braine, or to cheere up his heart againſt the ſadneſſe whereto by the deſolate condition of the world he was diſpoſed; what ever the cauſe was, we are ſure of the effect, he was drunke, he who in the midſt of a moſt wicked world was a juſt and upright man, and walked with God, Chap. 6. 9. (and therefore eſcaped the flood) is laid along, drowned with wine, and ſhamefully uncovered; the report hereof is committed to Record not for contempt of Noah, but for Caution to his poſteritie, that by his example thoſe that ſtand may take heed leſt they fall, 1 Cor.10. 12. and for the comfort of thoſe that fall into groſſe ſinnes, that they may riſe againe by repentance and finde acceptance with God, (as Noah did) notwithſtanding their fall; and to teach us that the righteouſneſſe of Noah was not a righteouſneſſe of works, but of faith; and laſtly to note the impartialitie of Scripture ſtory which concealeth not the fouleſt faults of thoſe it praiſeth moſt, as we may obſerve in the ſtory of Abraham, Gen. 12.19. & 20.2. of Moſes, Exod. 4. 1. 10. 12. Numb.20.24. & Deut.32.51. of David, 1 Sam.11. 2 Sam.24.10. of Job, Chap. 3. 3, &c. of Jeremy, Chap.20.14. of Peter, Matth. 26. 70, 72, 74. and others, which may be warrant for a friendly freedome in reproofe of the faults of the beſt, and may diſpoſe the beſt patiently to heare the worſt that truly may be objected to them.

uncovered] The manner of theſe times and people haply was, as in after ages, when men as well as women wore long and looſe garments without breeches; and ſo by wind, or careleſſe compoſure of the body, the covering might light beſides the place it was to hide; thence might Michal take occaſion to deride David when he daunced before the Arke, more cordially and zealouſly, then curiouſly or artificially; for ſo his looſe garment by the various and vehement agitation of his body, might leave ſome places bare which uſually were covered, 2 Sam.6.20. Againſt the like inconvenience it was ordered by God himſelf, that the Prieſts when they were to miniſter were to put on linnen breeches, Exod.28.42. Ezek.44. 18, 19. ſo obſervant is the Lord of modeſty and decency; whereof Noah being not now apprehenſive, as at other times, ſomewhat was undecently diſcovered, which both pietie and prudence, (had they been awake) would have charily concealed; now though Noah were no drunkard (for one action is not enough to give a denomination to the actor; and he was drunke but once) we may hence be warned againſt truſting a drunkard with a ſecret, for a drunkard is as like to tell all when he is awake, as to ſhew all when he is aſleep.

V. 22. the father of Canaan] See Annot. on verſ.25.

told his two brethren] Ham was now by computation about one hundred yeers old, & therefore his miſcarriage towards his father was no childiſh errour: by his ſinne Noah (when he was awake) might take notice of a part of Gods juſtice or (as to the good) of his Paternall correction in chaſtiſing one ſinner with his own, or with anothers ſinne, as 2 Sam. 12. 11,12. yet though God here were juſt towards his ſervant, Ham was moſt injurious towards his father, whoſe fault ſhould have affected him with pitie and ſhame, which would rather have fetched a mantle to cover him, then call for company to note his nakedneſſe, and to ſcoffe at him, as it ſeemeth he did: ſuch ſonnes are they who uncover the nakedneſſe of thoſe that in age and gifts they ſhould accompt their fathers; eſpecially, when they are aſleep, and aſleep as Lazarus was, Joh. 11.verſ.11. and ſo ſhut up in ſilence that they cannot anſwer for themſelves.

V. 23. and went backward] Shem and Japhet not willing to ſee their fathers ſhame, by their modeſty condemne (as by a legall teſtimony of two witneſſes) the impudence of Ham; here was ſome comfort to Noah at his awaking out of ſleep, to ſee he had two good ſonnes for one bad one, and in them we have an excellent Patterne of ſhamefaſtneſſe and reverence in children towards their naturall parents, fit for imitation alſo towards parents ſpirituall, yea for brethren alſo when any ſuch a one is overtaken with a fault, Gal. 6. 1. yet in this there is a difference betwixt private and publike perſons, thoſe may conceale what theſe may not; and therefore it may be doubted whether Conſtantines reſolution to caſt his robe over an adulterous Biſhop, if he tooke him in the evill act, as Theodoret writes of him, Eccleſ. Hiſt. Lib. 1. cap. 11. did not fail in juſtice, aſwell as abound in mercy.

V. 24. knew what his younger ſonne] That is, Ham or Canaan (for ſome thinke he was called the younger ſonne, as Othniël is called Calebs brother, being the ſonne of his brother, Judg. Chap. 1. 13.) had done unto him; Noah finding the garment upon him, which before he had not, he might inquire, and did finde out what was done both by his bad ſonne Ham, and by his two good ſonnes Shem and Japhet: Good offices are not loſt, though they be not alwayes obſerved while they are acted; and many times when they are offenſive in the act, they produce a good effect afterward: For this, ſee Prov.28.23.

V. 25. Curſed be Canaan] Canaan was the ſonne of Ham, verſ. 18. and ſhall the ſonne beare the iniquitie of the father, contrary to that of the Lord by the Prophet, Ezek. Chap. 18. v. 20. eſpecially, if (as ſome thinke) he was yet unborn; for he was none of the eight perſons that were preſerved in the Arke. Anſw. It is more probable that he was now born, and of a competent age both to know his dutie to his grand-father, and to deſerve a curſe for his contempt; and the rather, if he firſt ſaw the uncomely nakedneſſe of Noah, and deriding him alone called his father to beare him company in that contempt, which made him more worthy of the curſe by Noah pronounced againſt him. But why was not Ham rather curſed then Canaan, ſince his ſinne is evident; and his dutie obliged him more to honour his father, as more neere in relation, and more mature in diſcretion? Anſw. By naming of Canaan, Ham is not paſſed over with patience and impunitie, but his curſe both preſuppoſed and aggravated; preſuppoſed, becauſe he was the principall offender; and aggravated, in that parents wiſh well to their children, eſpecially, if they be like them, and they are more tender and chary of them many times, then of themſelves; as then Joſeph is ſaid to be bleſſed in Jacobs bleſſing of his children, Gen.48.verſ.15,16. ſo is Ham curſed in his ſonne Canaan, and the curſe intailed to his poſteritie; and the rather is his name

V. 7. Non ergo privatum foedus cum una tantum domo sanctum fuit: sed omnibus populis commune, et quod seculis omnibus usq; ad finem mundi vigeat. Et fane quem hodie non minus exuerit impietas quam ætate Noah, plusquam nacctus est hoc Dei Verbo tanquam mille seris et claustris cohiberi aquas, ne ad nos perendos erumpant. — Calvin.

V. 13. Arcum meum ponam in nube — His verbis magni quidam Theologi inducti sunt, ut Iridem negarent fuisse ante diluvium: quod frivolum est. Neque enim Mosis verba sonant fabricatum fuisse Arcum qui priùs non esset: verum notam fuisse illi insculptam, quæ divinæ gratiæ signum hominibus daret. — Arcum cœlestem, qui naturaliter prius fuerat, hìc conferari puto in Signum & pignus: atque ita novum illi mutuus imponi, quando ex seipso rei potius contrariæ Signum sont.

Calvin.

Scriptura vocat Arcum Dei, non quod creatus fuerit post Diluvium, quemadmodum multi falsò existimant. Ponam arcum meum in coelo] hoc ita quidam torquent quasi tunc primum coepisset esse Arcus. Sed minimè dubium est quin Deus voluerit insculpere Gratiæ suæ Testimonium in re minimè consentanea —

It is generally conceived (sed aliter Luther. in loc. and I know no Demonstration that it was before) that the Rainbow did at times apear before the Flood —

Mitchel Stem in loc. p. 195.

Disputatur — an fuerit Arcus etiam ante Diluvium? et agitur negotium magno conatu. Quia enim supra scriptum est, Deum in diebus sex creasse Coelum et terram, et postea quievisse ab omni opere; concludunt Iridem fuisse ab initio — Sed mihi contrarium videtur, quod Iris antea nunquam fuerit, et nunc primum creata sit, sicut tunicæ pelliceæ, quibus Deus vestivit primos homines.

Sentio igitur Iridem fuisse novam creaturam, hactenus mundo non visam; ut admoneretur mundus de præterita ira, cujus Iris vestigia ostendit: et confirmaretur etiam de misericordia Dei. Est enim tanquam Liber, seu picta tabula, in qua et præterita ira, et præsens Gratia ostenditur.

name and person mentioned, and the curse intitled to it(though Ham have foure sonnes named in the next Chapter, of which, as he is ranked, he seemeth to be the youngest, Chap. 10. vers. 6.) because God intended to make the curse hereditary to the name and Nation of the Canaanites; And he may justly punish the iniquitie of the fathers upon the children, not only to the third and fourth generation of them that hate him, as Exod. 20. 5. but to a thousand generations, if they continue in the same sinne; and if they be partners in the same sinnes, he may make them partakers in the same plagues, not only temporally but eternally; but in respect of humane Justice God hath given another rule (which man is bound unto, though God be free to doe with his creatures as he pleaseth) and that is, that the parents shall not be put to death for the children; nor the children for the parents, Deut. 24. 16. see 2 King 14.6. Jer. 31.29,30. But should not Noah rather have prayed for his son and grandchild, then have cursed them both? It was not with Noah as we read in Just. Martyr. Dialog. cum Tryph. that inflamed with wine and wrath he was too hasty with his curse; for his sleep no doubt had setled his braine in a right temper; and now awakened out of it, he uttered but that which the spirit of God suggested unto him; for both his curse and blessing were prophetical, and ratified by God himselfe, so that here is no warrant for parents to be so bitter to their children', as passionately to powre out curses against them, especially, without or upon a very small cause; and though in such a case the causeless curse doe not often come to passe, Prov. 26. 2. sometimes notwithstanding it may have a temporall ratification of God for their punishment who rashly utter it; whereof there are many examples in humane stories, and therefore it is the childrens part to take heed they provoke not their parents, especially as Ham and Canaan by deriding of them; for against such there is a particular curse upon record, Prov. 30. 17. and the parents dutie, to take heed of such precipitation of spirit as makes them ready to denounce a curse when they should pronounce a blessing.

a servant of servants] That is, a most vile slave; for the Hebrew phrase expresseth the superlative degree by such a duplication: as Eccles. 1. 2. Hos. 10. 15. The condition of servitude fals upon some by povertie of estate, weakenesse of reason, or the prevailing power of warre; but upon some it cometh as a particular curse, as in this case, where the Canaanites are foredoomed to a most slavish estate. Object. This prediction in part tooke place in the Gibeonites who were Canaanites; see Josh. 9. but it may seeme to faile of effect, because it tooke not place in Ham nor Canaan, nor in the descendants from Ham or Canaan to the third and fourth generation, according to the commination of God, Exod. 20. 5. for the posteritie of Ham were Kings, and the first Monarch Nimrod was of his race; nor came the Canaanites under subjection to the Israelites untill foure hundreth and thirty yeares after the promise made to Abraham. Resp. But first, the principall part of the curse upon Ham and Canaan and their issue, was spirituall, which made them slaves to sinne, and so justly excommunicate from God, and contemptible as the vilest slaves unto the godly. Secondly, though God professe himselfe more prone to mercy then to revenge, (when he mentioneth the third and fourth generation in visiting the iniquitie of the fathers upon the children,) he doth not thereby bind himselfe either to begin his punishment so soone, or to end it there: and whereas in this prediction there is no set time chosen for accomplishment, the curse may come at what age or time; & begin with what person he pleaseth; as in the time of Joshua wtih the Gibeonites, Josh. 9. 21. Gods forbearance of the Canaanites was not in favour, but that they might fill up the measure of their iniquitie to the full; see Gen. 15.16. and so receive a full and finall reward according to their wickednesse, wherein the delay was recompenced with a degree of vengeance so much the more severe, as it was more slow and long in coming; yet was not this curse so intailed upon the Canaanites, but that some of them might become proselytes and converts to the covenant of Israel, as Araunah the Jebusite, 2 Sam. 24. 18.

unto his brethren] They are called brethren as united in the brother-hood of Shem, Ham, and Japhet.

V. 26. Blessed be the Lord God of Shem] Though God be named, Shem is blessed; for blessed are the people whose God is Jehovah, Psal. 144. 15. and so Shem is blessed, in that God is styled his God, and that before any other in particular; and though Japhet be joyned with him in that modest succour to his fathers credit, yet he rather then Japhet may be mentioned, as he is usually named before him, as being first in the course taken to cover their fathers shame, and as the progenitor of Abraham, and of Christ, who came from his Line, and not from Japhets; and yet God is blessed also; that is, praysed (for modestie and piety of Shem) as the Authour of every good thing whether in parents or in children.

his servant] Or, servant to them. That is, to Shem and Japhet; the posteritie of Canaan was servant to Shem, when those that descended from him had dominion over them as over the Gibeonites, Josh. 9. And they were servants to Japhet, when the Christian Emperours of Europe had the soveraignty over the Nations among whom were the remnant of the Canaanites; and yet the prophecie might take effect before this time, when Alexander the Great of the posteritie of Japhet overcame the Tyrians and Sidonians, who by their parentage were Canaanites.

V. 27. God inlarge Japhet] Or, perswade Japhet. (for so the Originall may be rendred) Wherein is a pleasant Paronomasia, or a verball allusion, Japht Elohim Lejepheth, that is, God inlarge the inlarged, or, perswade the perswasible. After the former reading the word inlarge imports a temporall blessing upon Japhet, for the increase of his posterity, and an inlargement of their territories; for the European Gentiles, especially the Romanes of the posteritie of Japhet extended their Temporall Empire so farre as to account themselves Lords of the world. According to the latter reading, God perswade Japhet, the meaning of the blessing, prayer, or prophecie, (for it is all) is, that the Gentiles who came of Japhet, and were separated in Religion from the Church, should by conversion be joyned to it, Ephes. 2.13. and that this conversion should be wrought by the powerfull perswasion of the Word and Spirit of God, and not by humane Oratory, though never so eloquent.

tents of Shem] By the tents of Shem is meant the Church of Christ: But should it not rather be called the tents of Japhet (if those of his posteritie were the most renowned Christians) then the tents of Shem? Answ. No, because first the Church was setled and most continued in the Line of Shem. Secondly, because Christ the head of the Christian Church descended from Shem according to the flesh. And the Church is called a Tent, or Tabernacle rather then a Palace, because of the moveable condition of it; as when the members of it persecuted in one place are faine to flie to another: See Heb. 11.9.13.37. & Heb. 13.14.

V. 29. All the dayes of Noah were nine hundred and fiftie yeares] Whereof three hundred and fiftie yeares were after the flood, which expired about the yeare of the world, 2006. twentie two yeares (as some reckon) but two yeares (as others) before the birth of Abraham, as may appeare by the Genealogie and computation in the 11. Chapter. 2006.

and he died] Among the many observations of Noah, some make him parallel to Adam in many particulars, wherewith we may fitly conclude his story; they were alike in honour and dishonour; in honour, for they were both of them publique and common fathers of two worlds; Adam of the old world before the flood, Noah of the new world after it; they both were absolute Monarchs of the whole Earth, none had a foot of land but under them, and by a derivative right from them; they both were honoured by the unreasonable creatures; to Adam they came to receive their names, to Noah they came to be received for safetie: and they were alike in dishonour, in sinne and in shame; both sinned by the palate, Adam by an unlawfull act in tasting of the forbidden fruit; Noah by exceeding measure in that which was lawfull: and for shame, they were both shamefully naked, and were charitably covered, Adam by God, Noah by his sonnes: to which may be added that both having slept, they both knew when they awaked, what was done unto them.

CHAP. X.

Vers. 1. These are the generations of the sonnes of Noah] Of all the sonnes of Noah now the fifth time named, and in number no more then three; Berosus & Nauclerus Gener. 11. make an augmentation of this number, supposing that the blessing of multiplication, Chap. 9. vers. 1. was actually and litterally verified in Noah after the floud, as well as in his sonnes; but (as hath beene noted on that verse) the parents are blessed in the fruitfulnesse of their children, and since the sonnes of Noah are so often named, and never numbred above three, we must not presume to father any more upon him, as those Authours do, taking the boldnesse to name a fourth sonne of Noah whom they call Tuisco, and make him the founder of the German Nation.

Unto them were sonnes borne] To wit, those which are after named, but not those onely, but some more renowned then the rest, who gave denominations to divers Nations; at least they were the first Inhabitants of severall Countries, to whom the Originall of the people is referred: but particularly to reduce the Nations that now are to cognation or kindred with the names and persons here set downe, is a matter of more difficultie, then use; depending upon meere conjecture, wherein many shew more presumption then prudence; since for many of them, the relation is brought in upon no better grounds then scarce probable conjecture; and sometimes upon a meere presumption and groundlesse fancie; wherefore what is here affirmed from the Nations as descendents from these Patriarchs must be taken for the most part, not as undoubtedly; but as probably true, though every particular be not mentioned with such a qualifying addition.

Shem, Ham, and Japhet] Of the order of their naming, see Annot. on vers. 2. & vers. 21. of this Chapter; and of their order of birth and age, see Annot. on Chap. 11. vers. 10. Josephus Antiq. lib. 1. cap. 7. divides the world among the three sonnes of Noah thus; Japhet with his progenie (saith he) possessed all Europe to the Gades, and in Asia (wherein was Egypt a part of Syria) all from the mountains & Taurus and Amamis to Tanais, to the Arabick Sea, and even to Babylon, Euphrates, and Tygris, and of him were the Medes who lived beyond those rivers toward the North; Shem and his posteritie possessed Easterne Asia from the river Euphrates to the Indian Ocean; the sonnes of Cham possessed Syria and all the region that bordereth on the mountaines of Amanus and Libanus, extending their Territories toward the Sea. Some give in a shorter account, saying, Shem peopled the East, Cham the South, Japhet the North.

V. 2. The sonnes of Japhet] The Genealogie of Japhet is set downe before that of Ham, because he was in himselfe and in his posteritie better then Ham and his posteritie: and Moses bringeth in Shem and his off-spring last, because he meant most to insist on them, drawing downe the continuance of the Church, and the history of the Patriarchs in his Line; and therefore he proposed and dispatched the Pedegree of Japhet and Ham, that having begun the story of Shem he might not be occasioned unseasonably to breake it off to bring in theirs; and of Ham and Shem he saith the more, and bringeth their Genealogie neerer together, because of Ham came the Canaanites, of Shem the Hebrewes, of which two Nations Moses hath most to say, not onely in Genesis, but in the other foure bookes written by him.

Gomer] Of him are said to be descended the Gomerites (called by some Cimmerians, by others Cimbrians, a Northerne Nation of Europe; see Ezek. 38.6. which some make the same with the Danes) and that people of the West, whose Countrey the Gallogræcians afterward inhabited.

Magog] Of the land of Magog mention is made, Ezek. 38.2. against which God threateneth a fire, Chap. 39. 6. those who are now called Getæ, Messagetæ, Scythians and Sarmatians, and Tartarians, are conceived to come from this Magog.

Madai] After the dispersion of Babel, Madai went into the Countrey, which from him and his posteritie was called Media, Isa. 21. 2. and the Inhabitants Medes, of whom mention is made, Isa. 13. 17. Jer. 51. 11. Dan. 5. 28.

Javan] From him came the Grecians; see Isa. 66. 19. who with some little allusions to his name, are called Ionians, and Greece, Ionia.

Tubal] From him came the Thobeli, otherwise called Iberi: of which there are two sorts of Nations, the one inhabiting Asia neere the Euxine Sea; the other, an European people most commonly known by the name Spaniards. See Ezek. 27. 13. & 32. 26. & 38. 2, 3.

Meshech] To him by some is referred the Originall of the Cappadocians, or (which is more like by the neerneesse of the name, and their Northerne habitation) the Muscovites. See Ezek. 38. 2, 3.

Tiras] The Tyrians may seeme to be derived from him; but more generally the Thracians are taken for his off-spring. Of these, by second derivations, came other people, and sometimes by Merchandize, Warres, and Colonies, were people dispersed and distinguished by their kindred and Countrey, which needed not be particularly mentioned; and haply cannot be truly set downe: wherefore many of these that follow, may be passed over in silence, onely giving a touch of such as are more considerable for their clearnesse and pertinencie to History or Doctrine.

V. 3. Ashkenaz] (Jer. 51. 27.) The progenitour of the people of Pontus and Bithinia, Countries in Asia the lesse: the Jews confidently referre to him the Originall of the Germans.

Riphath] (1 Chron. 1. 6.) Of him the Paphlagonians a people of Asia the lesse, are thought to be descended; their ancient names Riphatees, or Riphees import so much.

Togarmah] (Ezek. 27. 14.) The Chaldee Paraphrase, of Togarmah makes Germania, and taking away To, garmah soundeth somewhat neerer it; some take the descendents of Togarmah to be the people of Armenia the lesse; the Jewes will have them to be the Turkes; all that is certaine is, that they are a Northerne Nation, Ezek. 38. 6. though yet it be not knowne distinctly who they be.

V. 4. Elisha] (Ezek. 27. 7.) Of him came the Eolians a people of Asia the lesse, called now Natolia.

Tarshish] (Ezek. 27. 12. Jona. 1. 3.) The Cilicians are said to spring from his stock; Cilicia is situate upon the South part of Anatolia the chiefe Citie whereof was Tarsus, the birth-place of Paul, Act. 22 3.

Kittim] (Numb. 24. 24. Dan. 11. 30. Isa. 23. 1. Jer. 2. 10.) The conceits and conjectures of the progenie of Kittim are so various and uncertaine, that it is better to say nothing then so many things without any proofe of Scripture or reason.

Dodanim] (1 Chron. 1. 7.) Some read Rodanim, varying the word from the similitude of two Hebrew letters, Daleth and Resh: the descendents of these also are various and uncertaine.

V. 5. By these were the Iles] The Hebrewes call all those Countries Iles, to which out of their owne Countrey they cannot passe but by ships, whether they be properly Iles (that is surrounded with water) or not, Jer. 25. 22. In this name are comprehended all the Provinces of Europe compassed or divided by the Mediterranean Sea.

divided] The posteritie of Noah for divers yeares continued together, as the people of one kindred or countrey, and were of one Language, till many of them transplanted themselves into the Plaine of Shinar, Chap. 11. vers. 2. but upon the confusion at Babel, whereby their Language was divided, the sonnes of Japhet were divided as severall Colonies, in the most Countries of Europe.

after his tongue] As it fell out afterwards, in the division of Tongues, the story whereof is particularly related in the next Chapter.

V. 6. Cush] His posteritie, in their owne Language, call themselves Cushians; their more usuall name is Ethiopians, and their Countrey Ethiopia; but in Scripture we find a two-fold Ethiopia, the one in the East neere the Arabian Sea, inhabited by the Cushites; the other is in the West of Africa, which is vulgarly called Ethiopia, without any addition, or terme of distinction. See the Note on vers. 7.

Mizraim] Of him came the Egyptians; in the Old Testament Egypt and the Egyptians are usually called Mizraim; in the New the name Egypt is still used; the Fabians and Turkes call Egypt Mesra or Masra, which hath neere cognation with this name of the second sonne of Ham.

Phut] By this name was his posteritie and Countrey called, Ezek. 27. 10. and in the 38. of Ezek. vers. 5. our Translation turneth Phut in the Originall into Lybia (noting Phut in the margine) and that name Lybia is usuall in humane Writers, see Jer. 46. 9.

Canaan] The infamous father of the odious Canaanites; from him descended eleven sonnes, and people which possessed the Land of Canaan, which are reckoned, vers. 15, &c.

V. 7. Seba] In the same verse there is another of the sonnes of Cush, which in some versions of the Bible is called Seba also; but in the Hebrew there is this difference, the former is written with Samech, the latter with Schin; the former, Seba and his issue inhabited a part of the African Ethiopia bending towards Egypt, (whereof mention is made, Isa. 43. 3.) From this Seba the Abissines in Africa are thought to take their Originall, whose chiefe Citie and Court is Saba, whence it is supposed the Queene tooke a journey unto Solomon, 1 King. 10. 1. 4. Ezek. 27. 22. Matth. 12. 42. Act. 8. 27. The other, Sheba, is thought by some to be the father of those Arabick Sabeans whose Countrey abounds with Frankincense; but some thinking it too much honour for one of Hams wicked race to be intitled to so good a Countrey (and yet Sodome was a very good land, and the Sodomites extreme bad people) and ascribe that land rather to a sonne of Abraham by Keturah of that name, Gen. 25. 3.

Dedan] Ezek. 27. 15. & Chap. 38. 13.

V. 8. Cush begat Nimrod] Moses reserved the mention of Nimrod for the last place, among the sonnes of Cush, because he meant to speak more of him then of any of the rest.

began to be a mighty one] The word Nimrod signifieth a Rebel, for such as are most stubborne toward their superiours, are most tyrannicall over their inferiours: this Nimrod is thought to be the same whom secular stories call Belus, and set him forth as the founder of the Babylonian Monarchie, from whose name many Idolatries (as that of Belial, Baal-Peor, Beelzebub) are derived.

V. 9. a mightie hunter] Both of beasts (though not for sacrifice, as divers Jewish Doctors make the Glosse upon his title) and of men; for the one hunting many times is a preludium or preparative to the other, as Aristotle observeth, l. 1. Polit. c. 8. But here his hunting of men is principally meant, he was the first that after the flood set up an absolute arbitrary and violent domination over men, pursuing them (who would not willingly come under his command) with no more respect or pitty, then hunters shew to beasts, whom they hunt to death; and therefore is tyranny in Scripture set forth by hunting, Jer. 16. 16. Lam. 4. 18.

before the Lord] That is, though he were sometimes crafty as well as cruell, God set his observant eye upon all his greedy and bloudy plots and practises; so that none of them (how cunningly soever they were contrived) could escape his view. Or, he was a mighty hunter before the Lord, that is, he was so desperately

Gen. 10. 21. — Eber. Tremel. Junius, Heber.

rately bold in his boisterous and violent tyranny, that he was not afraid to act it before the Lord.

wherefore it is said] His crueltie and tyranny was so notorious, that it became a Proverbe of reproach; as if one should say of another naughty man of his haughtie spirit, He is a very Nimrod; such an hunter as he was.

V. 10. And the beginning of his kingdome was Babel] The meaning is, either that Babylon was the Palace or Royall seat of his power; or that from thence he got strength to invade and conquer other Potentates, to raise himselfe a Monarchie out of their ruines.

Babel] Or, Babylon. Rev. 17. 5. The City was called Babel from the confusion of tongues, whereof see Gen. 11. vers. 9. in which, and with which, the Assyrian Monarchy was first set up by Nimrod; though afterward the seat of that Monarchy was translated into Assyria; and Babel, or Babylon being the beginning of this kingdome, the report of profane Authours whether Historians or Poets, is not true, which makes Semiramis the wife of Ninus, (sonne to this Nimrod, or Belus) foundresse of this City; she might repaire it, inlarge it, and adorne it, but Nimrod first built it; and though after Nimrods time the seat of that Monarchy (which began with him) was changed from Babylon to Assyria, which might occasion the distinction betwixt the land of Nimrod, and the land of Assyria, Mic. 5. 6. yet many yeares after, Babylon being by warres, or some other mishaps demolished or defaced, was reedified by Neduchadnezzar (whereof he proudly boasteth, Dan. 4. 30.) so Josephus lib. 10. Antiq. cap. 11. out of Berosus, and Eusebius, lib. 9. cap. 4. de præparatione Evangelica.

land of Shinar] So is that whole circuit of land called which encompasseth Babylon; so that it comprehends Mesopotamia, a part of Arabia, Persia, and Syria; but some more strictly take it for that land which is situate betwixt two rivers, Euphrates and Tygris, and therefore called in Greeke Mesopotamia. See Annot. on Gen. 11. 2.

V. 11. Out of that land went forth Ashur] or, out of the land he, that is, Nimrod went forth into Ashur, or Assyria, a countrey lying neere to Shinar, having the name of Ashur, whose ambition would not suffer him to abide at home, though never so well or commodiously seated; but made him to passe from place to place, to enlarge his dominions. Some take the name of Ashur for a sonne of Shem, so named, vers. 22. but here spoken of by occasion of Nimrod; for Nimrod having seised on Chaldea which belonged unto Ashur, he, as neither by patience able to beare, nor by power to over-beare that usurping tyrant, went out of that land, the land of Shinar, and planted himselfe beyond the river Tygris, where he founded the Monarchy of Assyria, and built the citie of Nineveh. Some will have this Ashur not to be he who was sonne of Shem, but another Ashur of the race of Ham; and there might be one of that name, and of Hams progeny; but which so ever it was, he seemes to have beene so eminent as to give denomination both to the Assyrian Monarchy and countrey. Some conceive this Ashur to be Ninus the sonne of Belus, called Ashur by anticipation, because afterward he was Monarch of Assyria. This construction of the words having the last place, and the least ground, either of the former may have approbation before it.

and the citie Rehoboth] or, Rehhoboth; or, the streets of the citie, so the word signifieth in an appellative sense; it commeth of Rahhab, which signifieth to inlarge, and so some take it as an explication of Nineveh, by the spatiousnesse or largenesse of the streets; Some take it for the name of another citie distinct from Nineveh, whereof mention is made, Gen. Chap. 36. ver. 37. 1 Chron. 1. 48. which yet might have its name from the length or breadth of the streets of it, as well as Nineveh.

V. 12. the same is a great citie] That is (not Calah last spoken of, but) Nineveh, for there is an hysterosis in the words, which in sense must be made up thus; and he built Rezen betweene Calah and Nineveh, the same, that is, Nineveh is a great citie, so called by God himselfe, Jonah 1. 2. & Chap. 3. 2. & Chap. 4. vers. last. But how great it was at this time it is hard to know; In the Prophet Jonah his dayes, it was a citie of three dayes journey, Jonah 3. 3. which would take up three dayes to goe through the streets, or to compasse the walls of it about; and the number of inhabitants was evidence of the greatnesse of it, for it had in it an hundred and twenty thousand infants which knew not the right hand from the left, Jonah 4. v. last. And it is probable that the dimensions of it varied with the ages through which it passed; for great cities, if warres or fire doe not lessen them, commonly grow greater and greater.

V. 13. Ludim] (Lud, Isa. 66. 19. &c.) the off-spring of such as are here named, are for the most part unknowne; yet some say the Lybians came of Ludim, but others referre them to Lehabim; some more sutably to the sound of the word say, Ludim was the father of the Lydians; if so, there must be other Lydians then those which inhabited Asia the lesse; for they are noted under another originall.

V. 14, Pathrusim] His posterity inhabited Egypt, especially that part where the citie Pathros, (Isa. 11. 11.) was built.

out of whom came Philisthim] Either as descended from the stocke of Casluhim, or comming from dwelling among that people, (whereof he was progenitor) as a part of a promiscuous multitude, (such as went with the Israelites out of Egypt, Exod. 12. 38.) and changing their dwelling; for though the Philistines were not the off-spring of Canaan, they made themselves roome, and an habitation in the land of the Canaanites, by driving out the ancient inhabitants

V. 15. Canaan begat Sidon] Hebr. Tsidon, who built the citie Sidon, or Zidon in Phœnicia, Josh. 11. 8. & 19. 28. whence it may be, that by the name of Canaanites the Sidonians should be understood, at least that they be principally comprehended in the name of Canaanites; which are diversified under severall titles, sometimes more, and sometimes fewer; sometimes the generall name is taken for a particular, and sometimes contrarily; sometimes the same under divers particular names, that it is very difficult to make a perfect distinction of their titles and portions; but the best is, the matter is of no great use.

Heth] From whom came the Hittites, Gen. Chap. 23. vers. 3, 5, 7, 10.

V. 18. the Semarite] So 1 Chron. 1. 16. where the genealogie of this Chapter is repeated; some conceive that Samaria and the Samaritans had their name from hence, but the contrary is manifest, 1 King. 16. 24.

V. 19. the border of the Canaanites] Which Moses more exactly setteth downe, because the land of Canaan was promised to the posterity of Abraham, Gen. 15. 18, 19. which portion was afterward enlarged to the Israelites by the addition of two kingdomes beyond Jordan.

Gaza] Hebr. Ghnazza.

V. 20. These are the sonnes of Ham] There are more in the number of descendents from him, then the issue either of Shem or of Japhet; and above twice so many as are reckoned of Japhets linage, notwithstanding the blessing and promise of his inlargement, Chap. 9. 27. and that he had seven sonnes to begin his progeny withall, ver. 2. and Ham had but foure, ver. 6. Fleshly fruitfulnesse is none of the best blessings of the Father of spirits, nor any good evidence of prelation either in mankind, or other creatures: for Sarah was a wife many yeares, and yet barren, when Hagar her handmaid and her husbands concubine conceived quickly after her admission to her mistresses bed: and among the increase of creatures, the most contemptible, as Mice, are most numerous; one bringing forth one hundred and twenty upon one generation, Plin. Nat. Hist. lib. 10. cap. 65. while the Elephant a more noble creature both in respect of his stature, and strength, as also in respect of his faculties, and docilitie; goeth two yeares at least, and as some conceive tenne yeares with young; and hath but one birth during life, though he live (as some write of him) two or three hundred yeares. Plin. Nat. Hist. lib. 8. cap. 10.

V. 21. unto Shem] Why Shem, though the best of the sonnes of Noah is with his issue brought in last, see Annot. on vers. 2.

the father of all the children of Eber] He was great grandfather to Eber, yet he is called a father of Ebers children, to note the reference of posteritie to progenitors, though at farre distance; which may be matter of hope and feare to their issue for many descents, thereafter as their ancestors have been either in favour with God, as Isa. 45. 4. or under the offence and indignation of God, Jer. 15. 4.

of Eber] He was the father of all the sonnes of Aram and his issue, as well as of Arphaxad and his posteritie, whose grandchild was Eber. Why is he not called the father of some other of that line, as well as of Eber? Answ. Eber is mentioned for honour and favour to Shem and Eber both; as Canaan the sonne of Ham is named by way of displeasure to, and disgrace of his father and himselfe in the curse, Chap. 9. 25. For in the line of Eber continued the language spoken by Adam, the true Religion and worship of God, though Joktan one of his two sonnes named, Chap. 10. vers. 25. (Peleg was the other) made defection from it; and God in his good providence continued his life longer then any of those that were borne after the flood. See Chap. 11. vers. 16, 17. From him therefore have the people of God been called Ebrewes. The word Eber signifieth beyond, whence some have thought Shem to be called the father of them who dwelled beyond the River Tygris; but it is rather to be taken here for a proper name, which might yet be given unto Eber by his father, upon some occasion of removall of his family, or passage to another place: some conceive they are called Ebrewes or rather Ebrai, as it were Abrahæi, because they were the posteritie of Abraham; but the former notation of the name is more naturall, and by the more judicious Writers more generally received.

the brother of Japheth the elder] Hebr. the great. For the Hebrew language hath no comparative degree, but useth the preposition Min, or the article Ha for emphaticall expression, as in the word Haggadhol, Cadhol signifying great not greater; and the Hebrews wanting such difference of termination in cases, as the Greeks and Latines have, the word here used and properly Englished great, and commonly greater, may be rendred either in the Genitive case, and so it maketh Japheth the elder, or in the Ablative case, and so it maketh Shem the elder: and from this ambiguitie in the Originall, ariseth diversitie of opinions concerning the senioritie of these three sonnes; for some from hence rendring the adjective in the Ablative case, and so in construction agreeing with Shem, and from the ordinary rehearsall of them in the Scripture, (wherein Shem is placed the first in order) take him to be the eldest; others, because the Originall Text will also admit of the adjective to be taken in the Genitive case, and so joyned with Japhet, make him the elder: and this exposition may have the prerogative of an elder brother to be preferred before the other, which may be proved thus. 1. Cham was not the eldest, for he is called, Noahs younger sonne, Chap. 9. 24. according to the Hebr. His little sonne. 2. Shem was not the eldest, for 1. Noah begat (that is, began to beget) his three sonnes, when he was five hundred yeares of age, Chap. 5. 32. 2. In the sixe hundreth yeare of Noah, the second moneth of that yeare, and the seventeenth day of that moneth came the flood, Chap. 7. 11. 3. Two yeares after the flood Shem (when he begat Arphaxad) was a hundred yeares old, Chap. 11. 10. therefore Shem was begotten in the five hundred and second yeare of Noah. 4. And if Noah began his fruitfulnesse in the yeare five hundred, and begat one of his three sonnes that yeare (as hath been noted out of Gen. Chap. 5. 32.) it must needs be Japhet, and so he must be elder then either Shem, or Cham; yet Shem might be usually named before them both, because he had the honour to be Patriarch of the nationall Church of the Hebrews, so much honoured and favoured by God himselfe, according to the precedent Annot. so that his precedencie before Japhet, is by order of dignity, Chap. 9. 26, 27. not of nature; and so is Abraham set before Nahor and Haran, Gen. Chap. 11. 26. and Jacob before Esau, Gen. 28. 5. and Ephraim before Manasseh, Gen. 48. 20. though neither Abraham, nor Jacob, nor Ephraim were elder then their brethren before whom they are named. See Annot. on Chap. 11. vers. 27.

Hebrews

V. 22. Elam] From him came the Elamites or Persians mentioned, Act. 2. 9.

Arphaxad] The Chaldeans are thought to be his off-spring; upon what ground it doth not appeare.

Lud] From him some will have it that the Lydians are descended; others derive them from Ludim of the race of Ham: see vers. 13.

Aram] To him the Originall of the Aramæans, or Aramites is referred, which peopled divers Regions, especially Armenia; the Hebrewes commonly call Syria by the name of Aram, but with addition, and distinction of the severall parts of that Countrey, as Padan-Aram is the Syrian Mesopotamia, Chap. 25. 20. and elsewhere, Aram Naharaim, that is, Aram of two Rivers, or situate betwixt two Rivers, as Chap. 24. 10. 1 Chron. 19. 6. Psal. 60. tit. Aram Dammeseq, that is, Syria of Damascus, 2 Sam. 8. 5.

V. 23. Uz] (Job 1. 1.) In the land of Uz dwelt the people of Edom, or the Idumeans, Lam. 4. 21. who in probability might be the progenie of this Uz.

Mash] Or, Meshech. 1 Chron. 1. 17. Of him it may be the people of Mysia were descended.

V. 25. unto Eber] 1 Chron. 1. 19.

the name of one was Peleg] Which imports division; for Palag in Hebrew signifieth to divide, and in his dayes was the earth divided; and the division (as Josephus Antiq. lib. 1. cap. 4. sheweth, and many Authours hold with him) was two-fold, the one by Noah, as it were by will and testament assigning to his three sonnes the three parts of the world, Africa, Asia, and Europe; and this is thought to be about the birth of Peleg: afterwards upon the confusion of Babel there was a reall division, or an actuall occupation or possession of the severall parts of the earth, whereto they were presently compelled by a kind of imperious necessitie, since with such diversitie of tongues (which some take upon them to reduce to a certaine number, as they doe the Nations of that dispersion) it was not convenient for them to live together: and this division also fell out in Pelegs time, and to him was that name given as a memento of that division, wherein concurred the high provoking pride of man, and the admirable justice and prudence of God; which may mind us of nominall, as here; and sometimes, reall memorials of Gods memorable acts, as Numb. 16. 38. 40. whether of favour or of anger; for we are naturally prone to oblivion of such workes as should make a very deepe and durable impression in our minds; whereof see Psal. 106. 13. ¶ But for the name Peleg in particular, and for the reason of that name forementioned; how fitly may it be a patterne for our unhappy times! how great cause have we to call the children that are borne in these dismall dayes, by the name of Peleg! for how are we divided, not in tongues alone, as at Babel; but in heads, and hearts, and hands! what divisions are there, not onely of Reuben, as Judg. 5. 15. but of all the Tribes of our Israel! and were we but divided, our case were lesse lamentable; but we are subdivided into many factions in the State, and snipt out into many schismes in the Church: and what hatefull and horrid hostilities are reciprocated betwixt those who are brethren by Nature, Nation, and profession of Religion! How might we fill our Registers with the name of Peleg, if we should take to heart the wofull breaches that are made among us, as the parents of this Peleg did the division in their dayes! O when will it be that the noise of our most unnaturall warre shall be husht, that the manifold ruptures of our sacred and civill peace shall be cemented up, that our condition be not still a cause of sighing to all good Christians, and true Patriots; and of insulting to the enemies both of our Church and State! O when will it be that the pathetique perswasion of the Apostle shall take place with us: Now I beseech you brethren by the Name of our Lord Jesus Christ, that ye all speake the same thing, and that there be no divisions among you; but that ye be perfectly joyned together in the same mind, and in the same judgement! 1 Cor. 1. vers. 10. Give leave good Reader, to the oppressed spirit of the Writer to give some vent unto his griefe of heart. It may be a memorandum of our miserie here, and of the sad condition of three Kingdomes, at once all involved in most bloudy and wofull confusion; and may mind a godly and prudent Christian of the danger of abuse of a long continued peace, and of the severe chastisement of God upon the Churches and States, which rather professe the forme, then practise the power of Evangelicall piety; and it may preach and presse the dutie of repentance and reall reformation, with more precise caution against spirituall relapses; and may stirre up the hearts of such as are pious and compassionate, to betake themselves more frequently to private supplication, and to performe both that and the publique with more sinceritie and fervencie of affection; that the God of peace may be pleased to put an end to our warres, such warres as may steepe our victories as well in the teares of the victors, as in the bloud of the vanquished; since whosoever gaines, the Kingdome loseth many loyall subjects, the Church many Christian Protestants, and divers of them no worse (as we may well hope) then such as have beene redeemed by the precious bloud of our Lord and Saviour: and lastly, it may be, he may (by the mercy of God to his people, and his justice on their enemies) see the result of all this rage redound to the ruine of the Antichristian combination, who first kindled, & have ever since fomented these fearefull combustions; and that Pererius his application of the Prophecie concerning the adjourning of the judgement of God against the Amorites, to the Protestant State in England (Tom. 3. in Gen. Disp. 8. pag. 576) may be made good upon the wicked of the Popish party: The words of the Jesuite rendred in English are these: If any begin to wonder why God suffers the English Principality to execute such a cruell persecution on the Catholiques, and yet to flourish and prevaile; he will leave off to wonder, if he bethinke himselfe of Gods toleration of the Amorites for this reason, because their iniquities were not yet made up to the full, Gen. 15. 16. but they will come at the length to their full growth and accomplishment; there will come a time of Divine vengeance, too late for us perhaps; but for the dispensation of the Divine prudence, and providence seasonable and soone enough; which time (saith he) if any man thinke to be neere at hand (since that Nation (he meaneth the English) hath now so farre proceeded in raging persecution) he shall not much misse of the truth, as I suppose. So farre this Authour; which prediction (upon the like grounds) may justly be retorted upon the Romish Church, and on the pretended (but mis-called) Catholiques, whose rage hath beene of late more rampant then ever, and therefore there is a great hope the time is drawing on that they may be made couchant under Christs Iron Mace, who would not be brought to bow under the sway of his Golden Scepter.

Joktan] The division of the earth into different Languages and people is noted by the name of Peleg; but here some observe another division of the family of Heber, for Joktan (say they) divided himselfe from the true Religion of his fathers house; which cannot be proved by Scripture; for he is mentioned but in this Chapter, and in 1 Chron. 1. and in neither of these places is any such thing recorded of him. From him is supposed to descend the people of the East Indies, and of America also, where some say are remaining markes of that name, but in such particulars we cannot be certaine, nor must we be either over-curious or peremptory.

America.

V. 29. Havilah] From whom it is thought the land of the Ismaelites and Amalekites was named Havilah, Gen. 25. 18. 1 Sam. 15. 7. There was another Havilah descended of Cham, vers. 7. See Annot. on Chap. 2. vers. 11.

V. 30. Their dwelling was from Mesha] These names are not cleared by any other place of Scripture, and they are unknowne to the ancient Geographers, much more to those of later times, and therefore we must leave this Text without any other Note but our ignorance of the termes contained in it.

11. V. 14, 15, 16, 17. Ebar]
the vulgar read Hebar
Tremel. & Jun. Hebar

CHAP. XI.

Vers. 1. The earth] The earth for the Inhabitants of the earth in the usuall phrase of Scripture, Gen. 6. 11. 1 Chron. 16. 23. Psal. 33. 8. and elsewhere.

one Language] Heb. one lip.

one speech] Heb. one words, That is, one sort of words, as many thinke the tongue which Adam spake, and which was used in all the world about the space of one thousand seven hundred and fifty yeares, viz. untill about an hundred and thirty yeares after the flood: this is thought to be the Hebrew tongue by the Etymologies of Adam, Eve, Cain, and others; though some fond men have given the Senioritie to other Languages many ages younger then the Hebrew.

V. 2. they journeyed] To wit, Nimrod and his company.

from the East] That is, not immediately from Ararat, or Armenia, (where the Arke rested) which is not Eastward from Chaldea, but from some other place (which was East-ward in respect of the situation of Chaldea) whither they removed, either because the place wherein they were was not large enough, or not so commodious and comfortable for their habitation as they desired.

plaine of Shinar] Which was not the name of it at this time, for that was given to it afterward; it was a spacious and fertile Plaine since called Shinar, and now Mesopotamia; some say it was afterward called Chaldea, Assyria, and Babylon: Of Shinar, see Chap. 10. vers. 10.

V. 3. they said] Heb. a man said to his neighbour.

burne them] Heb. burne them to a burning.

brick for stone] They would (if the place would have afforded it) have built their Tower of stone, (as if they had had good mortar they would not have used slime) but in that place they were not furnished with stone for such a purpose.

V. 4. build us a citie] They were moved with pride and ambition, preferring their owne glory before Gods honour.

whose top may reach up to heaven] An Hyperbole, that is, a speech used to expresse things in an high and incredible degree, as Deut. 1. v. 28. & 9. 1. Psal. 107. 26. Matt. 11 23. wherein too much is said that enough may be beleeved. The height of this Tower (as ancient Writers have given the measure of it) was foure thousand paces; by such a Tower some (as the prime promoters of the building, for it would not receive many at the top) might hope to save themselves from another floud, if another came, and might the better hold up a tyrannicall dominion; and by that they expected to be united, and to prevent their scattering and dispersion upon the earth, which they might apprehend from their increase, too populous for the place wherein they were, which might occasion their distribution into Colonies; and if it were so, they hoped to retaine an honourable memoriall of their former cohabitation, whereby they expected not to be cast into confusion, and so dispersed both sooner and in a worse way then they apprehended.

make us a name] By erecting such an high and huge monument of their power and cost, as should make them famous in after-times.

V. 5. came downe] The Scripture cometh downe to the capacitie of men, speaking after the manner of great men in high place; who, when they meane to take a particular view of things below their state, come downe for speciall notice of them, with a purpose to take such a course with them as shall be requisite; though in propriety of speech, God neither ascends nor descends; for he is every where, Psal. 139. 7. and needeth not come neerer to any thing then he is to all things, to know it better then he doth, Psal. 139. 2.

V. 6. Behold, the people is one] God speaketh this in derision (as Gen. 3. 22.) because of their fooliish perswasion and presumption in their enterprise.

V. 7. let us goe downe] He speaketh as if he tooke counsell of his owne wisdome, and power, to wit, with the Sonne and the Holy Ghost. See the Note on Gen. 1. 26.

confound their language] The Citie or Tower was to be built by their hands, and God hinders their worke, not by maiming them in any of their limbes, but by confounding their speech so that they did not understand one anothers words, God having striken them with oblivion of their former language; and put into their minds a new Dictionary of words; which though understood by the speaker, was altogether strange and unknowne to the hearer: hence for one Tongue (as many collect from this Chapter) there were seventy two Languages according to the number of the Nations descended from Noahs three sons; some thinke there were as many Tongues as severall kindreds or families; but the number of them cannot be certainly taken; but by this confusion God gave an illustrious evidence of his owne wisdome and power; and exposed their folly and impotence to the more scorne.

V. 8. scattered] Their intendment in their building was to prevent their dispersion or scattering, vers. 4. and God making their punishment answerable to their sin (which was to strengthen themselves in their proud project by keeping together) scattereth them asunder, by dividing their Languages; according to that of Solomon, The feare of the wicked shall come upon him, Prov. 10. 24.

V. 9. Babel] That is, Confusion, because there God confounded their Language. Some thinke it was called Babel from Balbel, abating the letter l for better sound; Drus. obser. sacr. lib. 11. cap. 23. pag. 275. Balbel is according to the Chaldee Dialect, for Balal the Hebrew word signifying, he hath mingled or confounded. Schindl. Pentag. col. 201.

V. 10. generations of Shem] He returneth to the Genealogie of Shem to come to the history of Abraham; wherein the Church of God is described, which is Moses principall purpose. Of the senioritie of Noahs sonnes, see Annot. on Chap. 10. vers. 21.

V. 12. Arphaxad ---- begat Selah] Betwixt Selah and Arphaxad the seventie Interpreters interpose Cainan, and according to their Catalogue of names, doth Luke draw up the Genealogie of Christ from Joseph to Adam; the reconciliation of which difference belongeth to the third of Luk. vers. 36. as to its proper place.

V. 25. Nahor lived after] Nahor was the first of the Patriarchs that fell to Idolatry, by whose gods Laban sware, : The lives of men after the floud were farre shorter then before, to keepe them from excesse of sinne, whereof the long living before the flood, was a great cause; and Nahor lived but an hundred fourty and eight yeares, which is not much more then halfe the life of his predecessors. See Annot. on Gen. 31. 53.

V. 26. begat Abram, &c.] That is, began to beget, for they were not all of a yeare; the like we have noted of the sonnes of Noah, Gen. 5. 32.

V. 27. begat Abram] Though Abram be named first among the sonnes of Terah he was not the eldest, (no more then Shem the eldest sonne of Noah, though usually first named) yet he is first mentioned, because he is the prime man, especially in respect of his spirituall prerogative in the Church, on whom and his posterity, the principall part of the story of the Booke of Genesis is bestowed; for Abram, when he went out of Haran was seventy five yeares of age, Chap. 12. 4, 5. before which time Terah was dead, vers. 32. of this Chapter, whose age is summed up to two hundred and five yeares in the same place; out of which deduct the age of Abram at the time of his departing out of Haran, which presently followeth the death of his father, and the birth of Abram will fall out to be about the one hundredth and thirtieth yeare of Terahs age. And for the order of his sonnes, it is probable that Haran was the eldest though named last, Nahor the second, and Abram the youngest, though named first; for Sarai Abrams wife the daughter of Haran was but tenne yeares younger then Abram, Chap. 17. vers. 17. and supposing her father was not lesse then twenty yeares elder then she (which is probable enough) he must be tenne yeares elder then Abram. Others conceive Abram to have beene the eldest, as borne in the seventieth yeare of Terah, according to this Text, and that he departed out of Haran into Canaan while his father yet lived; but having there no settled possession of any part of that Land till after the decease of Terah, when he purchased a burying place of the sonnes of Heth, Gen. 23. vers. 17, 18. which being done by the Divine disposition, Stephen speaketh of his dwelling there according to the date of that particular, Act. 7 4. So by way of purchase he had a portion there, as any stranger might have, though not by way of inheritance, which is the meaning of Stephen, Act. 7. 5.

V. 29. Iscah] Some thinke that this Iscah was Sarai mentioned in the next verse; for Haran the eldest sonne of Terah had two daughters, Milcah who maried her Uncle Nahor, and Iscah, or Sarai (if the same woman had two names) who married her Uncle Abram, and therefore is called Terahs daughter in law, vers. 31. Such marriages were not yet forbidden, Exod. 6. vers. 20. though afterwards they were, Levit. 18. 14.

V. 31. Terah tooke Abram] Albeit the Oracle of direction came to Abram, yet this honour of execution is given to Terah, to wit, to be named as the leader of the company, because he was Abrams father, who being admonished of Gods will by his sonne, consented to it both in approbation and practise.

* Ur of the Chaldees] (* Nehem. 9. 7. Act. 7. 4.) Some read out of the fire of the Chaldees, for Ur in Hebrew signifieth a valley, light, or fire; see Isa. 24. 15. Text and Margine; and according to that they find or faine a story that Abram was cast into the fire by the Chaldeans, because he would not worship the fire their Idoll, but was miraculously delivered from that danger: yet it is certaine that the Chadeans were Idolatrous, and probable that fire was a chiefe Idoll among them, and that this City might have its name from that Idoll.

Haran] Which was a Citie of Mesopotamia bordering upon Canaan. So in the Geneva Annot. and so Adricom. Delph. Theatr. Terr. Sanc. in the Tribe of Manasseh, pag. 86. col. 2.

& 96. col. 2. which seemeth to be contradicted by that of Stephen, Act.7.2,3. where he saith, that God appeared to Abram while he was in Mesopotamia, before he dwelt in Charran, or Haran, so that when he went to Charran he went rather out of Mesopotamia, then to a Citie of Mesopotamia. To which doubt the answer is, that Mesopotamia is sometime taken in a generall acception, and so ~~Saint~~ Luke takes it for a large compasse of land (beyond Euphrates in respect of Canaan) comprehending both Mesopotamia properly so called, and Chaldea; which (as Topographers describe it) borders upon it on the East-side; and so Babylon the Metropolis of Chaldea is reckoned as in Mesopotamia by Pliny. lib.6. cap.26. Now Abram being called while he was in Ur of Chaldea, the Easterne part of Mesopotamia taken in a generall sense, went with his father into Charran a Citie of Mesopotamia properly so called, and distinct from Chaldea, though called sometimes (as here by Stephen) by the same name, vers.2.4.

CHAP. XII.

Vers.1. THE LORD had said] This oraculous appointment of God came to Abram (as is probably conceived) while he was in Ur of the Chaldees (where he was born) while his father lived, and whereupon they departed from Ur to goe towards the Land of Canaan, as is said, Chap.11. vers.31. and in the way thitherward they stayed a time at Charran or Haran where Terah dyed; after that by vertue of the same call he went onward to Canaan with Lot.

out of the countrey] That is, Chaldea, where he had his call from God.

from thy kindred] If they had rather remaine behind thee, then remove with thee.

into a land] In appointing no certaine place, he proveth so much the more his faith, and obedience; for he went from his place of birth, and wonted abode, to goe from place to place, he yet knew not whither. See Hebr.11.8.

V. 2. shalt be a blessing] That is more then thou shalt have a blessing, for in this blessing is vertually comprised the happinesse of both worlds, and of all that are truely blessed in all ages; whereof though God be the onely Author, Abraham is honoured to be a principall means under him to bring it to passe, in being the progenitour of the promised Seed, and setting such an example of beliefe as might qualifie him to be stiled Father of the faithfull, Rom.4. 11,12. The world shall receive by thy seed which is Christ, the blessing which it lost in Adam. This Covenant in Christ was foure hundred and thirtie yeares before the Law, and therefore (as the Apostle argueth) cannot be disanulled by the Law, coming so long after it. Gal. 3. vers. 16, 17.

V. 3. * And in thee shall] * Gen.18.18. & 22.18. Act.3.26. Gal.3.8.

V. 4. as the LORD spake] Some thinke Abram was now called the second time; first in Ur of Chaldea, his birth place, whereupon he went with his father Terah to Charran; and againe in Charran, whereupon he departed thence towards Canaan: but neither here nor Acts 7. is there mentioned two callings of him, and it is like he went on in the vertue of his first call, though by degrees, resting at Charran till the death of his father Terah, and from thence taking his journey towards Canaan, Vers.4,5.

V. 5. soules] Soules are put for persons, because the soule is the better part; and so by an ordinary figure called Synecdoche, it is taken very oft in Scripture for the whole person, Exod. 1. 5. and elsewhere. See Chap.14. vers.21.

which he had gotten] Not begotten, as a father; but taken as a Conquerour, or hired as a Master, or purchased as a Merchant upon a price; as slaves were bought and sold in ancient times out of many nations, but especially the Canaanites, who of all others were designed to that base condition, Gen. 9. vers. 25, 26, 27.

Heb. they had made.

Canaan] So called, because the posteritie of Canaan, the sonne of Cham, possessed it.

V. 6. Abraham passed] He wandred to and fro in the Land, before he could find a setling place: thus God exerciseth the faith of his children.

Sichem] Hebr. Shechem, so called when Moses wrote; but in Abrahams time it had its name from an Oake: some suppose it the same with Mamre, Chap.13.17. which others doubt of, and in our Saviours time it was called Sichar a Citie of Samaria, Joh.4.5. See Annot. on Chap.13.18. It was situate in the middle part of the land of Canaan in the mountainous part of the Tribe of Ephraim, Josh. 21.21. Judg.8.31. 1 Chron.6.67.

the Canaanite] Properly so called for distinction from the Hivites, Jebusites, Perizzites, &c. which was a cruell and fierce nation, by whom God kept his people in continuall exercise.

in the land] That is, in the plaine of Moreh next before spoken of.

V. 7. builded an Altar] So did Noah, Chap. 8. 20. for though the principall part of mans devotion to God consist in his heart, yet there must be some evidence of it by externall service, whereby it may appeare to others, that we account God worthy of open worship, and his mercies and favours worthy of monuments of remembrance.

called he upon the name] See Annot.on Chap.4.26.

V. 8. removed from thence] Because of the troubles he had among that wicked people, for that he served the true God, and renounced Idolatry; not changing his Religion with the place, but every where serving the same God in the same manner.

Bethel] Called at this time Luz, not Bethel untill afterwards, Gen.28.19.

on the West] See Annot. on Gen. Chap. 1. vers. 10. & on Deut.11.24. See also Gen. 13. 14. & 28.14. Numb. 3. 23. & Deut.3.27.

Hai on the East] Called Ai, Josh. 7. 2. Jer. 49. 3. & Ajah, Isa. 10. 28. a faire Citie of Canaan situate on the mountainous part of the land, which fell to the lot of the Tribe of Benjamin.

V. 9. journeyed going] Hebr. in going and journeying. The best of Gods children may be restlesse in their outward condition, and faine to shift from place to place: which may make them more desireus of heaven, where there is perpetuall repose without either toyle, or change, Heb. 11. 10.

V. 10. a famine] This was a new triall of Abrahams faith, whereby we are taught to expect at the end of one affliction, to meet with another.

V. 11. Egypt] By the Prophet usually called Mitsrajim from the sonne of Cham of that name, Chap. 10. 6. on the East side is bounded with the red Sea, and part of Arabia; on the West, with Cyrene a part of Africk; on the South, with Ethiopia superior, called by some Habassia or Abasine.

thou art faire] When Abram came with his family to Egypt, Sarai was about sixtie yeares of age; yet then she was so beautifull, not onely in comparison of the Egyptians (who were not of a very lovely colour, or complexion) but absolutely, as Abram judged of her. And her beautie might hold out though threescore yeares old, both because it was not impaired by breedding, or bearing of children, (being barren) and for that God might preserve it in especiall manner, as an occasion for the working and observing of his providence, which followed thereupon; yet here we see that beautie is a double snare, both to them that have it, and them that love it.

V. 13. say thou art my sister] Wherein in some sense he spake truth; yet by the name of sister he intended to make them to beleeve a lye, to wit, that she was not his wife. An example not of imitation, but of caution, whereby the best may be warned against the using of ill means to good ends; and may learne not to put others in danger, to save themselves. Albeit it may be that Abram feared not so much death, as that if he should die without issue, Gods promise should not have taken place; wherein appeareth a frailtie of faith, at this time, though for other things, and at other times, his faith was more firme. See Chap.20. vers.12.

V. 15. into Pharaohs house] With a purpose to make her his wife or concubine, Vers.19.

V. 17. Pharaoh] Pharaoh was an usuall name among the Kings of Egypt, untill the Greekes prevailed over it, and then they were commonly called Ptolomees; haply for some very eminent King of that name; as the Emperors of Rome and Germany are called Cæsars, from Julius, or Augustus Cæsar. Or they might be called Pharaohs, because the word Pharaoh signifieth in Hebrew libertie from servitude; and Kings are servants to none but God, and in the Chaldean Dialect revenge, or punishment, as having a preeminence of power, for the punishment of the wicked; as well as for the protection of the good, Rom. 13. vers. 4.

the LORD plagued Pharaoh] Though Kings have great power for doing, Eccles. 8. 4. and more protection from suffering, then other men in the guard of their persons, yet they may not do what they will, with whom they will; for some are such favourites of the King of kings, as to be accepted as his anoynted, and under that title, to be secured from the tyranny of Kings, Psal.105.14,15. 1 Chron.16.21,22. which places have an especiall application to this story of Abraham and Pharaoh; in whose example Kings must be admonished of their subordination to God, Eccles.5.8. and of Gods tender care of godly persons, whom he will not, though they be strangers and friendlesse, give up to the oppression of Potentates, though never so great.

and his house] Great mens sinnes are dangerous, not onely to themselves, but to others that belong unto them. It is not safe to dwell in the house with such as are wicked. See Psalm 101. vers.6,7.

with great plagues] Great men when they offend, are so much more plagued by God then others; as his benefits more oblige them to obedience, and their greatnesse frees them from humane punishment, when they deserve it by their disobedience.

V. 18. Why diddest thou not tell me?] Yet he knew her not

Cap. 12 — Quod Abrahamum Justitiam vocat, hoc extollendi hominis causa non facit; sed ut ostendat Personam divinitus fuisse ei impositam, quæ ad totam Ecclesiæ statum pertineat. Neque enim ejus vocatio tanquam privati cujusquam fuit: sed documentum æternæ Dei Justitiæ in illa editum, pijs omnibus commune est. Quasi diceret, in ejus persona semel liberatam fuisse Ecclesiam, ut confiderent Eandem Salutis quæ et Justitiæ Dei Perpetuitatem fore. —— Non referuntur omnes difficultates a Mose, quæ Abrahamo dudum allatæ sunt: sed unusquisque animo colligere potest migrationem illam maximis molestijs carere non potuisse. Nec enim fieri poterat quin discedens concitaret in se odium gentis, ac velut infamis, ab omnibus damnaretur, quod Patria, propinquis, amicis relictis, in regionem incertam concederet. Postquam vero in terram Canaan venit, negotium ei fuit cum pravis hominibus et inhumanis, cum quibus ipsi bene ipsi convenire non poterat quum ab eorum superstitionibus alienus esset. Esa. 45. 2. Calvin.

V. 5. Sorday] Animæ servos et ancillas significant. Atque hic primum fit servitutis mentio: unde apparet, non multo post diluvium, malitia hominum accidisse, ut libertas, quæ natura communis erat omnibus, bona parte humani generis, periret. —— hoc quidem certum est, violenter fuisse corruptum naturæ ordinem.
Calvin.

to be his wife untill by plagues he was made apprehensive of Divine displeasure, which might occasion an humble inquiry into the cause; whereupon God was pleased some way to reveale it unto him, either by Sarai, or some other way; but he was punished before he was advertised of it; and therefore ignorance of sinne is no priviledge for impunitie, nor protection against punishment; and it is not unlike, that the King was too much swayed by his carnall appetite, that he made so much hast to take her for her beauty; and for that he might be punished the more.

V. 20. commanded] Not only dismissed him without harme or damage, but for his securitie laid a charge upon his people to let him passe where he pleased without any harme.

CHAP. XIII.

Vers. 1. Went up] Canaan was higher then Egypt; and the situation of Egypt being lower, was the fitter to be made fruitfull by the overflowing of Nilus.

into the South] That is, the Southerne part of Canaan, Chap. 12. vers. 9. (from whence he went into Egypt) for otherwise the whole Countrey of Canaan, in respect of Egypt, is situated Northward.

V. 2. very rich] Great riches, and great goodnesse may meet together in one man, Job 1.1.3.

V. 3. Bethel] The place is here called by that name, which it had long before Moses time, though not at this time, when Abram travelled towards it. See Annot. on Chap. 12. vers. 8.

V. 4. * place of the Altar] * Chap. 12.7.

V. 6. to beare them] They wanted convenient space for distinction, and pasture of their flocks; the Canaanites an harsh natured people having possession of the Land, so that they could not be well accommodated for their company, and estates neere together.

not dwell together] Though men account that happinesse consists in riches, there is this unhappinesse in them, that they doe not onely separate men from friendly societie; but often times are occasions of contention betweene them.

V. 7. a strife betweene] Good, and quiet masters may have contentious servants, therefore the one must not be condemned for the other.

the Canaanite, and the Perizzite] For Canaanites and Perizzites, as Chap. 12.6. and Angel for Angels, Psal. 34.7. and so (as divers learned Divines expound) Revel. 2. vers. 8. 12.18. & Chap. 3. vers. 1.7.14. and Inhabitant for Inhabitants, 2 Sam. 5.6. Quaile for Quailes, Psal. 105.40. Frog for Frogs, Psal. 78.45. Tree for Trees, Psal. 105.33. And the Perrizzites dwelling in the Land of Canaan were Canaanites; but upon some especiall reason, they had an especiall name given them, by which they were distinguished from the rest of the Canaanites; and among them that dwelt in the Land, some might have the name of Canaanites, by an eminence and more ordinary use: See Annot. on Chap. 15. vers. 21. So names are sometimes of a more large, and sometimes of a more strict acception: See the Note on Chap. 11. vers. 31. Now their dwelling in the Land is brought in by occasion of the dissention betwixt the Herd-men of Abram and Lot; because the Land was so populous by the number of these Inhabitants, that there could not be allowed roome sufficient for the increase of their cattell, which might be a cause of future contention, more then at the present betwixt the emulous servants of their amicable masters; and quarrels betwixt two such worthy persons would be very scandalous before such Infidel Idolaters as the Canaanites and Perizzites were.

V. 8. Abram said to Lot] Abram the elder, and the worthier person, both in respect of Grace, and of Nature also, (for he was Uncle unto Lot) craves peace of his inferiour. It is no disparagement to be the first in seeking reconcilement; for so was God in atonement with man, Isa. 65.1. 2 Cor. 5.20.

brethren] That is, neere kinsmen, of the same flesh and bloud, Rom. 9.3. Or, brethren of the same beliefe, and profession of Religion; otherwise in proprietie of speech, Abram was not his brother but his uncle, for Lot was his brothers son, Gen. 12.5. See Annot. on Chap. 14. vers. 14.

V. 9. If thou wilt take] Abram resigneth his owne right to buy peace; yet he was not possessed of a foote of the Land of Canaan, Act. 7.5. as his owne right, and by vertue of promise; therefore what he injoyed there, it was either by the presupposed, or purchased consent of the Canaanites, to whom he might make himselfe acceptable both by his great wisdome, goodnesse, riches, and beneficence. See his carriage toward, and acceptation with Ephron, and the children of Heth; of whom he would not take so much as a buriall place, but he would pay the worth of it, Gen. 23. vers. 11, 12, 13. And for Lot, Abram gave him no title to the Land, but such an use of it, as upon faire, and reasonable termes he might obtaine and enjoy.

left hand] By the left hand, some Expositors conceive he understood the North, and by the right, the South; and this according to the Chaldee; which presupposeth an usuall phrase of locall distinction among the Hebrews: the Philosophers since Aristotle, make the East to be the right hand, and the West the left.

V. 10. as the garden of the Lord] So are things called that are eminently great and goodly, as the Host of God, 1 Chron. 12.22. the Citie of God, Psal. 46.4. the Cedars of God, Psal. 80. 10. See Annot. on Chap. 23.6. & Chap. 30 8. and so it may be in this place. Or it may be a particular comparison with the Garden of Eden, Gen. 2.10. See Isa. 51.3. Ezek. 28. 13. & Chap. 31.8.

land of Egypt] Made fruitfull by the overflowings of the River Nilus; especially that part of the Land, in the plaine of Jordan, which is the way from Bethel to the little City, afterwards called Zoar; but in former time, and at this time, Bela, Chap. 14. 2. Adricom. Delph. Theatr. terr. Sanct. in Trib. Judah. pag. 54.

V. 11. journeyed East] Or, East-ward, as Gen. 2. 8. From the East, so the Genev: and Arias Montan. but Bethel (where Abram and Lot were, when they concluded to separate) was West-ward in respect of Sodome, whither Lot went, and going thither he went towards the East, not from the East; so it is better (as to the sense of the place) to read, Lot journeyed East, or, East-ward; which construction the Originall word here used will beare, as well as the other (from the East) and so it is taken, Gen. 2.8. God planted a garden East-ward, in Eden.

one from the other] Which was done by Gods especiall providence, that onely Abram and his seed might dwell in the Land of Canaan.

V. 13. the men of Sodome were wicked] Lot thinking to get Paradise, found Hell; the Land was very good, the Inhabitants extremely bad: they are called sinners before the Lord exceedingly, because their sinnes were such as drew his eye especially to be upon them, with a purpose to punish them: See Chap. 10.9.

V. 14. Lift up now thine eyes] The Lord comforted him, lest he should have taken thought for the departure of his Nephew.

looke from the place] (Deut. 34.1. Matth. 4.8.) The promise was made for a larger compasse then the eye of man could particularly view; but God might supply that defect either by discoursing of the places in each tract, East, West, North, and South, as Abram had his prospect; or by some other revelation, or representation, as himselfe thought fittest to make him apprehensive of his liberall promise. The Devil did something in this kind, Matth. 4.8. & Luk. 4.5. by Gods permission: but God doubtlesse had a better, and a clearer way to manifest the compasse of his bounty unto Abram. Though Abram himselfe were not actually possessed of the Land of Canaan, as in his owne right; (whereof see the Annot. on vers. 9.) yet is the promise made to him, because of Gods especiall favor to him, for whose sake he was so graciously affected to his posteritie; in whom their progenitours are blessed in a joyfull apprehension, that they shall be blessed, as in good-will to them, and for their sakes: See the Annot. on Chap. 9 25.

V. 15. and to thy seed] (Chap. 12.7. & 26. 4. Deut. 34. 4.) That is, to thy seed, and for thy sake.

for ever] Upon presupposall of their obedience, and keeping covenant with God, otherwise not, Levit. 18. 28. Deut. 4.25, 26. Isa. 48. 18, 19. and to such as should prove faithfull in their adherence to God, here is a promise of an everlasting possession of the heavenly Canaan, whereof the earthly was a Type: And concerning temporall possession, the words for ever, reach to the coming of the Messiah, which is the period of such promises for the Old Testament; from thence begins a date of new blessings to the spirituall children of faithfull Abram, which will hold out untill they attaine an everlasting happinesse. Heb. 11. vers. 10.

V. 16. number the dust of the earth] That is, by way of comparison; for as no man can number the dust of the earth, Gen. 32. 12. the graines of it are so many; so the seed of Abram whether by the flesh, or faith of Abram (for they that beleeve as he did, are his children) shall be so many, as that, to men, they shall be innumerable. See Heb. 11. 12. Rev. 7.9.

V. 17. walke through] By this God doth not command Abram to make an exact surveigh of it; but offers unto his choyce the satisfaction of himselfe by his owne view of it.

the length and breadth] See the Annot. on vers. 14.

V. 18. plain of Mamre] Heb. plains. Or, the oake, or grove of oaks of Mamre: for the Hebrew word Elon, signifieth an oak: the Plaine it is like, was set with oake trees, and it is called the plaine of Mamre, from the man who either planted or possessed it, who was an Amorite dwelling in Hebron, Chap. 14. vers. 13.24.

built an Altar] Abram is constant in his holy course of true Religion, still building an Altar, where he abode; not, as the Heathens, to many false gods, but to the one and only true God:

CHAP. XIIII.

Vers. 1. IN the dayes]. This was in the yeare of the world, 2092. foure hundred thirty sixe yeares after the flood, in the eighty fourth yeare of Abrams age: this is the first warre mentioned in any story, as some say; yet Josephus writes (and it may be true) that there was a precedent warre before this, whereby Chedorlaomer brought these people of the five Cities under subjection, from which they revolted into rebellion.

Amraphel] This is thought to be Nimrod King of Elam, or Persia, or Babylon.

Shinar] Or, Sennaar. (as Josephus cals it, Antiq. lib. 1. cap. 5.) A spatious plaine in the Region of Babylon, put here for Babylon, where Nimrod laid the foundation of his Monarchy. Some hold that this Amraphel was King of Assyria, the seat of whose Kingdome was not Babylon, but Nineveh; but because in the beginning one man (who some say was Ninus) had the dominion both of the Babylonians and Assyrians, the same King is often indifferently called King of Babylon, and of Assyria.

nations] The word Gojim in the Originall some take for a City or Countrey so called: but it signifieth Nations, and it may be this King had severall Nations under his command, or was Captaine of a company of severall Nations; or Ruler of some Citie of great Merchandize, frequented by the people of divers Countreyes; as for the same reason Galilee was called Galilee of the Nations, or Gentiles, Isa. 9. 1. Matth. 4. 15. frequented by Arabians, Egyptians and other neighbour Nations, being of a fruitfull soyle, and commodious with Ports and Havens. Strabo: lib. 16.

Zoar] Or, Zoghar. So called upon Lots request, and refuge thither, for his safetie, Gen. 19. 20. 22. but before it was named Bela, of the Land of Canaan; these five Cities, situate in the Plaine of Jordan, were (all but Zoar) about five yeares afterward consumed by fire and brimstone, Gen. 19. 20, &c. Deut. 29. 23.

V. 3. Siddim] Hath its name of a plainnesse coming by beating of the clods, to lay the ground levell: and so was this vale fitter for the conflict of the adverse armies: but after the destruction of the Citie of Sodome, and her sinfull sisters; it was turned into the Lake Asphaltites, or salt Sea. Josephus saith, it was neere the Land of Sodome, and Gomorrah.

salt sea] Called also the Lake Asphaltites, neere Sodome and Gomorrah, which was not a salt sea, or lake at the time of the battell, for that had beene no fit place for such a purpose; but (as some write) it had formerly beene a pleasant valley furnished with trees, untill by Gods judgement for the sins of the Sodomites, it was turned into that Lake of the accursed water powred out upon it, which is so filthy and grosse, that no fishes can live in it, nor (as some write) birds flie over it, without taking deadly infection from the exhalations, which arise out of it, wherefore it is called also the dead sea, of which many strange things are reported by Plinie Nat. Hist. lib. 5. cap. 16. Justine the Histor. lib. 36. cap. 3. Josephus of the warres of the Jews, lib. 5. cap. 5. Adrichom. Delph. in his Theater of the Holy Land, pag. 52. in the Tribe of Judah.

V. 4. Chedorlaomer] Though Amraphel who is supposed to be the sonne of Ninus King of Assyria, be named first, vers. 1. and others before Chedorlaomer might be more ancient Kings, or Kings of places of more honour and account; yet in this expedition he was chiefe, as appeareth by this, and the next verse; for the cause of the warre was a defection from, or a rebellion against the government of Chedorlaomer, to whose assistance the other Kings joyned themselves, as for recovery of his right, with expectation, and it may be also with capitulation for the like aid, if it should be their lot to be so deserted or resisted by their subjects.

rebelled] After twelve yeares subjection, especially if they submitted to Chedorlaomer upon covenant, and oath; their rebellion was unlawfull, for they should have continued their obedience in lawfull things. See Ezek. 17. 15.

V. 5. Rephaims] The word Rephaim, Deut. 2. 11. is used for Giants, but here, as Chap. 15. vers. 20. it seemes to be taken for a strong and fierce people dwelling in Canaan; as the Hittites, and Perizzites; the people mentioned in this and the two following verses, were set upon by the foure Kings, perhaps as confederates with the Sodomites and the rest; or that they might not aid them, they were first assaulted. Of the Rephaims, see Annot. on Chap. 6. vers. 4.

V. 6. Horites] See Annot. on Gen. 36. 20. & on Deut. 2. 12.

Elparan] Heb. the plaine, or, oake of Paran. Of Paran, see Annot. on Numb. Chap. 10. vers. 12. & on Deut. 33. 2.

V. 7. which is Kadesh] So called in Moses his time; (though more anciently it had the name of Enmishpat) it was situate in the desert of Zin, Numb. Chap. 20. vers. 1. 14. 16. 22. Of this Kadesh, see Annot. on Numb. 20. vers. 16.

Amalekites] That was their name when Moses wrote this, but not at the time of the warre; for Amalek was the grandchild of Esau, Gen. 36. 12. the sonne of Isaac, the sonne of Abram; but Abram at this time had no child, neither by Sarai nor by Hagar; here then is an anticipation in respect of the story, (for the Amalekites were not yet a people) though not in respect of the time of Moses his writing of it, for in his time, and before, they were a people, and possessed a particular Countrey.

V. 10. vale of Siddim] Which afterwards was overwhelmed with water, and so called the salt sea; See Annot. on vers. 3.

slime pits] Heb. pits pits. The doubling of the word importeth pluralitie, because there were many pits there: so in the second of Kings, 3. 16. the words in English is make this valley full of ditches; but in the Hebrew, make this valley ditches ditches.

fell there] Flying from their enemies they fell into the pits, (whereof there were many in that place) and there they found at once both their death and buriall: the five Kings chose that place of purpose for the battell, because those pits were not so well knowne to their enemies as to themselves. Here the Kings of Sodome and Gomorrah are said to fall, but that is to be understood rather of the ruine of their armies then of their persons; for the King of Sodome met Abram coming from the victory afterwards, vers. 17. Some thinke those that fell there, fell not into the pits casually, but that purposely they cast themselves into the pits, as chooling rather to be drowned, then to be mangled with the sword of their enemie, or to fall into their hands as captives and slaves.

V. 12. tooke Lot] The godly are plagued many times with the wicked, therefore their company is dangerous, Num. 16. 26. Revel. 18. 4.

V. 13. the Hebrew] Who was so called not from Eber, (as some thinke) because there were five progenitors of Abram which came betweene him and Eber; but rather from the Hebrew word Ghneber, signifying passage, because he passed over the River Euphrates, coming out of Chaldea into Canaan: yet others suppose Abram had his name of Eber, and he rather then any of his Ancestors of the posteritie of Eber, was called an Ebrew, because those who descended from him kept the ancient Language, and true Religion of Eber.

confederate] Heb. lords, or masters of the covenant. The word Baal, though most frequently used for an Idol, or false god, in the scripture, (in which acception it occurreth about fiftie seven times) yet in the generall and grammaticall sense, it signifieth a Lord, or Master; and many times also it imports emphatically a great affection or disposition to a thing, or a faculty, skill, or fitnesse for a thing; so Joseph, who in our English version is called a dreamer, Gen. 37. 19. in the Hebrew is called Lord, or master of dreames; and cunning and skilfull Archers are called masters of arrowes. See Annot. on Chap. 49. 23. and so Elijah addicted to the wearing of an hairy garment, or nourishing the haire of his head and beard, wearing it long; was called an hairy man, so in our English Bibles, 2 King. 1. 8. but according to the Hebrew it is Lord, or master of haire.

confederate] God moved them to joyne with Abram, and preserved him from their Idolatry and Superstition; the prosperitie of Gods people makes those that observe it desirous to be in league with them: upon that ground did Abimelech and Phichol desire to enter covenant with Abraham, Gen. 21. vers. 22, 23. and the like motion for the same reason was tendred to Isaac his sonne, Gen. 26. 27, 28, 29. and though afterward it were forbidden to make a covenant with the Canaanite, Exod. 34. 15. Deut. 7. 2. and Jehosaphat was reproved and threatned for his association in assistance of the wicked King of Israel, 2 Chron. 19. 2. yet without the case of especiall prohibition, it is not unlawfull to make leagues of peace or warre, or commerce with Infidels, in case of necessitie; with due care taken that there be no content in any thing that is sinfull, or prejudiciall to the truth of Religion; nor any appearance of approbation of what is unlawfull, as either against the true faith, or good manners.

V. 14. brother] Here and vers. 16. Lot is called Abrams brother (for so are they sometimes called in Scripture, who are of neere kindred, or affinitie) though the proper or particular relation of Abram and Lot, was of an Uncle and Nephew, for Lot was Abrams brothers sonne, vers. 12. See Annot. on Chap. 13. vers. 8. and compare 2 King. 10. 13. with 2 Chron. 22. 8. where is the like use and meaning of the word brother.

trained] That is, bred and brought up, and disciplined in his family, and it may be also trained in a Military sense; that is, exercised in arms; for he knew he might meet with many and great enemies, and therefore his wisdome would dictate unto him the best way of due defence for himselfe and his friends.

Cap. 14. 20. Tithes.] Sundry of our best Divines do judge, that not only the Order of Tithes under the Law, but that which we find of them before the Law of Moses (as here; [Gen. 28. 22] & Gen 14. 20) is not binding under the Gospel, i.e. as to that particular proportion of a Tenth; or that particular way of raising it. But this is Moral therein, that we honour the Lord with our Substance, and those deductions of the Apostle. 1 Cor. 9. 11–13. Galat. 6. 6. And tho' what is needfull this way (for the support of the publick work of Christ, and of all Civil and Spiritual Concerns thereof) may seem an heavy burden: Yet remember, it is part of our Homage to GOD, whose Tenants we are for all we have. We give him of his own, as Jacob here, and 1 Chron. 29. And remember the vast Expences of the Jews, even in those times when temporal good Things are accounted to have been more look'd at. And this is the true Way to Wealth. See Jews proverb apud Godwyn, p. 276. Prov. 3. 9, 10. Deut. 14. 28, 29.

three hundred and eightcene] As he was a man of great estate, Chap.13. verf.2. so he had a great family, and in respect of both, the children of Heth called him a mighty Prince, Chap. 23.6. An excellent patterne for such as are so rich and great as he was, to be good and gratious like him.

Dan] A place on the Northerne part of Canaan, anciently called Leshem, untill it was wonne by the Danites, whereupon they called it Dan, Josh. 19. 47.

V. 15. divided] A Military policy to make shew of a great Army dispersed divers wayes, and to prevent the escape of the enemy.

V. 16. And he brought backe, &c.] Religion is no impediment to Militarie courage, and prudence. Abram had a better cause of quarrell then the rebell Kings, for (not being subject to Chadorlaomer, but in right, and by Gods promise King of Canaan) his charitie, and piety to his Nephew unjustly spoyled, and taken captive, was better warrant for the warre, then they had; and no doubt he had Divine direction for what he attempted, as well as Divine assistance for what he effected, vers. 20.

V. 17. Kings dale] That is, King Melchizedeks, (as some take it) or it might be so called for the pleasantnesse which might delight a King; as Chap. 49. 20. It was not so called when this story was in action, but afterwards: it is like it was the valley named, 2 Sam. 18. 18. where Absolom set up a pillar, in stead of a sonne, to keepe his name in remembrance.

V. 18. Melchizedek] Most of the Jewish Rabins, and many learned Christians, take this Melchizedek to be Shem; and for the time of their living it is probable enough; for Melchizedek lived seventie five yeares after Abrahams coming into Canaan: But other learned, both Jewish and Christian Writers, conceive he was a Prince, and Priest of another kindred from that of Abraham, Heb. 7. 6. extraordinarily raised up by God of the Canaanites, and brought in without mention of parents, Originall, or end, without any predecessour, or successour in the Priesthood, as a Type of the Royall, and eternall Priesthood of Christ, Heb. 7. vers. 17. 21. which cannot be said of Shem, whose Genealogie is set downe in Scripture.

King] Here, and Heb. 7. vers. 1. he is called, and was also both a King, and a Priest; two callings rarely, and by extraordinary instances concurring in one person.

of Salem] Called also Jebus, and after Hierusalem, and since that sometimes Salem, Psal. 76. 2. Some take it for that Salem mentioned, Joh. 3. 23. Of which (though there be no certainty for either) the first is more probable.

brought forth] For Abrahams and his souldiers refection, and as a present of gratulation, and not to offer sacrifice: See Deut. 23. 4. Judg. 8. 5. 6. 16.

of the most high God] Though the posteritie of Abram were Gods visible Church, there were some without it, who were not without the knowledge and worship of the true God.

V. 19. blessed him] In that Melchizedek was bountifull to Abraham, and his Army, he declared himselfe to represent a King: in that he blessed him, the high-Priest, Heb. 7. 6. and in both he was a type, or figure of Christ.

V. 20. And blessed be the, &c.] This was a gratulatory sacrifice of praise; but no expiatory sacrifice did he offer at all, for that requireth bloud-shed, Heb. 9. 22.

which hath delivered] Man makes the adventure, but God gives the victory in battell.

he gave him tithes of all] Abraham gave tithes to Melchizedek, Heb. 7. 2. The payment of tithes is ancienter then the Leviticall Law: See Chap. 28. 22. and being paid to Melchizedek a type of Christ, they are not abolished by the Gospel; but may be continued as an Evangelicall revenue, for the maintenance of those, who exhibit Sacramentall bread, and wine (the materials of Melchizedeks beneficence) to the people; and blesse them in the Name of God, as Melchizedek did Abraham.

V 21. the persons] In Hebrew it is the soules; for the soule is both here, and in many other places, put for the whole man; to teach us to give the soule the preheminence above the body, both in estimation of it, and care for it.

V. 22. I have lifted up my hand] An outward gesture used at the taking of an oath, Deut. 32. 40. Ezek. 20. 15. Dan. 12. 7. Revel. 10. 56. Signifying that God above knoweth the truth of what we sweare, and invoking his justice, if we sweare untruly. Abram it seemeth, had made a vow to God, before he set forth, that he would have no part of the spoyle.

V. 23. That I will not take] In Hebrew it is If I take from, &c. A suspensive, and passionate speech, importing a strong denyall above the utterance of words; as Psal. 95. 11. compared with Hebrews, Chap. 3. v. 11. 18. and withall intimating a curse, but forbearing the expression of the words, either out of feare or unwillingnesse to mention it in particular; or as yeelding to any curse in generall, if they doe otherwise then they professe.

from a thread] A thread, and shoe latchet are things of smallest value, importing (in a proverbiall speech) a resolute, and universall refusall of gaine, or advantage by the present businesse. See Annot. in Gen. 31. vers. 34.

lest] Abraham withholdeth his hands from the spoyle, as the Jews, Esth. 9. vers. 15, 16. that it might appeare that his charitie, not covetousnesse, drew him to the warre; and that having his riches from the especiall blessing of God, he would not have it thought he was inriched by man, especially by any so wicked as the Sodomites were.

V. 24. young men] That is, the souldiers, who for the most part were of the younger sort.

portion of the men] He would not that his libertie should be hurtfull to others.

CHAP. XV.

These things] Or, words. Spoken by Abraham to the King of Sodom in the former Chapter: the Originall word signifieth first [words], then things, celebrated or spoken of by words; Schindl. Pent. col. 358. as Levit. 5. 2. Deut. 17. 5. and in other places; for in good things, he that speaketh a word, should make it good by his deed; and in evill, he that speaketh ill, hath a minde to doe as ill, as he speaketh.

a vision] Properly is a divine representation of things shewed to such as are awake; such were the visions of the Prophets in the Old; and of Zacharie, Peter, and Paul, and John in the New Testament, distinguished from revelation by dreames to men asleepe.

feare not] Visions at their first apprehension, affect the partie to whom they are presented, with feare: So Dan. 10. 8. Luk. 2. 9. but before the vision, Abraham might haply feare a new assault of his enemies, or the envie of the wicked at his prosperitie, and in respect of such feare, God calles himselfe his Buckler. Psal. 18. 30. Prov. 30. 5. 2 Sam. 22. 31.

thy shield] To protect thee from hurt, Psal. 5. 12. and thy reward, to bestow on thee good; yea I will bestow my selfe upon thee, and be thy portion, Psal. 15. 6.

reward] A reward above all pretence of merit, a reward to such especially as doe not respect the rewards of men, as Abraham did not when he refused the offer of the King of Sodome; and they may be cheerfull in their worke, since they shall be sure of a reward, Psal. 58. 11. of an exceeding great reward, great beyond all measure, exceeding farre above mans merit; for God is their reward, and he is infinite, and therefore such a reward as nothing in man can purchase upon equall price.

V. 2. I goe childlesse] Hebr. and I going: some render the words, since I goe on, or persevere, or am going away; that is, since my age goeth on towards mine end, and I am yet not come to the possession of thy promise, and mine expectation.

childlesse] Abraham desired a sonne above any worldly thing, that God could give him: yet his feare was, not onely lest he should not have children; but lest the promise of the blessed seed should not be accomplished in him; and he makes it his complaint to God, in whose power it was to make him a father, Psal. 127. 3. as well as to promise him a plenteous posteritie, Chap. 13. vers. 16.

Damascus] Whose name is Damascus the sonne of Eliezer, or whose Ancestors were of Damascus, though he were borne in Abrahams house, who was the eldest servant of his family, Chap. 24. vers. 2. and from a servant (as some conceive) became so great a Lord, as to be the founder of the faireſt Citie of Syria, called Damascus after his name.

V. 3. heire] If he had no child of his own, (his Nephew Lot having none but daughters) it was in his thoughts to make his chiefe, and most faithfull servant his heire; or if he were dead, having all under his charge, he might make himselfe heire of his Masters estate.

V. 5. Looke now] The Starres though it were day, might be represented in a vision, or the entercourse betwixt God and Abraham might be continued untill night, from the time when it began.

number] Though some ancient Astronomers have taken upon them to number the Starres to 1022, and some later Writers have increased the number to 1322. Alsted: Uranoscop. part. 1. cap. 13. Tom. 1. Eucycl. col. 2020. Yet as there hath been a difference of the earth in regard of discovery, in which respect one part hath been a long time called the Southern unknown part of the world; so the wiser sort of Christian Astrologers, especially, have distinguished the Starres into numerable and innumerable, Magir. Phys. lib. 2. cap. 5. which will be a true distinction to the worlds end, not only betwixt the Starres, but betwixt God that made them, and men that observe them; for while to men they are innumerable, to God they are exactly known both for their number, and their names, Psal. 147. 4. 1322. Starrs.

so shall] The promise of multiplication of Abrahams seed is made by a comparison; sometimes to the dust of the earth, Chap. 13. 16. sometimes to the Starres of heaven, as here in prophecie, and we have it in history, Deut. 1. 10. where neither by dust, is their humiliation, nor by the Starres, is their exaltation intended; but their multiplication in both, and this is meant not onely of Abrahams children according to the flesh, but according also to the faith.

V. 6. beleeved] He beleeved the Lord, not onely for the multiplication of his seed, but in particular for the principall seed, the promised Messiah, in whom all the nations of the world should be blessed, Chap. 12. 3.

righteousnesse] Righteousnes by imputation, or justification by faith without works, is no new doctrin, but as old as Abraham. See Gal. 3. 8. Rom. 4. 3. The faith of a Beleever in Christ is like that of Abraham touching the seed; for as this was not grounded on any thing in nature, (for so both Abraham, and Sarah were too old to be parents) so hath the faith of a true beleever nothing of nature, but meere grace to support it, Rom. 4. 17, 18.

V. 8. whereby shall I know] This was a speciall motion of Gods Spirit; therfore it is not lawfull for all to do the like in asking signes, but was permitted to some by a peculiar favour, as to Gedeon, and Hezekiah; which they did not so much out of incredulitie, as out of a desire to be fortified against humane infirmitie. See Judg. 6. 17. 37. 2 King. 20. 8. Luk. 1. 18. Or, he asked this question, not so much doubting of the thing promised, as desiring to know somewhat more particularly of the manner of performance.

V. 9. Take me an heifer] God entring into especiall Covenant with Abraham, will have it confirmed by sacrifice, as Psal. 50. 5. in sacrifice and oblations what is here required, was afterward by the Leviticall Law established, Levit. 1. vers. 2. 10. 14.

V. 10. divided] The creatures were divided, and the parts so placed, that the parties covenanting might passe betwixt them, Jer. 34. 18. the meaning whereof was, that as part answered to part (for they were so to be laid that the parts might be answerable to each other) so the minds of the Covenanters should be set in a mutuall correspondence; and withall, there was an implicite imprecation of the like dissection to the partie that brake the Covenant; but in this place was also prefigured the distresses, and distraction of Abrahams seed, and withall, their joyning together againe, to which purpose the parts were so orderly disposed. See Ezek. 37. 7.

the birds] were not divided because they appertained not to the confirmation of the Covenant, but were to serve for sacrifices, Levit. 1. 15, 17. Or, because they were little, and each laid whole against the other, were answerable to the other parts, that were divided; and by these might be intimated the innocency, and simplicitie of Gods people, especially in their making, and keeping of Covenant. For Doves and Pigeons mentioned in the precedent verse, and meant in this, are noted for their innocence, Matth. 10. 16. and the Turtle Dove is commended for an example of keeping the covenant of marriage.

V. 11. the fowles] Ravenous birds resemble wicked men, who are ready to make a prey of Gods holy portion, and to disturbe holy persons in their best actions. See Ezek. 17. 3.

V. 12. darknesse] The condition of Gods people in this life is very various, Abraham hath favourable visions, and frightfull dreames: promises of a numerous issue, and of them predictions of grievous distresses, like dismall darkenesse, which put him into a distemper of horrour, and this followed with presages of lightsome libertie to succeed it.

V. 13. serve them] That is, the owners or Lords of the land wherein they are strangers.

foure hundred yeares] Or, foure hundred and five, for in a great summe so small a number cometh under no particular accompt, as the Interpreters of the Old Testament out of Hebrew into Greeke were seventie two, but they are commonly called the seventie, not seventie two Interpreters; and this accompt is to begin at the birth of Isaac; but from the giving of the promise to Abram, to the deliverance of the Israelites out of Egypt, and the giving of the Law, were foure hundred and thirtie yeares, Exod. 12. 40. Gal. 3. 13. of which neither foure hundred and five, nor foure hundred, much lesse the whole of foure hundred and thirtie was spent under Egyptian persecution; for though the accompt end with their parting thence, it did not begin with their coming thither; as it is said of Terah that his dayes in Charran were two hundred and five yeares, Gen. 11. 32. where he spent not all that time (and it may be also not the most part of it) but ended it; but so much of the time was run up before Jacobs coming thither, and so much after that peaceably passed on untill the death of Joseph; that some rate the time of their rigid servitude but to one hundred and fourtie yeares, and some but to one hundred twentie one at the most, which may appeare from this computation following. The summe of foure hundred and thirtie yeares equally divided, the one halfe of them was spent before their going into Egypt, the other halfe in their abiding there. Two hundred and fifteene yeares passed before their passage into Egypt, which may be reckoned thus; from the promise given to Abram, to the birth of Isaac twentie five yeares, compare, Gen. 12. 4. with Gen. 21. 5. from the birth of Isaac, to the birth of Jacob, threescore yeares, Gen. 25. 26. from thence to their coming into Egypt an hundred and thirtie yeares, Gen. 47. vers. 9. which made up into one totall summe amount to two hundred and fifteene yeares; the other two hundred and fifteene were taken up in their sojourning in Egypt, namely, ninetie foure before the death of Levi, who survived all the eleven Patriarches his brethren; and an hundred twentie one, betwixt his death and their deliverance out of Egypt: For Levi and Joseph were both born in the seven yeares of Jacobs second service under his Uncle Laban, Gen. 29. & 30. Levi in the fourth, and Joseph in the seventh, so that there were about three yeares between them: Now Joseph when his father and brethren came down into Egypt was thirtie nine yeares old, compare Gen. 41. 46. 51. & 45. 6. and then was Levi fourtie three or thereabout; and Levi lived one hundred thirtie and seven yeares, Exod. 6. 16. out of which those fourtie three being deducted, which he had spent before their coming into Egypt, it appeareth they were in Egypt ninetie foure yeares before his death; and those ninetie foure (in which they were well intreated for Josephs sake) being deducted out of the two hundred and fifteene (which they spent in that land) it remaineth that there were one hundred twentie one yeares from his death, to their redemption out of bondage; the most of which time, after there arose another Pharaoh that knew not Joseph, Exod. 1. 8. was spent in heavy servitude, which moved the Lord by a mightie and miraculous power, to wrest his own people out of the hands of the prond and persecuting Tyrant. But that the words of the Text may not be thought to contradict this limitation of time for the afflicted state of the posteritie of Jacob, they are to be read with a parenthesis, thus, Thy seed shall be a stranger in a land that is not theirs (and shall serve them, and they shall afflict them) foure hundred yeares, so that their affliction shall fall out within those foure hundred yeares, not hold out all the time of their sojourning.

V. 15. to thy fathers] Not meaning the particular place where the soules of Terah and Nahor were, but to the generall condition of the dead whereto his forefathers led him the way.

V. 16. fourth generation] That is, in the foure hundreth yeare, or somewhat above, which for evennesse of number, is not reckoned, as of the Jewish Interpreters of the Bible hath been observed on the thirteenth verse: Or by generation is meant betwixt the geniture, or birth of the father, and the sonne, so the fourth generation is to be reckoned from the descent of the sonnes of Jacob into Egypt, to their entrance into Canaan, as in the Tribe of Judah, from Judah to Phares, from Phares to Hesron, from Hesron to Caleb.

hither] That is, into Canaan, where Abraham was when God made his Covenant with him.

iniquitie of the Amorites] And of the Canaanites, as appears by Levit. 18. Deut. 6. & 12. and their iniquities were chiefly of three kinds, all very heinous; one was Idolatry of a most execrable sort, sacrificing their sonnes and daughters unto Devils; another was grievous oppression of the poore and stranger; the third was prodigious lust, not onely by incestuous uncleanesse with their neerest kindred, but even by Sodomie and beastialitie.

yet full] There is a fulnesse of sinne, which groweth by degrees to a just measure of merit of extraordinary vengeance from above: See Jer. 51. 13. Dan. 8. 23. Matth. 23. 32. Dan. 11. 36. Which may be a preservative of patience, at the prosperitie of the wicked, since the reward of their wickednesse is sure, though it be slow.

V. 17. a smoaking furnace] The smoaking furnace, and burning lampe, or lampe of fire passing betwixt the parts, signified Gods assent to the covenant after the manner noted vers. 10. for God is compared to fire, Heb. 12. vers. last, and makes apparitions by fire, Exod. 3. 2. & 20. 18. And Christ, who is God, appeared to Daniel, and John with eyes like a flame, Dan. 10. 6. Revel. 1. 14. and the smoaking furnace, whose fire is not seen, may note that God himself is invisible, though he shew a burning lampe as a glimpse of his glory. Besides, the smoaking furnace may note the great affliction of the Israelites in Egypt, Exod. 1. vers. 11. 18. see Psal. 21. 9. Lam. 5. 10. Mal. 4. 1. but especially, Deut. 4. 20. Jer. 11. 4. and the burning lampe deliverance from it, or salvation out of it; as Isa. 62. 1. and that in this order, first the furnace of affliction, and then the lampe of salvation.

V. 18. have I given] Gods promises for the future, are oft times set downe, as already performed; by reason of his faithfulnesse, and infallibility.

from the river] Which some expound to be from the fountaine of Euphrates, to the fall; most take it for the River Nilus, or for a branch of it running betwixt Pelusium and Rhinocorura, or Rhinocolura, so named from the severity of an Egyptian King, cutting off the noses of notorious theeves and malefactors, and banishing them to that place, Diodor. Sic. lib. 2. cap. 1. Some derive this River from the mountaines of Kedar, and some affirme it hath not its Originall and supply from the earth, but from heaven by raine, and therefore it is called by such a name in Latine as signifieth a Brooke, which sometimes may be dry; howsoever, it bordereth on the South part of Palestine, or the Land of Canaan. The usuall limits of the Land of Canaan are noted for the Longitude to be from Dan, a (Northerne Citie situate at the foot of Mount Lebanon) to Bersheba (a Southern citie in the Tribe of Simeon) that is, about an hundred and sixty miles in length; and the latitude or breadth, from Jordan in the East, to the great Sea Westward, which is about eighteene miles, Adrichom. Delph. Epist. Prefixt. Theatr. terr. Sanct. and in the 34. of Numbers where the parts of the Land of Canaan were most exactly described, it is confined farre short of the extent here set downe; but we are to conceive that this promise was not made personally to Abram; but for his posterity, and to be made good by degrees; for all that the Israelites possessed they had not at once; Exod. 23. 29. nor in the same manner and tenure; for they had the Land of Canaan in possession, afterwards the seed of Abram had the dominion of other Countreys, according to the amplitude of the promise in this place; as we see, 1 King. 4. 21. or if they had not, the cause was in their breach of covenant with God, not in Gods with them.

great river] (Joh. 1. 4.) The River Euphrates was called the great river, not that of it selfe it was greater then any other, but for that by the falling of Tygris into it, it swelled beyond the breadth of other rivers.

V. 19. The Kenites] Are thought to be the same with the Midianites, Judg. 1. 16. compared with Exod. 3. 1. Here are reckoned tenne sorts of people in Canaan, which by mixture, or diminution of some of them, afterwards were reduced to seven, as they are distinctly named, and definitely numbred, Deut. 7. 1.

the Kenezites] These are thought to be the off-spring of Kenaz a Duke of Esaus race, Gen. 36. 15. 42. and more usually styled Idumeans: and though those that dwelt in Mount Seir might not be medled with, (God having made an expresse prohibition even to a foot of ground, Deut. 2. 4, 5.) yet this seemeth not to be generall in regard of persons, nor of times, for the Edomites that descended from Esau and bare his name (for one of his names was Edom) were all of them subdued by David, and brought under servitude, 2 Sam. 8. 14.

V. 21. Canaanites] That name is sometime taken generally for any one of the Land of Canaan, and sometime specially, as here, and Deut. 7. 1. for a particular sort of Canaanites, who for something notable above the rest retained the name of the whole Nation. See Annot. on Chap. 13. vers. 7.

CHAP. XVI.

Vers. 1. Sarai bare him no children] Those, whom God most favoureth, are not alwaies most fruitfull, though the fruit of the wombe be his reward, Psal. 127. 3. see vers. 10.

V. 2. restrained] She religiously acknowledgeth the restraint of her fruitfulnesse to be from God, but faileth in binding Gods power to the common order of nature, as though he could not give her children in her old age.

V. her maid] Her bondwoman, Gal. 4. 22. whom she made choice of, rather then of a freewoman, because of such a one the issue should be as hers, as Rachel said of her hand-maid Bilhab, Gen. 30. 3. Of such adopted issue see 2 Sam. 21. 8. Esth. 2. 7.

gave her] Abraham set no affection upon her as a bed-fellow, before Sarai offered her for a wife; it was not then unlawfull lust, but a desire both of Abraham, and Sarai, that he might be the father, though she were not the mother of the promised seed; and this was practised by the Patriarchs in that time, though the first institution were otherwise, Gen. 2. 24. Mal. 2. 15.

to be his wife] That is, in stead of a wife, as touching societie in the bed, but otherwise she was inferiour to a wife. See Annot. on Chap. 25. 1.

V. 4. And he went] The first promise God made to him, was for multiplication of his progeny, but he told him not how, and he seemed after long expectation, to conceive that it must be fulfilled by an adopted heire, Chap. 15. 3. God tels him, vers. 4. that he should have an heire of his owne loines, and having no such promise for Sarai, nor any hope by her contemned barrennesse, to have issue by her; he takes her offer for her maid, wherein they both failed through infirmitie of faith.

despised] This punishment declareth what they gaine, who attempt any thing against the word of God; evill counsell proveth worst to those that give it; and for Hagar we see in her a note of an ill condition, which is to be proud, and scornfull, when she should have beene humble, and thankfull. See Prov. 30. 21.

V. 5. My wrong] I suffer wrong by the insolencie of my handmaid, who hath ill requited my kindnesse to thee, and her; and I must lay the blame upon thee, who shouldest make her to be of better behaviour towards me; or her wrong of me will be a wrong upon thee, since being one flesh with thee by marriage, her contempt of one, must needs turne to the disparagement of both. Some take the words not so much for a complaint, as for a commination; as if Sarai should threaten to be meet with him, and to recompence his wrong with some ill requitall; howsoever herein she bewrayes more passion then either religion, or judgement, as the Israelites, Exod. 5. 21. and the wife of Moses, Exod. 4. 26.

V. 6. in thine hand] To correct her for her fault; though Sarai shewed too much wrath to her maid, and too little reverence to her husband; yet he gives her the respect of a wife, and the authoritie of a mistresse, without any returne of intemperance, or contumely towards her.

hardly] Geneva, hardle? Heb. afflicted her. Correction given in anger hath usually more of rigour, then of right. = roughly.

V. 7. Angel] Which is Christ, as appeareth by vers. 10 13. who is called an Angel, Exod. 14. 19. & Chap. 23. 20 21. 23. Isa. 63. 9. Mal. 3. 1. and who descendeth to the meanest in their miseries, to advise and comfort them.

to Shur] That was a Citie in the way from Canaan to Egypt, her native Countrey, according to her name which signifieth flying, Schindl. Pentaglot. Col. 422. she played the fugitive from her mistresse; her pride, and impatience of correction, made her set light by the best family in the world; and so in effect, to excommunicate her selfe from it, and in likelihood, from Religion, to her Egyptian Idolatry.

V. 9. Returne] She should not have left her place for the displeasure of her mistresse, Eccles. 10. 4. nor have runne away with her masters child; but have submitted to the correction which she deserved, 1 Pet. 2. 18. and that is the counsell which the Angel giveth her.

V. 11. Ishmael] His name was given him by an Angel, and it signifieth as some render it the Lord shall heare; as others, the Lord hath heard; which is more agreeable to the reason rendered by the Angel for it, viz. because the Lord hath heard thy affliction.

V. 12. a wilde man] Or according to the Hebrew, a wilde asse man; That is, fierce and unruly, as a wilde asse among men; see Job 39. 5, 6, 7, 8. Jer. 2. 24. Hos. 8. 9. A contentious man is like a wilde asse, without either wit, or manners; this is the condition of the Saracens the posteritie of the Ishmaelites, who have their name from Saric, which in the Arabian Tongue signifieth a thiefe. Schindl: col. 423. Such especially have their hands against every one for booty, and every ones hand against them for safety.

his hand shall be] He shall be a very quarrelsome man, shewing himselfe an enemy to many, and provoking many to be his enemies.

dwell in the presence] So did Ishmael, who is named with Isaac, as in a brotherly society coming to the funerall of his father, Gen. 25. 9. and died in the presence of all his brethren, Gen. Chap. 25. ver. 18. And for the Ishmaelites (his posteritie) the meaning is, that they shall multiply, and inlarge their habitations about the borders of their brethren; who were some of them his brethren by the fathers side, as the sonnes of Keturah the Midianites, and others his neere kinsmen, as the Idumeans, Ammonites, and Moabites.

V. 13. here looked] To have a vision of God, or revelation from God in her holy masters family was no such great marvell, as that here in the wildernesse God would vouchsafe so much grace to so unworthy an handmaid, so insolent a servant to so gracious a mistresse, so transported first with pride of her favour, and then with impatience of deserved correction.

Looked after] That is, have I (after a vision of God, who sees me, and hath talked with me) power to look, and live? for the appearance of God, or of an Angel was conceived to be a forerunner of death; therefore these be words of wonder, that after that entercourse betwixt God, and her, she yet liveth, which must arise by comparison of mans sinfull frailty, with Gods omnipotent purity. See Gen. 32. 30. Exod. 24. 11. & 10. 1. & 33. 20. Deut. 4. 33. and Deut. 5. 24. Judg. 6. 22. 23. & Chap. 13. 22. Esai. 6. 5. Luke 5. 8.

V. 14. Beer-lahai-roy] (i.) the well of the living that seeth me: Either because the angel of the living God saw her; or because she saw the Angel of the Lord, and yet lived, but the former interpretation is rather to be received.

CHAP. XVII.

Vers. 1. Almighty] The word is Shaddai signifying Almighty; for God can doe any thing, Job. 42. 2. The Geneva renders it alsufficient, and so must he needs be, who is Almighty; this is a good ground of Abrahams beliefe of all the promises of God, though in things above nature, or against it.

Before

Before me (Gen. 48.15. Psal. 116. 9. 1 Kings. 8. 25.) That is, whither soever thou goest, have me still in thy thought, to believe what I tell thee, and to doe what I bid thee. See 1 Kings 2. 4. and Chap. 3. v. 6. 2 King. 20. 3.

Be perfect] or upright and sincere. The way to perfection, is so to live with men, as to consider God a looker on for all a man doth; and so to converse with God, as if men were spectators of his most private actions. See Annot. in Chap. 6. v. 9.

V. 2. Make my Covenant] That is, renew it, or establish it being made, as vers. 7. Lev. 9. 24. Ezek. 3. 23. Dan. 8. 17.

V. 3. Fell] Prostrate adoration is not unsutable to gratulation, or rejoycing. See ver. 17.

V. 4. many nations] Hebr. a multitude of nations.

V. 5. thy name] Ab signifieth Father; ram, high; so that Abram signifyeth high Father, and the letter [he] inserted, maketh the name to end in ham, and Ham is the first syllable of Hamon signifying a multitude, and that multitude includeth many Nations, Rom. 4. 17. the Gentiles, as well as the Israelites, and those not onely his naturall issue, as the Ishmaelites, Midianites, and Idumeans; but all true beleevers of what Nation soever, who are Abrahams children, Rom. 4. 11, 12. So his name now signifieth a high Father of a multitude: yet is not this name so given him, that it should be altogether unlawfull to use the other, for we see the contrary, Nehem. 9. 7. but it rather noteth Gods especiall favour, then prescribeth a necessary rule for that appellation. Some take the giving of a new name to note a Sacramentall renovation in the new sense of Circumcision, which now was first added to the Covenant, and thence hath it been the practise of such as professe Religion, to give names to their children at their Circumcision. See Luk. 1. 59. & Chap. 2. v. 2.

V. 7. God unto thee] I will exercise my perfections with especiall respect to thy protection, and comfort; and for thy sake to thy seed after thee. See Heb. 8. 10. Revel. 21. 3.

V. 8. unto thee] See Annot. in Chap. 35. vers. 12.

everlasting possession] So Esa. 60. 21. yet this was but upon condition of the peoples part of the Covenant, which is faith, and obedience; which broken by them, they enjoyed the Land but a little while, Esa. 63. 18. but to the repentant beleever the promise is made good by an eternall inheritance, Heb. 9. 15. 1 Pet. 1. 4.

V. 9. Covenant] Circumcision is called the Covenant, because it is appointed by God as a Seale of the Covenant, and hath the promise of grace joyned unto it; which is common to all Sacraments. See Exod. 12. 11. Matth. 26. 18. Luk. 22. 20. Col. 2. 12. and as it is performed as a condition of the Covenant enjoyned by God, it is a Morall obedience; as exercised through faith in Gods promise, it is Sacramentall.

V. 10. man-child] Male-children were onely circumcised, because the beginning of generation is from that sex, and so the originall of corruption by generation was rather male then female; yet served it for a signe of that covenant to the female sex, because the woman is of the man, as the Apostle saith, 1 Cor. 11. 8. and the females were accompted (as to this Sacrament) with reference to their fathers, or to their husbands; so that to them (if they did beleeve, and assent unto the Covenant, as God ordained it) may be applyed the saying of the Apostle, 1 Cor. 7. 19. Gal. 6. 15.

V. 11. foreskin] To wit, of the genitall part, which so soone as sinne appeared, was for shame kept out of sight; and which is not onely corrupt in it selfe, but the means to conveigh corruption to another, which yet God can diguise with an holy use, in a sacramentall sense, and hereby upon this dishonourable part he hath set so much honour, according to that of the Apostle, 1 Cor. 12. 23. that many nations have willingly taken up circumcision, as an honour to themselves; and the want of it hath been sometimes upbraided by way of contempt, as 1 Sam. 17. 36. The uses of circumcision were partly to distinguish Gods people from other nations, and to separate them from them; so that without they would yeeld to that, they were to have little communion with them, Gen. 34. 15. Partly to signifie the cutting off of concupiscence, and the extirpation of sinne, Deut. 10. 16. & 30. 6. Jer. 4. 4. Rom. 2. 29. & 4. 11. Phil. 3. 3. Col. 2. 11. which cometh by that part in propagation from man to man. And partly to betoken the puritie of the promised seed, who was to have mans nature, but without any corruption, which in ordinary generation is derived from it; and withall, not onely to be a signe of Gods Covenant with Abraham, and his seed, especially the godly, but to be a Seale of the righteousnesse of faith, Rom. 4. 11. and remission of sinnes by the bloodshedding of the promised seed, Heb. 9. 22. Some adde, that it is a type of Baptisme.

V. 12. eight dayes old] Heb. a sonne of eight dayes. Yet if the child were too weake to beare circumcision, it might be forborne till it were stronger: see Josh. 5. vers. 5, 6. but sooner then the eighth day the child was not to be circumcised, lest it should be too weake to endure the paine; nor were young cattell to be offered untill they had beene nourished seven dayes with the damme, Levit. 22 27. and it was better for the mother who by that time might be in better case to beare her part of the severity of that Sacrament (viz. her motherly compassion for the paine of her child.) Here is a ground for Baptisme of infants; for Baptisme succeedeth in the place of Circumcision, as the Sacrament of admission, or entrance into the Church, Col. 2. 12.

V. 13. He that is borne] All the males of his family, whether natives or strangers, bond or free, must needs be circumcised, so are the words of this verse; which is to be understood of the children of strangers; for none of them, if of age to consent or dissent, was to be compelled to be circumcised; for Circumcision was to be used but as a token of the covenant, vers. 11. and he that was out of the covenant (as all those who were not of Abrahams seed by the free woman were, unlesse they were Proselytes, and willingly betook themselves to the profession of the Religion of Abraham, and then they were Abrahams spirituall, though not his carnall, posteritie) was kept out from Circumcision also; upon this ground it is probably conceived that neither Ishmael nor Esau, if they had beene out of the families of their fathers, had beene bound to receive Circumcision.

everlasting] The word Olam, or Ghnolam, in the Originall is sometimes referred to the time past, as remember the dayes of old, remove not the ancient land-marke, Prov. 22. 28. The word rendred old, and ancient, is Olam, or Ghnolam in both places. Sometimes it is taken for the time to come, and that either for terme of life, as Deut. 15. 17. or for some long duration, determined by some notable change, or alteration of things; as the doores of the Temple are called everlasting doores, Psal. 24. 9. by which the King of glory, that is, the Arke, with Gods especiall presence betweene the Cherubims, 1 Sam. 4. 4. was to enter; yet those doores were destroyed with the Temple; and in the ruine of it, after the coming of Christ, was Circumcision, and other ordinances of the old Priesthood at an end; see Heb. 7. 12. Chap. 8. vers. 9, 10. and the Covenant may be said to be everlasting, in respect of the spirituall part, for which Circumcision was ordained; and in respect of the long continuance of the outward ceremonie.

V. 14. cut off] Which cutting off may be conceived to be of three kinds; 1. By capitall punishment by the Magistrate on such as were bound unto it, and did contemne it. 2. By excommunication of them, as not appertaining to the people of God. 3. By Divine judgement, where the former means were not, or could not with conveniencie be used. But howsoever it fell out with offenders of full age, (for it is doubtfull how this cutting off should be understood) yet it cannot be meant of Infants; for though the Septuagint adde to child [eight dayes old] that is not in the Hebrew Text, nor can they be said to breake the Covenant, who can doe nothing that belongeth to the keeping of it; and the words from the originall may be read thus, The male that doth not circumcise the fore-skinne of his flesh: that is, who could doe it himselfe, or actually consent to the doing of it by another, and would not: they then by whose default Circumcision is omitted here are threatned, and so we see that Moses, who should have circumcised his child, was in danger to be killed, not the child it selfe, Exod. 4. vers. 24, 25. Besides that the want of Circumcision (except in case of contempt or wilfull neglect) was not so perillous, and penall, (as to be punished with cutting off) may appeare by the omission of it for fourty yeares in the wilderuesse, Josh. 5. 7. which is not yet reproved in the Scripture; and the Passeover prescribed to be kept the fourteenth day of the first moneth upon the same termes, as an Ordinance for ever, Exod. 12. 14. 16. and on the same penaltie, vers. 15. might yet upon extraordinary occasion be put off untill the fourteenth day of the second moneth, Num. 9. 10, 11. and was omitted for the most part during the Israelites journeying in the wilderneſse; for it was celebrated but once in fourtie yeares, nor was to be eaten by any that was not circumcised. There was then no such necessitie to salvation either of the one, or the other; as that damnation should be the punishment of a meere omission, especially in Infants not capable either of the command, or contempt; yet if any not circumcised in his childhood, should when he were come to ripenesse of yeares refuse the Sacrament, he would become guiltie of the contempt of God in it, and so would deserve to be cut off either by the hand of the Magistrate, or by excommunication out of the Church, or by the Justice of God, as in the case of Moses before mentioned; and if he continued in that contumacie, he deserved to be cut off from all communion of the Saints both on earth, and in heaven: The like commination is made for the breach of other temporarie ordinances, as Exod. 12. 15. & Chap. 31. 14. Levit. 7. 20. & Chap. 10. 6, 7, 9.

V. 15. but Sarah] That name Sarai (as some expound it) signifieth my Lady, or Princesse, or in the plurall Number, my Princesses: they that gave her that name wisht her much honour, and with her name, at least in their affection, prophecied of it; but that name having a terme of restriction my, is not so honourable rable as that which is given her by God: For now as her husbands name was changed to note the multiplicitie of his seed, so is hers for the same reason, I changed into H, the first letter of Hamon signifying multitude, for she was to be a fruitfull mother of much people, by the spreading of Isaacs posteritie, her naturall sonne; and by multiplying spirituall daughters, 1 Pet. 3.6. so that though she was but a Lady of a particular family now, she was to have a female preeminence of much larger extent and compasse.

laughed] (Psal. 126.2.) This laughing is of admiration at Gods favour, not of distrust in his power, Rom 4.19,20. though he had hitherto found an indisposition in his body to beget a child, and having beene so long without, he could not but entertaine the promise by way of wonder and rejoycing; and in this rejoycing his faith might reach as farre as the joy of the Messiah, Luk. 2.10. for our Saviour saith, he saw his day and rejoyced in it, Joh. 8.56. and it might be strange to him, that Sarah whose present condition was past hope of conception, should now bring forth; and that himselfe having so long been onely an husband, should now, and not before, begin to be a father, and that they both should be fruitfull in age, who in youth had beene barren.

an hundred yeares old] His yeares at that age of the world seeme not in themselves to be any great impediment to procreation of children; and we read long after this, that Cato the famous Censor was father of a child at eighty yeares of age; and King Massinissa at eighty sixe yeares. Plin. Nat. Hist. lib. 7. cap. 14. But there was somewhat more in Abrahams case then meere age, to make the promise more admired; and that was, that he found an indisposition of body to beget, as if (as to that purpose) it were dead, as the Apostle speaketh, Rom. 4.19. If it be said, that thirty seven yeares after this, when Sarah was dead and buried, his body was not so dead, but that he married againe, and had sixe children by Keturah, Gen. 25.1,2. It is true, and therein God might shew his power in renuing his vigour as the youth of an Eagle, Psal. 103.5.

And shall Sarah] The matter was more strange that Sarah now should be a mother, then that Abraham should be a father, (though the same reason be rendred for it, that is, the barrennesse of both, Rom. 4.19) for as females are marriageable sooner then males, and so may be mothers younger then the male kinde are fathers; so the vertue and power of conception ceaseth sooner then in men, as when they are about fifty yeares old. Plin. Nat. Hist. lib. 7. cap. 14. whereas it is usuall with men after that age, to be fathers of children.

V. 18. O that Ishmael] His affection to Ishmael, whom he knew, makes him lesse glad of Isaac, whom yet he knew not. Ignorance of better, makes many take up their content with the worse; so many embrace the present world, with little longing after the future, though much more worthy both of desire and endevour; because they have none acquaintance with it: yet Abraham sheweth himselfe a pious and an indulgent father, wishing he might live in Gods sight; that is, in his favour, as in the light of his countenance, Psal. 4.6. for favour is signified by sight, as displeasure by hiding of the eyes, Isa. 59.2.

V. 19. call his name Isaac] Which signifieth laughter, from his laughing, not from hers; for yet she had not laughed at the promise: Or, he might have his name of laughter for the joy that both of them might have by the birth of so hopefull a sonne.

everlasting] See Annot. on vers. 13.

V. 20. Twelve Princes] Gen. 25.16.

V. 21. But my covenant] He promiseth to Ishmael a numerous and noble progenie of twelve Princes, vers. 20. but his principall blessing which is spirituall, he will settle upon Isaac by solemne covenant.

V. 22. went up] He withdrew the demonstrations of his especiall presence, as Gen. 35.13. Judg. 13.20.

V. 23. the selfe same day] They were well instructed, which so readily obeyed to be circumcised without resistance; Which thing declareth that masters in their houses, ought to be as Preachers to their families, that from the highest to the lowest they may obey the will of God. And it declareth likewise, that this Sacrament was at first established by undoubted assurance of Divine Revelation; for if by any authoritie inferiour to that, it had beene proposed; it would have beene rejected with indignation, and disdaine, as a thing both shamefull, and painefull, and, in respect of tender infants, sinfull: no wise father, nor tender hearted mother, would ever have given consent to shed the bloud of their little infant but of eight dayes old; but the Majestie of the Lord so appeared with the appointment, that Abraham and his family were soone perswaded to it.

V. 24. ninetie yeares old and nine] The age of Abraham is five severall times exactly noted in the Scripture, Gen. 12.4. & 16. 16. and in this place, and 25.7. with the variations of increase; which sheweth Gods vigilant providence over the persons, and passages of the faithfull, and the estimation he hath of them in preserving their memory, Psal. 112.6. whereas the name of the wicked shall rot, Prov. 10.7.

V. 25. thirteene yeares old] Hence the Arabians as the posteritie of Ishmael, going rather by example then by rule, use Circumcision not the eighth day, but at the thirteenth yeare, Josephus Antiq. lib. 1. at the end of Chap. 12. in some Editions, and at the beginning of the 13. in others.

V. 26. was Abraham] The circumcision of Abraham, and Ishmael is especially noted, as the chiefe of that great family: to shew, that those, who are first in honour and preeminence, should be most forward in obedience to Gods Ordinance, how difficult, or distastfull soever it be.

V. 27. circumcised with him] It is not said by whom, it is not like that Abraham alone did circumcise them all in one day, though (no doubt) he bore the principall part in that performance, both for the Sacrament it self, & the religious instruction, and prayer belonging to it. The moderne Jewes use Chirurgions in that service, and some are especially imployed therein, as Midwives for child-birth, who are knowne by the long and sharpened nayles of their thumbs. Of the whole manner of Circumcision, see Eux. Synag. Judæor. c. 2. p. 71, &c.

CHAP. XVIII.

Vers. 1. Plaine of Mamre] See Annot. on Chap. 13. vers. 18.

V. 2. three men] That is, three Angels in mens shape, so they seemed to him, and as such he entertained them; and so (though he knew it not) he had Angels for his guests, Heb. 13.2. and among them Christ, for he assuming an humane shape, as the other two did, made one among them, and was the chiefe of them; as the title given to him, vers. 3. & 17. sheweth: and he is called an Angel also, Mal. 3.1.

V. 2. towards the ground] He did them humble reverence after the manner of the Easterne Countreys.

V. 3. Lord] Speaking to one of them, in whom appeared to be most majestie, he calleth him Lord, and that truly, for he is indeed the Lord not onely of men, but of Angels, Heb. 1.6.

V. 4. wash your feet] For men used, because of the great heat to goe bare-footed in those parts, either altogether bare, or with sandals, which had soles below, but were open above, and fastned to the foot with a buckle or lace; therefore it is noted by the Apostle for an act of charitie, to wash the Saints feete, 1 Tim. 5.10.

V. 5. a morsell of bread] He speakes sparingly, but entertains bountifully, vers. 6,7. It is good to have our deeds exceed our words.

therefore are ye come] (Chap. 19.8. & 33.10.) As directed to me by the speciall providence of God, to give me occasion and opportunitie to expresse my respect, and to doe offices of charitable observance unto you.

V. 6. unto Sarah] Though Sarah were a great woman, so great as to be styled. Lady or Princesse, having at least three hundred and eighteene servants under her; yet she is bidden to make ready meal, knead and bake cakes of it; and if she did it not with her owne hands, she was (at least) to oversee the doing of it in due manner, and with good dispatch: A good example for great Ladies, that they doe not thinke themselves too great or too good to play the good huswives. See Prov. 31. from vers. 10. to the 24.

three measures] The least measure among the Hebrewes was of the quantity of an Hens egge, whereof twenty foure make a Cab, and sixe Cabs are thought to be one of these measures.

fine meale] Well and curiously sifted for the separation of brans, and all the grosser part of the corne when it cometh from the Mill.

V. 7. ran] This hospitalitie of Abraham is very commendable, not onely for the plenty of provision, and choyce of the best; but for the speedy preparation.

V. 8. eate] As God gave them bodies for a time, so he gave them the faculties thereof, to walke, to speake, to eate, and drinke, and such like; yet what was let into body in an extraordinary manner, might afterwards be resolved into aire; and what they did, might not be so much by any naturall faculties of those bodies they assumed, as by a supernaturall application of those parts they had to what they did; and though our Saviour say, Luke 24.37,38,39. that a Spirit hath no such parts as man hath, and therefore gives them sensible satisfaction by handling that he was no spirit; yet spirits might, and sometimes did assume humane shapes.

V. 9. Where is Sarah] This question is moved, not out of ignorance, but to take an occasion by it, for what was after to be said, as Gen. 4.9,10.

V. 10. return] Hebr. returning I will return. By a visitation of performance, as now of promise.

time of life] (2 King. 4.16. Rom. 9.9.) Some referre this to the Angel, as if he should say; If I live, &c. but then it must be taken after the manner of men, for Angels die not. Or, according to the time of life, may import as much assurance of the thing, as of the life of an Angel, who is immortall; or, when the child shal come into this life by thy conception and delivery, wherein was an implicite promise both of the mothers and of the childs life also, this God could have effected presently, but he would not hasten the pace of production before the ordinary time of bringing into life.

behind him] It seemes by this time he was neerer the Tent then Abraham was, and standing with his face towards Abraham without it, Sarah was at his backe, being in the doore of the Tent.

V. 11. stricken in age] Though Abraham being 99. yeates of age was past the prime of his strength, and so in a declining state of body, and in respect of fruit, as a dead tree in his own conceipt, Rom. 4. 19. (especially, having continued childlesse untill this time) yet living to the age of 175 yeares, he was not so farre decayed, as to be altogether unapt for the begetting of a sonne. See Annot. on Chap. 17. vers. 17.

manner of women] Who have helps to conception, which after that age doe usually cease with that sexe, though sometimes they may continue longer, and some now and then conceive without them. Arist. hist. animal. lib. 7. cap. 2. and it is reported by Pliny, of one that bare a child at sixtie yeares of age, of another at eightie: Plin. Nat. Hist. lib. 7. cap. 14. Howsoever Sarah being of this age, and state of body, the prediction of her child-bearing, must needs be of Divine revelation, and the accomplishment of it by a Divine vertue.

V. 12. laughed] Not as Abraham did out of joy and admiration, Chap. 17. 7. nor as the wicked, by way of derision; but out of some diffidence mingled perhaps with some degree of irreverence, by reason of her own defect of faith; for she rather had respect to the order of nature, then beleeved the promise of God: but this was at the first apprehension of the news, which then seemed to be more strange, then true; but afterwards she recollected her religious thoughts of God, and beleeved that which at first she but admired, rather then beleeved. See Heb. 11. 11.

within her selfe] Secretly, which gave her confidence to deny what she did, but that was soone turned into feare, when she saw she had to doe with one that could discover what unto men was most concealed.

my lord] Though she failed of faith in the promise, she was not wanting in her due respect to her husband, whom in her heart she honoured as her Lord, and not onely tearmed him so in outward speech, 1 Pet. 3. 6.

V. 14. too hard] See the Annot. on Chap. 17. vers. 1.

V. 15. she was afraid] To her weakenesse of faith, she addeth the telling of an untruth, and fearing to receive a rebuke, she is not afraid to deserve it by denying what she did; Such failings of the godly are noted not for imitation, but for caution.

V. 16. * bring them on the way] * Act. 20. 38. Rom. 15. 24. 1 Cor. 16. 6. 11. Tit. 3. 13.

V. 17. Lord] Jehovah the Hebrew word sheweth, that this Angel was Christ; for this word is onely applyed to God.

hide] As it is a part of friendship to have the same friends and the same enemies, and to communicate in secret counsels; so God sheweth that he taketh Abraham for his friend, 2 Chro. 20. 7. in both; for the former, see Gen. Chap. 12. v. 3. and for the later this place is sufficient evidence, where it appeareth that God sheweth himselfe as a familiar friend to his faithfull, and obedient servants, communicating unto them his secret counsels, Gen. 6. 13. Psal. 25. 14. Amos 3. 7. Joh. 15. 15. They then being so instructed of God may well be wiser then other men, Psal. 119. 98, 99. This Judgement was the more meet to be revealed unto Abraham, as to a chiefe member of the Church, and might and would thence give good documents, and instructions to his Church. Whereof God giveth him a very good testimony, vers. 19. and it was also to give him occasion to exercise his charitie and devotion in praying for the Sodomites.

V. 18. a great Nation] By reason of his multiplyed posteritie.

blessed in him] That is, by reason of Christ descended from his loynes.

V. 19. I know] God knoweth not only what a man is, but what he shall be; not only what he doth, but what he will doe; therefore we must not measure his dealing with men by mens rules or examples, who know no further then for the present.

he will command] (Gen. 28. 1. Deut. 32. 46. Prov. 6. 20.) That which is here said of Abraham, should be done by every father of a family; who is so religiously to order his household, as to make it like unto a Church; so it is like, Philemon did; vers. 2. Though the Church in his house might be also the Assembly of Christians in the Primitive and persecuting times of the Gospel.

after him] The godly precepts of parents, and masters binde their children and servants to obedience, when they are dead. See Jer. 35. from the sixteen to the end of the Chapter.

that the LORD may bring] Mans obedience is no meritorious cause, though it be a condition of Gods beneficence; his love is the root; the goodnesse, and good things of his children the fruit of it, Deut. 4. 37.

upon Abraham] The happy condition of posteritie redounds to the honour, and to the comfort of their progenitors; and so on the contrary, parents may be said to suffer in their children, Matth. 15. 22.

V. 20. the cry] The notice that God takes of sinne is figuratively set out by a great cry or noise, that cannot but be heard; be the sinne never so secret or silent, he knows it as well as that which is most open and clamorous.

Sodom and Gomorrah] There were two cities more destroyed with fire and brimstone, but he nameth onely these two, as being more notable for estate and greatnesse, and more notorious for lewdnesse: they were guiltie of other sinnes, besides these expressed in this story. See Ezek. 16. 49.

V. 21. I will goe down] (Gen. 11. 5. Exod. 3. 8. Mic. 1 3.) God speaketh after the manner of men, to let them know, that he taketh especiall notice of notorious sinners, and will take a course to punish them; and to set them an example to enter into Judgement with good advice, as Job saith of himselfe, The cause which I knew not, I searched out, Job 29. 16. But God knoweth all things presently, without searching; though never so secret; certainly, without erring; though never so doubtfull, in respect of men. See Chap. 2. vers. 19.

cry] Our sinnes cry for vengeance, though none accuse: it is a figurative phrase importing that God is much provoked before he punish, Jonah 1. 2. See Annot. on vers. 20.

V. 22. stood yet before] Abraham by this time knew him, whom he talked with, to be God, to whom he sueth as to the Judge of all the world; and he taketh it upon him, and answereth as having the power of God to save, and to destroy; when the other two, that were with him, were gone before toward Sodome.

V. 23. the righteous] (Ezek. 9. & Chap. 21. 3.) That is, such as his Nephew Lot, or others who were not guiltie either by act, or approbation of those hainous crimes, which called for vengeance upon that sinfull Citie.

V. 25. shall not the Judge] And in this negative question is emphatically implyed an affirmative position, which is, that God above all others, must and will doe right; becaus from his Judgement there is none Appeale.

V. 27. dust and ashes] Dust, by the baseneesse of his originall, and end, for his bodily part, Gen 3. 19. and ashes, as deserving to be burned to ashes, if God should deale with him rather in justice then in mercy: of this he is the more apprehensive by his neerer approach unto God. See Isa. 6. 5. Luk. 5. 8.

V. 32. this once] If God refused not the prayer for the wicked Sodomites, even to the sixt request; how much more will he heare the prayers of the godly for the afflicted Church? In this intercession of Abraham, his charitie, his humilitie, his modesty, his fervency, and importunitie, excellent qualifications for a petitioner to God, are worthy to be observed and used in prayer. It is to be noted, that he prayeth not for Lot in particular, not doubting but God would set him in safetie from punishment, as well as he had kept him from societie in sinne; See vers. 23. 1 2 3 4 5.

ten] He speakes of Sodome onely, (and in Sodome (as some conceive) with especiall respect to Lots family) which had most provoked God to wrath, and which for Lots sake, he desired most to be spared. God declareth that his judgements were done in great mercy, for as much as all were so corrupt, that not only not fiftie, but not ten righteous men could be found there; and also that the wicked are spared for the righteous sake. See Gen. 12. 3. Jer. 5. 1. Isa. 65. 8. Yet these be acts of especiall grace, granted to great favourites, as Abraham was; but are not to be drawn into a generall rule, Ezek. 14. 18.

CHAP. XIX.

Vers. 1. Two Angels] Two of the three which were with Abraham, wherein we see Gods provident care in preserving his, albeit he reveale not himselfe to all alike; For Lot had but two Angels, Abraham three that appeared unto him, and were entertained by him; Gen. 18. vers. 2. of which three, one was God or the sonne of God; Called an Angel, Mal. 3. 1. though in the resemblance of man; who stayed with Abraham while the other two went toward Sodome, Chap. 18. vers. 22. to destroy it, vers. 13. of this Chapter.

in the gate] As Abraham at his Tent doore, Chap. 18. v. 1. where he might best observe who were the meetest objects for charitable entertainment, especially strangers, who at this time of the day (that is, evening) were either to take up their lodgings, or to abide in the streets all night.

V. 3. pressed upon them] That is, prayed them instantly.

turned in] In the precedent verse they said they would abide in the ſtreet all night, and they meant ſincerely ſo to have done, if Lots importunitie had not preſſed them to turne in to him; for a ſlight invitation may be ſeriouſly refuſed, and that which is ſerious and urgent, accepted afterwards, and that without either hypocriſie in the one, or levitie in the other. eate] See the Annot. on Chap.18. verſ.8.

V. 4. old and young] All the people; nothing is more dangerous, then to dwell where ſinne reigneth; for it corrupteth all: ſee Exod.16.2. Jer.9.4. & 32. 32. Ezek.14. 5. Nahum. 3.1. therefore better to ſtay all night in the ſtreets, as the Angels ſpake, verſ. 2. then to take up a lodging with ſuch lewd hoſts as the Sodomites were: And here we ſee that communitie in conſent is no good argument of a good cauſe, for the whole Citie is aſſembled for a moſt wicked purpoſe, againſt godly Lot, and his heavenly gueſts.

V. 5. know them] The Scripture in this word knowing, modeſtly intimateth a moſt immodeſt meaning, not fit to be mentioned in plaine termes: ſee Gen.4.1. Numb.31.17. Judg. 19.22. This ſinne is from theſe men (men in ſhape, though worſe then beaſts, in their luſts; as the Angels in humane appearance, were better then men) called Sodomie (as the buying of ſpirituall things from Simon Magus his offer, Act.8.18. is called Simonie) and it is an abuſe of either ſexe againſt nature: ſee Levit. Chap. 18. 22, &c. 20. 13. Rom.1.23,24. wherein the Sodomites were moſt impudent, Iſa.3.9. and to their impudence was added violence, as by thoſe ſonnes of Belial, Judg. 19.22.

V. 7. brethren] Not by bloud, or affinitie, nor by profeſſion of Religion; but by communitie of nature, and vicinitie of dwelling. In this courteous compellation, and ſubmiſſive ſupplication to thoſe who were diſpoſed to doe the fouleſt deeds that could be, he ſhewed his patience and his prudence; when many are vehemently bent againſt one, ſmooth words muſt ſerve in ſtead of rough reſiſtance; this is according to the Apoſtles counſell, 2 Tim.2.25.

V. 8. daughters] He deſerveth praiſe in defending his holy and honourable gueſts from diſhonourable violence and violation of their puritie; but he is to be blamed for ſeeking unlawfull meanes; for we may not doe evill, that good may come thereof, Rom.3.8. and it was the more evill, becauſe his daughters were betrothed, and in a manner married, verſ.14. though yet virgins, verſ.8. and howſoever it had been more ſhame in the Sodomites to offer that abuſe to his gueſts, it was more ſinne in Lot to offer to proſtitute his daughters to their brutiſh and boundleſſe luſts. Some thinke he made this motion, making account that ſuch an offer would qualifie them ſo, as to take them off from both; as if one ſhould pacifie an enraged man againſt a third perſon by offering a dagger to kill himſelfe to ſpare the other; or as Reuben, Chap.42.37.

for therefore] That I ſhould preſerve them from all injurie; that was Lots intent in his invitation, and thereto they yeelded their conſent, as if they came of purpoſe to put themſelves under his protection.

V. 9. Judge] When the godly doe but their dutie, the wicked impute unto them uſurpation above right, Exod. 2. 14. 2 Chron.25.16.

worſe] The wicked become worſe by that which ſhould make them better, and from ſhameleſſe impudence, proceede to fearleſſe violence.

V. 11. with blindneſſe] Which though it were univerſall, as the ſinne was; yet it was not totall; for it ſeemes they could diſcerne the houſe, but not the doore; as the Aramites, who had but a dimme or confuſed ſight when they followed the Prophet they knew not whither, 2 King.6.18. The ſame word that is here uſed for blindneſſe, (or blindneſſes in the plurall number, becauſe of the number of thoſe that were blind, or the extraordinarie manner of the blindneſſe it ſelfe) is uſed but once more in the Scripture, that is, 2 King.6.18. for the blindneſſe of the Aramites, who had ſuch a glimmering of ſight that they could follow the Prophet, though they did not diſtinctly diſcerne who he was, or the way they went, or the Citie where they were: ſee Mar.8.24. Luk.24.16. And this blindneſſe might be occaſioned by the Angels repreſentation of the doore as a continued wall, or of another figure then appeared before, or by thickning and darkning the aire, that it could not clearely convey the ſpecies to the eye; or by weakening the eye-ſight, or troubling the common ſenſe, that it could not plainly diſtinguiſh of the objects preſented unto it, which ſometimes we may diſcerne in drunkards, who have their eyes open, and yet doe not diſtinctly diſcerne what is ſet before them. The Sodomites eyes being before (as ~~Saint~~ Peter ſpeaketh) full of adultery, 2 Pet. 2. 14. that cannot ceaſe from ſinne, but ſtill luſtfully gazing after beautie without diſtinction of male or female, were juſtly and futably puniſhed in this ſort.

V. 12. ſonnes in law, or ſonnes] They mention theſe ſeverall titles to note how gracious Lot was, that for his ſake thoſe that pertained to him under what relation ſoever ſhold be preſerved, if they would be warned of the danger; but it ſeemeth Lot had no ſonnes of his owne, elſe he would have ſpoken to them as well as to his ſonnes in law, verſ. 14. whether he had other daughters then thoſe two whom he offered to the Sodomites as pure virgins, verſ.8. may be doubted; if he had not, theſe ſonnes in law were yet but eſpouſed to them, becauſe they were virgins; and the word [married] verſ. 14. may according to the Originall be rendred [taking his daughters] that is, about to take, as well as had taken them to wife, or ſhould marry (as ſome Tranſlations vary the reading) See Deut.22. verſ. 23,24, & Gen.38.11.14. & Matth.1. verſ.18,19,20. & 25. and theſe eſpouſals were uſefull and commendable preparatives before the conſummation of marriage.

V. 15. which are here] Which phraſe doth not neceſſarily imply that Lot had other daughters elſewhere, for which are here, or found, is according to the Hebrew word, no more then which.

iniquitie] Or, puniſhment. So neere of kinne are ſinne and puniſhment, that the one followeth the other as the effect doth the cauſe, and that one name may ſerve to ſignifie both: ſee Gen.4.7.13.

V. 16. laid hold] The mercy of God ſtriveth to overcome mans ſlowneſſe in following his calling. See Joh.6.44.

V. 17. he ſaid] That is, neither of the other two Angels, but he who ſtaid behind with Abraham, Chap.18.22. while they went toward Sodome, and now in their return met them, and made himſelfe knowne to Lot, as the paſſage betwixt them in the enſuing verſes ſhews.

looke not behind] (Luk. 9. 62. Matth. 24. 18.) The words though particularly ſpoken to Lot, were (as the event ſheweth, verſ.26.) directed to the reſt, who were ſo farre to renounce the delights, and to deteſt the lewdneſſe of Sodome, and to make ſo much haſt from it, as not to vouchſafe a looke towards it.

eſcape leſt] Humane meanes is not to be contemned, though the deliverance be of Divine grace. See verſ.12. & Rev. 18.4.

V. 18. not ſo] (Act.10.14.) Lots infirmitie of faith, and fearefulneſſe here appeares, which makes him ſpeake as if he ſaw a better way of ſecuritie to himſelfe, then God had ſhewed him.

V. 19. I cannot eſcape] See Annot. on verſ.22.

V. 20. a little one] A place for the ſmalneſſe of it of no great importance, but to be made an example of vengeance. The name of the Citie, Zoar, or, Tſoar, verſ.22. ſignifieth little, and being ſo, it is like there was the leſſe ſinne, and the more ſafety; and it was but a little way off; and ſo Lot might be ſooner there, then at the mountaine.

V. 22. I cannot] Becauſe Gods commandement was to deſtroy the Citie, and ſave Lot; it was thus decreed by God, and thus it needs muſt come to paſſe; wherein appeares how much the wicked are beholding to the godly for their company, and how much the godly are bound to God for his benignitie. See Iſa.65.8.

Zoar] Which before was call Bela, Chap.14.2.

V. 24. Sodome and Gomorrah] And the neighbour Cities, Jer.49.18. to wit, Admah, and Zeboim, mentioned as examples of Gods wrath, Hoſ.11.8. and all foure are named together, as partners in the ſame puniſhment, Deut.29.23.

brimſtone and fire] A fit puniſhment for ſo horrible a ſinne; the ſtinke of brimſtone, and the heat of fire anſwering to the noyſomeneſſe and burning of ſuch uncleanneſſe; a ſinne ſo contrary to God and man, that nature ſeemes to be inverted to puniſh it, and the paines of hell to come downe from heaven, fire contrary to its nature, deſcending; and raine, contrary to its nature, not quenching, but burning where it fell.

from the Lord] That is, from himſelfe, after the Hebrew phraſe, putting the Noune for the Pronoune, as Gen.1.27. & 2 Chron.7.2. and this ſhewing that this fierce vengeance came not from any inferiour, but from the ſupreme cauſe, even God himſelfe. They who underſtand this place ſo, that the Lord raining from the Lord, ſhould be meant of God the Sonne raining from God the Father, ſhew an attentive mind to the doctrine of the Trinitie; but hence to argue for that point againſt the Jews, or Anti-Trinitarians, is not ſo proper, ſince they may alledge there is an Hebraiſme in the phraſe, whereby the Noune is uſed for the Pronoune, (as hath beene ſaid and ſhewne out of Scripture:) therefore the Syrmian Councel which anathematizeth thoſe that deny this place for a proofe of the Trinitie, was rather raſh then truly religious. See Caranz: Sum. Concil. fol.9.p.b. in duodecimo.

V. 25. and all the plaine] Which had five Cities in it, Sodome, and Gomorrah, Admah, and Zeboim, and Zoar, whereof all but the laſt and the leaſt were conſumed by the miraculous judgement, verſ. 21. ſee Deut. 19. 23. which made the Lake Aſphaltites, called the dead Sea, becauſe no living creature is nouriſhed in it, or the ſalt Sea; ſee Annot. on Chap. 14.3. which in breadth is about five or ſixe miles, in length about foure or five dayes journey; of which memorable and horrible things are reported by Josephus de Bello Judaico lib.5. cap.5. & Adrich. Delph. Theatr. ter. Sanct. in the Tribe of Judah, p. 52. nu. 186. p. 44. nu. 66. and in particular he reporteth that there are trees bearing fruit, faire without, and but with a touch falling into ashes; the like is testified by Solinus, c. 48. and by Josephus in the place forecited. So doth God turne a fruitfull land into barrennesse for the wickednesse of them that dwell therein, Psal. 107. 34.

V. 26. looked back] As too much minding the wicked City, or too little heeding the prohibition of God, who was to be obeyed to a glance or looke of the eye, though that glance would have saved those Cities.

pillar of salt] That place is noted for Salt as well as for Brimstone, Gen. 14. 3. & Deut. 29. 23. This change was made as touching her body onely; some thinke she was strooke dead with lightning, and that her body was hardened and fixed in the place where it stood, and that it was of a salt and brackish smel, & therefore was called a pillar of salt. But Josephus according to the letter of the Text, saith, she was turned into a pillar of salt, Antiq. lib. 1. cap. 12. and that he hath seene it, and that it remained unto the day wherein he writ the report of it: and Plin. Nat. Hist. lib. 31. cap. 17. maketh mention of salt so hard as to serve for slate for the building of houses, and to hold out against all meanes of melting. Howsoever, this change was a notable monument of Gods vengeance (to all that passed that way) for perpetuall memory thereof; for salt preserveth things from perishing and putrefaction, therefore a perpetuall Covenant is called a covenant of salt, Num. 18. 19. 2 Chron. 13. 5. and we must keepe her judgement in memory, for a caveat against Apostasie in the least degree, by vertue of our Saviours memorandum, Luk. 17. 32.

V. 29. remembred Abraham] It is not unlike that Abraham made particular intercession for Lot, at least that he had him in his mind when he prayed for Sodome; the prayer of one faithfull person avails much for another, Philem. 22. And Lot had the more need of Abrahams prayer, because for his living among the wicked (when he might have done otherwise) he deserved to be made partaker of the temporall punishment.

V. 30. mountaine] He was bidden before, vers. 17. to fly to the mountaine, but refused, and made choice of Zoar as more safe; now he is afraid of Zoar, and flyeth for refuge to the mountaine. Want of faith in God, and obedience to God, makes us fickle, and unstable, as Jam. 1. 8.

feared to dwell in Zoar, and dwelt in a cave] His feare might be lest Zoar might be guilty of the same sinnes for which Sodome was consumed; or, that he as a noted opposite to the Sodomites, should be accused as some cause of their calamitie; for the wicked are very forward in criminall charges against the godly; witnesse the complaints of the Heathens against the ancient Christians, to whom was imputed whatsoever misery, whether from the hand of God or man, befell mankind. See c. 19. 9.

V. 31. not a man] Meaning in the Countrey which the Lord had now destroyed; being shut up in a cave, they expected no accesse of others unto them; else from the mountaine they might discerne Zoar remaining, and might, (but that their minds were troubled) have thought of their uncle Abraham, and his numerous family, who lived out of the compasse of this terrible desolation, though not very farre from the places that were destroyed: see vers. 28.

V. 32. drunke] For he would never have done that abominable act, if he had not beene overcome with wine, which might make him forget what was become of his wife, and so cause him not to doubt but that she was in his bed.

V. 33. perceived not] Drunkennesse drownes both the understanding, sense, and conscience: See vers. 35.

V. 34. this night also] Lot offended against the chastitie of both his daughters, in offering them up unto the Sodomites, and they now conspire against his chastitie; so is he punished in the same kind, wherein he offended; which is just, as from God, though evill in them: see Judg. 1. 7. 1 Sam. 15. 33. 1 Kin. 19. 21.

V. 36. with child] Thus God permitteth him to fall most horribly in the solitary mountaine, whom the wickednesse of Sodome could not overcome; God suffers such commixtions to take effect, while he makes more lawfull conjunction fruitlesse, for the greater shame of the fact.

V. 37. Moab] Signifieth of the father, or, according to the meaning, a sonne begotten by my father. See Annot. on vers. 38.

Moabites] Who, as they were borne of horrible incest, so were they and their posteritie vile, and wicked: see Numb. 21. 29. & Chap. 25. vers. 1, 2, 3. yet of such came vertuous Ruth, Ruth 3. 11. and of her was our blessed Saviour lineally descended, Mat. 1. 5. So can God out of the corrupteſt stock produce the most pleasant, and wholesome fruit.

V. 38. Ben-ammi] That is, sonne of my people: signifying by this, and the former name Moab, vers. 37. that they rather rejoyced in their sinne, then repented for it: Or, rather in their fruitfulnesse, then in their offence; for they minded not carnall pleasure so much as the propagation of posteritie, and to preserve seed of their religious father; in whose example we see many proofes of humane infirmitie, as in the inconsiderate offer of his daughters to the Sodomites; his feeble faith touching his safetie; first in the Mountaine, then in Zoar; his drunkennesse and incest; though without his knowledge; which are recorded for Caution against presumption; for in many things we sinne all, saith ~~Saint~~ James, Jam. 8. 2. and against indiscreet imitation of the examples of the best, which we must take, but with limitation, 1 Cor. 11. 1. and for consolation of those that offend of frailty; for notwithstanding his distrust, and in part disobedience, his suit was accepted, vers. 21. and after the worst of all this, the holy Spirit maketh honourable mention of him by ~~Saint~~ Peter, God delivered just Lot vexed with the filthy conversation of the wicked, 2 Pet. 2. 7.

CHAP. XX.

Vers. 1. Hence] That is, from the Plain of Mamre where he entertained the Angels, Chap. 18. 1. and where he had abode above foureteene yeares; he removed thence, haply, because the aire was lesse wholesome, being neere that noysome sulphurious Lake which was a memoriall of Gods vengeance on those wicked Cities destroyed by fire and brimstone. The distance betwixt the two places is measured to sixe leagues.

Kadesh and Shur] Two deserts.

Gerar] The name both of a Countrey and Citie of the Philistines, bordering upon the Southerne part of Canaan.

V. 2. said of Sarah] That is, to those that asked of him.

my sister] Abraham had now twice fallen into this fault; such is mans frailty, that the best may fall into the same fault more then once. So Jehosaphat though reproved by Jehu for joyning in league with wicked Ahab, 2 Chron. 19. 2. did again doe the like in his confederacie with Ahaziah, and was again reproved by another Prophet, 2 Chron. 20. 37. See Annot. on Gen. Chap. 12. 13.

Abimelech] A name usuall among the Kings of Palestine, as Pharaoh with the Kings of Egypt; it is compounded of benignitie and authoritie, signifying a Father and a King, for Rulers (and among them, Kings are the chiefe) are Fathers to such as are subordinate to them, as 2 King. 5. 18. Job 29. 16. and under that title are they to be honoured by the fifth Commandement; and hereby is implied that they must rule with indulgence, as Fathers; and their subjects obey with benevolence, as children.

V. 3. dreame] Dreames, for the most part, proceed of multitude of businesse, or thoughts of the day, Eccles. 5. 3. Or from the temperament of the body, or disposition of the mind; but sometimes they are sent of God, though very rarely; and when they are so, they are for the most part imparted to holy persons, and for holy and weighty reasons; and they bring their evidence and assurance with them, that they are no illusions of Satan, or of vain fancie, or fiction, as those reproved by the Prophet Jeremiah, Chap. 23. vers. 25. 27. And hereby God hath a preeminence above all humane teachers; for they can teach onely such as are awake, whereas he can instruct such as are asleepe, in their dreames, and thereby he can worke both the conviction, and conversion of a sinner. See Chap. 20. 3.

dead] This was said to him when Gods hand was upon him in the plagues he sent upon him and his household, which were not deadly, but now to prevent the accomplishment of his purpose, and the further punishment due unto it, God commeth upon him with this commination; which sheweth how greatly God doth detest the breach of marriage: This death was deserved by that he had done already, and purposed to doe; and had beene certainely inflicted, if he had perfected his sinne: See vers. 7. See also, Chap. 2. 17. & Joh. 3. vers. 18.

V. 4. not come neere] He was kept at a modest distance from her, by Gods restraining power, vers. 6.

righteous nation] Here he confesseth that God would not punish but upon just cause; therefore whereſoever he punisheth, the cause is just; he conceiveth that the plague which his family felt, was for his sake inflicted upon his other subjects, as well as on his owne family; for many times the subjects smart for the sinnes of the Rulers: whereof there is example not onely in the Scripture, as here, and Chap. 34. 24. & 2 Sam. 24. 17. but in humane stories; and he accounts himselfe and his people righteous, because they knew not Sarah to be a wife.

V. 5. integritie of my heart] As one falling by ignorance, and not doing evill of purpose, nor thinking to any one any harme; or not meaning to enjoy her otherwise then as his lawfull wife, though he had one before, vers. 17. for Polygamy was not taken for a sinne in those dayes.

V. 6. I with-held thee] God maketh the restraint of sinne, Gen. 31. 7. & 1 Sam. 25. 26. and the hearts of Kings are in his hand, Prov. 21. 1. and he doth it sometimes by secret instinct, sometimes by open instruction, and sometimes by Divine correction, as in this place.

from sinning] If Abimelech had lien with Sarah, though he knew not that she had an husband, he had sinned; for ignorance though it be an excuse in part, doth not excuse from the whole, Luk.12.48.

against me] Though the sinne were immediately against Abrahams right, and Sarahs chastitie; yet God having forbidden all unlawfull actions, he cannot sinne against man, but he must sinne against God. See Gen.39 9.

V. 7. restore] Restitution of that which is unlawfully taken must be made, before sinne be remitted, or punishment removed. See Levit.6.4.7.

a Prophet] That is, one to whom God revealeth himselfe familiarly; and by the Spirit of Prophecie he did foresee Christ many hundred yeares before he was borne, Joh.8.56. and no doubt as a true Prophet did foretell and instruct others concerning his coming in the flesh, therefore doe him no harme, Psal. 105.15. He reproveth Kings for their sakes, saith the Psalmist, alluding to this of Abimelech and Abraham.

and thou shalt live] A godly mans prayer is a soveraigne cure of the Kings Evill, 1 King.13.6. whereby the poorest Christian may gratifie the greatest King.

all that are thine] One sinne of one man, especially of a publique person, may raise Gods wrath to the ruine of many, 2 Sam.24.17. wherein (though as from God they may justly suffer for their owne sinnes) their superiours are punished, in regard of their interest in them, and participation with them.

V. 9. offended thee] To bring one to sinne, is rather an act of grudge, then of respect and love. See Revel.2.14.

kingdome] See Annot. on vers.7.

V.11.fear of God] He sheweth that no honestie can be hoped for where the fear of God is not. See Gen.42.18.& Prov.16.6.

V. 12. my sister] By sister he meaneth his neere kinswoman; for so the Hebrewes use these words; see Gen.13.8. and she is thought to be the same with Iscah the daughter of Haran Abrahams brother, Gen.11.28.29. Of such matriages see Annot.on Chap.11. vers.29. & on Levit.18.14.

the daughter of, &c.] That is, my fathers grand-child (for grand-children are reputed as sonnes and daughters, Chap. 31. vers. 28. Exod.2.18.) but not the grand-child of my mother, because it is like, his brother Haran and he had divers mothers, though the same father.

V. 16. a covering of the eyes] Most Commentators complaine of the difficultie of this place, which is covered or vailed over with ambiguitie of the pronoune Hu, and of the noune Chesseph; the former word is rendred as referring to the gift of the King, or to the person of Abraham; and the word Chesseph is translated (by the best Ebricians) pieces of silver; and those pieces some will have to be very little pieces of silver, some halfe a shekel, some a whole shekel; hence the sense may be, referring Hu to the gift, that with that money (if it were a small piece like the Spanish Marevedines (whereof fourtie make up the price of a Romane penny, Marian.de ponderibus & Mensuris, cap. 23.p. 119.) she might buy her a veile; if it were halfe a shekel, or a whole one, it might buy her many veiles from time to time, as she should have occasion to use variety or new supply; and it is probable it might be shekels, (or some coyne of value) both because he was a King that bestowed the gift, who was like to be more liberall then another man; and because the observation of some concerning the word Chesseph (which signifieth silver) is, that when it is named alone it stands for a shekel, as Numb. 7. 85. as where shekel is set down, and the metall not expressed, it is meant of silver, and not of any other metall, as Exod.30. vers. 13.15. compared with Chap.28.25,26. and so this with the sheep, oxen, men-servants and maid-servants given to Abraham, with libertie to live where he liked in his Land, was as well a royall munificence as a reasonable recompence for the wrong done unto him. Of shekels, see Annot. on Chap.23.vers.15. And the use of the veile some conceive to be to conceale her beautie, (that others might not be tempted by it;) others, that by wearing of a veile she should professe her selfe a married woman, (as Rebekah, Chap.24.65.See 1 Cor. 11. 10. and so might not be mistaken, and solicited as a single woman, as now she was thought to be by Abimelech, vers. 5. and by Pharaoh before, Chap.12. vers. 15.) others, shamefastly to cover her selfe, because her deceit was now detected; others, to make her so brave and glorious, as to cast a kinde of awfull feare on beholders, that they might not (at least any of the vulgar sort) presume to violate her chastitie. Of these the two first Expositions are worthy of the first place, for probabilitie and appearance of truth and pertinency to the words of Abimelech; But if we referre the word Hu to the person, it importeth that by owning and acknowledging so worthy a man for her husband, the reverent regard of him should stand betwixt her and the eyes of wantons, so that shee should be thereby as veyled, or covered as with a veyle, that they could not see her, at least they would not lustfully look upon her, with any hope to enjoy her.

V. 16. unto all that are with thee and with all] There is no more in the Hebrew Text; therefore for supplement of the sense the word others or else-where is to be added; the meaning is, that she must make use of her veyle in their company with whom she commonly converseth, that they may not have such a full view of her beauty as may invite their concupiscence to desire it; and when she goeth abroad where she is not known, she must put on her veile, where she may not only be lustfully looked on, but others deceived, as Abimelech was.

reproved] God caused this heathen King to reprove her, because she dissembled, seeing God had given her an husband as a veyle and defence; and shee was reproved not only by words, but by deeds, for his integrity compared with her deceitfull and dangerous ensnaring of her selfe and him, makes her the worthier of rebuke; especially if he be considered as an heathen King, she as a professor of the right faith, and religion, and the wife of a Prophet.

V. 18. closed up] So that (as many observe) such as were not with child could not conceive, and they that were with child could not bring forth; but there was somewhat more in this plague then this; for if that were all, it could not so soon be observed as a common chastisement; and this was so both to male and female; for it was upon Abimelech, as well as upon his wife, or other women, vers.17. It is like then those passages of nature which appertain to generation and conception, were so shut up, that men and women could not but with pain, and without hope of issue, company together. Thus is barrennesse sometimes the punishment of incontinency, whereof there is a memorable example in Solomon, whose 1000 female bed-fellowes left him but one son, Rehoboam, to reign in his stead; and him such a one as was nothing like his father, either in prudence or prosperity.

CHAP. XXI.

Vers.1. Visited] Visiting is sometimes taken for some actuall evidence of Gods gracious promise, or providence to those he loveth; see Exod.4.31. Ruth 1.6. as the Lord visited Hannah so that she conceived and bare three sons, 1 Sam.2. 21. And as for production, so for preservation, Thou hast granted mee life, and favour, and thy visitation hath preserved my spirit, Job 10. 12. And it is used not only of temporall, but of spirituall favours, as of that most gracious mission of the Messiah our blessed Saviour, of which it is said in the Song of Zachariah, He hath visited and redeemed his people, Luke 1. 68. And it is also used in a sense of severe justice, as in the second Commandement, Exod.20. 5. and Deut.2.9. and in many more places: But here Gods visiting of Sarah, is the just performance of his gracious promise for her fruitfulnesse at the time prefixed, vers.2. foretold, Chap.18. vers. 10. Promises being as a sending to some one that is absent by another; and performing being as the visiting of a friend by personall presence.

V. 3. Isaac] God gave him that name when he prophecied of his birth, Gen.17.19. and it signifieth Laughter, because Abraham laughed at the newes of their promised fruitfulnesse in their old age, Gen.17.17. though his laughter were of admiration, Sarahs was of suspition or mistrust of the promise; for which she is reproved, chap. 18. 13,14. wherein she was now reformed and laughed without offence, vers.6. and conceived that all that heard of his birth would laugh with her, as partakers and approvers of her joy: see Esay 54.1.

V. 4. eight dayes old] See Annot. on chap.17.vers.12.

V. 6. made me to laugh] She laughed before, and was blamed for it; see Annot. on chap. 18. 12. now shee will laugh for another cause, in another manner, not, as before, with doubt or irreverence, but with joyfull assurance.

V. 7. who would have said] It was more then nature could effect, or naturall reason could conjecture; for women commonly give over child-bearing after fifty yeares of age, Plin.nat.hist. lib.7.cap. 14. And hence was the commendation of her faith; for though at first she doubted, soone after she beleeved, and thereupon conceived, Hebr. 11.11.

give children suck] Which may be meant by an Enallage of number, the plurall for the singular, as Gen. 46.23. or because though yet shee had but one, by the same power that made her the mother of one, she might be mother of more; or because of the abundance of her milke, which was enough for divers children; and so they that abound in milk give an almes of their superfluity, as nurses to those infants to whom they are no mothers.

Suck] Sarahs practice may serve for a pattern to all women, whom God hath enabled to give suck, as well as to bring forth, that when God hath made them mothers, they make themselves nurses; for the blessing of bearing, and nourishing in nature are joyned together, Psal.22.9, as the miscarrying wombe, and dry breasts are threatned together as a curse, Hos. 9. 14. a wilfull curse to those that against the course of nature dry up their milk, and will not bestow it, as God and nature ordained it, for the bringing up of the child they have brought forth; their great-neſſe will not excuſe their neglect, for Sarah was wife to a very great man, reputed a mightie Prince, Gen. 23.6. highly eſteemed, and ſought unto by Kings for favour, and confederacie, Gen. 20. 14, 15. & verſ. 22. & 23. of this Chapter; and ſhe was Miſtreſſe of three hundred and eighteene men-ſervants, beſides hand-maids in her family, the government whereof might require a great deale of attendance; beſides, ſhe was aged; but neither greatneſſe, nor buſineſſe, nor agedneſſe keeps her from this motherly duty; which is indeed to be preferred before the outward acts of publique piety; and therefore Hannah became a mother, and reſolved as a Nurſe to tarry at home from the Temple, untill the weaning of her child; and that reſolution was confirmed by the conſent of her husband, 1 Sam. 1. 23.

V. 8. weaned] It is not ſaid at what age; nor is the weaning of children to be ſtinted to a certaine time, (as ſome doe to two yeares, ſome to three, as in the ſecond of Maccab. 7. 27. ſome to five, becauſe when the life of man was longer, his infancie was proportionably longer; and ſo ſome conceive Iſaacs weaning to be the fifth yeare of his age) but according to the health, and ſtrength of the child to digeſt ſtronger meat then milke, it is to be proportioned; this difference of diet, and growth is applied to ſpirituall proficiencie, Heb. 5. 12, 13, 14.

Feaſt] The making of a Feaſt at the birth, is not ſo ſeaſonable; for then the mother is weake; nor at the circumciſion (as the Jewes doe, Buxtorf. c. 2. Synagog. Judæor. miſapplying this example of Abraham to their practice) but when the child hath eſcaped the greateſt danger of his nurſing, and groweth on to good hope of health, and ſtrength; then it is convenient by a Feaſt of rejoycing among men, to profeſſe thankeſgiving to God, who hath given the occaſion of ſuch gratulation, and meanes, and libertie for a liberall enjoyment of the creatures with cheerefulneſſe; for he hath given not onely bread for mans ſuſtenance, but wine to make glad his heart, and oyle to make him have a ſhining countenance, Pſal. 104. 15. See 1 Sam. 1. 24, 25. And if it be true, (as ſome Hebrews obſerve) that all the while the child ſuckt, the husband and wife did forbeare familiar ſocietie, then this rejoycing and ſolemnitie might be as a Feaſt for a new marriage.

V. 9. mocking] The word Metſahhek is properly rendred laughing, but here and elſe-where it is taken for mocking, as Gen. 19. 14. Or, deriſion, or laughing to ſcorne, as Ezek. 23. 32. which may be ſo uſed, as to be counted a perſecution, as this was, Gal. 4. 29. See Nehem. 2. 19. & Chap. 4. 1. What the manner was, whether in words or geſtures, or both; and what the cauſe, whether becauſe of his heirſhip, or by reaſon of ſome childiſh miſcarriage, the Text ſaith nothing: ſome thinke that Iſhmaels mocking was an inviting of him to Idolatry by way of ſport and play, according to that in Exod. 32. 6. but Sarah who obſerved it, apprehended it as ſome bitter, and malignant ſcorne, which raiſed her wrath to a great height, as the next verſe ſheweth. With this mocking of the Egyptian womans ſonne (as ſome conceive) began the foure hundred yeares of Egyptian affliction; but for that ſee Annot. on Chap. 15. verſ. 13.

V. 10. caſt out] (Gal. 4. 30) Of this the Apoſtle Gal. 4. 24. maketh an Allegory; which (ſo farre as concerneth conformity to this Text) a late godly Preacher now with God, in his Book of Prototypes, hath briefly noted thus. Here be two mothers, a bond-woman, and a free-woman; two Covenants, the Covenant of workes, and of grace; two manners of begetting, by promiſe, or by faith; and after the fleſh, or by nature; two kinds of children, bond-men, and free-men; and the bond-men perſecuting the free: at this perſecution Sarah (though otherwiſe a good woman) breaketh out into paſſion; caſt out, &c. yet there might be reaſon why ſhe deſired their remove all out of the family, both in reſpect of Hagar, and of her ſonne; for now Sarah was a mother, ſhe could not, as before, endure her partnerſhip in her husbands bed; and his deare affection to Iſhmael expreſſed, Gen. 17. 18. might make both the mother, and the ſonne leſſe reſpective both of Sarah, and Iſaac; and by Iſhmael as Iſaac was mocked now, ſo he might be corrupted in his manners, becauſe he was wicked; beſides the honour of his holy Pedegree would not be preſerved ſo pure without mixture, and confuſion, as if they had their dwellings at a diſtance: and therefore ſome conceive that Sarahs rejection of the ſonne of the bond-woman was not onely paſſionate, but Propheticall, as foreſeeing and foreſpeaking the ſeparation of the holy ſeed from the profane, whereof Abraham through his fond affection to Iſhmael, was not at that time ſo apprehenſive as Sarah was; nor did either of them perhaps ſo underſtand or lay to heart as they ſhould have done, their corrupt choyce of an evill courſe for accompliſhment of the Divine promiſe; as if God would not keepe his word, unleſſe they betooke themſelves to ſuch a ſinfull ſupply by Hagar the Egyptian, a daughter or deſcendent of the race of Cham, who derided his owne father; and this might juſtly occaſion the diſturbance of their houſhold-peace as before in the pride and contempt of a ſervant towards her miſtreſſe, ſo here of a brother toward his brother.

V. 11. becauſe of his ſonne] Not becauſe of Hagar, which ſheweth that ſhe was not his wife; for if ſo, he ſhould have preferred her before his ſonne; nor would he ſo farre have given her over to the correction of Sarah as he did, Gen. 16. 6. had ſhe beene a wife; ſo that he had authoritie over her not as a wife, but onely as a ſervant.

V. 12. hearken unto her] Sometimes the Superiour muſt yeeld to the Inferiour, eſpecially betwixt man and wife, who ſhould never be angry both at once; but one beare with the others paſſion, and for a time give way unto it: there is alſo a diſcreet condeſcending ſometimes of Kings to their Subjects, which maketh them afterwards more to be beloved, and better obeyed: See 1 King. 12. 7. 2 Sam. 18. 4. Here though God biddeth Abraham hearken unto Sarah in all that ſhe hath ſaid, he giveth not away the authoritie of the husband to the will of the wife; but for this particular caſe God ratifieth her words, whereto he yeelds, not as in obedience to her paſſionate appointment, but in his owne diſcretion and dutie to God.

in Iſaac] (Rom. 9. 7, 8. Heb. 11. 18.) The promiſed ſeed ſhall be counted from Iſaac, and not from Iſhmael; and the ſpirituall prerogative ſhall be intailed to him, who by a ſupernaturall bleſſing is borne unto thee.

V. 13. a nation] (Gen. 17. 20. & verſ. 18. of this Chap.) The Iſhmaelites ſhall come of him.

V. 14. early] Before, while Sarah required the caſting out of Hagar and Iſhmael, it was grievous in his ſight, becauſe of his ſonne, now having Gods command for it, he is very forward to performe it.

bread] By bread may be underſtood other neceſſaries, for humane ſuſtenance, as in the Lords Prayer; and Mar. 6. 36. compared with Matth. 14. 15. yet being no more then Hagar could carry on her ſhoulder, it was ſtrange that ſo rich, ſo good, and kind a man as Abraham, would ſend them away ſo ſlenderly furniſhed with proviſion. It is not unlike that he meant to ſend after them other ſupply; or that God ſo ordered their departure, to exerciſe his owne providence in the particular paſſages that followed afterwards.

and the child] Iſhmael at this time was about eighteene years of age, which hath troubled many in the expoſition of this Text, ſuppoſing the Text ſaith, that the bread, and bottle, and child were all laid on Hagars ſhoulder; but the word child is to be conſtrued with the Verbe tooke going before, not with the Verbe put; and the words are to be read with a parentheſis, (as our laſt Tranſlation hath it) thus; And Abraham roſe up early in the morning and tooke bread, and a bottle of water and gave it unto Hagar (putting it on her ſhoulder) and the child; and ſo the ſenſe is cleare, and the abſurditie of ſuch an importable burden ſhunned. The like ſpeech is in Exod. 29. 3. thou ſhalt bring them (that is, the unleavened cakes) (in a basket) with the bullock, and the two rams; where the words in a basket, muſt be put in a parentheſis, elſe they will runne as if the bullock, &c. were put in the basket with the cakes.

ſent her away] True faith renounceth all naturall affections, to obey Gods commandement: this is further manifeſted by Abrahams readineſſe to offer up Iſaac in ſacrifice, Chap. 22. 3.

the wilderneſſe of Beerſheba] So called, not when this ſtory was acted, but afterwards, verſ. 31.

V. 15. caſt the child] Theſe words are not to be underſtood, as if the child had beene laid on her ſhoulders, for ſhe might doe ſo if he were led in her hand, being almoſt ſpent with drought and thirſt in the wilderneſſe, and unable to goe any further; or fainting in the way, ſhe might ſit downe, and ſet him on her lap, and thence being hopeleſſe of life, might in a pang of paſſion caſt him from her; and this expoſition is further cleared, verſ. 18. where Hagar is bidden to lift up the lad, and hold him in her hand, not lay him on her ſhoulder, or beare him in her armes.

V. 17. God heard] God hath a mercifull eare to the voice of miſery: ſee Gen. 16. 11. Exod. 22. verſ. 23. 27. 2 King. 13. 4. and that every where, in the wilderneſſe, (as here) as well as in the City, and therefore every where men ſhould lift up pure hands in prayer, without doubting, 1 Tim. 2. 8.

where he is] Gods preſence and providence are not fixed or confined to any place; whereſoever miſery is, there is not onely his preſence, but his power and pity to give reliefe.

V. 19. opened her eyes] Except God open our eyes, we can neither ſee, nor uſe the meanes before us: yet was ſhe not blind before, but either her mind was paſſionatly diſturbed, that ſhe did not marke what was before her; or her eye-ſight, as touching that object, was miraculouſly reſtrained; as the eyes of the two Diſciples going to Emmaus, were withheld, ſo that they knew not our Saviour when they talked with him, Luk. 24. 15. Or, her much weeping might for a time cauſe a dimneſſe of her ſight; but whatſoever was the impediment to her perceiving of the well, it was now removed.

V. 20. with the child] As touching outward things, God cauſed him to proſper, Gen. 17. 20.

V. 21. the

V. 21. the wildernesse of Paran] A great wilderneſſe by which the Iſraelites paſſed from Egypt to Canaan, of which Adrichom. Delph. ſaith, it is ſuch an horrid wilderneſſe, ſo deſtitute both of meat and water, that neither man, nor beaſt, nor bird live in it. Adrich. Delph. Theatr. Ter. Sanct. pag. 116. Object. How then could Iſhmael dwell there? Anſw. The Deſert is ſaid by that Authour to be eleven dayes journey over the length of it; and though the moſt part of it be extremely barren, all is not ſo; and Iſhmael being a wild man, Gen. 16. 12. he was fitter to live in the wilderneſſe, then in any civill ſocietie; and there is a part of that wilderneſſe called Kedar, from one of Iſhmaels ſonnes of that name, Chap. 25. 13. or the Region of the Iſhmaelites or Hagarens, Pſal. 83. 6. ſituate toward Egypt, where they lived in Tents, and maintained themſelves by prey and pillage: the wilderneſſe of Judea, Matth. 3. 1. likewiſe was partly deſert, and partly inhabited.

his mother tooke] (Gen. 24. 4. & 28. 2. Judg. 14. 2.) It is the right of Parents to diſpoſe of their children in marriage; for they are in Gods ſtead, and have as juſt a title to them, as to any goods they have; ſo that without wrong, they cannot (but by their conſent, much leſſe againſt their good will) be alienated from them, and transferred to another family.

V. 22. at that time] Not at the time of Iſhmaels marriage laſt mentioned, but the time of Iſaacs weaning, which was celebrated with a ſolemne Feaſt, verſ. 8.

Abimelech and Phicol] Abimelech a King, and Phicol a Captaine ſeek for friendſhip with Abraham: for God can eaſily make the godly gracious with the greateſt men. Neh. 2. 6. Dan. 3. 30. & Chap. 6. 2. Gen. 41. 37, 38.

V. 23. ſweare that thou (1 Sam. 30. 15.) Heb. if thou ſhalt lye unto me. That is, that thou ſhalt not lye unto me; the ſpeech is ſuſpenſive, or imperfect, concealing a curſe, which is to be underſtood as imprecated againſt the partie that takes the oath, and doth not keepe it. See Annot. on Chap. 14. 23.

V. 24. I will ſweare] It is a lawfull thing to take an oath in matters of importance, to teſtifie the truth and aſſure others of our ſinceritie, and to put an end to a controverſie, Heb. 6. 16. Queſt. But was it lawfull for Abraham being by Gods free-gift Lord of Canaan, to acknowledge a King in that Countrey, and to promiſe peace to him and his heires? Some Rabbins ſay, it was Abrahams ſinne to make a covenant for enjoyment of any right in the Land of Canaan, and that God puniſhed him for it many ways. Anſw. Firſt, though he had a right for the future, by vertue of the promiſe, he had yet no preſent poſſeſſion of any part of it; for he lived there rather as a ſojourner, then a rightfull inhabitant. Secondly, he promiſed but for himſelfe, not for his poſteritie, though to Abimelech, and his poſteritie. Thirdly, the oath was but againſt falſe dealing, which Abraham might keepe without any prejudice to the right of himſelfe, or his ſeed.

V. 25. Abraham reproved Abimelech] Concerning a Well which Abimelechs ſervants had taken from his ſervants, as touching their propriety and uſe: before he entred covenant with him, he freely diſcovered the exception he had againſt him, that all occaſion of grudge removed, their friendſhip might be ſurely grounded in ſinceritie of affection, without diſſimulation.

V. 26. neither heard I] Wicked ſervants doe many evils unknown to their maſters, though done in their maſters names, as in their right, or for their uſe: ſo did Gehazi belye his good maſter Eliſha, and abuſe Naaman the Syrian, 2 King. 5. 22.

V. 27. Abraham tooke ſheepe and oxen, and gave them] Abimelech gave Abraham ſheep and oxen, men-ſervants, and maid-ſervants, when he diſmiſſed him, Chap. 20. 14. Now Abraham preſents him with the like gifts for the cattell: ſome thinke they were a returne of the ſame, leſt Abimelech ſhould ſay I have made Abraham rich, as he ſaid when he refuſed the gifts of the King of Sodome, Chap. 14. verſ. 22, 23. which he did not ſo well thinke of when he received them, as upon a ſecond conſideration afterwards; but it is more probable that Abraham being rich in cattell, gave the King a preſent out of his own ſtore, and Kings though they have no need, receive ſuch tokens of reſpect from their inferiours, and ſometimes the omiſſion of them is branded with reproach, as being a ſigne of contempt of royall majeſtie, 1 Sam. 10. 27. And he might give it him out of ingenuous gratitude for favours formerly received, or out of a generous diſpoſition as a covenanter with the King at this time, to be upon even termes with him; for in ſuch a capitulation as this, the covenanters, as they are covenanters (whatſoever other diſparities are betwixt them) are equall. Or Abraham might by ſuch a teſtimony of tranſaction betwixt them, the bettter preſerve the memory of his intereſt to the well he had digged, and which by the violence of Abimelechs ſervants was taken from him; but for the formall ratification of his right, the ſeven ewe lambes were tendered, whereof in the next verſe.

V. 30. that they may be witneſſe] That is, that they may be memorandums ſerving for tokens of atteſtation to the truth; ſo an heape of ſtones is made a witneſſe betwixt Jacob and Laban, Gen. 31. 46, 48.

V. 31. Beerſheba] There were two places of that name, the one in the Tribe of Zabulon, ſituate betwixt upper and nether Galilee. Adrichom. Delph. p. 137. which Joſephus with other places fortified for repulſe of the Romans. Joſeph. of the warres of the Jewes, lib. 2. cap. 25. The other place called Beerſheba was in the Southerne part of the lot of the Tribe of Judah, Joſh. 15. 21, 28. 1 King. 19. 3. though afterwards it was allowed to be a part of the inheritance of the Tribe of Simeon, Joſh. 19. 2. and there was a well called Beerſheba, and a Citie of the ſame name. The name is compounded of Beer a well, and Sheba, which with a point on the left hand of the letter Sin ſignifieth ſatietie and abundance; and ſo the meaning may be, that this well was a fountaine yeelding water in abundance; but with a point on the right hand of the letter Schin it ſignifieth an oath, and the number of ſeven, which in this ſtory doe well agree together; for at the covenant-making for the well, Abraham gave to Abimelech ſeven Ewe lambes, verſ. 30. and ſome Jewiſh Cabaliſts ſay, that an oath is called Sheba, ſeven, becauſe they that ſweare did bind themſelves by the oath to refuſe ſeven things if they brake it: The ſame name was renewed, (which haply had been buried when the wells were ſtopped up, untill Iſaac opened them again, Chap. 26. verſ. 18.) upon his renewing of the Covenant with Abimelech, according to that which was made here by Abraham his father; though Iſaacs oath was not confirmed with ſeven lambes, as his fathers was; yet ſome will have it to have ſome reference to the number of ſeven, either becauſe that number is a number of perfection, or, becauſe it was the ſeventh well, that Iſaac had digged: neither of which reaſons have any ground in the Scripture, therefore in that place, as in this, it was called the well, rather of the oath or ſwearing, then of ſeven, yet in both reſpects it is a fit memoriall of the Covenant betwixt them. See Annot. on Chap. 26. verſ. 33.

V. 32. Covenant] Thus we ſee that the godly, as touching outward things, may make peace with the wicked that know not God.

V. 33. Grove] Abraham did dwell before in the plaine of Mamre, under the ſhadow of trees, Gen. 18. 4. 8. and it may be he tooke an eſpeciall pleaſure to be in the open aire; and under the ſhade; but he uſed it to a religious purpoſe, for there he called upon the name of the Lord the everlaſting God; which is thought to be a place by him ſet apart for performance of the exerciſes of pietie, prayer, and ſacrifice; and from thence he might have wood for ſacrifice: and it ſeemes there was ſome ſpeciall choice to be made of that, (as there was a ſpeciall fire for kindling of the ſacrifices afterwards, ſee Annot. on Levit. 9. 24.) for when he was to ſacrifice his ſonne Iſaac, he carried wood with him three dayes journey, Gen. Chap. 22. verſ. 3, 4. though it is not like but in or neere the place where the ſacrifice was to be made, there was wood enough for that purpoſe: From his example it is like men tooke up the manner to exerciſe their Religion in Groves; and from thence the Devils tooke occaſion to abuſe it to ſerve Idols there, Deut. 12. 2. Judg. 3. 7. 2 King. 17. 10. Iſa. 1. 29. & 57. 5. Jer. 17. 2. Amos 8. 14. which were therefore peremptorily prohibited as hatefull unto God, Deut. 16. 21.

CHAP. XXII.

Verſ. 1. After theſe things] How long after, it appeares not by the Text, ſave onely that Iſaac was then of ſufficient age and ſtrength to carry a burden of wood for ſacrifice, verſ. 6. which is probably conceived to be about the 25 yeare of his age. Joſeph. Antiq. l. 1. c. 14.

tempt Abraham] The word Naſah, neceſſarily ſignifieth no more then to try, or to prove, but becauſe that is uſually done by the devill, and the wicked, to ſeduce unto ſinne, and that mans corruption works that way of it ſelfe, Jam. 1. 14. and is further wrought upon by the devill, and the world, to that evill, in the ſame way; the word Tempt is moſt commonly taken in an ill ſenſe, for ſolicitation to ſinne; as Matth. 4. 1. and elſe-where; but ſo God tempteth no man, Jam. 1. 13. But his tempting is a proofe, or triall of a man for his diſcovery (not to God, who by his omniſcience knows him ſo perfectly, that he needs none experience of him) but to himſelfe, or others; and this as it is alwayes good in him, ſo is it alwayes done to a good end, as Deut. 8. 16. Chap. 13. 3. Jam. 1. 12. 1 Cor. 10. 13. The temptations of Abraham were many, ſome reckon them to ten, which are various in their kinds, as firſt concerning his habitations: ſecondly, concerning the perſons that were deare unto him; and thirdly, concerning himſelfe. Firſt, for his habitations, he was thrice to change them, twice upon commaud. See Act. 7. verſ. 3. Gen. 12. 1. and once upon neceſſitie, Gen. 12. 10. Secondly, concerning the perſons that were deare unto him, and that either within his family or without; within his family, and ſo he was tempted foure times; twice by occaſion of Sarah her taking away, Gen. 12. 15. & Chap. 20. once by reaſon of the diſcord betwixt Sarah and Hagar when ſhe was with child, Gen. 16. 5. laſtly, at the ejection of Ishmael and his mother, Gen. 21. vers. 11. and without his family when he was to betake himselfe to warre for the rescue of his kinsman Lot taken captive, Gen. 14. 14. Thirdly, concerning himselfe, first, when he apprehended an horrour of great darknesse, Gen. 15. 12. and secondly, when he received the Covenant of circumcision.

V. 2. take thy sonne] This is (as some reckon) the tenth time, that Abraham was tryed, and proved by occasions of discovery of what goodnesse, weaknesse, or wickednes was in him; when he was called to come forth of his countrey he knew not whither; his faith, and obedience were both tryed, and shewed; when he was driven by famine to flie for succour to Egypt; his faith, and patience were proved in the strife betwixt Lots herdsmen, and his: and in the household jarres betwixt Sarah and Hagar, his humilitie, patience, and benignitie were tryed, and made known divers times: by the taking away of his wife twice, his cowardise and weake faith were tryed, and discovered; and by the captivitie of Lot, and his rescue of him, his wisedome, his prudence, and courage were tryed; when at ninetie nine yeares old the Sacrament of Circumcision was imposed upon him, and after that his sonne Ishmael sent away from him; and now last, and most of all, his better sonne Isaac to be offered up by him, his faith and obedience even to selfe-denyall in the highest degree, were tryed as gold in the fire, and gloriously manifested.

onely sonne] Thy onely sonne that is remaining in thy family; for Ishmael was gone; or thy legitimate sonne, as opposed to a bastard, Heb. 12. vers. 8. as was Ishmael begotten of the bondwoman.

whom thou lovest] With an especiall deareneſſe, as being the sonne of thine old age, and of thy wives miraculous conception, above the course, and force of nature; and a sonne worthy to be beloved, for his piety and obedience.

Moriah] In this Land there were two eminent Mountaines, Sion, and Moriah, upon which the Temple was built by Solomon, 2 Chron. 3. 1. this is here meant, from which the whole Countrey had its name, though it had not that name untill afterward. See vers. 14.

burnt-offering] In this command, all that was in Abraham, as a man, a father, an husband, a beleever, a professour of Religion, were put to triall. As a man, it was against humanity, to slay the Innocent, though but a servant, or a stranger: As a father, it was unnaturall to kill his owne child, though he had never so many; but having but one, and that one so worthy of all fatherly affection, it was much more like to be abhorred: As an husband, how could he ever expect any peace, or comfort in his wife, if he should shed his bloud, against whom she could not endure either a scoffe, or a flout? As a beleever, or professour of Religion, he might be disposed to disobey, because Isaac was the sonne of promise, Gen. 21. 12. and to kill such a sonne, would make Infidels blaspheme his God, and Religion, for such a fact. There was yet more triall in this command; for if it might have been done suddenly, or secretly, or by some more easie kind of death; it would have stirred up the lesse reluctancie; but it must be advisedly done, upon three dayes deliberation; openly, upon an high hill; cruelly, by cutting his throat, ripping up his bowels, and burning of his quarters in the fire upon the Altar; and what if Isaac being a lusty young man upon his offer, should resist; and by his example, be tempted to returne upon him with the like bloudy violence? Against all these mighty objections his faith standeth up, and his pietie to God prevaileth so, that he readily setteth upon the service.

V. 3. rose up early] (Gen. 21. 14.) It seemes he had the command given by Divine revelation that night; and though it were so, yet he was well assured it came from God; for though sometimes men may thinke they have a Divine revelation when it is but an illusion, (as one may thinke he heares a Drum, or a Bell, when it is some humming of winde in his head, or some other sound without) yet when there is a Divine revelation indeed, it usually brings with it, not onely the matter revealed, but certaine evidence, and assurance that it is a Divine revelation; as a Bell rung, or Drum beaten close by the eare, whereof there can be no doubt at all; and as he knew the command was from God, so his faith told him that God was all-sufficient, Gen. 17. 1. and able to secure him from all evill consequences of his command, and to restore Isaac to life againe, though he were dead, Heb. 11. 19. his faith and obedience, both for the sacrifice it selfe, and for the expedition to performe it, are to be remembred for a singular example of selfe-denyall.

V. 4. the third day] From Gerar, not from the City Gerar, but from the Countrey; for he dwelt in Beersheba, as may be collected out of Chap. 21. vers. 31. and after the sacrifice, he returned to Beersheba, vers. 19. of this Chap. Now Mount Moriah from that place was but one dayes journey, with ordinary expedition; but he proceeded very leasurely, and with much deliberation, having a matter of the greatest moment in hand that ever was imposed on him, or any one else: yet Adricom. Delph. saith, the distance was twenty leagues, each of them of an houres journey.

saw the place] God having given him some signe whereby he might know it.

V. 5. the lad] The Originall word Naghnar, (properly signifying one in his minoritie for age and growth, and therefore usually rendred lad, or boy,) is many times taken for one of maturitie both for time and stature, as vers. 6. Chap. 34. 19. & 41. 12. Exod. 33. 11. 2 Sam. 18. 29.

and come againe] That Abraham might not be thought to lie, it is conceived, that for Isaacs returne, he meant it by a Divine resurrection after sacrifice, as Heb. 11. 19. Or, that by the Spirit of Prophecie (though he knew it not) he foretold his preservation from sacrifice.

V. 8. God will provide] The onely way to overcome all temptations, is to rest upon Gods providence.

V. 9. bound Isaac] It is like his father had declared to him Gods commandement, whereunto he shewed himselfe obedient; and this obedience is as rare an example for a sonne, as that of Abraham for a father; and in this respect the more admirable, because Abraham had Gods word for his act, but Isaac onely his fathers word for his obedience: and herein, as he was the onely sonne of his father, a good sonne, obedient to beare the wood, and to submit unto death; he was a type of Christ, who was the onely Sonne of God his Father, and was bound, Mar. 15. 1. and made to beare his crosse, Joh. 19. 17. and was obedient unto death, Phil. 2. 8.

V. 11. the Angel] The Angel of the Covenant, that is, Christ, as his owne words shew, vers. 12. 16.

out of heaven] Gen. 21. 17.

Abraham, Abraham] The word is doubled, and the doubling of it imports the greatnesse of the perill, and the urgent necessitie of present prohibition.

V. 12. Lay not thine hand] God, though he love obedience even unto death, delights not in sacrifices of mans bloud; that is of too great a price to be offered as a type, because he is the Image of God; too cheape being but the Image, and now corrupted, to serve for a propitiatory sacrifice; therefore the Devil abused the Jews, and Gentiles to make sacrifices by this example; wherein they should observe as well Gods prohibition of the thing, accepting the will for the deed: see 2 Cor. 8. 12. as the promptnesse of Abraham to doe it. Thus againe was Isaac a type of Christ, viz. of his resurrection, rising up from the Altar, on which he was bound for a sacrifice.

now I know] This is spoken after the manner of men; for God knows all things by one act of intelligence, without experience. Or, the meaning may be, that God now made his faith and forwardnesse knowne by this extraordinary act of selfe-deniall and obedience; so what God already knew, Psal. 139. vers. 1, 2. David desireth him to know, to search, and to try, vers. 23. it may be to draw it out into some open evidence discernable by others.

thou fearest God] His feare is mentioned rather then his love, though both concurred in his obedience; because in his service he especially requireth a filiall feare, Psal. 2. 11.

behind] That way it is like the voyce of the Angel sounded, and by the voyce behind him, Isa. 30. vers. 21. he was called to looke back, and looking back he saw the Ram.

V. 13. a ram] Vers. 7. Isaac asketh, where is the lambe, and vers. 8. Abraham answered, God will provide a lambe; and here it is said, that Abraham saw a Ram, and did offer him up in sacrifice; yet no contradiction, for a young he-lambe of a quarter old may have horns which may be entangled in a bush, and may be called a Ram.

caught in a thicket] The Ram was a Type of Christ, as in the thicket held by the head, for Christ was crowned with a crown of thornes; but especially as sacrificed on the Altar. Some observe that as the Ram was equivalently Isaac, though he was not offered, because he was offered in his stead; so the offering of Christs humanity had the value and vertue of his Divinity in it (though that could not be sacrificed) because of the neere relation of the one to the other.

V. 14. called the name Jehovah Jireh] The same letters with variation of the pricks will make either an active sense, The Lord will see: or a passive sense, The Lord will be seene. The name is added to note that God doth both see, and provide secretly for his, and also evidently is seene coming to their succour in their greatest necessities; and this phrase became a proverbiall saying among the Jewes to that purpose.

V. 16. by my selfe] Man when he sweareth must sweare by a greater then himselfe, and God because there is no greater then himselfe, sweareth by himselfe, Heb. 6. 13. and therefore himselfe is meant, when swearing by his Name, Jer. 44. 26. by his Soule, Jer. 51. 14. Text and Marg. or, by his holinesse, Amos 4. 2. is mentioned.

because] Abraham did not hereby merit the promise of a multiplied posteritie; for God promised this before, Gen. 12. 2. & Chap. 13. 16. but it is againe repeated, to encourage him, and others by his example, to prompt obedience of the most difficult commands. See Rom. 4. 13, 14.

V. 17. thy seed] The Apostle, Gal. 3. 16. applieth this to Christ in the singular number, in whom they who beleeve, of what Nation soever they be, shall be blessed as children raised up unto Abraham; for true beleevers be reckoned for his children, Gal. 3. 7.

shall possesse the gate] The gates of Cities were the places where the Wise men assembled for consultation, and the Magistrates for doing of justice, Deut. 21. 19. & 22. 15. Amos 5. 12. 15. Zach. 8. 16. Prov. 31. 23. and withall there were the strongest fortifications for defence, and the store of artillery for repulse of an enemy, Judg. 5. 8. Psal. 147. 13. Esa. 22. 7. Ezek. 21. 22. So that the possession of the gate, is the prevailing for the whole; for the gate is sometimes put for the whole citie, Deut. 12. 15. and for all the cities of a Nation, Jer. 14. 2.

V. 21. Hut and But] Of the former name there were two others of different parentage, whereof the one is mentioned, Chap. 10. 23. the other, Chap. 36. 28. For the other he is supposed to be the progenitor of Elihu the Buzite, Job 32. 2.

V. 24. his concubine] A concubine differed from a wife, in that she was not solemnly betrothed, nor was partner with the husband in the government of the family, as the wife was, to whom the concubine was subject, Gen. 16. 6. 9. nor were her children to inherit; but to be put off with portions, Gen. 25. 5, 6. And from an whore she differed, in that she was confined to one man, and being in that respect like unto a wife; the name is oftentimes taken in good part, and the concubine sometimes called by the name of a wife, Gen. 37. vers. 2. yet according to her Hebrew title Philegesh compounded of Palag, which signifieth to divide, and Ishah, Manneſſe or woman, that is, a divided wife, or halfe a wife and halfe a servant, or a dividing woman, making division betwixt the husband and wife (properly so called) as Hagar did betwixt Abraham and Sarah, Gen. 16. 5.

Maachah] Here is the name of a man, but 1 King. 15. 12. it is the name of a woman, so are divers other names of the common of two genders, as Philip, Frances, Timothy, &c.

CHAP. XXIII.

Vers. 1. These were the yeares] Or so long lived she; it is noted as a speciall honour to Sarah, that her age is so exactly set down in the Scripture, as is not observed of any other woman.

V. 2. Kiriath-arba] This Citie had three names, the ancientest was Mamre, Gen. 13. 18. & vers. 19. of this Chapter, after that Kiriath-arba in this place, so called from Arba, a great man among the Anakims, Josh. 14. 15. and last of all Hebron, which name Moses might give it by the Spirit of Prophecie; for it was given after his time; or it might be added by him who penned a great part of, if not all, the last Chapter of Deuteronomy.

came to mourne] That may be began or addressed himselfe to mourning for the death of Sarah; or the phrase may signifie that he came from his own Tent into Sarahs, for they had their Tents apart, Gen. 24. 67. Besides, it may note great or solemne mourning, as for a person much esteemed, 2 Sam. 1. 17. 2 Chron. 35. 24. Act. 8. 2. and this was lawfull, if done without distrust in God, or too much affection or confidence in man. See Joh. 11. 35, 36. Some by Abraham his coming to mourne, understand that Sarah died from home (to wit, in Hebron) whither from Beersheba he went to bewaile her death, and to take order for her buriall, and therefore he contracts for a buriall place, which in the place of his accustomed abode, he needed not to bargaine for with any man.

V. 3. stood up] After his mourning, which was usually done by the corps, or at the grave of the dead, Joh. 11. 31. and that in some lower posture then standing is: but the excesse of mourning is to be reproved as hurtfull to the living, or dishonourable to the dead; as if they were hopelesse, 1 Thes. 4. 13. nor doth it argue more love, but lesse wit, or grace, to be immoderate in mourning: for the Egyptians mourned for Jacob seventy dayes; but Joseph, who in wisdome, religion, and true love farre exceeded them, mourned but twentie seven dayes, Gen. 50. 3. 10.

V. 4. burying place] (Gen. 47. 30.) Separate from other Inhabitants of the Land; because they were Infidels without beliefe, or hope of the resurrection of the dead.

V. 6. a mightie Prince] Heb. Prince of God. The Hebrews speake so of all things that are notable, Exod. 3. 1. & 4. 27. Psal. 46. 4. because all excellencie cometh of God: but the sonnes of Heth were Heathens, and they called him a Prince, not by an Hebraisme, but because of the greatnesse of his family, and estate; and if they called him a Prince of God, it was because they might observe that God was with him in all that he did, as Abimelech said, Gen. 21. 22.

V. 7. stood up] That is, addressed himselfe, for the phrase (as the word came, vers. 2.) may be so taken; and it is said before, vers. 3. that he stood up, or having sate and treated with them before, now he stood up that he might bow downe unto them, who so kindly condescended unto him.

V. 9. cave of Macpelah] That is, a double cave, either one for men, another for women; or one within another.

for a possession] They offered him the free use of their buriall places, vers. 6. saying, none of us shall withhold from thee his sepulchre, but that thou mayest bury thy dead; but he had rather pay for a propriety, then hold such a communitie with them; for he was desirous in buriall to be separated from them, who did not beleeve the resurrection with him.

V. 13. I will give] Ephron and Abraham strive to gratifie one another; A good example of kindnesse, among friends, and of justice among bargainers; The like kind of contestation is betwixt David and Araunah, 2 Sam. 23. vers. 22, 23, 24.

V. 15. shekels of silver] There are very different opinions concerning the shekel, some make three sorts; the royall shekel valued to fifteene pence; the shekel of the Sanctuary, twice as much; and the common shekel, betwixt them both, valued at five groats; yet the learned more generally resolve, that the shekel of the Sanctuary was the common shekel valued at two shillings six pence, Josephus Antiq. lib. 3. cap 9. but called the shekel of the Sanctuary, because the exact measure by which other shekels were to be examined, and to which as the standard, they were to be reduced; was kept in the Sanctuary.

V. 16. Abraham weighed] Money was paid in those times not by tale, but by weight: see Gen. 43. 21. & Jer. 32. 10. thence is this coyne called shekel of Schakal to weigh.

current money] Not onely just in quantitie, but in qualitie, pure and not adulterate; such as Merchants who are cunning in Coynes, will receive and returne in any Countrey. In this bargaine the seller doth not aske too much, nor the buyer bid too little, onely one price is pitched, and paid; and so Abraham as a purchaser, had some Land in Canaan, but not as possessed of it by Gods gift; and so ~~Saint~~ Steven is to be understood, Act. 7. 5.

V. 17. Macpelah] See the Annot. on Gen. 49. 30. & on v. 9. of this Chapter. ~ made sure.

V. 20. made sure] By witnesses without any interchangeable Indentures, or writings betwixt them, for ought we read of; such was the simplicitie, and sinceritie of those times: afterwards men became more cunning to deceive, and more bold to deny the bargaines they had made; and then there was need of writing: see Jer. 32. 12. Now in our age craft, and falshood is so increased, that it requireth great skill and caution to make a sure bargaine, though with writings; A great sinne, and shame that in such light of the Gospel, men should so addict themselves to deeds of darkenesse.

for a possession] This Cave was the repository or resting place of the bodies of Sarah, vers. 19. and of Abraham afterwards, Gen. 25. 9. after them of Isaac, and Rebekah, Jacob, and Leah, Gen. 49. 31. and though Jacob died in Egypt, he gave order, and tooke an oath of his sonne Joseph for his buriall in that place, Gen. 49. 29, 30. & 50. vers. 5. as professing their faith for the performance of Gods promise of Canaan to their posteritie; and withall, as desirous to sleepe with those in the bed of dust, with whom they hope to awake to eternall rest.

CHAP. XXIIII.

Vers. 1. Well stricken in age] Heb. gone into dayes. When a man is in his declining age, he must measure his life rather by the inch of dayes, then by the ell of yeares: about this time he was 140. yeares old, compare Chap. 21. 5. with Chap. 25. 20. which in comparison of the livers before the floud, was but young; for Sem the sonne of Noah lived 600. yeares, but of those that lived after the time of Abraham very few were so aged, and most ever since died younger; his sonne Isaac indeed lived five yeares longer; but his old age was not so vigorous as Abrahams was.

in all things] For besides his spirituall welfare by his holy wisdome, and gracious acceptation with God, his length of dayes, and health of body; the long enjoyment of a good, and godly wife, and by her a towardly sonne, conceived by the peculiar, and miraculous blessing of Almighty God, (where there was no hope of issue by the course of nature) and besides his great estate, and happy victory in warre, and his great reputation with those that knew him; his crosses were sanctified unto him, and converted unto blessings: A good encouragement to follow his steps in faithfulnesse, and obedience; whereby a man may be blessed in both worlds, as he was.

V. 2. his eldest servant] It is like it was that Eliezer of Damascus mentioned Chap. 15. vers. 2. who by this history is shewed to be both wise, and religious, as well as grave, and ancient; he sends not Isaac though at this time fourtie yeares of age, that the choyce of his wife might be made rather by religious discretion, then sensuall affection; yet Isaac no doubt was acquainted quainted with the businesse, and as a dutifull sonne, gave consent to that his father had said; without whose liking, the marriage could not be consummate by a proxie, or deputie, (as some hence collect) for the servant could but make the espousals, and she became not a wife untill Isaac accepted of her, vers. 67.

under my thigh] Which Ceremonie declareth the servants obedience to his Master, and the Masters power over the servant; and so the subjection, and obedience of the sonne to the father may be signified; for Jacob required his sonne Joseph to take an oath with the same Ceremonie, Gen.47.29. see 1 Chron. 29.24. Text and Margine, with the Jews to this day (from that custome) [he that requires an oath of another, sits upon his hand. The ancients make a mystery of it, looking some of them backward to the precedent Covenant of Circumcision, and some forward to the faithfull expectation of the promised Seed, Christ Jesus, to come by lineall descent from Abrahams loynes, or thigh, (for so it is in the Heb. Gen.46.26. the soules, that is, the persons, which came out of Jacobs thigh) Which is the more probable, because the Patriarchs used this Ceremonie, but to beleevers; nor did they use this onely, (and it may be not frequently) for Abraham makes mention of lifting up of his hand in taking an oath, against taking any thing of the King of Sodome, Gen.14.22. and the Angel swearing, is said to lift up his hand toward heaven, Revel.10.5,6. The custome of severall Countries, and Religions is very various in this point; yet most agree in the adding of some outward attestation of action, or gesture to words in taking of an oath, to make it better remembred and more regarded, then bare words of asseveration promise, or imprecation.

V. 3. sweare] It seemeth that there was some precedent discourse before the proposall of this oath, as that having made him Ruler over all he had, vers.2. he would have him to be an Over-seer to his sonne, with an especiall care over him for the choice of a wife, he being now mature for the state of marriage; this was a matter of great weight, and in weightie matters onely is an oath to be taken; as for ratification of covenants and promises of importance, as here, and Gen.32.53. for removall of suspition, Numb.5.21. Exod. 22.11. for stinting of strife, Heb.6.16. securitie of life, 1 Sam.30.15.

by the LORD] Feare, and service, and swearing by the Name of God are set downe, as sociable duties, Deut.6.13. and to sweare by them that are no Gods, is condemned as a detestable, and almost impardonable sinne, Jer.5.7. And so it is in serious swearing; but in vaine, and inconsiderate swearing, it may be a lesse fault to abuse the name of the creature then of God.

* daughters of the Canaanites] (* Gen.6.2. & 27.46. & 28.2.) He would not communicate in buriall with them, much lesse in marriages; because they descended from cursed Cham, whose posteritie was extremely corrupted with Idolatry and other vices; and designed to destruction, for their abominable wickednesse; therefore were Gods people forbidden to make any covenant with them, or to shew mercy unto them, Deut. 7.2. It was not meet for Abrahams posteritie to be mingled in bloud with them; whose bloud they must shed without pitie in persecuting of them; and this was especially forbidden, vers. 3. for feare of corruption, and Gods wrath and their ruine to follow upon it, vers. 4. See Gen. 28.1. & Nehem. 13. from vers. 23. to 27.

V. 4. to my countrey] Which his servant it seemes was acquainted with in particular; and is named the Citie Nahor in Mesopotamia, vers.10. Mesopotamia is sometimes taken largely for the Region beyond Euphrates (in respect of Canaan which was on the other side of it) and so it comprehendeth Chaldea, where is Ur in which Abraham was borne, Gen. 11.28. And the Citie of Nahor, that is Charran, (as it is called, Act.7.2.) or, Haran, Gen. 28. 10. & Chap. 29. vers. 45. where Nachor though now dead, had a long time lived: it was situate in the confines of Chaldea; here was the abode of Abrahams kindred, and the truest worship of the true God (though much corrupted) except in Abrahams family.

and to my kindred] To Haran where Nahor dwelt, which was about seven or eight dayes journey distant from the dwelling of Abraham. Marriage within neerer degrees of kindred was allowed at this time, then afterwards by the Law given in Moses time; for Abraham married his Neece; and Jacob two sisters; which after the Law might not be done: but if they were not too neere of kinne to marry, were they not too farre off in Religion? For did not Terah Abrahams and Nahors father serve other Gods? Josh.24.2. and though Abraham renounced his place, and the Religion of his father, Nachor did not so. Laban also Rebekahs brother was an Idolater, Gen. 31.30. and after Jacobs marriage, and departure from his father in laws house, there were Idolaters, and Idols of that race in his family, Gen. 35.23. yet was not their progenie so impious, nor their Idolatry so grosse, nor their destruction so decreed, as the Canaanites was; and it appears in this Chapter, there was some piety among them, vers. 31. 50, 51. and much humanity, vers. 18,19,20.31. and from 53. to the 60. Besides it is not unlike, that Abraham, so deare a favourite of God, consulted with him about it, and had his warrant for it, yea and his promise for his guidance in it, vers.7.40. and so much was conceived by Laban and Bethuel, vers.50.

Beware] For feare of Idolatry and because Abraham tooke possession of the Land not for himselfe alone, but for his offspring also, Chap. 12. vers. 1. who were by faith and patience to possesse it, and not by living out of it, to seeme either not to beleeve the promise, or to slight it.

V. 6. bring not my sonne] Isaac was now fourty yeares old, and therefore though under the obedience of his father, not at the command of a servant to dispose of him at his pleasure; this is meant then in respect of perswasion, for an old, wise, and godly servant of so great credit with his Master, might by advice, and counsell prevaile much with him in what he thought fit to propose unto him.

thither againe] The servant, vers. 5. forecasting a doubt of present consent concerning the motion of marrying, if Isaac were not with him, demandeth of his Master, that if the woman will not come with me, must I needs bring him thither againe? Abraham in answer to that, forbiddeth this bringing thither again, in vers. 8. yet Isaac was never there before. Answ. That againe may referre to the returne of the servant, as that in his returne againe, he should not bring Isaac thither with him; or if it be applied to Isaac, it is to be understood of his being there before in the loynes of Abraham his father, as the Israelites in the fourth generation are said to returne to Canaan againe, Gen. 15.16. who had never beene there before, (being borne and kept in Egypt) but as vertually included in their progenitors; and Abraham is against Isaacs going thither, both because of the promise of the Land of Canaan intailed upon him, and his seed; and for feare lest his Idolatrous kindred there should more prevaile to corrupt him, then strangers, (though worse) from whom he had especiall directions to be estranged.

V. 7. his Angel] Both for direction in doubts, and protection in dangers.

tenne Camels of the Camels] Abraham, it is like by this, had many more then tenne, for though they be rare with us, some Countreys abound with such beasts: as the Israelites overcoming the Hagarens, tooke as a part of their prey from them, fifty thousand Camels, 1 Chron.5.21. Our Merchants (saith Scaliger) call them Dromodaries, and he commends them for such swiftnesse that they will travell an hundred miles a day; and for strength, to beare seven hundred, or a thousand weight, and for enduring to be without drinke fifteene dayes together: Jul. V. 11. camels kneele downe] As they doe for ease, and rest, and to loade and unloade: wherein he sheweth himselfe a faithfull servant having care of his Masters cattell, though out of sight, and feare of him; and there is a compassion to be shewed to the dumb beast, Gen.33. vers.13,14. Prov.12.10.

V. 12. God of my master] He doth not deny him to be his owne God, but intitles him to Abraham in respect of Gods greater familiarity and solemne Covenant with him, and more gracious promises to him, for whose sake he hopes for better successe, then for his owne.

I pray thee] Marriage though it be not a Sacrament, is not to be managed in a meere carnall or politique, but in a religious manner, 1 Tim.4.3,4.

I pray thee send] He sheweth herein both his fidelitie to his Master, in bearing a faithfull, and affectionate heart to the affaire he had in hand; and his piety to God, in begging a blessing upon it from above. Of the use and benefit of prayer, see Phil.4.6. 1 Thes.3.11,12.

V. 14. let it come to passe] The servant, moved by Gods Spirit, desired to be assured by a signe, whether God prospered his journey or no. It is like this godly man had some secret instinct of God for his request, or a prediction from his Master who foretold him that God would send his Angel before him, vers.7. if not, it was too much boldnesse to limit God to such a condition; howsoever it is a singular example, as that of Gideon, Judg.6. from the 36. vers. to the end of the Chapter, and not to be drawne into a rule of imitation.

V. 15. before he had done speaking] God giveth good successe to all things that are undertaken for the glory of his Name, and according to his will; and he is sometimes so gracious in granting the desires of sincere hearts, as to yeeld to their weaknesse; see Gen.19.21. yea to their curiosity, Judg.6. v.36. and to be more speedy in giving, then they can be in craving, Chap. 18. 6. vers. 19, 20. of this Chapter, and Chap. 29. 9. & Exod. 2. 16. Which may be a rebuke to the nice, and mincing daughters of Sion, Isa. 3. 16. who through pride and nicetie, live in the house, as idle as the Lillies of the field, that neither labour nor spin, Matth. 6. 28. they will be content to weare Rebekahs Jewels, vers. 22. but they will neither lay their hands, nor shoulders to her worke.

V. 21. wondring] He might wonder to see so much courtesie in a stranger, and so much humble, and laborious officiousnesse (in so beautifull a virgin) to a stranger, vers. 18, 19, 20. and it gave him occasion to consider, and to wonder at Gods providence giving such speed (as he might well hope) unto his prayer.

V. 22. a golden eare-ring] Having first asked her, whose daughter she was, (for so he saith, vers. 47. repeating the passages betwixt them) he put upon her an habiliment, or jewel of gold; the word sometimes signifieth an eare-ring, Gen. 35. 4. sometimes a nose-jewel, as some render it in this place. In the wanton wardrobe of the daughters of Sion we find nose-jewels mentioned, Isa. 3. 21. which some people hang at their noses, though they may be called nose-jewels, because they hung down from the forehead to the nose; sometimes an ornament of the forehead, Ezek. 16. 12. Hence there is warrant for the godly to weare gold, and precious things; for being Gods goods, and gifts, his children have a good title to them as from him; but withall, first, they must have a good title to them in respect of men; by gift, inheritance, or purchase with their owne paines, or cost: secondly, they must be ordered with sutableness to their calling, and condition in the civill State: thirdly, they must not be costly above their abilitie: fourthly, they must not alwaies use them, especially if grave Matrons, as Sarah, 1 Pet. 3. 3. 6. fifthly, they must neither be fond of them, to buy them at deare rates; nor proud of them; nor thinke the better of themselves for them: sixthly, in cases of great necessitie, they must be willing to part with them: seventhly, while they use them, they must have an especiall care to be adorned inwardly with spirituall graces, with faith which is much more precious then gold, 1 Pet. 1. 7. and with a meeke spirit, which in the sight of God is of high price, 1 Pet. 3. 4. and to set their minds upon the golden glory, and precious Jewels of the new Jerusalem, Revel. 21.

halfe a shekel] The common shekel weighed 160. graines of Barley, the shekel of the Sanctuary was double to it; (as some conceive of it) some say it was not double to that, but to the shekel called the Royall shekel, which was in value about fifteene pence; but what was the just weight of it in Abrahams time, is uncertaine. See Annot. on Chap. 23. vers. 15.

V. 24. sonne of Milcah] Which sheweth that Bethuel the father of Rebekah, who was Nahors sonne, had not a concubine but a lawfull wife unto his mother. See Chap. 22. vers. 23, 24.

V. 26. worshipped the Lord] He gave thankes to God for the kindnesse offered and further expected from the hand of man.

V. 27. Lord who hath not left] He boasteth not of his good fortune, or good service; but acknowledgeth that God hath dealt mercifully with his Master, in performing the promise made unto him.

V. 28. mothers house] The women had lodgings apart from the men, both in houses as here, and in Tents, as in vers. 67. of this Chapter. & Chap. 31. 33.

he ungirded] To wit, Laban, whereby we see the gentle entertainment of strangers used by the better sort of people in those times; which example may serve either for imitation, or conviction of future ages.

V. 32. to wash] See Annot. on Chap. 18. vers. 4.

V. 33. not eat untill] The fidelitie that servants owe to their Masters, causeth them to preferre their Masters businesse before their owne necessitie, and this not in their Masters sight, but in his absence, and at great distance. See Ephes. 6. vers. 5, 6, 7, 8.

V. 35. the Lord hath blessed] Gods blessing maketh man rich, Pro. 10. 22.

and hath given him] Great godlinesse, and great riches may sometimes meet together in the same person. See Annot. on Chap. 13. 2.

V. 37. Canaanites] See Annot. on vers. 3.

V. 45. in mine heart] The devotion of the heart, though not set down in words, prevaileth with God; a comfort to those whose affections are better then their expressions; sighes, and groanes that cannot be uttered, are the best oratorie with Almighty God, Rom. 8. 26.

V. 47. upon her face] Any jewel that might be worne in the eare, was called an eare-ring, though some such were sometimes worne on the forehead, Ezek. 16. 12. and hanged downe toward the nose, therefore they were called nose-jewels, Isa. 3. 21. See Annot. on vers. 22.

V. 49. deale kindly and truly] That is, if you will freely, and faithfully give your daughter to my Masters sonne.

to the right hand or] That is, that I may provide else-where; A proverbiall speech of doubting, or indifferencie, when it is affirmative; and of justice, and uprightnesse, when it is negative.

V. 50. Laban and Bethuel] Laban Bethuels sonne is set before Bethuel his father; some thinke there was another Bethuel that was Labans younger brother; if it be Bethuel Rebekahs father mentioned, Gen. 22. 23. and in this Chapter vers. 15. 24. 47. then it is like that he being aged, committed the care of all to Laban, who having spoken first, what he said might be ratified by his father, and by the counsell and perswasion of his sonne who (it seemeth) with his mother had more to doe in this matter then his father had; or medled more in it then his father would: see vers. 55.

bad or good] (Chap. 31. vers. 24. 29.) That is, we can say nothing at all against it; no evill against the motion, no good reason why she should not yeeld unto it, since it is of God; or we can use neither faire meanes, nor foule, to hinder the motion.

V. 51. as the Lord hath spoken] That is, as he hath expressed his pleasure by giving a signe according to the prayer of the servant.

V. 52. bowing himselfe] (Vers. 26. 48.) And in this his gesture of humility his devotion is noted, wherein it seemes he had learned of his holy and humble Master, who though he were accepted by God as a friend, familiarity bred in him no contempt, Gen. 17. 3. but rather a deeper degree both of devotion, and dejection; a fit example to upbraid, and correct the surly, or stately religion of some, who will not bow when they begge for his beneficence; but sit at prayer, as if they came to parley with God, as their fellow, upon even termes. Prayer.

V. 55. a few dayes] Heb. dayes, or a decad. That is, tenne dayes, some say, tenne moneths; a proportion of time fit to furnish the Bride for another family, and to take a solemn farewell of her fathers house.

V. 57. at her mouth] That is, for her consent; this sheweth that parents have not authoritie to marry their children without the consent of the parties; as the children have no power, to dispose of themselves in marriage, without the consent of their parents: see Annot. on Gen. 21. 21.

V. 59. her nurse] Her name, Deborah, and buriall is noted, Gen. 35. 8. her she tooke with her as a second mother, both in office and affection, as her condition was capable of them; for when mothers forsake the duty of mothers, and turne their children over to be nourished by other breasts, then their own; they turne over the affection of their children to them also: which breedeth a naturall deareness, and tenderness betwixt them; the tenderness of a nursing father is noted, Numb. 11. 12. and of a nursing mother, 1 Thes. 2. 7. and the reciprocall respect of their nurse-children is experimentally manifest very often; but though in Bethuels family a mother, and a nurse were two persons, in Abrahams it was not so; there Sarahs example would be a better patterne for Rebekah, then her owne mothers.

V. 60. possesse the gate] That is, let it be victorious over its enemies; which blessing is fully accomplished in Jesus Christ. See Annot. on Chap. 22. ver. 17.

V. 62. the well Lahai-roi] The name of the Well that refreshed fainting Ishmael, see Gen. 16. 14. the word signifieth the well of him that liveth, that seeth me.

he dwelt] Not apart from his father, but with him; and it is like it was now at Beersheba, whither Abrahams servant returned with the Bride, whence there might be some convenient walke towards the Well forementioned.

V. 63. to meditate] Or, to pray. The word in the Originall signifieth both; and they sort well together; for meditation is a meet preparative to prayer; and prayer, a good conclusion, or shutting up of meditation.

at even-tide] The latter part of the day, is as fit for exercises of holinesse, as the former: why then should not the afternoone of the Sabbath be spent in religious duties as well as the forenoone? Sabbath.

V. 65. a vaile] The custome was for the Spouse to be brought to her Husband, her head being covered, in token of her shamefastnesse, and chastitie. Some note a fourefold use of covering the head, and face. First, of griefe, as in Davids mourning for Absolom. Secondly, of indignation, as Hamans head was covered, when the Kings anger was kindled against him, Esth. 7. vers. 8. Thirdly, of reverence, as Elias covered his face, when he talked with God in Horeb, 1 King. 19. 13. Fourthly, of shamefastnesse, and modestie, as this of Rebekah, wherein some have beene so strict, as to allow but libertie for one eye to ſee withall, and ſo rigorous as to reject a wife for being ſeene abroad without a vaile; to which we may adde a fifth, the covering of ſubjection, 1 Cor.11.10. Theſe two laſt are moſt obſervable by the female ſexe; which with ſome of late hath beene ſo farre out of uſe, as if they meant a great part to become Adamites, baring their breaſts, backs, and arms further then modeſtie will admit of.

V. 67. Sarahs tent] It was the manner for women to have their tents apart from the men, eſpecially in great families. See Annot. on Gen. 23.2. & 31.33. and this was a meanes to prevent trouble to the men, and to preſerve modeſtie in the women; for cohabitation of different ſexes (except they be ſuch as are married together) may be dangerous on both ſides. As we ſee in the example of Lot and his two daughters living in the Cave It ſeemeth Sarahs tent and furniture was reſerved for Iſaacs wife; for though Abraham meant to marry againe, his mind was not that his ſecond wife, but his ſons wife (ſince he was his ſonne by miracle, and his heire by promiſe) ſhould ſucceed his holy and worthy mother in her proprietie and priviledges.

loved her] The buſineſſe of marriage beginneth with Iſaac in filiall obedience, but it goeth on with a conjugall or husbandly benevolence: ſee Epheſ. 5.25.

comforted after his mothers death] Which was three yeares before; now though his ſorrow for her were by this time well qualified, he had now and then ſad thoughts of her, requiring a comforter, which ſhews a deare and durable affection towards her.

CHAP. XXV.

Verſ.1. VVIſe Keturah] Whether ſhe were taken in Sarahs life time (as ſome hold) is uncertaine, ſhe is called here a wife, but verſ.6. ſhe is implicitely, and in the 1 Chron.1.32. expreſſely called a concubine, and Hagar is called a wife, Chap.16.verſ.3. and it may be ſhe being an handmaid of Abrahams family, and Sarah dead, and Hagar diſmiſt if not dead alſo, was taken to wife; and therein her condition was better then Hagars, for the wife (whether firſt or ſecond) was taken with more ſolemnitie of marriage, and might not be caſt off as the concubine; but ſhe was called a Concubine, becauſe her iſſue could not inherit as the Concubines could not. See Annot. on Gen. 22.24. and becauſe if taken during the life of the firſt wife, ſhe was not Lady or Miſtreſſe of the family, as the husband was Maſter.

Keturah] This Keturah is not the ſame woman with Hagar, (her name changed) for Hagars name is continued, verſ. 12. nor is it likely that Abraham would make a bondwoman heire to her Miſtreſſe (for the right of his perſon) whom he dearely loved, and honoured, who would not indure either her, or her ſonne to dwell in his family; and though Sarah were now dead, and could not make any quarrell of the matter as before; yet he would not give ſuch an occaſion of diſcontent to Iſaac; who could not but take the returne of Hagar to his fathers bed with offence; nor is it like that Hagar being now about 80 yeares old, that he would take her for a wife, who married for the increaſe of his poſteritie; nor that ſhe ſhould (being ſo old) be the mother of ſixe ſonnes, as Keturah was, verſ.2. nor is it probable that Keturah was taken to wife while Sarah lived, ſince there is no mention of her at all till after her death; and it is probable not till three years after, for he was no doubt as mindfull of his wife, as Iſaac of his mother, and as mournfull, and ſo would not marry before him; and (according to the order of the ſtory) it is moſt like, that he marryed afterwards: and it was convenient that Iſaac being a young man, and mature for mariage, (for he was now fourtie yeares of age, Gen.25.20.) ſhould have one wife before his old father had two.

V. 2. ſhe bare him] It is no marvell that Keturah ſhould beare ſixe ſonnes, for we read not ſhe was old, and by her preſent fruitfulneſſe, we may conceive ſhe was young; but that Abraham, who fourtie yeares before (that is before Iſaac was borne) was held too old to be the father of a child, his body (not Sarahs onely) being then as dead, Rom.4.19. in reſpect of impotence to procreate, ſhould be the father of ſo many children, is very ſtrange, and in appearance improbable. Anſw. It was not by vertue of Abrahams naturall abilitie, which a good while before was dead; but by a new ſtrength given him by God, who had promiſed him a multiplyed poſteritie, Gen. 17. 5. (which had a ratification not only in Sarahs iſſue, but in Keturahs alſo) and was able to make his promiſe good, as well in old as in young Abraham, either by continuing or renuing the maſculine vigour (reſtored to him at the begetting of Iſaac) in his conjugall ſocietie with Keturah: and his bleſſing was the more apparent by how much, by the courſe of nature, he was more impotent.

V. 4. the ſonnes of Midian] Were five the founders of ſo many royall families, whence it is that five Kings of Midian are reckoned, Numb. 31. 18. of which five, foure are mentioned, Judg.7.25. & Chap.8.5.

V. 5. all to Iſaac] That is, all the eſtate he had at the time of his death; for before that he had given portions to the ſonnes of his concubines and ſent them away; and that was ſo little in reſpect of his maine eſtate, that Iſaac had (in a manner) all given to him, as it is ſaid, Chap. 24. 36. before his marriage with Rebekah.

V. 6. Concubines] See Annot. on verſ. 1. and on Chap.22. verſ. 24.

ſent them away] Becauſe Iſaacs poſteritie was to inherit the Land of Canaan, and that would be too little for the numerous progeny of all Abrahams children.

Eaſt countrey] That is, in reſpect of the Land of Canaan, as Arabia, Syria, and other places of like ſituation. See Judg. 6.3. & Chap.7.verſ.12. Job 1.3.

V. 8. good old age] (Gen. 15. 15. Judg. 8. 32.) when he was 175. yeares old. See the Annot.on Chap.24.verſ.1.

full] (1 Chron. 29. 28. Job 42.17.) The Originall hath no more, for ſometimes the word is left out in the Hebrew which by the ſence is eaſily ſupplyed; as Pſal.73. verſ.10. Waters of a full are wrung out unto them, that is, waters of a full cup, or veſſell. So here Abraham was full, that is, of dayes, or yeares; or full in the fulfilling of his deſires for this life, not much caring for any more of the world.

gathered to his people] The like phraſe is uſed of Iſhmael, verſ. 17. and hereby the ancients ſignified that man by death periſhed not wholly, but as the ſoules of the godly lived after in perpetuall joy; ſo the ſoules of the wicked, in perpetuall paine; and though the godly ſoule departing hence, be ſeparated from humane ſocietie, it is not deſtitute of very good company. See Heb.12.23,24.

V. 9. Iſaac and Iſhmael] Iſhmael was older, but Iſaac is ſet before him, as being a better man, and better borne; for his mother was a free-woman, Iſhmaels a bond-woman; and he was borne in a better ſtate, for he was borne of a lawfull wife, Iſhmael of a concubine; and to a better eſtate, for he was heire of the principall promiſe of God made to Abraham.

Iſhmael] Iſhmael, though he were not againe received into Abrahams family, dwelt not at ſo great diſtance, but that he might heare of his death, and ſo come to his buriall.

V. 11. Lahai-roi] See the Annot. on Chap.24.verſ.62.

bleſſed Iſaac] As he was the ſeed rather of faithfull beliefe then of fleſhly abilitie, Rom. 4. 19. So the bleſſing was rather ſpirituall, then temporall; for Iſaac was an husband twentie yeares before he was a father; whereas Iſhmael was ſooner, and was the progenitor of twelve Princes, verſ.16. according to the promiſe of God to Abraham, Chap.17.20.

V. 13. generations] Or genealogy, as their pedegree hath been ſet down in Regiſters and Records.

V. 14. Dumah] Of this Dumah the ſonne of Iſhmael, the Idumeans are thought by ſome to have deſcended; by others the Idumeans are held to be the poſteritie of Eſau or Edom, called Idumeans for Edomeans.

V. 15. Tema] Of whom was the countrey and citie of Tema or Teman bordering upon the South of Idumea, of which countrey was Jobs friend Eliphaz, Job 2.11. and ſome ſay, King alſo.

V. 16. townes and] By the places where they ſorted together for cohabitation or dwelling, and their Caſtles or ſtrong holds againſt their enemies, which haply bare the name of ſome eminent perſon of their family or kindred.

V. 17. gathered to his people] From which place the Hebrews collect the repentance and ſalvation of Iſhmael. See the Annot. on verſ.8.

V. 18. Havilah] An ample Region of Arabia reaching from the Perſian gulph to the red Sea, and to Egypt, whereof mention is made, Chap. 2. verſ. 8. not that Havilah of India, or any Region in Africa.

died in the preſence of] His brethren all ſurviving him, and by their vicinitie, if not preſent at his death, yet taking notice of it; the Hebrew word Naphal ſignifying to fall, is referred by ſome to a lot, that is, ſo they take the ſenſe to be the allotting of his portion in the preſence of his brethren, Chap.16.verſ.2. See the Annot. on that verſe.

V. 20. Padan Aram] The name not of the citie of Bethuel, for that was Charran or Haran, but of the countrey called alſo Syria, where that citie ſtood; which Syria in Hebrew is called Aram, from Aram the ſonne of Sem, Gen.10.22. whence ſome Tranſlations have the words Aram, and Aramites, whereas others uſe the words Syria, and Syrians; and both names ſignifie the ſame countrey, and people; and it is ſometimes called Aram-Naharaim, Pſal.60. title. That is, Aram of two Rivers, for Naharaim is the duall number of Nahar a River; and it is called Padan Aram, Padan in the Chaldee and Syriak tongue ſignifieth a couple; thence it is called Padan-Aram and Naharaim, becauſe it is ſituate betwixt a couple of Rivers, Tygris and Euphrates; and for the ſame reaſon it is called Meſopotamia in Greeke, which word ſignifyeth in the middeſt of Rivers; Bethuel is here called a Syrian of Padan Aram for diſtinction from the other Syria, called called Syria Zobah, or Aram-Zobah, Psal.60. tit. Adrich. Delph. Theatr. Ter. Sanct. pag.94,95.

V. 21. Isaac intreated the LORD] The Lord had promised to make good the promises made to Abraham in Isaac, Gen. 21. 12. yet he prayeth to God, and continued to pray unto him many yeares, and at last was heard in that he prayed for; of whom we are to learne neither to presume upon Gods promises, without doing our duties, nor to be weary of praying, if God be not speedy in granting what we pray for; For being without a child for twentie yeares after he was married (for he was fourtie yeares old when he was married, vers. 20. and sixtie when these twins were borne, vers.26.)so soone as he conceived that Rebekah was barren, not seeking a more fruitfull Bed-fellow, nor the offering any such unto his choice, he often, and a long time importuned God to make her the mother, as he hoped himselfe should be the father of many nations.

for his wife] Heb. against his wife. Because(as some take it) she had no mind to be a mother,or,because of the pains of childbirth which were against her; but the meaning may be that they prayed in such a posture,as that one was placed over against the other. Or against his wife, that is, as David prayed against Achitophel, that is, not against his person, but against his policie, so Isaac prayed not against the person of Rebekah, but her barrennesse.

barren] It is noted of many worthy women, that their fruitfulnesse hath been restrained for a long time, as Sarah, Rebekah, Rachel, Hannah the mother of Samuel, in the Old Testament; and Elizabeth the mother of John Baptist, in the New; whose long waiting hath been recompensed (at last) with an happy birth of a worthy person. In such examples God sheweth his power over nature to make it fruitlesse, or fruitfull, as he pleaseth; and thereby tempereth the affection, that it may not be too much set upon a beautifull person, as Rebekah was, Chap. 24. 16. and increaseth the devotion of prayer for the blessing.

V. 22. Children strugled] It is not strange for a woman with child with twins, to feele some painfull spruntings of them within her, especially towards the birth, where each striveth first to come forth, but this was more then ordinary, and therefore it was not onely a misery to her, which she could not beare without complaint; but a mysterie also, figuring the conflict of two nations, vers.23.

to inquire of the LORD] She went apart to some private place, by prayer to entreat the Lord to acquaint her with the cause of such extraordinary commotion within her.

V. 23. two Nations] That is, two persons vertually including two nations, as in their root, and originall, as all mankind was radically contained in Adam, because all proceeded from his loynes; these two nations are those which in after time were called Israelites, and Edomites or Idumeans; of these the people descended from the younger brother shall prevaile above the posteritie of the elder; and the Israelites which are (if true Israelites) the true Church Militant, shall be the Triumphant Church, above the malignant Idumeans.

the elder shall serve] Upon this place the Apostle grounds the Doctrine of Free-Grace in the election of some, and reprobation of others before the doing of good, or evill, Rom.9.12,13. Mal. 1. 2, 3. But for clearer explication of this place, we must note that the words may be taken in respect of the persons of these contending twins, or in respect of their posterities; in respect of their persons, the preeminence of Jacob the younger above Esau the elder, consisted in the prerogative of the birthright, (which gave him authoritie over his brethren, and the rest of the household, under his father) devolved from Esau to Jacob. 2. In the promise of the Land of Canaan. 3. In the holy Covenant of Religion with God, whereby his Church was propagated in Jacobs posteritie, not in Esaus; and to that Church humble subjection is prophesied, Esa.49.23. see also Gal. 4. 25, 26. Revel. 3. 9. But otherwise in respect of temporall preeminence, Jacob might be said to serve Esau; for he called himselfe his servant, Gen.32. 18. 20. and Esau his Lord, Gen. 33. vers. 13, 14. and did him homage, bowing himselfe to the ground many times before him, Gen. 33. 3. yet did the posteritie of Jacob subdue the posteritie of Esau, when in Davids time the Idumeans or Edomites, that came of Esau (who was called Edom) were subdued by the Israelites, (who descended of Jacob and bare his name, for he was also Israel, Gen.32. 28.) and under their subjection were brought, 2 Sam.8. 14. and though for their sinnes, afterwards the Edomites broke their yoke, as Isaac prophecied, Gen.27.40. yet the Israelites never served the Idumeans, or Edomites. See the Annot. on Gen.27.40.

V. 25. red like an hairy garment] With red haire all over his body, a strange and extraordinary birth, importing that Esau would prove a cholericke, cruell, and brutish man, and of monstrous ill manners; in whose person God prefigured the bloody and barbarous disposition of such as persecute his Church, and children, Ezek.3.5. Obad. 10.

Esau] The word signifieth either made, or perfect, by which was meant the strength of his constitution, as if he were already rear'd, or nurst, and rather like a man with a beard, then a new borne babe without teeth: and that name might be given him, with a purpose to please the mother, who being a beautifull woman, would be apt to take discontent at a deformed, or unhandsome child, as Esau was, being very hairy, as Jacob said of him, my brother is an hairy man. See Genesis Chapter 27. vers. 11.

V. 26. tooke hold] A Divine presage that Jacob should supplant him, and bring down his head as by tripping up his heeles; which came to passe in his getting of the preeminence of the birth-right, and in other matters, whereof see Annot.on vers.23.

Jacob] Hebr. Jaghnakob. His name beares the remembrance of the act, for it signifieth a supplanter, or taker up of the heele, from Ghnekeb, which in Hebrew signifieth the heele, or the sole of the foot; or from Ghnakab which signifieth to deceive by supplanting, or taking hold of the sole of the foot.

V. 27. hunter] The different disposition of the godly and the wicked, is figured in these two sonnes: the one like Nimrod, Gen. 10. 9. are of harsh, rough and fierce natures, and give themselves to exercises of violence, as Esau did; the other more disposed to civill societie and benignitie, as Jacob was.

V. 28. Isaac loved Esau] Isaac loved Esau better then Jacob, as Rebekah loved Jacob better then Esau; and he loved him because he did eate of his venison; it was then a fleshly love, and so an infirmitie in Isaac; but withall Esau being cunning not onely in hunting for the prey, vers. 27. but otherwise, might insinuate into the affections of his father; and by being very officious to please his palate, might make himselfe as great a favourite with Isaac, as Jacob was with Rebekah.

V. 29. Jacob sod pottage] Household services in those dayes were not so distinguished as now they be, so that the sonnes might dresse meat, as well as the daughters; and the daughters carry upon their shoulders as Rebekah did, Chap.24.15. as well as sonnes.

V. 30. red pottage] Heb. with that red, with that red. Red by some herbes, as lentiles, whereof they were made, see vers. 34. or, by somewhat put into them which might give them that colour, as Safron. The word red is doubled because the pottage was very red, as the good good, Judg.11.25. emphatically signifieth very good, and naught naught, Prov. 20.14. very naught.

therefore was his name called Edom] For that signifieth red; and that name might be given him not onely because he was greedy of this red pottage, doubling the word red, as it appeared to his sense, and omitting the word pottage, vers.30. but also because he was red in complexion and colour of his body, vers. 25. being overgrowne with red haire. And it is to be noted that by the better sort, he was more commonly called by his worse name Edom, then by his better name Esau, (which signifieth made, or perfect) and rather from the redness of the pottage whereabout he offended, then the redness of his body which was without his fault, as appeareth, vers.25. He had (as some thinke) a third name, which was Seir, from his hairinesse; for Seir signifieth hairie; but in the Scripture it is not given him as a proper name, as Edom and Esau were, but as an appellative, or a common name, or title; for he was hairie Esau, as his father was blind Isaac, whose proper name was Isaac, and blind an appellative title added to it.

V. 31. sell me thy birth-right] The birthright contained a fatherly preeminence over the brethren, the Office of the Priesthood, before the Law written, and a double portion of the fathers estate; Deut. 21.17. but for the Priesthood it was otherwise before the Law of Moses then afterward; for before Moses time the Priesthood was not limited to the elder brother; for Abel offered sacrifice as well as Caine, and the father of the family while he lived was ordinarily the Priest; and when he died, his eldest sonne succeeded in that office, as well as in the government of the family; but in Moses time there was a law for the first-borne of man and beasts, the one as a Priest to offer, the other as a sacrifice to be offered, Exod.13.2. In denying Esau reliefe in his hunger, except upon such hard termes, Jacob had shewed himselfe an uncharitable man, and a very unkind brother; but it is like his mother, who received the prophecie of his preeminence, vers.23. directed her younger sonne (as by an especiall providence of God) how to deale with the elder.

V. 32. at the point to die] Heb. going to die. No great danger of death; but this was an expression noting the greedinesse of his appetite, and greatnesse of his passion.

V. 33. sweare] An oath is more then a promise, and so much as may oblige the conscience of a profane person, who cares not to violate or breake his word, if he be no further bound.

this day] It is probable that this was not the first time that Esau, and Jacob had parley about the primogeniture; Esau was not a man fitly qualified for it, because he had more mind to be among unreasonable creatures in the field, then reasonable men in the family: for the Priesthood he was too profane, and under that title he is taxed, Heb.12.16. and here it is said, that he despised it, vers. 34. and for the double portion the priviledge of the first-borne, Deut.21.17. he had no need of it, for he could carve himselfe a competent maintenance with his sword, as his father foretold of him, Gen.27.40. therefore having often, as it is like, made light of it, and promised to give it up unto his brother; he now tooke advantage of his present hunger to make a firme, and finall bargaine for it to be ratified with an oath, wherein he did unkindly in denying reliefe to his brother in necessitie, unjustly in requiring too great a price of that he sold, and impiously in tempting him to so profane a contempt, if he had not some secret instinct, or some revelation (by his mother consulting with God, or some other way) for the carriage of the contract in this sort; howsoever the great wisdome of God can order small occasions, as this was, to great purposes, and can convert the weaknesse, and wickednesse of men to his owne glory; yet this must not embolden any to doe as Jacob did, unlesse upon such warrant as Jacob had.

V. 34. despised] Neither before nor after the sale of his birthright did he thinke or care how bad his bargaine was by selling so pretious a thing for so poore a price, but did eat and drinke and goe away without any repentance for what he had done: See Heb.12.16. Yet he might have a purpose to recover that againe by force, which he conceived was gotten by fraud.

CHAP. XXVI.

Vers.1. IN the land] That is, of Canaan; though it were a fruitfull Land, Gods curse for mans sinne made it unable to feed the Inhabitants.

besides the first] Whereof Chap. 21. Deliverance from afflictions is no assurance that they shall not returne; if men renew their sinnes, God may and will recall his plagues, and punish them againe. See Levit.26. vers.15, &c. Psal.78.

Abimelech King] See Annot. on vers.26.

V. 2. not downe into Egypt] Gods providence alwaies watcheth to direct the waies of his children, and to see them provided for in the hardest times, Psal. 37. 19. Though Egypt were a very fruitfull place, and Isaac might have a mind to sojourne there as did his father before him, yet he is especially forbidden so to doe, because now God had revealed the captivitie of Abrahams posteritie in that Land, which then he had not done; and that he would have him guided rather by his owne word, then by his fathers example, though that in many things was a good patterne for his practise, as it is proposed to him, vers.5.

V. 3. I will be with thee] As God made the promise of his free mercy; so doth the confirmation thereof proceed from the same fountaine.

unto thee] To thee as a sojourner, to thy posteritie as owners by way of propriety, possession, and hereditary right.

V.5. Abraham obeyed] He commendeth Abrahams obedience, because Isaac should be more ready to follow him in the like.

because] God makes good his promise, and Covenant out of the same goodnesse that moves him to make it, and that is his own pure grace; not mans merit, Rom.4.4. & Chap.3.28. yet on mans part there are conditions required, and by the assistance of his grace performed, and graciously accepted, and mentioned as if there were some causalitie in them for Gods acceptance; not to make man confident in himselfe, but diligent in his dutie to his Maker. So Chap.22.16.

my voyce] This varietie of expression commends Abrahams promptnesse, in obeying God in what way soever he was pleased to reveale his will unto him.

V. 7. she is my sister] In this Isaac followeth the example of his father, Gen.12.13. not unknowne, though unseene, how needfull it is for parents to take heed of setting an ill example before their children, how apt they are to follow them, rather in evill, then in good; for Abrahams obedience is commended vers. 5. and the first imitation of him that is noted, is in that wherein he should have shunned his example: yet by way, not of defence, (for there was untruth in their intent) but of extenuation; the phrase of the time may be alleadged, which called even strangers by the name of brethren. See Gen.29.4.

feared to say] Whereby we see that feare, and distrust is found in the best, not as a barren sinne which begets not another, but as a parent of lying: so the terrour of the wrack may be the shipwrack of truth, though used to extort a confession of the truth.

faire] See Annot. on Gen.12.11.

V. 8. looked out] This was not shortly, but a good while after they came to Gerar; and it was in the day time, haply in some Garden, where the King having high, and free prospect every way might see them, as David did Bathsheba when she was bathing of her selfe, 2 Sam.11.2.

sporting] Shewing some familiar signe of love, whereby it might be knowne, or probably supposed she was his wife: the word here used for sporting in the Originall, is neere of kinne to the name of Isaac, signifying laughter, Gen.21.3. and the very same which is used of Ishmaels mocking of him, vers.9. of the same Chapter; for the same act may (according to the disposition of the mind) be taken in a good or bad sence; and for the carriage of Isaac, it was some signification of pleasing familiaritie, which might be allowed betwixt man and wife, Deut.24.5. Prov.5.18. but not betwixt a brother and a sister, (though it were not such as was proper for the bed, or for the night, for Isaac and Rebekah had both more grace and modestly then so to behave themselves in the day, where the King might see them) which made Abimelech so confident that she was his wife, and not his sister, as is shewed in the next verse.

V. 10. What is this that] Abimelech passionately expostulateth with Isaac concerning the deniall of his wife; which sheweth how adultery, and dissimulation were condemned even by heathen moralitie; and blameth the wantonnesse, and wickednesse of such as professing true Religion, make no scruple or conscience to commit such sinnes.

guiltinesse upon us] The act of sinne committed by one may bring a guilt upon others; a guilt with the punishment due unto it; see the Annot. on Chap.20. vers.9. In all ages men were perswaded that Gods vengeance should light upon wedlock-breakers.

V. 11. he that toucheth] (Vers.29. & Josh.9.19. Ruth. 2.9.) That is, he that hurteth or wrongeth them, Psal.105.15. especially that wrongeth either of them by any immodest or unlawfull touching of his wife. See Gen.20.6. Prov.6.29. 1 Cor.7.1.

V. 12. sowed in that land] Not any as his owne possession, but either hired for his use, or not used by others, because barren and wast.

V. 12. an hundred fold] An hundred graines for one, or an hundred measures for one; the Septuagint specifie the graine, saying, it was an hundred measures of Barley, haply mistaken by reason of the vicinitie of the word Sheguarim, signifying measures, and Segnorim, signifying Barley, which differ little in the Hebrew letters: the greatest measure which our Saviour mentioneth in the Parable of the seed, Matth.13.8. is an hundred fold, and though in some extraordinary fruitfull soiles the returne be noted to one hundred and fiftie, three hundred, yea foure hundred for one, Plin. lib 18. cap. 10. yet in such a soile as Isaac tilled, especially in a time of famine, it might be accounted a miraculous fruitfulnesse to receive an hundred for one.

the Lord blessed him] See how, vers. 13, 14, 15. and therewithall, that of Solomon fulfilled, The blessing of the Lord maketh rich, Prov.10.22.

V. 14. servants] Or, husbandry; as in the Margine; that is, much ground for tillage, and many servants to manure it.

envied at him] The prosperitie of the godly is an affliction to the wicked, Psal.112.10. by their envie at it, for envie slayeth the silly one, Job 5.2.

V. 15. the Philistims stopped] The hatred of the Religious, and breaking covenant with them by the wicked, is very ancient; yet to defend and plead for breach of faith with the faithfull under the name of Hereticks is an hereticall practice, both new, and naught.

V. 17. the valley of Gerar] The Hebrew word signifieth a Floud, or valley where water at any time runneth; but because by the confluence of waters in such low places, especially after raine, or snow, the waters runne muddy, there was need of Wels whence it might be drawne more cleare, and better for use, both of man and beast.

V. 18. digged againe] Because he was sure there was water there, and that he had a right unto it, and in renuing that right, he renued the grateful memory of his gracious father.

V. 20. ours] Because it was digged in their ground, yet not theirs in right, because it was digged with consent of the owners.

V. 23. thence to Beersheba] The famine being ended, he returned to the place whence the famine had driven him.

V. 24. God of Abraham] God assureth Isaac against all feare, by rehearsing the promise made to Abraham, to whom with singular favour he entitles his Godhead, as if he were his God more then any ones; and in that he is called the God of Abraham after the buriall of his body, it is an Argument that he liveth in soule, for God is not the God of the dead, but of the living, Matth. 22.32.

V. 25. Altar there] (Gen.13.18.) To signifie that he would serve no other God but the God of his father Abraham.

V. 26. Abimelech and Phicol] The same names we read of, Gen.21.22. but whether they be the same men, that there made the covenant with Abraham, is uncertain, they might be the same supposing them to be about an hundred yeares of age. But then it is somewhat strange that in this entercourse there is no mention of the accord with Abraham in former times, and that a man so well minded as that Abimelech seemed to be (if he were the same) by his good dealing, first with Abraham, Chap.20. and since with Isaac, ver. 10, 11. of this Chapter, should deale deale so injustly with him as to withhold the use of those Wels from his heire, which by a solemne Covenant were his; unlesse envie at his prosperitie (which was such that he desired Isaacs departing from him, vers. 16. and which Isaac interprets as a testimonie of hatred, vers. 27.) should make him become injurious to him; and unlesse wrong were done by his servants without his knowledge, as before is noted in the story of Abraham, Gen. 21. 26. it may therefore be another; Abimelech (signifying my father the King) might be an hereditary Title of the Kings of Gerar, as the name Pharaoh was of the Kings of Egypt; and the word Phicol compounded of two Hebrew words, Phi, or Phe, a mouth, or face; and Col, all, the mouth of all, might be a name of office, for a man of publique power, and authority, who was as it were the mouth of all by his speaking in the publique affaires, wherein all were concerned and concluded; or the face on whom every one cast his eyes, as expecting from him counsell, command, or conduct.

26. 7. [She is my Sister.] Peccat igitur Isaac: Primo Diffidentia.

went to him] Not out of love for they hated him, vers. 27. but in craft to set upon him if they saw him too feeble for them, and if not, to treat with him upon termes of friendship.

V. 28. with thee] See Annot. on Vers. 3.

V. 29. that thou wilt] Heb. if thou shalt, &c. The Hebrews in swearing begin commonly with If, and understand the rest, that is, that God shall punish him that breakes the Oath; as if he that sweareth should say, I sweare to doe thus, and thus, and if I falsifie my oath, let the punishment, or judgement of God light upon me. See Annot on Gen. 14. 23.

doe us no hurt] Here the wicked shew that they are afraid lest that come upon them which they would do to others.

V. 31. betimes] Peace is to be embraced with cheerfulnesse and expedition, and oaths of agreement chiefly, to be made fresh and fasting, with all reverence and sobrietie.

V. 33. Beersheba] See Annot. on Chap. 21. 31.

V. 34. Judith] Esaus wives, and their fathers had severall names, Gen. 36. 2. (for he had no more wives of the Canaanites but two) as himselfe had; for he was called Esau, Edom, and Seir. See Annot. on Chap. 25. vers. 25. & 30.

Hittite] Esau married, as his father did, at the age of fourty; but he did not like him in following his fathers mind in the choyce of a wife; for he tooke two for one, two Hittites the worst sort of Canaanites, Ezek. 16. 3. whereas his holy grandfather tooke a solemne oath of his servant to provide a wife for his sonne among his owne kindred, without the Land of Canaan, Gen. 24. 3. so that his marriage was not onely without his parents consent; but against their mind, which is lesse respect to both, then Ishmael shewed to one, and that one of the weaker sexe; and in condition much more unworthy then either of them.

V. 35. a griefe] See Annot. on Chap. 27. vers. last.

CHAP. XXVII.

Vers. 1. Old] Viz. One hundred thirty seven yeares of age, which some Chronologicall Accountants by collation of severall places of Scripture make up thus; Jacob was borne in the sixtieth yeare of Isaac, Chap. 25. 26. and being now seventy seven yeares old, Isaac must be one hundred thirty seven; and that at his flight to his Uncle Laban (which presently followed the getting of the Blessing) he was seventie seven years of age, appeares thus; from the time of his coming thither, he served Laban twentie yeares, Chap. 31. 38. and in the beginning of the fourteenth yeare of his servitude Joseph was borne, Chap. 30. 25, 26. in the fourtieth yeare of Josephs age Jacob went into Egypt; compare Chap. 41. 46. with 45. 6. and Jacob went thither in the one hundred and thirty yeare of his age, Chap. 47. 9. out of which deduct the fourtie yeares of Josephs age, and the thirteene yeares spent in service before he was borne, and there will remaine seventie seven.

eyes dimme] (Gen. 48. 10. 1 Sam. 32.) It is said of Moses when he was but seventeene yeares younger, viz. one hundred and twenty yeares old, that his sight was not dimme, Deut. 34. 7. but that is noted of him as a thing extraordinary.

V. 2. I knew not] This reason is not to be referred to the meat, but to the blessing, which was most seasonable when it was pronounced, as the last act of a fathers office with the farewell to the world.

I know not the day of my death] Uncertaintie of the day of death, should make us wise to order the time of life with a double providence; the one for others in this world, the other for our selves in the next; and so to set our selves in present expectation of our parting, or our Masters coming, Mar. 13. 5. but for such preparation no man shall die the sooner; for Isaac after this lived fourtie yeares, even to one hundred eightie yeares, Gen. 35. 28, 29.

V. 4. meat] For such as are of full bodies, and good strength: fasting may be a good preparation to spirituall duties; but for such as are weake and in a declining state, as Isaac was, meat may cheare up their spirits, and make them more vigorous in devotion: so it may be better for some to receive the Sacrament of the Lords Supper fasting; for others, after some refreshing.

my soule may blesse] The carnall affection that he had to his sonne Esau, made him forget that which God spake to his wife, Chap. 25. vers. 23. See vers. 28. of that Chapter, and the Annot. upon it.

My soule] That I may blesse thee with all my heart.

blesse thee] (Chap. 28. 3, 4. & 48. vers. 15, 16, 20. & 49. 25, 26.) The Priests, Gen. 14. 19. & Numb. 6. from vers. 23. to the end of the Chapter, did (in the name of the Lord and by warrant from him) blesse the people; so did the Patriarchs, (who were Priests in their families, and some of them Prophets) blesse their children; wherein if they followed the guidance of Gods Spirit, rather then their own affections, it tooke effect; otherwise the blessing followed rather the faith of the receiver, then of the blesser; thence it was that some did blesse, others were blessed better then others, Gen. 49. 26. Heb. 12. 17. Now for Isaac, it seemes, he either did not understand, or not remember the Oracle of God concerning the prelation of the younger brother before the elder; or else it went against his heart or soule to pronounce the blessing according to it.

V. 7. before the LORD] That is, in his presence, and with his allowance, who by his gracious act will ratifie my word, and intent.

V. 9. two good kids] Two Kids seeme too much for one dish of meat for an old man, but out of both he might take the choisest parts, to make it daintie, and the juyce of the rest might serve for sauce, or for the rest of the family, which was not small.

V. 11. Jacob said] His mother it seemeth (though it be not so expressed) had advised him not onely to bring his father a dish of meat, but to present it as in the name and person of his brother Esau.

an hairy man] See Gen. 25. 25. and the Annot. upon it.

seeme to him as a deceiver] Jacob is said to be a plaine man, Chap. 25. vers. 27. Yet now he must play the subtle person; and the more subtle, because he had more minde to seeme so, then to be so. The plaine dealing of the godly is of their love to sinceritie, not of simplicitie, or sillinesse; for they could play the Politicians, as well as others, if their wits were not overruled in their working, by their consciences: the like may be observed in Rebekahs carriage of the whole project.

V. 12. bring a curse] Deceipt though used for advantage, or defence, is dangerous; and it is especially both prohibited, and threatned if it be a deceipt of the blind, Deut. 27. 18. And in matter of Religion, Jer. 48. 10. Mal. 1. 14. This was both, and therefore Jacobs feare was not without cause.

V. 13. upon me be thy curse] Her confidence was great, and made up of vehement affection to her sonne, of a strange opinion of the successe of her devise, but especially of a beleefe that God would establish the blessing on Jacobs person, for which it is like she had a resolution from God upon her consultation with him, Gen. 25. vers. 22, 23. Though this deceiptfull way was her own devising, not of Gods direction.

V. 15. goodly raiment] Hebr. desireable. A suit of Esaus laid up, not to be worne every day, but upon some extraordinary occasion, as this was; some thinke it was a holy robe made for the first borne to use in holy ministrations, and therefore rather kept in the custody of Esaus mother, then of his wives. But there is no ground for that in Scripture; it might be a better suit then ordinary, kept by his mother for shift, when he came to his father.

V. 16. skins upon his hands] To resemble Esau, who was all over like an hairy garment, Gen. 25. 25. And his hands, and necke were thus disguised, not his face; for by this time Jacobs face might be rough with a beard, as well as Esaus, (though his hands and necke were smooth) for he was as old as Esau within a very little, being both twinnes at a birth; and Esau now was married, and he was not married, untill he was fourtie yeares of age, Gen. 26. 34.

V. 19. I am Esau] Though Jacob was assured of the Blessing by faith, yet he did evill to seek it by lies; and the more, because he abuseth Gods Name thereunto, vers. 20. Some say, it was not a lie, but a mystery; others, that it was a literall truth, for he was the first-borne by the right of purchase, but he was not Esau that sold it, but Jacob that bought it, and he calleth himselfe by the name of Esau, as our Saviour called John Baptist, Elias, Matth. 11. 14. but he called John Elias not in person, but in office; and they to whom he spake, understood it not of Elias personall presence, but by way of allusion, or resemblance; whereas Jacob meant, and was understood of Esaus person, both in this verse, and vers. 24. Besides, he dissembled, and spake untruly in saying in this verse, he had done as his father bade him; and calling his meat Venison, and in answering, the Lord had brought it to his hands, ver. 20. as if he had made his hunting successefull sooner, then at other times.

V. 22. the voyce of Jacob] This (as also vers. 23.) declareth that he suspected something, yet God would not have his Decree altered.

V. 23. he discerned him not] His eies were dim, by them he could not judge; his hearing was better; but upon his touching finding him rough like Esau, he gave as much credit to his hands as to his eares; the voyce is Jacobs voyce, but the hands are the hands of Esau, vers. 22. and being in doubt what to thinke, his other two senses, his tasting and smelling, vers. 25. 27. bare false witnesse according to Jacobs words, and so he resolved that Jacob was Esau, and gave him the blessing. The Spirit which assisted him in the benediction of Jacob and Esau, and the prediction of events concerning both, did not discover the deceit of his wife and sonne; for the illumination was by particular acts, not by way of habit imparted to him.

V. 27. as the smell of a field] Those parts where Esau lived abounded with aromatick, or sweet smelling odours, or spices, wherewith it might be the manner to perfume the cloathes that were laid up, and not wonted to daily wearing; or the skin of the Kids might present a smell (by some artifice of Rebekah) which might be pleasing to the sent of Isaac; he compares it to the smell of a field which the Lord hath blessed, with flowers, and fruits, and vines, for saith Solomon, the vines with the tender grape give a good smell, Cant. 2. 13. and husbandmen say, that some grounds when they are broken up with the Plough, yeeld a very pleasing smell to him that tilleth them.

V. 28. dew of heaven] Deut. 33. 28.

fatnesse of the earth] By this may be understood the Land of Canaan, called a fat Land, because it was plentifully furnished with all good things; as Wels digged, Vineyards, Olive-yards, and fruitfull trees in abundance, Deut. 6. 10, 11.

corne and wine] (Deut. 33. 28.) By these temporall particulars were shadowed out blessings of a better qualitie in spirituall matters: for this fruitfull Land of Canaan was a type of heaven, and the plenty of spirituall graces is signified by a feast of fat things, Isa. 25. 6.

V. 29. let people serve thee] From Jacob came Judah, and of him came the chiefe Rulers, 1 Chron. 5. 2. and the Scepter by Jacobs prophecie continued in his Line untill the coming of Shiloh, Gen. 49. 10. that is, the Messias, Jesus Christ. See the Annot. on that place. And for this Prophecie it was particularly fulfilled when the Idumeans, Philistims, and Moabites, were brought under subjection of David, Solomon, and the Asmonean Governours.

cursed be] (Chap. 9. 25. & 12. 3.) Cursed of God, who takes the injuries done unto his Church, as done to himselfe. See Act. 9. 4.

V. 33. trembled] Heb. was astonished: at the strangenesse of the act, and event contrary to his intention; the deceit, and disguise of Jacob so cunningly carried, and his purpose to Esau so strangely disappointed (by Gods over-ruling providence) put him for a time into wondring and trembling astonishment; and the rather, because now he might perceive that by his carnall affection to Esau he had runne crosse to Gods prediction, Gen. 25. 23.

have blessed him] Though his intention was to have blessed Esau, the effect of his benediction God (by his promise, and Jacobs faith) settles upon him; quite crosse to the conceit of the Papists, who make the efficacie of the Sacrament to depend upon the intention of the Minister; so that it shall be fruitlesse, and in vaine to the receiver, if there want a good intention in the giver.

he shall be blessed] Being convinced now of his erroneous intent touching the blessing of Esau, he ratifieth the Blessing upon Jacob, and now doth that of faith, which before he did with mis-guided fancie, and affection; and so his blessing is recorded by the Apostle, saying, By faith Isaac blessed Jacob, and Esau, touching things to come, Heb. 11. 20.

V. 34. bitter cry] Because now his fathers solemn blessing upon Jacob had unrecoverably settled his birth-right upon him; in whose example we see that those that make no account of precious things while they have them, may be made bitterly to bewaile the want of them, when they have lost them; though Esau were an hardy hunter, a man of the sword, vers. 40. of this Chapter, God can make him weepe like a woman: See the 1 Sam. 30. 4.

V. 35. thy blessing] That is, which appertained to Esau as the first-borne.

V. 36. rightly called Jacob] That is, a supplanter. He was called Jacob from a word signifying the heele, because at the birth of Esau he held him by the heele: See Annot. on Gen. 25. 26. Schindl. Pentagl. col. 1373. But by a Metaphor it signifieth crafty, and deceitfull, Ibid. Esau taketh it in that sense when he calleth him a supplanter, as if his name were given him for naught, for supplanting him two times, wherein there is a Paranomasia. This sheweth his teares were not teares of true repentance; for then he would rather have blamed himselfe, then his brother concerning his birth-right.

tooke away my birth-right] He wrongeth Jacob in this charge, for he tooke it not from him; but Esau lightly esteeming it, or rather despising it, sold it to him. See Annot. on Gen. 25. vers. 34.

my blessing] Not his then, when the birth-right was none of his.

V. 37. thy Lord] (Vers. 29.) Isaac did this as he was the Minister and Prophet of God; and though Esau cry never so much, he cannot recover what he hath lost; there is no place for repentance, though sought with teares, Heb. 12. 17. that is, Isaac will not repent, cannot retract what he hath done, though Esau lift up a bitter cry for the Blessing; because the prerogative of the blessed seed, cannot be divided, nor imparted to a wicked progenie; the sons of the world are represented in Esau, as the faithfull in Jacob.

V. 39. the fatnesse] Isaacs blessing on Jacob was both spirituall and temporall; on Esau onely temporall: and in this Jacob had the preeminence; for though he name the fatnesse of the Earth, and dewe of Heaven in both; and though some parts of Idumea, Esaus Countrey, were very fruitfull; yet generally it was not comparable to the Land of Canaan, assigned to the posteritie of Jacob. Some make a difference betwixt Esaus having of Temporall good things, and Gods giving of good things unto Isaac, as if having were but an interest of common providence, giving a title of especiall favour; but that distinction may be confuted by Hos. 2. 8. & Chap. 13. vers. 11. and many other places.

V. 40. by thy sword] A trade of life professed, for the most part, by the worst sort of men; to whom may be well applied the words of Shimei (though ill applied to David, 2 Sam. 16. 7.) for they that are bloudy men, are men of Belial, as Esau was.

serve thy brother] This blessing, viz. the blessing in the dominion of Jacob (called afterwards Israel, Chap. 32. ver. 28.) is gloriously set out in the 33. of Deut. vers. 29. See the second Annot. on Gen. Chap. 25. vers. 23.

when thou shalt have the dominion, thou shalt breake his yoke from off thy neck] The word in the Originall is rendred by some learned Hebricians, When thou shalt have mourned: or, neerer to the sense of our Translation, When thou shalt get strength: and so the sentence will not sound like a tautologie.

thou shalt breake his yoke] The Edomites after they had been subjects to the Israelites about one hundred and fifteene yeares, in the dayes of Ioram the sonne of Jehoshaphat revolted from under the hand of Judah, and made a King over themselves, 2 King. 8. 20. See Annot. on Chap. 25. 23. and as some reckon the time for eight hundred and ten yeares (viz. untill the time of Hyrcanus) they continued in their freedome, at least from the dominion of Jacobs issue; and after that, Herod an Idumean put a yoke upon them, for he obtained to be King of the Jewes, which sheweth that the Dominion of Jacobs posteritie was to be understood chiefly in a spirituall sense; for the prevailing of Religion; and in a literall sense, though there were time enough to make good the promise according to the letter, yet it was but upon condition of their good behaviour.

V. 41. The dayes of mourning] Not to him, for he would not be so tender hearted to his father, as to weepe for him, who was so hard hearted to his brother, as to resolve to murther him at such a time.

are at hand] In his desire (and it may be hope also) not in Gods determination, for he lived after this above 40. yeares. God disappointeth the expectation of the wicked, by prolonging the life of the godly; whereof as he onely maketh the measure, so he onely knoweth the end, as well as the beginning.

V. 42. were told Rebekah] Vers. 41. He said those words in his heart; but his heart was so full of hate and envy, that it thrust out some words, which came to Rebekahs eares, and discovered his deadly malice against his brother.

comfort himselfe] He hath great hope to receive his birth-right by killing of thee. A wicked heart that can make a comfort of such a mischievous act; yet there is a comfort for a time in taking revenge of a wrong; but that comfort is but like a draught of wine to one in a Feaver, which allayeth the disease for a while, but occasioneth a greater distemper afterwards; so in man; but in God taking comfort in his revenge of the wicked, the case is farre otherwise, Esa. 1. 24. Ezek. 5. 13.

V. 44. a few dayes] It proved to be about twentie yeares: so was Rebekah mistaken in the time of Jacobs absence, as well as Esau, in the time of his fathers death.

fury turn away] Prudent Rebekah feared the days of mourning would come upon her, by the death of Jacob, while Isaac lived, the spirit of Esau was so enraged against him, that she doubted he would not forbeare him untill his fathers death; yet she hoped that by time, and absence, it would be asswaged.

V. 45. both in one day] Because by fighting they might kill each other; or if one were killed, the other by the sentence of Almightie God was to die for it by the hand of man, Gen. 9. 6. or if he should escape that, she might justly feare the Justice of God

God would not suffer such a murtherer to live, as Act.28. 4. or the guilt of so hainous a fact would make his own parents so to be estranged from him, as if he were not at all, or none of theirs.

V. 46. said to Isaac] That Isaac might not be troubled with the deadly discord of his sonnes, nor Jacob endangered by keeping within the reach of Esaus wrath, like a prudent woman she presents to Isaacs care another cause of Jacobs journeying to Charran, viz. A caution against such ungodly marriages, as Esau made with the daughters of the Canaanites.

what good shall my life] Esaus marriage was a griefe of mind both to Isaac and Rebekah, Gen. 26. 35. But now feare of a double danger makes her more passionate then her husband; for she feares lest Jacob should take a Canaanite to wife; and lest his marriage should be prevented by an untimely death, an unnaturall murther; the example of Esau made her more apprehensive of the one, and the story of Cain and Abel might further her feare of the other: those that have no children are happily freed from such feares; and they that have, must forecast for the worst, and pray and hope.

CHAP. XXVIII.

Vers.1. Blessed him] This second blessing is to confirme Jacobs faith, and to assure him that he was constant to his first benediction, Chap.27.vers.33. though when his tongue blessed him, his mind was upon Esau; and that though it were on his part procured by craft; yet God did now by his fatherly authoritie ratifie it unto him.

of the daughters of Canaan] See Annot. on Chap.24.3.

V. 2. Arise, goe] Though Isaac himselfe was not sent to fetch him a wife from his fathers kindred; yet Jacob is to goe in his own person; for it was not safe for him, for feare of Esaus bloody threats, to stay at home, (though this were a reason rather to Rebekah then to Isaac) and there was lesse doubt of his returne then of Isaacs, if he had gone; because there was more invitation to Jacob, his wife to accompany him backe to his countrey, since there were some of her fathers family, and of nearer kindred there already, then when Rebekah was married.

Padan Aram] See the Annot. on Chap.25.20.

V. 3. God Almightie] See the Annot. on Gen.17.1.

V. 4. The blessing of Abraham] He had his fathers blessing already, and now he blesseth him in his grandfathers name, who had the originall grant of especiall grace to descend upon his seed; by this his faith might be further confirmed, and his courage, and comfort the better supported in his solitary journey.

stranger] The godly fathers were put in minde continually that they were but strangers in this world, to the intent that they should lift up their eyes to the heavens, where they should have a sure dwelling, Heb.11.9,10. Psal.39.12.

gave to Abraham] By promise, for he had not the possession of it himselfe; yet it might be said to be given to him, because it was given to his posteritie for his sake.

V. 5. The Syrian] See the Annot. on Gen.25.20.

V. 9. To Ishmael] That is, to the family of Ishmael; for he was now dead; whose age of 137. yeares, and his death is set down, Gen.25.17.

Mahalath] Called also Bashemath. Gen.36.3.

the daughter of Ishmael] His fathers brother; so now he had three wives, for he had two before, Gen. 26. 34. By this third marriage he thought to make amends for the two first, and to please his father better then before; but that choice made him a worse husband, by multiplication of wives; and not the better sonne; for being the sonne of a free-man, he should not have matched himselfe with the issue of a bond-woman, a stranger from the covenant. The changes of the wicked are not from evill to good, but from one evill to another.

sister of Nebaioth] The eldest sonne of Ishmael, and now his father being dead, the chiefe of his family.

V. 10. towards Haran] Or, Charran, as it is called, Act. 7.2. which is conceived by some to be situate from Beersheba (whence Jacob came) five hundred English miles; certainly it was very farre off; for Jacob flying from Laban, would make as much hast as he could to get out of his reach, and Laban pursuing him as fast as he could to recover his stollen gods from him, overtooke him not untill the seventh dayes journey, Gen. 31.23. and after that he had a good way to goe to the place of his abode.

V. 11. stones-- for pillows] The Sun being set, he was put to take up his lodging in the field, taking the ground for a bed, and a stone for a pillow; the servant of his grandfather went out like a Lord into that Countrey (and so he is styled by Rebekah Jacobs mother, Gen. 24. 18.) having tenne Camels for his service, and other things suitable; but Jacob the blessed heire both of Abraham, and Isaac, is sent that long journey alone, on foot, with a staffe in his hand, Gen.32.10. which was partly for more privacie of his departure, lest Esau should way-lay him in his going towards Haran, which he did in his coming thence with foure hundred men, Gen. 32. 6. but especially to give an example of patience to the godly, and of confidence in God, whose providence was the more apparent towards him, by how much he had the lesse aid of humane meanes; and withall to instruct us, that Gods children must expect their portion of blessing rather in spirituall, then temporall comforts.

V. 12. dreamed] See Annot. on Gen. 20.3.

ladder] Christ is that Ladder by which God and man are joyned together; and by whom the Angels minister unto us; all graces by him descend upon us, and we by him ascend into heaven. The upper part of this Ladder is taken by some to signifie his Divinity, and the lower his humanity.

Angels of God ascending and] To this representation made to Jacob, our Saviour alludeth, and applieth the ascending, and descending of Angels unto himself, Joh.1.51. the words are descending upon him, but they may be read either descending above him; as those who waite on him when he cometh down from heaven to Judgement; for when he descendeth, the Angels that follow after him in place will bee above him, as some may be below him, some on each side of him: or, unto him, as having reference unto him in all their ministrations, whether from God unto men, or from men unto God: or, by descending upon him, may be meant the placing, & founding upon him of all the heavenly favours, which by the ministery of Angels God communicateth to his Church, and thereby also may particularly be understood the ministery of Angels which they exhibited to him after his temptation, Matth.4.11. in his passion, Luk. 22. vers. 43. at his resurrection, Joh. 20.12. and ascension into heaven, Act.1.11.

ascending and descending] They are still in motion, never idle, and as ready to descend, and to be humbled; as to ascend, and to be exalted: their diligence, and obedience is a patterne for us, Matth 6.10. and their continuall entercourse betwixt heaven, and earth, as spirits ministring for their sakes, who are heires of salvation, Heb. 1. 14. may be matter of confidence to Gods children, against the might, and malignitie both of devils, and men: by this (though Angels may heare our prayers, and see our teares) they are not made Mediatours of interception betwixt God and us, or to be served either with supplications, or vowes; for notwithstanding this vision, Jacob did not so account of them, nor apply himselfe unto them.

V. 13. to thee will I give] He enjoyed this promise onely by faith, concerning his seed; for all his life-time himselfe was a stranger in this Land: so then to thee and to thy seed, must be to thee in thy seed, for they had that in possession, and having the possession for his sake, it was a gift in favour to him.

V. 14. as dust of the earth] See Annot. on Chap.13.16. See also Chap.32.12. & Numb.23.10.

families of the earth be blessed] (Gen. 12. 3. & 18. 18. Act. 3. 25. Gal.3.8.) By this is meant chiefly spirituall blessings flowing from the vertue of the promised seed Christ Jesus, and from him diffused to all the faithfull, of what Family, Nation, or Countrey soever.

V. 15. I am with thee] * In this free and full expression of Gods favour, we see how good a master he is to a true, and faithfull servant; if we would have him such a one to us, we must be such as Jacob was to him.*Jud.6.16.Isa.43.2.Jer.1.19.

untill] This untill is an extensive, not an exclusive word, giving assurance of an especiall time, wherein there is no doubt; but not excluding, or denying the time following, as Matth. 28. 20.

V. 16. and I knew it not] God is present every where, but especially with the godly; and not onely then when they are apprehensive of him, but when they perceive no evidence of his presence, as Job confesseth, He goeth by me, and I see him not; he passeth on also, but I perceive him not, Job 9. 11. Or, it may be when he said, he knew not that God was there; he ment that such Apparitions were peculiar to the family of the faithfull, and that he did not thinke, God would so have revealed himselfe in that place.

V. 17. afraid] Any strange Apparition, though glorious, and gratious; affects mans frailtie with feare, because of his sinne: see Matth.17.6. Luk.2.9. & 8.35. Rev.1.17. but besides he was touched with a godly feare and reverence; Gods professed favour, and familiaritie did not breed contempt; but a reverend awe, and dread of his Almightie Majestie, which David professeth when he saith, I will come into thine house in the multitude of thy mercy; and in thy feare will I worship toward thine holy Temple, Psal.5.7.

the house of God] He cals it Gods house, where God, and his holy Angels, who are of his household, are especially present; and in regard of that presence, he thinkes it a fit place for the building of God an House, Altar, or a place for especiall worship, vers.22.

the gate of heaven] The Church Militant here below hath such such neere reference to heaven the Church Triumphant above; that he that is truely a member of the one, may come to knock at the gate of the other, and have it opened unto him, Matth.7.7.

V. 18. a pillar] (Gen.35.14.20. Isa.19.19. 2 Sam.18.18.) Or, Statue, which was neither any great thing (for it was no more then one man himselfe could reare,) nor any artificiall thing, (for Jacob had no tooles, and it is like no skill to use them, for such a worke) but it was such a setting up of stone, or stones piled one upon another, as on the sudden he could make, for a thankfull memoriall of Gods gracious apparition to him in that place.

and poured oyle] Which he might the next day fetch from the Citie (being not farre off) and might returne to the place againe; or take with him from home in a viall, or bottle to annoint or refresh himselfe, or to apply in way of medicine, if he had need; and he poured it out upon the pillar as an oblation unto the Lord: (as he did in his returne, Gen.35.14.) Or, as David poured out the water of the well of Bethlehem unto the Lord, 2 Sam. 23. 16. And if this pouring out of oyle were a consecration of that pillar, or place to an holy use, as Exod. 30. vers. 26. & 40.9. it makes not for the popish practice in their superstitious consecration of Churches, and the utensils, or appurtenances belonging to them; for this oyle was not it selfe first consecrated, nor poured out with holinesse, or superstitious benedictions; nor did Jacob any thing therein but by divine instinct & instruicton; nor did he conceive any inherent holines in the place: O but whatsoever estimation or appropriation there was of religious places in the Old Testament, as the Temple of Jerusalem had the preeminence for holy use above all other places; in the New Testament that difference is taken aken away, Joh.4. from vers.20. to the 24. so that God may be served as acceptably in the Assemblies of the Saints, in Christian Churches, and Chappels, as in the Temple at Jerusalem; and in times of persecution in private houses, mountaines, or dens, or caves of the earth, Heb. 11.38. Yea whersoever men lift up pure hands without wrath or doubting, 1 Tim.2.8. as well as in the faireſt Temples.

V. 19. Bethel] A Citie neere the place of this apparition conceived to be about thirtie English miles distant from Shechem. The word signifieth the house of God; which afterwards was turned by Jeroboam into a place of Idolatry; for there he set up one of his golden Calves, 1 King.12.28,29. and for that abomination the name of it was after that changed into Bethaven, Hos.4.15. & Chap.10.5. that is, the house of iniquitie, or vanity: so the House of God by course of time, and the corruption of men, may be turned into the house of the Devil; true Religion is preserved in the persons of the godly, not in the places of godlinesse; so Rome once the Church of God (by Apostasie from the truth) is of Gods Church become the devils Chappell; of a Bethel, a Babel.

Roma.

Luz] Of this Apparition Jacob maketh mention by the name of Luz, which, as it was the more ancient name, so in Jacobs time it was yet in use, Gen.35.6. but whether called Bethel, or Luz, it was a Citie situate upon an high hill in that portion of the Land of Canaan, which by lot fell to the Tribe of Benjamin, Ardich. Delph. Theat. p. 16. Quest. How is it then that Jacob lay in the field, when Bethel where God appeared unto him, was a Citie? Answ. It is not like that he lodged in a Citie, because he had but a stone for a pillow; but probable, that being benighted, he lay in some field, not farre off, that might be a part of the Territories belonging to the Citie next unto it, and so might be called by the name of the City, at least by him who being a stranger there (for it was about fiftie miles off the place of his dwelling) knew no other name of the place.

V. 20. vowed a vow] To vow unto God (not to Saints) things lawfull, and within our power to performe, and without opinion of merit, or casting a snare on our owne soules, or laying a scandall before others, (when we are at libertie to doe otherwise) thus to vow, as it was the practice of the Patriarchs, as Abraham, Gen.14.22. and Jacob in this place, before the Ceremoniall Law, so (now Ceremoniall Lawes are vanished) it is lawfull to vow under the state of the Gospel.

If God will be with me] The word Im rendred if in this place, may be Englished when, and is here neither a word of doubting, nor of condition, in such sort as if Jacob meant either to bind God to give him bread to eate, and cloathes to weare, or to give up his title to him; but it is a word of order, or inference to bind himselfe to some demonstration of his gratitude, thus: if God will be with me, and will keepe me in this way that I goe, and will give me bread to eate, and raiment to put on, so that I come to my fathers house in peace, then shall the Lord be my God; but I am sure the Lord will doe all this, for this and more a great deale, I have his most free and expresse promise, vers. 14. 15. therefore as sure as God is true of his word, will I bind my selfe unto him by a solemne vow, to acknowledge, and serve him as my God, and to set up a memoriall of his goodnesse to me, and my gratitude to him.

V. 20. bread and raiment] Grace and nature are contented with a little. See 1 Tim.6.8.

V. 22. This stone shall be Gods house] By Gods house, is meant a place of worship; that place in those times was chiefly an Altar; and of that stone with others, he meant to make an Altar, and thereon to offer his oblations. The word Beth here used for an house, may be taken for any place of repose, or for that which receives, or holds another thing, as (besides an house for the habitation of men) the forehead, Exod. 28. 38. is rendred in the Thargum (or exposition of the Bible in the Chaldean Tongue) the house of the eyes; and a vaile, in Exod. 34. 35. the house of the face: and the Hebrewes of latter time call a glove, or mitten, Beth-etsbegnoth, that is, the house of the fingers: so the grave is called the house appointed for all living when they be dead, Job 30. 23. and all this with reference unto man, and with respect to other creatures, the Sparrowes nest in the Hebrew, is the Sparrowes house, Psal.84.3. and the Firre-trees are said to be an house for the Storke, Psal. 104. 17. and the holes in the Rocks the houses of the Conies, Prov.30.26. and the Spiders web is called the Spiders house, Job 8. 14. By Gods house then we are not to understand a Church, (for there were no such houses in those dayes) nor a place of any great capacitie or receit; but a place of worship; which place might be an Altar, that Altar made of that stone, as the principall part of it: for here did Jacob build an Altar, and offer an oblation upon it in his returne, Gen.35.7.14.

a great stone] Both to keepe the water pure, and the Well full; that it might suffice the flocks; for there were not many such Wels, or waters in those parts; therefore the greatnesse of the stone was a saving of the store.

V. 3. And they rolled] That is, the Shepherds who kept the sheep, and came to water them.

V. 4. my brethren] It seemes in those dayes the custome was to call even strangers brethren, especially if they were of one profession, or course of life, as Jacob and these Shepherds were.

V. 5. the sonne of Nabor] He was the immediate sonne of Bethuel his father, and Nahor was his grand-father; yet is he named the sonne rather of Nahor then of Bethuel, because Nahor was a man of more note: see Chap.31. vers. 53. not onely in the family of Isaac, as being his fathers brother, but in the family of Laban, as appeares, Chap.31. vers.53.

V. 6. Is he well] Heb. is there peace to him: or, is he in peace? By which word the Hebrewes signifie all prosperitie: and they call Warre Milchamah, from eating; because it devoureth all things. Of this expression see Annot. on Chap.37.v.14.

Lo, it is high day] Heb. the day is great. That is, the Sunne is yet high, and much day to come; and therefore too soone to gather the Cattell from their meat; and for those sheepe that are already gathered, water them, and bring them backe againe to their pastures.

V. 8. we cannot untill] It seemes the stone that covered the Well, was so great, that untill the Shepherds came together it could not be removed; and that none might be left without aide, they agreed to tarry one for another: So some came sooner, some later, which gave Jacob occasion (having himselfe beene accustomed to the keeping of Cattell) to give them his advice out of his good will; and it is not better meant on Jacobs, then taken on the Shepherds part, who doe not snap him up as an over-busie stranger, as the Sodomites did Lot, for medling in matters that belonged not to him; but fairely, and gently give an excuse why they cannot follow his advice: which may be an example of meeknesse, and humanitie, and modestie in our entercourse with others, especially strangers.

V. 9. And while he yet spake] See Gen.24.15.

V. 9. Rachel] Not Leah, whose tender eyes could not so well endure the light, and open aire, vers.17.

with her fathers sheepe] See Annot. on Gen.24.15.

V. 10. rolled the stone] With the help of others, or of himselfe, for being about 77. years of age, the time of full strength in those times, he might happily be able to doe that alone, which required the assistance of many hands, especially if the Shepherds were yonng boyes, or weake women; and he would straine his strength the more, to be the more noted, and better accepted by Rachel.

V. 11. kissed Rachel] Having shewed first who he was, and how neere of kinne, he kissed her both according to the common fashion among kinsfolks, and out of especiall affection as having mind to take her for a wife: in divers times and Countreys

28.20. Vowed.] Obs. 6. To make Vows and Promises to God, especially such as are of a general nature, concerning moral and necessary Duties, for the firmer binding of the heart to GOD: is an Usefull and Commendable practice; and in some cases also to make Special Vows, when we are under Special Difficulties & Distresses. This is the first place in Scripture where a Vow is mentioned.

General —— Hoc votum est Cultus Dei praeceptus & necessarius. Parens in loc. Hence there can be no Scruple of entring into, or renewing this Vow publickly; viz. in Church Covenant; which is nothing else but this general Vow.

Ritchel, &c. p. 29.

When men say, A vow is not a necessary Comanded Duty; they mean it of Special Vows. ibid.

29.28. — It is an harsh conception to think that Jacob lived in an unlawfull conjunction, known so to be. I Subscribe therefore to those judicious Interpreters, who conceive that Jacob had an extraordinary, peculiar, divine, Dispensation in this case; whereby he did with quiet of Conscience continue in this polygamous Conjunction with these two Sisters — but it is not for our imitation. Mitchel, MS. p.34.

treys the use of kissing hath been various; it was sometimes used among men, as v. 13. of this Chapter, Gen. 45. 15. Exod. 4. 27. & Chap. 18. 7. & Luk. 7. 45. though most ususally betwixt them of a different sexe, as a signe of benevolence and love; hence it is applied to expresse the deare love betwixt Christ and his Church, Cant. 1. 2. and that the Apostle gave order to greet one another with an holy kisse, 2 Cor. 13. 12. an holy kisse, not a wanton one, as Prov. 7. 13. nor an hypocriticall kisse, as that of Joab, 2 Sam. 29. and of Judas, Mat. 26. 49.

lifted up his voyce and wept] For joy, after upon mutuall report, and speech of the state and condition of the severall families of Isaac, and Laban, and their neere kindred; and no doubt also upon the apprehension of Gods especiall providence in bringing Rachel to the Well, (as Rebekah his mother when she was chosen for a wife for his father,) his heart melted into affections, that could not be kept in, but burst out into audible and visible expressions, such as might both be heard, and seene. See Gen. 45. vers. 14, 15, 16.

V. 12. brother] That is, neere kinsman, for he saith in this verse that he was Rebekahs sonne, who was Labans sister, so vers. 15. By which terme brother, was professed an affection belonging to the neerest degree of kindred that can be; so Lot is called Abrahams brother, being the sonne of his brother, Gen. 13. 8.

V. 13. all these things] That is, the storie of his fathers family, and of his journey, the cause why he came from his fathers house, and what he had seene by the way.

V. 14. my bone and my flesh] That is, of my kindred, Gen. 2. 23. Judg. 9. 2. 2 Sam. 5. 1. & 19. 13.

a moneth] Heb. a moneth of dayes. That is, a whole moneth, not one day short.

V. 18. I will serve thee seven yeares] It was the custome of many Countreys to buy wives, whereof there are some instances among the posteritie of Jacob, as 1 Sam. 18. 25. 2 Sam. 3. 14. Hos. 3. 2. See also Gen. 34. 12. But because Jacob had nothing to give, coming an emptie way-faring man, with a staffe in his hand, he offereth seven years service for the younger sister.

V. 19. it is better] Laban makes no direct answer to Jacobs motion, but gives him good words in the generall, without any intent it seemes to let him so soone be possessed of his choice in particular; Jacob was a plaine man, Gen. 25. 27. of too honest an heart to suspect deceitfull dealing in his Uncle; else he was wise enough (as his dealing with his brother Esau sheweth) to have made a surer bargaine for himselfe.

V. 20. But a few dayes] Heb. one dayes. Gen. 27. 44. If we loved God, our service of him, though it were for many yeares together, would not be tedious to us; the want of love to him makes men weary to serve him, Mal. 1. 13. though but for a few houres, one day in a weeke, Amos 8. 5. the day that should and would (if our affections were rightly tempered) yeeld us more delight then any of the rest: See Isa. 58. 14.

V. 25. behold it was Leah] It was Leah before, but then he did behold her, and saw her without her vaile; for virgins in modestie were vailed, or brought in the darke to the Bride-chamber.

beguiled me] The cause why Jacob was deceived was, for that in old time the wife was covered with a vaile when she was brought to her husband, in signe or token of chastitie, and shamefastnesse. See Chap. 24. vers. 65. And whereas it is said, that Judah thought Thamar to be an harlot, because she had covered her face, Gen. 38. 15. the meaning is, that because her face was covered he knew her not, and because he knew her not, he tooke her for an harlot; or if harlots did weare vailes, they were of another fashion, or worne at other times, and in another manner then Brides were wont to doe; and though she might have beene knowne to Jacob by her speech in the darke, as Jacobs voyce was knowne to Isaac, when he was blind; yet her vaile might be a cover for her silence; for in that the modestie of women appeareth, as well as by hiding of their faces; or her speech being onely a low whispering, it could not easily be discerned. In this deceit it is like that Leah acted her part after her fathers, as Jacob his, after his mothers direction, and therein she was faulty, though in an inferiour degree; for he shewed himselfe a very unjust man, and an unkind Uncle; whereby yet Jacob might be remembred of his deceitfull dealing with his brother Esau: See Matth. 7. 12. though God turned it to good, and might upon this occasion be disposed to repentance for what was past, and to patience under that condition which either his necessitie, or his Uncles dishonestie put upon him.

V. 26. not so done in our countrey] Or, it is not the custome of our Countrey. If it had beene so, he should have said so much to Jacob seven yeares sooner, when he offered his service upon condition to marry the younger daughter; this mentall reservation of the custome all this while, shewed it was not Labans custome to deale uprightly; besides if it were the custome, why did he against custome pretend a marriage, and call his neighbours to a marriage-feast betwixt Jacob and Rachel? this pretence of custome is often used against truth, and right; as in the prohibition of marriage to the Clergy, and the Communion cup to the Laitie, and other particulars of the Romish Religion; which indeed in respect of the antiquitie of truth, are but Innovations, though obtruded in the name of ancient customes.

V. 27. fulfill her weeke] The word Shebang in Hebrew is sometimes taken for seven yeares, (so the Geneva Translation hath it) sometimes for seven dayes or a weeke, so here; the meaning is, that, for as much as the manner was to celebrate a wedding with seven dayes feasting, as Judg. 14. 12. he would accept of Leah for his wife, and celebrate the nuptials after the wonted manner, and that done, he would presently give him Rachel, for whom he should serve the next seven yeares after, which he did; and that he staid not for Rachel untill a weeke of yeares, is evident by order of the story, for Jacob staid in Mesopotamia with Laban twentie yeares, Chap. 31. vers. 38, 41. At the fourteenth yeare of Jacobs servitude was Joseph borne, before which time Rachel had been some good while a barren wife, and therefore as out of hope of issue by her selfe, she gave her maid Bilhah to her husband, who by her had two sonnes before her selfe had any; as the thirtieth of Genesis sheweth; whence it must necessarily be concluded that Rachel was married before the second weeke of yeares, or seven yeares servitude was expired, and so that she was married to Jacob after a weeke of dayes, according to the phrase and custome already observed, not after the end of the second seven yeares service.

V. 28. fulfilled her weeke] That is, he tooke Leah for his wife, and fulfilled her weeke of solemn feasting, for the wedding, as hath been said.

Rachel his daughter to wife] Two wives at once, if they had not been sisters, had been one too many for one man, as is implyed in the first institution of marriage; yet besides them he had both their handmaids to be his wives, Gen. 30. vers. 4. 9. The law against pluralitie of wives was not yet expressely declared, nor against the marriage of two sisters; as afterwards it was, Levit. 18. 18. it is doubted therefore, whether at this time either the one or the other were a sinne in the holy Patriarch; it seemeth not likely, that they having such revelations from God should be ignorant whether it were a sinne or no, or that being so godly, they should live so long in a sinne against their knowledge; there was doubtlesse a disposition of the Divine providence in it, if not a dispensation by Divine authoritie for it. For that should not be hastily presumed, since the chiefe warrant that can be pretended for polygamie or marriage of many wives at once, is for increase of mankind, and at the first Creation in Adams time, and the renovation of the world in Noahs time, when there was most need of such meanes of multiplication; God allotted but one woman for one man; and for such like particulars as this of Jacob, though God have his hand in them ruling and overruling them at his pleasure, though Gods part be alwayes pure, and perfect, on mans part there may be corruption, and infirmitie, as in the matter of the benediction of Jacob, wherein concurred both God, and Isaac; Rebekah, Jacob, and Esau: God being altogether just, and holy in his act, they in theirs were every one faultie, though in a different degree; yet for the marriage of Jacob (though unlawfull, at least doubtfull) it may in part be excused in that his mind was to have had but one, that though he loved that one so affectionately, that seven yeares service seemed to him but a few dayes for her sake, vers. 20. and lived with her continually, he modestly, and chastly conversed with her all the while: Now that Rachel, and Leah made offer of their hand-maids to his bed, as his grand-mother Sarah to his grand-father; and that he accepted of their societie, not for pleasure but for propagation to increase mankind, especially, to beget children for Gods Church, such examples must be no patternes for our imitation; yet of polygamie, or having more wives then one, see Annot. on Deut. 17. vers. 17.

V. 30. seven yeares] After one seven already spent, and so great wrong put upon him, he without murmuring submits his mind and body to seven yeares service more; A rare example of humilitie and patience.

V. 31. The LORD saw] God seeth not onely the actions of men that appeare, but their affections though they keepe out of sight.

that Leah was hated, he opened] That is, lesse loved, as Matth. 10. 37. compared with Luk. 14. 26. & Joh. 12. 25. Rachel had beautie to make her acceptable to Jacob; and to make Leah lovely in his sight, God makes her fruitfull, while the other was barren: if Leah had been as faire as Rachel, or Rachel as fruitfull as Leah, there would have been too great a prelation of one before the other. Now God who divideth and dispenseth his favours as he pleaseth, qualifieth them both in different kinds to be pleasing to their husband, and to moderate the affections of Jacob, that he may neither hate the one, nor dote upon the other: Favour, and fruitfulnesse, and every desireable thing is his free gift, who theweth hereby that oft-times they who are despised of men, are favoured of God.

V. 33. LORD hath heard] Hereby it appeareth that she had recourse to God in her affliction by her complaint; wherein she did not instruct God in her estate, (as if he knew it not without her telling) but sue to him for removall of her affliction, by the obtainment of her husbands affection; and therein the Lord shewed that he heard her, by making her amiable as a mother, who was not beloved as a wife.

Judah] In this and the precedent names she keeps a memoriall of Gods mercies to her; and as he goeth on in grace to her, so doth she in gratitude towards him; no barren wife to Jacob her husband, nor barren daughter to God her father.

CHAP. XXX.

Vers.1. ENVIED] The word in the Originall is sometimes taken for a lawfull emulation in a good cause, sometimes for an unlawfull indignation at good; so is the word Zeale diversely used in the New Testament; In this place it appeareth to be set down in a sinfull sense, as Rachels fault, to be much offended at her sisters fruitfulnesse, her selfe being barren; she should have rejoyced in zeale to Gods gloty in propagation of the promised seed, in the good of mankind by the multiplication of people, in the increale of Gods Church; she should have been glad of the blessing of her own flesh and blood, especially in the neerest degree, as Leah was to her, and in the contentment of her husband, (who had no doubt a great desire to be a father, as well as she to be a mother) in that her defect of fruitfulnesse was supplyed by her sister; but selfe-love makes her sinne against them all; Anger is a passion that is sometimes good, else the Apostle would not have said, Be angry and sinne not; Eph.4. 26. But envy at anothers good, Gen. 37. 11. Numb. 11. 29. Psal. 106. 16. is alwayes bad, and so much worse then anger when it is bad, as it is of longer continuance; anger is said to be a short madnesse, and envy may be said to be a long one. See Prov. 27. 4. Gen. 37.11. Wherein we may see the deformitie, and foulnesse of envy, the infirmitie of humane nature, and of the female sexe, even in the better sort of women; the disquietnesse of polygamie, or divers wives at once, even in the most holy, and best ordered family.

said unto Jacob, give] Envie is a sinfull, and foolish passion, as well as wrath, Job 5. 2. which maketh Rachel mistake her husband for her God, as her husband did Leah for her, though God were not veiled as Leah was, but she blinded as Jacob was not. Thus doth naturall corruption breake out of one sinne into another; she beginneth with envie at her sister, but proceedeth to injury against God, and her injury is no lesse then Idolatry; so though she gave over her fathers Idols, she became an Idolatresse againe. Jacobs question implyeth a conviction of her for that sinne.

else I die] Not onely becaule she was not to live in her posteritie, as her sister Leah in hers, (for the parents may be said to live in that their seed liveth in their children) nor that she meant to lay violent hands upon her selfe, (as some have conceived) but becaule if she continued childlesse, she had no desire to live, or conceived the griefe of her barrennesse would breake her heart, and she should die of discontent, for as Job saith, envie slayeth the silly one, Job 5. 2. and so it is both a sinne, and a punishment of sinne. The cause why she was so desirous of children might be, becaule fruitfulnesse was pronounced as a blessing; and to want it, was conceived to be a curse, and so was taken for a reproach. So vers. 23. & Luk. 1. 23. 1 Sam. 1. 6. Esa. 4. 1. That Jacob might delight in her as fruitfull, as well as faire; and that her sister might not have that, either as advantage above her, or matter of equalitie with her; for if she might not be his onely beloved, she would be at least his best beloved bed-fellow, which she had cause at least to doubt, for Leah brought him children while she was barren.

V. 2. Jacobs anger] A good man may be angry, and it is a good anger when it is set against sinne, especially, when it sheweth, that we preferre the honour of God before the favour of our dearest friend, as Jacob here doth. See Luk. 14. 26.

am I in Gods stead] The godly take it ill that any honour is given to them, which is peculiar to God, Act. 14. 14, 15. Doubtlesse the Saints and Angels above are not well pleased with the Idolatrous services of men below, Revel. 19. 10. & Chap. 22. vers. 9.

who hath withheld] It is onely God that maketh barren and fruitfull, therefore I am not in fault, Psal. 113. 9. 127. 3. Gen. 16. 2. 20. 18. Hos. 9. 14.

V. 3. my maid Bilhah] Rachel deserved and had a reproofe in the precedent words, which she tooke with patience, making no reply for her own defence; and seeking to make an amends for it, she makes offer of her maid in her stead to her husbands bed, whereby she might have the name of a mother in the right of her handmaid; for the children that were the handmaids by nature, were the dames by adoption, as Gen. 16. 2. or by right of participation with her husband, as wherein she had a secondary right, though they were her husbands in the first place, Exod. 21. 4. So she made accompt some part of her barrennesse was put away, and some of her husbands good will swayed from her sister (whose envious rivall she was) to her side.

beare upon my knees] The meaning is not onely, that Rachel would receive her children on her lap, as though they were her own, as Gen. 50. 23. Esa. 66. 12. but that at the birth of them Rachel would doe the office of an assistant to the mother, who is many times set upon the knees of another woman, while the Midwife doth her office; and this assistance belonged especially to such as were to be adopting mothers to the children.

V. 4. handmaid to wife] Though there be difference betwixt a wife and a concubine, as hath been noted upon, Chap. 22. vers. 24. yet they agree so much, that the wife is sometimes called a concubine, as Keturah, 1 Chron. 1. 32. and a concubine called a wife, as Gen. 16. 3. and as Bilhah is here called a wife, so is Zilpah stiled, vers. 9. and as wives, their children had their portion of inheritance of the Land of Canaan, with the children of their mistresses, Leah and Rachel; which in other cases was not usuall.

V. 6. God hath judged me] It is like that the emulation betwixt Leah and Rachel, Jacobs wives, as it bred envie on the one side, (for vers. 1. Rachel envyed Leah for her fruitfulnesse) so it raised some proud contempt on the other, as in Hagar towards her Mistresse Sarah, Gen. 16. 4. or some reproachfull provocation, as in fruitfull Peninnah towards barren Hannah, 1 Sam. 1. vers. 2, 6. as if God were against them, or had no regard unto them, whom he suffered to be barren; whereupon making her complaint, and prayer unto God, and making him Judge of her cause (as Sarah did of hers, Gen. 16. 5.) God blessing her advise, and offer of her handmaid with the birth of a child, she taketh it to be his judging of the matter on her side, against her emulous sister, who perhaps upbraided her with barrennesse, as Peninnah did Hannah; wherein (though God be alwayes just) she was somewhat partiall to her selfe, as vers. 8.

V. 8. with great wrestling] Or, excellent wrestlings, in the Originall, wrestlings of God. See the Annot. on Gen. 23. v. 6. with the places quoted in the margin. She had been very emulous, and striven much with her sister to match her in her fruitfulnesse, and for that purpose she had done what she could to indeare her selfe into the love of Jacob, and had used all the helps she could of diet, and Physick, and no doubt had with much importunitie (like unto her husbands wrestling with God) begged the blessing of the wombe for her selfe, and her handmaid, and so prevailed for another sonne; in which boasting though she accompted her selfe to be strong in wrestling, she bewrayed the weaknesse of her sexe, and the vanitie of her minde, for her sister yet had more children then she, and those more her own, then Rachels were.

V. 9. left bearing] (Chap. 29. vers. 35.) For a time, for she conceived againe, and had children afterward, vers. 17.

Zilpah her handmaid and gave her to Jacob] Leah meant in this to match Rachel (for there was striving, and wrestling on both sides for the preeminence, both as wives, and as mothers; an evill usually incident to polygamie, or multiplication of wives to one husband;) but what Rachel did in a kind of necessitie, having no child at all, Leah did without necessitie, having children already begotten, and borne of her own body, as thinking it not honour enough for her to goe before her sister in her own immediate fruitfulnesse, if she did not shew her selfe as kinde to her husband in the gift of her handmaid, and matched her sister in that secondary motherhood of the handmaids issue; wherein she shewed her selfe a sister in evill, being as vaine in her desires, as Rachel in her boastings.

V. 10. beare Jacob a sonne] It appeares Jacob accepted of her gift, according to her minde, which sheweth that Jacob was too indulgent both to his wives, and to himselfe: such humane frailties are to be noted, pitied, prayed against, and with all care, and caution to be shunned.

V. 11. A troupe] That is, either that at the birth of Gad, there was hope of a plentifull issue increasing to a troupe, or that Gad should be a Captaine of a troupe, an eminent man leading others after him.

V. 14. Reuben] Supposed at this time to be a child about five yeares old.

wheat harvest] The later harvest; for barley was ripe and reaped before it.

Mandrakes] The word Dudaim in the Originall (which some Translations have retained) in the generall signifieth amiable, and in Cant. 7. 13. the same word is used in this acception, and no where else in the whole Scripture; there Dudaim is said to give a smell, and it is meant a pleasant smell; thence some Translate it amiable flowres, the Greeke turnes it Apples of Mandragoras, which is a kinde of herbe whose root hath the likenesse of a man. The fruit of that root called Mandrake apples hath been anciently conceived to be of an amorous operation, causing love, conducing to coition and conception; it is said to be of pleasant smell, and colour, by some writers; others say it is of a ranck and unpleasant savour; howsoever it is not like to be Mandrake apples, because at this time of the yeare (which was wheat harvest, and that was about the beginning of May in this countrey) the mandrake apples are not ripe; but rather that Dudaim here rendred Mandrakes was some flowers of the field (such as pleased little children, chiefly with their colour, for Reuben that gathered them was about five or sixe yeare old) and had withall a delightfull smell, Cant. 7. 12, 13. so that Rachel was taken with an especiall delight in them, and desire of them.

V. 15. is it a small matter] Leah not well pleased with Rachel before, takes a small occasion to breake out into a passion, the grudge which lay at her heart, now breakes out at her lips, in this question implying, that she makes a small matter of doing to her a great wrong, which she aggravates by adding one wrong unto another.

taken my husband] It seemeth now Rachel and Leah, in respect of child-bearing, were both alike (for though Leah had been fruitfull before, she was at that time barren as Rachel, having given over to beare, Chap. 29. vers. 35. & Chap. 30. v. 9.) and therefore Jacobs affection swayed by the beautie of Rachel estranged him altogether, or for the most part from the bed of her sister, thence she challengeth her for taking away her husband from her; wherein (but that selfe-love made her blind) she might see her sinne recompensed to her in its kinde; for she had wronged Rachel so before, when it could not but be very offensive unto her.

shall lye with thee] She made ill use of her husbands great affection to her; for here she takes upon her the disposall of his person, and for a trifle hires him out unto her sister.

to night] It seemeth there was some set rule betwixt Jacob and his wives for their lying with him by turnes, so that having a certaine right for his societie, they might give it up to each other, as they could agree.

V. 16. I have hired thee] That such particulars of seeming small moment are so punctually recorded in the Scripture, the reason may be to shew how observant God is of the Family of the faithfull, and his providence towards them, which reacheth even to the numbring of their haires, Matth. 10. 30.

and he lay with her] The good man, desirous to keepe peace betwixt two emulous women, submits to their passions, and partialities, and makes good the bargaine betwixt them concerning himselfe, though it were made without his consent.

V. 17. God hearkened to Leah] This was commendable in both these women, that they invited God by prayer unto their marriage bed, vers. 22.

V. 18. Because I have given] Though Leah say right in accompting a child to be the gift of God; yet here she misapplyeth the Divine favour, and maketh it the reward of her former errour, rather then the grant of her precedent prayer; here againe she bewrayeth her infirmitie.

V. 22. hearkened to her] See Annot. on vers. 17.

V. 23. Taken away my reproach] A reproach among those especially who are fruitfull themselves, and therefore shew contempt towards the barren, to their disgrace and vexation. See Chap. 16. 5. & 1 Sam. 1. 5, 6.

V. 26. give me my wives] They were already given, or rather dearely bought with long and hard service; yet he would not take them away without a mannerly preface of leave from their father, before their parting; which condemnes the injurious dealing of many, who make no conscience of stealing away daughters, to make them wives without their parents consent. See Annot. on Chap. 21. vers. 21.

V. 27. for thy sake] (Chap. 39. 3.) Masters may here learne to make choice of godly servants, in whose hands their estates are like to prosper.

V. 30. since my coming] Heb. at my feet. That is, since I set my foot into thy dwelling, or since I set my foot to labour and goe about upon thine affaires. See Deut. 11. 10.

V. 31. not give me any thing] That is, no set rate or price for my service, or (as some think) no recompence out of thy precedent or present estate, but out of that which shall accrew unto thee from the date of our present agreement.

V. 32. of such shall be my hire] That is, when all the speckled, spotted, or parti-coloured, or browne sheepe, or lambes, and all the spotted, speckled, or parti-coloured goats are removed, and none left but those that are white; I will have none other wages then those young ones which coming of white dammes, are not white but parti-coloured, or browne; and as there were any browne, he gave them to Laban, and kept onely the white (as Labans stock to breed upon) lest his parti-coloured increase should be thought to proceed from the different colours of the rams or dams.

V. 33. righteousnesse answer] God shall testifie my righteous dealing by rewarding my labours. So that when my stocke is increased, it will plainly appeare that the hand of God hath beene good to me, not mine false or unfaithfull to thee.

in time to come] Heb. to morrow. For that is taken for the time to come, as yesterday for the time past, Gen. 31. 2. Exod. 4. 10. & 5. 7. Ruth 2. 11. as to day, for the time present, Psal. 95. 7. Heb. 3. 7.

stollen with me] If he had any of the increase of Labans sheep, or goats, that were not spotted, he would be contented they should be accounted his not by Gods gift, but by his owne theft.

V. 37. took rods] And pilled part, and left part unpilled, so they were partly white, and partly greene, or of that colour they were of before they were pilled: Jacob here useth no deceit, for it was by Gods direction, as is probably gathered, Chap. 31. vers. 9, 10, 11, 12. and this he did at the ramming time.

greene poplar] Not in respect of colour, but of tendernesse, and moisture, being young, and not hard and dry by growth, or age: See Isid. Etymol. l. 12. c. 1. And he took rods of such trees, either because they were more ready at hand, or for some naturall qualitie (though unknowne to us) inclining to such an effect as he desired; or God, who ordered this device for good successe, directed Jacob to this choyce.

V. 39. conceived before the rods] And parti-coloured according to the rods; this was partly by the strength of imagination, which sometimes hath great force to conforme the conception to the object; so women of child have brought forth children resembling the Pictures set before them, sometimes very beautifull, & sometimes very deformed, according to the representation of the Pictures in their sight, or thought at the time of their conception: but this was not all; for as it is like that God directed Jacob to this course, so he blest it to him, that the effect did certainly fall out whensoever the meanes was used to that purpose, Gen. 31. vers. 10, 11, 12. which otherwise had beene very uncertaine, and more like to faile then to take effect; for such an operation of the fancie or imagination is very rare, especially in the unreasonable creatures; howsoever Jacob must not neglect any meanes, that God prescribes; and by this we are taught so to order our confidence in God, as not to neglect any humane providence, which he either prescribeth or alloweth.

V. 40. faces toward the ring-straked] This was that by looking upon them, their imaginations might worke to a resemblance of them, which by concurrence of Gods power in favour to Jacob, produced effects though in that kind rare, yet very regular for the increase of his riches to a liberall reward of his good service.

V. 41. the stronger cattell] As they which tooke the ram about September, and brought forth about March; so the feebler tooke ram in March, and yeaned about September: yet some conceive the quite contrary, and for such cattell as bring forth twice a yeare (as the sheep in Mesopotamia, and the like observation is made of the sheepe in Italy) the latter birth may be accounted the feebler, for the first-borne hath the might and beginning of strength, as Jacob said of Reuben, Gen. 49. 3. and the Hebrew word Haghnriph, soundeth to that sense, for it signifieth both late bringing forth, and feebleneſse: and when the feebler ingendred, he laid no coloured rods before them.

V. 42. so the feebler were Labans] Laban delt subtilly with Jacob in putting it to him to set downe the condition touching his wages, thinking his modestie would demand lesse then fully to answer his desert; and to prevent Jacobs subtle dealing with him, he put his party-coloured cattell to the keeping of his own sonnes, and committed the rest unto Jacobs custodie, yet is Jacobs portion increased, and Labans diminished.

V. 43. increased exceedingly] The meanes whereby this came to passe he mentioneth to his wives where he saith, God hath taken away the cattell of your father, and given them unto me, Gen. 31. 9. wherein God dealt kindly with him as a sonne, while his Uncle did him not the justice due to a servant; how much better is it to be servant to God then to man?

CHAP. XXXI.

Vers. 1. And he heard] His ill usage in Labans house makes him the more desirous to returne unto Canaan; so the crosses of this world may make us fore-cast for a better Countrey, the Canaan above; and to be willing to remove from Meshek and the Tents of Kedar, Psal. 120. vers. 5. the habitation of ungodly men, to enjoy better company in a better place, Heb. 11. 10.

words] The children uttered in words that which their father dissembled in heart; for the covetous thinke that whatsoever they cannot snatch to them, is pulled from them.

hath taken away] The wicked envying the prosperitie of the godly, slander it as injuriously gotten by themselves, when it was graciously bestowed on them by God. See vers. 8, 9.

gotten all this glory] Worldly men highly esteeme of riches as their chiefest glory, Psal. 49. 16, 17. though themselves be base in wicked wayes of getting, and over wary keeping of them; but they are onely then a glory, when wisdome and righteousnesse are joyned with them, as Prov.8.18.

V. 2. countenance] Though Laban were a subtle, and dissembling man, giving good words, Chap.30. vers.27,28. without any good intent; yet so great was the grudge of his heart that the subtlety of his head could no longer conceale it, and so by his countenance he discovered his ill affection towards him, as well as his sonnes, by their backbiting words: thus by Gods goodnesse are the godly warned to beware of the wicked.

as before] Heb. as yesterday, and the day before. See Annot. on Chap. 30. vers.33.

V. 4. Rachel and Leah] See Annot. on vers.14.

V. 5. God of my fathers] That is, the God whom my fathers worshipped, and with whom they were joyned by an especiall covenant.

V. 6. with all my power] A faithfull and religious servant will be as intentive and laborious in his Masters affaires, as in his owne, serving him, as Jacob, with all his might, and more then that, he cannot doe for himselfe; and as he could not doe more, so could he not endure more for himselfe then for his Master he did: See vers.40. Which good servants will take for a patterne of paines, and patience? to the bad, who are slight and slothfull in their Masters businesse, minding their owne ease, and pleasure, more then their Masters profit, (though bad Masters as Laban was) it may be brought for rebuke.

V. 7. ten times] May be taken for many times, as Numb. 14.22. not precisely so many, but rather more; for the Ewes yeaning twice a yeare in Mesopotamia, as they doe in Italy, he might in the sixe yeares service for his reward in cattell have his wages changed above ten times; but a certaine number is put for an uncertaine, which is usuall in the Scripture; and for this number see Levit.26.26. Job 19.3. Zach.8.23.

V. 8. If he said the speckled shall be] Before the increase fell to Jacob under divers colours, Chap.30. vers. 32. Laban thinking that too great a wages for his worke, restrained him to lambes of one colour; and they likewise multiplied to more then he was willing to allow him, (as if he had thriven by change rather then by regular providence) he changeth from that colour to another: But though Laban were so changeable that Jacob had just cause to complaine of him for it, God is the same in his goodnesse to him; and so he hath the advantage of Laban; what change or choyce so ever he made, the greatest number fell to Jacobs lot; yea all that were not separated before, brought forth according to the contract concluded on by covenant betwixt them to be Jacobs.

God suffered him not] Gods restraint of the wicked, is the protection of the godly. See Gen.20.6.

V. 10. It came to passe] See Annot. on Chap.30.v.39.

V. 13. I am the God] The apparition, vers.10,11. and this vers.13. though reported so neere together were sixe yeares asunder in time; for the former was about the beginning of Jacobs last sixe yeares service, this latter at the end of them; and he that is here called God, vers.11. is called the Angel of God, and this Angel was Christ which appeared to Jacob in Bethel; and hereby appeareth that he had taught his wives the feare of God, for he talketh as though they knew the thing.

of Bethel] Bethel is the house of God; the God of Bethel, the God of Gods house; by which title God approving the name that Jacob gave unto it, Chap.28.vers.19. and withall accepting of his service, and vow which he made in that place, stirreth him up to future confidence by former experience of his favour.

vowedst a vow] God sheweth himselfe pleased with his vow; and by mentioning it stirreth him up to a due performance of what he had vowed.

V. 14. Rachel and Leah] One spake for both, or both spake the same thing; as Peter and John, Act. 4.19. but Rachel (though the yonger daughter) is named first, as the best beloved, and because she should have been the elder wife by seven years if either Jacob, or she had had their right, Gen. 29.25. so are these two women named, Ruth 4. 11. See Annot. on vers. 4. and make one of both.

yet any portion] Or, any more portion. The daughters of Laban apprehending no profit by their husbands further continuance in his service, or their abode in his house, are willing to forsake him; so is his covetousnesse requited in its kind; he cares for none but for his profits sake, and they (though his daughters) care no otherwise for him, then they may reape commodity by continuing with him.

V. 15. as strangers] Good men entertaine strangers courteously like friends, Gen.18.3. 19.2. bad men use their neerest friends or kindred, as harshly as if they were but strangers.

he hath sold us] For they were given to Jacob in recompence of his service, which is a kind of sale, whereas he should have given them a part of his estate in marriage.

devoured also our money] That is, what we might have had in money, or money worth for the foureteene yeares service of our husband, he hath spent as his owne upon his owne occasions.

V. 16. whatsoever God hath said] The precedent reasons for removall from Labans service are humane, this is Divine, and so better then all the rest; a ready rule to obey God in all cases, which answers all doubts, and may secure us against all afterclaps; while we obey as of duty, we may trust him with the successe, and so not trouble our selves with a fearefull forecast of offensive consequences to ensue: so they are ready to doe as God ordained, viz. to leave their father, and to goe with their husband, Gen.2.24. hoping to find the comfort in him and their children which was lost in their father, Psal.45.16.

V. 18. to goe to Isaac] He was long in going, about tenne yeares, by his dwelling at Sichem and Bethel by the way.

V. 19. Rachel had stollen] Neither out of covetousnesse, (though happily the Images were pretty and precious) nor out of desire to divorce her father from his Idols, nor to prevent his divination of their flight by them; but as yet tainted with her native Idolatry, it is like she stole them with a superstitious respect unto them: See Chap.35.2.

V. 19. Images] Or, Idols. For Images taken for Gods (as these were, vers.30.) must needs be Idols; the word in the Originall is Teraphim, a word of the plurall number, because they that addicted themselves to the Idolatry of them, loved them so well as to have usually more then one of that sort in their houses. Of what figure these Images were, it is not certainly known; some take them to be vessels or instruments of brasse of the use of dials, whereto was added sometimes the operation of Devils for presage or prediction of future things; but it is more like they were of an humane shape, for so it appeares, 1 Sam.19.13. where the same word is used of an Image in Davids family, where the thing was not abused as in other places, being kept haply rather for derision then for devotion: with them Idolaters consulted concerning secret matters, Ezek.21.21. from them by the deceits of the Devil, or the Priests, they received vaine and delusive answers, Zech.10.2. and it is like they expected helpe and health by them, whence Avenarius deriveth the Greeke word Therapeuo, which signifieth both to worship, and to heale; thus doe these Images, or Teraphim, become perfect Idols: and the word is most appropriated to such Images as by the cunning and imposture of the Devil were used to give answers to Idolatrous people. In the third of Hos. vers. 4. Images and Teraphim are set downe as different things; the word for Image is Matsebah, which is the same with Statua, or a standing resemblance, derived from a word signifying to erect, or set up, so it may stand for an Image in generall: but Teraphim signifieth a peculiar kind of Images, as before hath beene expressed.

V. 20. stole away unawares] In the Originall stole away the heart of Laban, and so the Geneva Translation hath it; by the heart of Laban we may conceive either that which Laban set his heart upon, as, his daughters, and Jacobs goods which he had gotten under him, or the gainfull service which he had performed to him; or his Teraphim, or Images which were as Gods to him, v.30. all these being taken away at once, he might be as Ephraim without heart, Hos.7.11. Or, to steale away from Laban his heart, is to steale away without his knowledge, or good will, as vers.27. Laban saith, why didst thou flee away secretly, and steale away me, so it is in the Originall; the meaning is from me; the word from is sometimes expressed, sometimes understood in the Hebrew making mention of the same thing, as, Heare thou from heaven, 1 King.8.43.

V. 21. set his face toward] With a purpose to goe that way, Luk.9.51.53. See Jer.50.5.

Gilead] The highest hill beyond Jordan, in length stretched out to 50. miles, it beginneth neer the City Jaer, and the rocks of Arnon Southward, and runneth through two Kingdoms, the one of Og, the other of the Amorites; in that dimension of longitude severall parts of it have severall names, as Gilead, Seir, Hermon, and Libanus. Adrichom: placeth it in the Tribe of Manasses, Theatr. terr. sanct. p. 85.

V. 22. the third day] Labans flocks that were kept by his sons, were three dayes journey from the cattell committed unto Jacobs custody, Gen.30.36. So Labans craft, and misconceit of Jacob gave him an advantage for evasion from him; so is the saying of Eliphas verified, Job 5. 12, 13.

V. 23. his brethren] That is, his kinsmen and country-men.

seven dayes journey] To Laban, but by this time to Jacob it was the thirteenth day; for Jacob was gone three dayes journey before Laban knew of his departure; by that time that Laban had gone those three dayes journey, Jacob passed on, and made his six dayes, and then was Laban where Jacob first set out; from thence pursuing seven dayes with a swifter pace then Jacob travelled (with his wives, his little ones, and his flockes) hee overtook him the seventh day of his own, the thirteenth of Jacobs journey.

V. 24. to Laban in a dreame] The wicked sometimes had apparitions from God, though not for their own, so much as for the godlies sake. See Gen.20.3.7. Numb.22.9.

good or bad] In the Hebrew it is from good to bad; but the meaning is, neither good nor bad, as Gen.14.23. from a threed to a shoo-

a shoo-Latchet, that is, not so much as either a threed, or a shoo-latchet. Or by forbidding to speak either good or bad, is meant as if he had said, neither by faire words nor by foule, flattery, nor reproaches, promises nor threats, endeavour to bring back Jacob to thy house, or to his former condition when he dwelled with thee: Thus God watcheth over the malignity of the wicked, and for the safety of his servants, and makes them blesse that would curse, Numb. 23.11. become kind, that came out cruelly minded against them; as Gen. 32.6, 7. & 33.8, 9.

V. 27. Sent thee away with mirth] Laban hath now changed his place, but not his practise; he playeth the hypocrite still, and pretends if he had known his mind he would have dismissed him with much cheerfulnesse; whereas if he had fore-knowne his purpose, he would have put his tarrying irons upon him, without any permission to depart, so long as he could keep him in the condition of a servant; Malice will pick a quarrell where no fault is made; and hypocrisie will pick a thank where no good is meant.

V. 28. Thou hast done foolishly] Jacob did very wisely in following of God, and flying from him; and he thinks, no doubt, that he was too wise for him, in getting so much substance under him, and getting it from him with his wives, and children, without his knowledge, and against his mind; so the wicked in their reproaches many times belye their own hearts, to impeach the reputation of the righteous.

V. 29. It is in the power of my hand] The wicked boasteth of his power to do hurt, not considering how the goodnesse of God is able to make a restraint of his power, and spight. See Psal. 52.1. Joh. 19.10, 11.

The God of your father] He was an Idolarer, and therefore would not acknowledge the God of Jacobs father or grand-father (who first forsook the idolatry of his father Terahs family) to be his God; and he speaks in the plurall number, your father, meaning Jacob and his children, though he call them also his own, vers. 43.

V. 30. Stolne my gods] It is not probable that Laban having had for twenty yeares together the society of Jacob, (a man professing the pure worship of the true God appearing oft-times unto him, and manifesting his favour by so great blessings upon him, that Laban acknowledged God blest him for his sake, Gen. 30.27.) should be so grosse an Idolater as to take these little Teraphim or Images for Gods indeed, who were not able to save themselves from stealing away, being such as the Prophet Jeremy derideth, Jer. 10.5. yet in that he calls them by the name of Gods, it is not unlike that he committed Idolatry to them, worshipping the Image for God, or God by the Image, or the Image with God; and that in so long a time of Jacobs abode in his service he continued so corrupt in his Religion, it sheweth that Idolatry is a folly deeply rooted in the hearts not only of the silly, but of the subtill worldlings, as Laban was; and therefore is more religiously to be shunned, and more resolutely opposed.

V. 32. Let him not live] Hence some collect that theft by the law of nature was to be punished with death; this severe sentence proceeding of innocent confidence, was somewhat too sudden, and inconsiderate, whether he meant that himselfe would put the partie to death, or give him or her up to the hands of the Idolater; if Jacob had restrained that doome to his own deserving, it had been enough to cleare him of the theft; but he made it generall, and so shewed himselfe more just in his meaning, then wise in his speaking.

before our brethren] He meaneth some that came with Laban, whom in civilitie he calleth brethren: see Gen. 19.7. and in affiance of his own faithfull dealing makes them Judges of Labans accusation, though as parties with him in that hostile pursuit, they were professed enemies to himselfe. See Act. 4.19.

V. 35. Jacobs tent and Leahs tent] The men had tents apart from the women. See Annot. on Gen. 24.67. and the women by themselves, according to their distinction, and difference of children and servants; Proprietie is usefull for peace, and privacie.

my Lord] Reverend respect is to be showne to a father, though a bad one, as Laban was, as submission to a master though he be froward, 1 Pet. 2.18.

the custome of women] She sate upon the Idols and covered them with her coats, pretending for her not rising (to doe reverence to her father) the necessitie of her present condition according to her sexe, Levit. 15.19.

V. 36. Jacob was wroth and chode] Anger is a passion soone raised, but hardly ruled; the easiest precept in all the Scripture is that of Paul to the Ephesians, Be angry, and the hardest prohibition (that which is joyned with it) sinne not, Eph. 4.26. and never more hard for a man to forbeare sinne then when he doth not forbeare anger; if Jacob kept his displeasure within a warrantable temper (especially so provoked by Laban, who carried himselfe for the most part liker a cruell Master, then a kinde Uncle or Father) his anger is as much to be commended now, as his patience before; and the more, because he did not smother it with silence, as Absolom did his wrath with Amnon, 2 Sam. 13.22. nor sugar it over with sweet words or shewes of good will, as Joab did by Amasa, 2 Sam. 20.9. (which as some conceive is a point of wisdome, but is (as Solomon accompteth it) a folly, Prov. 10.18.) but chides it out, and so shews himselfe to be, as he is stiled, a plaine man, Gen. 25.27. And in this we may take the example of his disposition into our imitation, but then we must take heed that our wrath last not too long, (for though it may be sometimes a guest in the bosome of a wise man, it dwelleth onely in the bosome of fooles, Eccles. 7.9.) and that it chide not too loud with a sharper accent of rebuke, then the cause will well beare, and so fall upon foule reproaches instead of free reproofes.

V. 37. My brethren and thy brethren] See Annot. on vers. 32.

V. 39. I bare the losse] The carefull Shepherd should not satisfie for casuall losses, yet so unjust was Laban to require it, or Jacob so just as of himselfe to doe it.

V. 41. Thus have I beene] Vers. 38, 39, 40. he sheweth (Labans iniquitie compelling him to praise himselfe, and so did Paul moved thereunto by emulous adversaries, 1 Cor. 15.10. & 2 Cor. 11.1, &c.) what he did and indured in the service of Laban, overseeing his flocks for twenty yeares together, and yet he had but the charge of beasts, how much better are the soules of men, and how should spirituall Pastors rouse up their spirits, and stirre up their endevours, and persist in their vigilant care for the sheep of Christs flock? how should they watch, and work, and do, and suffer any thing, lest any sheep or lambe belonging to Christs fold, should be wortied with the Wolfe? See Heb. 13.17. 1 Pet. 5.2. Isa. 56.10.

ten times] See the Annot. on vers. 7.

V. 42. and the feare of Isaac] In all these titles, the God of my father, the God of Abraham, Jacobs grand-father, and the feare of Isaac, that is, the God of Isaac; he meaneth but one God, but nameth both his father and grand-father, in regard of the great, and especiall promises made to them both; and he names his father first as being next unto him, and ascends by him to his grand-father; and being that he could goe no higher (for the Covenant for the promised Land was first made with him) he comes down from him to his father againe, and for the God of his father puts downe the feare of Isaac, meaning him whom Isaac feared, Gen. 27.33. for God is the proper object of religious feare. See Isa. 8.13.

V. 43. all that thou seest, is mine] (1 King. 20.3.) That is, all the goods, and cattell, which are within thy view, which thou lookest on as thine owne, are mine; as if Jacob had nothing as his owne right, either by desert from him, or gift from God; he makes this brag that Jacob may thinke he is beholding to him if he take not from him the goods he hath gotten.

what can I doe] He owneth his daughters and grand-children as a tender father, and grand-father, and pretendeth that being so neere of kinne to him, they are so deare unto him that he cannot find in his heart to doe them any hurt.

V. 44. let us make a covenant] His conscience reproved him of his misbehaviour toward Jacob; and therefore moved him to seeke peace at his hands.

V. 45. a stone] So in the Originall, but the meaning may be stones, (by a figure called Enallage) or a heape of stones. See Gen. 28. vers. 11.18.

a pillar] As in testimonie of Jacobs true intention to keepe the Covenant proposed.

V. 47. Galeed] So called by anticipation, vers. 25. for untill now, upon this occasion that mountaine was not called by that name. It is a long tract of hils extended fiftie miles in length, and called at a certain distance by the severall names of Gilead, Siyr, Hermon, and Lebanon; in this place it hath two names, the one given in the Syrian tongue by Laban, the other in the Hebrew tongue by Jacob, both having the same signification, viz. The heape of witnesse.

V. 48. This heape is a witnesse] That is, this heape raised up in remembrance of the Covenant betwixt us, will be a memoriall, or remembrance, which may be alledged by way of witnesse, or testimony to the truth of the Covenant concluded betwixt us. In which speech there is a figure called Metonymie, whereby the signe is put for the thing signified. See Annot. on Chap. 33. vers. 20.

V. 49. Mizpah] A name given of beholding, as men behold out of a watch-tower, meaning that God doth behold, and look both upon the Covenant, and those that make it, and whether sincerely or no they intend to keep it; Laban gave this name that he might seeme to have some Religion, and to bind Jacob who was religiously minded, to be more observant of his part of the Covenant.

V. 50. If thou shalt] The sense is suspended, and left imperfect, concealing the words of a curse: See Annot. on Chap. 14.23. which is usually rather implied then expresst, out of an aversion or unwillingnesse to mention it; whence it was that for the word Curse, a word of blessing was taken up, as Job 2.9. where according to the Originall, the words of Jobs wife may in the primarie interpretation be rendred blesse God and die, though taken according to her wicked intent, they be translated curse God and die: the meaning may be supplied thus, If thou shalt afflict, then God who both knoweth and rewardeth wickednesse, (especially treachery) punish thee as thou deservest.

take other wives] (Levit.18.18.) Having beene (while his daughters were with him) a very ill father; see vers.15. he now pretends a tendernesse of affection to them, and conditioneth with Jacob against that vice, whereunto through covetousnesse he forced him before.

V. 52. This heape be witnesse] See Annot. on vers.48.

V. 53. of Nahor] Behold how the Idolater mingleth the true God with his fained gods; he saith not the God of Abraham and of Isaac, but of Abraham, and of Nahor, and their father Terah, for they agreed in the worshipping of false gods, Josh. 24.2. the God in whom Abraham, and Isaac agreed, is the true God, yet Terah was ancienter then Abraham, an Idolater then a true beleever; and Nahor ancienter then Isaac; Antiquitie then (especially if it be but of a few degrees of precedencie) is no good proofe of the veritie of Religion; but the child may be of a better Religion then his father, or his grandfather.

feare of Isaac] See Annot. on vers.42.

V. 54. eate bread] Solemne Covenants were confirmed by sacrifice, Psal.50.5. and feasting, Gen.26.30. the feast though consisting of flesh, is called by the name of bread, because it is of most use for mans food, and is alwaies one part of the meale, though other meats be never so much varied; bread without them is many times eaten, they without it seldome, or never.

V. 55. kissed] An usuall manner in many Countries to begin their meeting, and conclude their parting with a kisse, as here. See Annot. on Chap.27.26. See also, 2 Sam.14.33. & Gen.33.4. Ruth 1.14.

blessed them] There is some seed of knowledge of God in the hearts of the wicked; and an over-ruling power of Almightie God appeareth in making him, who came forth to pursue Jacob and his company as theeves, to take an affectionate farewell of him, with a friendly kisse, and fatherly blessing: see Gen.33.4. the story of Balaam, Numb.23.11. and of Paul, Act.28.4,5,6.

CHAP. XXXII.

Vers.1. Angels of God met him] Not in a Dreame, but when he was awake they presented themselves unto him in a visible apparition; that these were Troupes of Angels under the president Angel of the Countrey of Mesopotamia, and the president Angel of the Countrey of Canaan, coming with his company to meet the other and his Troupes, as some affirme; is a presumptuous conceit, and it is like, as false as presumptuous.

V. 2. This is Gods hoste] He acknowledgeth Gods benefits who for the preservation of his, sendeth hosts of Angels; and sometimes his assistance is represented with other apparitions, as 2 King.6.17. The Angels are called hosts, that is, companies of souldiers, for their number; for they are many, Dan. 7.10. Luk.2.13. for their order, for their Captaine, Josh. 5.vers.13, 14, 15. the Lord of hosts who teacheth the hands to warre, and the fingers to fight, is most skilfull to direct them; and they most observant of his Discipline; and for their power, for one of them in one night was able to slay of the Assyrians Armie, an hundred fourescore and five thousand, 2 King.1.35. Lastly, for their service, which is the defence of Gods Church, and children, 2 King.6.17. Psal.34.7. Dan. 10.20. and the destruction of the wicked, Gen.19.13. Now though Jacob were secured from the danger of Labans pursuit, he must not account himselfe safe without continuance of the Divine providence over him; for the godly are alwaies in danger to be assaulted by some enemies, or other; and therefore need a guard of Angels, when their estate seemeth safest; and though one alone, or God himselfe without their subordinate service, could protect them; yet to shew them the greater favour, and to do them more honour, he limits not the charge of them to any one particular Angel, but sends an hoste here to one man, and hath made them all ministring spirits to minister for them, who shall be heires of salvation, Heb.1.14. all of them to all, to keep them in their wayes, Psal.91.11. without limitation either of Angels, or persons; so that no Angel is restrained from a particular ministration to any of the elect, nor any of the elect so allotted to the custodie of any Angel that he may not expect the protection of many.

Mahanaim] Two hosts or Camps, Cant.6.13. The word is of the duall number, and the hosts might be two, the one before, the other behind; or the one on the one side, the other on the othe side of Jacob and his company; and if we take it in a plurall sense, these Armies may be thought to compasse him about, as Psal.34.7. howsoever, they placed themselves in such sort as to give Jacob assurance of safetie every way; since their service is appointed them by God for the good of the godly, Psal.91.11.

V. 3. Jacob sent messengers] The word Malachim, is the same for the Angels that came to him, and for the Messengers sent by him to his brother; and the word Angel signifieth no more in the litterall sense; whence some Jews have grosly mistaken the Text, thinking that Jacob sent some of these Angels on the errand to Esau; which is a vaine conceit; for he directs the Messengers, vers.4. what to say, which he would not presume to doe unto such Angels as God sent unto him, who were Angels by nature, that is, heavenly Spirits, as well as by name; that is, such as bring messages from one to another; the differences betwixt the one and the other may be observed by the circumstances of the place, and collations of Scriptures.

to Esau his brother] Because he was to passe through his Countrey in his returne to Canaan.

the Land of Seir, the countrey of Edom] Here they seeme to be the same, but Gen.36.21. Seir is said to be in the Land of Edom; so Seir may be taken for a part of Edom, or Esaus possession, which was called Seir, not from Esau, (though he were called Seir for his roughnesse, as Edom for his rednesse) for it had that name before Esaus time, Gen.14.6. but from Seir a Horite, or Horite, Gen. 36.20.

V. 4. lord Esau] (Vers. 18. Chap. 33. vers. 8.) He reverenced his brother in worldly things, because he chiefly looked to be preferred in the spirituall promise; and though he had the blessing of the birth-right pronounced upon him, yet the time was not yet come that it should be perfectly accomplished; nor did this submissive, either speech, or behaviour of Jacob to Esau, prejudice his right of primogeniture or birth-right, no more then David did his right of royaltie, who after he was annointed King, calleth Saul the Lords anointed and his master, 1 Sam. 24.6. And in this faire speech of Jacob, he prudently applied himselfe to the pacification of Esau, vers.5. See Prov. 15. vers.1. of whom he had cause to feare somewhat of his old grudge and threat, which drove him to take a long journey and hard service for his securitie from it.

sojourned with Laban] By reporting his condition as banished from his native Countrey so long, he proposeth himselfe as an object rather of pity, then of envy to his brother.

V. 5. I have oxen] In mentioning his estate, he brags not of his riches, but sheweth that he will not be burdensome either to him, or his fathers house; nor a reproach to their family by his poverty.

V. 6. And the messengers] Some upon these words note, that the Messengers brought word that Esau was appeased, and that he came to meet him of love and respect; but there is not a word in the Text to that purpose, and the feare of Jacob in the next verse, sheweth the contrary.

foure hundred men] If he came not for mischiefe, he brought so many for ostentation, or for his securitie; for those that are a terrour to many, are afraid of many.

V. 7. greatly afraid] Albeit he was comforted by the Angels, yet the infirmitie of the flesh doth appeare; the Angels appeared unto Jacob betwixt two dangers, when there appeared no need of their protection unto him; now the Angels are gone, and his incensed brother cometh with foure hundred armed men, in all probabilitie, to take revenge for a wrong of twenty yeares standing: thus God is pleased to give his servants interchangeable causes of comforts and fears, that they may still be exercised for their spirituall proficiencie, and may neither despaire in distresse, nor presume in prosperitie.

he divided] The people, and the flocks; the greater cattell by themselves, and the lesser by themselves; and some of his company with each sort to drive them together; honest policie (as well as faith, and piety) is both lawfull, and needfull in the affaires of Gods servants. See Gen. 14.15. & Chap. 30. from vers.38. to 41. & vers.16,17,18. of this Chapter.

V. 9. O God of my father] Here, if ever, was a fit time and occasion for Jacob to betake himselfe to the mediation of the Angels, who had lately presented themselves to his view, as Military Troupes, & it was now seasonable to implore their presence to overmatch the forces of his brother: but he knew that was unlawfull, and therefore he directs his supplication for safetie, immediately to the God of his father, and grandfather, (without any mention of Angels at all;) and he useth their names to quicken and strengthen his faith by the promises of God unto them, and his Covenant with them; for though God sometimes send his servants visible succours in their distresse, as 2 King. 6.17. yet that is very rarely, because he would have their hearts ordinarily upheld by faith, and not by sense. See Annot. on Chap.31. vers.42.

V. 10. of the least] Jacob pleads his merit towards Laban, Chap.31. from vers. 38. to 41. but having to doe with God he sets a very low esteeme of himselfe, as not deserving the least of Gods mercies; see the selfe-same dejection of Abraham, Gen.18.27. and of Mephibosheth, 2 Sam.9. vers.7,8. See also, Luk.17.10.

all the truth] That is, not onely by teaching him to discerne betwixt truth, and falshood; but by shewing himselfe true in his his predictions, and promises unto him, making them true, and right by an answerable event.

with my staffe] That is, poore, like a wayfaring footman that carrieth all his wealth with him, and yet is not overloaded with his burden.

this Jordan] Which he might see from Mount Gilead, or Galeed, where he last was, Chap.31.47. and if at that time out of sight, yet not out of mind, and so as present to his memory he might say, this Jordan.

become two bands] That is, come on, or encreased in estate so that I have two bands, a flock of lesser cattell, and a drove of greater, and two companies of servants to attend, and order them. See vers.7. of this Chapter.

V. 11. Deliver me] Prayer is as a City of refuge to the godly against the malice of the mighty; the readiest meanes of deliverance out of distresse, Psal.50.15.

the mother with] Or, upon her children, as Hos.10.14. meaning he will put all to death; This Proverbe cometh of them who kill the bird together with her young ones, Deut.22.6.

V. 13. which came to his hand] (1 Sam.25.8.) That is, not which his hand fetcht in by craft, or guile, or rapine, or wrong, as Hab. 1.15. but which came to his hands, as freely sent or presented him by Gods providence, and his blessing upon his labours; or that which was neerest at hand, as fit to make a pacifying present.

a present] A liberall present consisting (as some reckon) of five hundred and fifty head of cattell of severall kinds; where we may observe the prudence of Jacob in his carriage towards Esau, as well as in his prayer, his faith and pietie to God; he prayeth to him, and putteth his confidence in him, yet useth humane meanes to serve the Divine providence, as well as to preserve himselfe, and his company; and sending of presents is a good meanes to that purpose, Prov.17.8. & Chap.18.16.

V. 16. every drove by themselves] Heb. drove drove. See Annot. on Chap.7. vers.2.

a space betweene] That Esaus displeasure might be abated by degrees, and so by degrees he might increase in favour, and acceptance with him; A prudent course and with Gods blessing like to take that effect he intended, Chap.33.8. as indeed it did, Chap.33.9. See Annot.on Chap.33.v.1.

V. 22. eleven sonnes] He had a twelfth child, his daughter Dinah, the youngest of all his children, (excepting Joseph) who no doubt was under his provident care with her brethren; but she is not mentioned in this place, either because the female sex is not so much observed in the Scripture, (for they were not entred into the Church with a Sacrament, as the males were, nor is any of their ages registred or summed up at their death, except Sarahs, (as some have noted) or it may be Dinah was not mentioned because she was not a mother in Israel, as these eleven sonnes were fathers.

Jabbok] See Annot. on Deut.2.37. See also Numb. 21.24. Deut.3.16. Josh.12.2. Judg.11.13.

V. 24. a man] So in appearance; but indeed God, as is implyed by Jacobs desire of a blessing from him, vers.26. and his mention of him by the Name of God, vers. 28. 30. who Hos. 12. is called first God, vers. 3. then an Angel, vers.4. The same Angel it was whom Jacob remembreth (in his benediction) as his deliverer from all evill, Gen.48.16. that is, the Angel of the Covenant, Mal. 3.1. Michael the Arch-angel, Jude 9. that is, Christ; not a created Angel, and Jacobs keeper, as some conceive.

wrestled] Not onely with spirituall strugglings, teares, and prayers, Hos.12.4. but with corporall also, wherein God assayled him with one hand, and upheld him with the other.

untill the break of day] This wrestling was by night, (but at what time of the night it doth not appeare) and tooke up about breake of day, for it was intended for a private conflict without spectators; none must be witnesses of it, but Jacob; nor must Jacob fully know with whom he wrestles; and therefore he departed before cleare light appeared to discover him to the servants of Jacob, or any other that should come that way.

V. 25. when he saw]. This is spoken after the manner of men, whose knowledge cometh to them by time, and experience, whereas God by his pure and perfect act of intelligence knoweth all things, not by degrees, or successively, but perfectly and at once.

he prevailed not] Not because he could not, but because he would not, as Gen.19.22. for in comparison of him, Jacob was but a worme, as he is called, Isa.41.14. easily trodden on, and crushed under his foot; and God gave him strength to resist, and hold out, so that whosoever gave over first, the victory was his, who gave the vigour to prevaile; and if the words had been he could not prevaile, they must have beene understood not for any over-matching of his power, but for the resolution of his will, which, in regard of his Decree to order the conflict thus, must needs be so. See Mar.6.5.

out of joynt] By the strength that was given to Jacob to wrestle, and to prevail with God, he might take incouragement to meet with his brother Esau now marching towards him, that the newes of his approach might not too much perplexe him; and that he might not be too much puffed up with the glory, and successe of such a single combate, he is made sensible of his humane frailty, and of his power who strove with him, by a maime in his thigh; so Paul lifted up with revelations to the third heaven, lest he should be exalted above measure, 2 Cor. 12. 7. felt a thorne in the flesh, and the buffetings of Satan.

V. 26. Let me goe] See Annot. on Exod.32.10. See also Deut.9.14. & Luk.24.28,29.

I will not let thee goe] Though by this hurt in his thigh he was made more weake, yet was he strong, 2 Cor. 12. 10. so strong as to wrestle againe for a blessing; and this was a most vehement wrestling with weeping, and supplication, as Hosea noteth, Chap.12.4. The power of prayer is next to Almighty, and by this sometimes, are the hands of the Almighty as it were bound to the peace, when he hath a quarrell with his people, Exod.32.10. Deut.9.14.

except thou blesse me] This example of Jacob is many waies appliable to the state of the Christian Church; there is a night of wrestling and affliction, and a day of blessing; there is a mixture of strength, and infirmitie in the best; there is an holy striving with God by importunitie of prayer, Rom. 15.30. and an holy violence to be used for the kingdome of heaven, Matth. 11.12. and in striving for that, we strive for a blessing; for with a blessing we shall be admitted to it, Matth.25.34. and with blessings abundantly furnished in it.

V. 27. What is thy name] The Angel being God, asketh not this question, as man, out of ignorance; for he knew it well enough, as he did what was become of Abel, when he asked of his brother Cain where he was, Gen.4.9. but he asked of his name, to make an occasion for what himselfe meant to say of the change of his name.

V. 28. no more Jacob, but] (Chap.35.10.) That is, no more onely Jacob, (for that word must be understood, as Jer. 7.22, 23.) for he was often called Jacob, after this; or, rather Israel then Jacob, as Hos.6.6. Exod.16.vers.2.3. For after this he was chiefly called Israel, and his posteritie more usually the children of Israel, then the children of Jacob, and familiarly Israelites, not Jacobites. Or this may be a precept as well as a propheste; and though all Divine propheses be fulfilled as they are meant; yet all precepts are not performed as they are enjoyned. The name Israel importeth (as the Angel expoundeth it) a princely power with God; The change of names in the godly is an argument of favour with God, and of honour with men; and an incitement to change from bad to good, from good to better. See Gen. Chap.17. vers.5. 15. The name Israel coming of Sarah, he hath prevailed, and El, God, according to the reason rendred in the Text.

and with men] Having power with God thou shalt prevaile with men, as with Laban before, so now with Esau thy brother, though he may seeme to overmatch thee, both in the number and power of thy people.

V. 29. tell me, I pray thee, thy name] God appeared to Jacob at least twice before this, yet before now he did not aske him his name. The reason whereof may be, that Jacob might take occasion to returne upon him with the same question, not doubting but he would give himselfe some peculiar name, whereby he might the better both remember, and honour him. See Judg. 13. vers. 17.

wherefore is it that thou dost aske after, &c.] The Angel will succour his necessitie, and strengthen him against adversitie, but not serve his curiositie; it was not more curiously done in him that asked after the name of this Angel, then in many who take upon them to tell the causes why the Angel did conceale it. That some Angels had names, it is plaine by Luk.1.19.26. and that the Angel of the Covenant Christ Jesus had also a name before his incarnation, appeares, Dan.10.21. where he is named Michael, and that name is repeated, Jude vers.9. Revel. 12. 7. but whether all the Angels have particular names, (which may be so if God please, for he may call both Angels, and Starres by their names, Psal.147. 4. in a literall sense) and why the Angel in this place would not tell his name, is uncertaine; it may be the name here meant was that which was not to be revealed untill afterward: see Exod. 6. 3. Or that Jacob must be taught humilitie (and we by his example) in setting modest bounds to his inquiries, and contenting himselfe with ignorance of that which God will have hid. See Judg.13.18. 1 Sam.6. 19. Rom. 12. vers.3.

V. 30. called the name of the place Peniel] That is, the face of God, not that Gods essence is discernible by any; but this vision in humane forme in comparison of other apparitions, was more plaine, and familiar, with face to face, as those that wrestle, or as when a man talketh with his friend in presence. See Exod.33. vers.11.

face to face] See Annot. on Exod.33.11.

and my life is preserved] It hath been a conceit of great an-

tiquitie (it may be from this place) that men could not see God but with perill of life; so thought Manoah, Judg. 13. 22. Yet there is none instance of any one dying upon such a sight, but Exod. 33. 20. the Lord himselfe saith, There shall no man see me and live, by which may be meant, that the vision of God is not in this life, but in the other, so that unlesse a man die, he shall not live to see such a sight, for God is indeed invisible to carnall eyes, 1 Tim. 6. 16.

V. 31. he halted] The faithfull so overcome their temptations that they feele the smart thereof, to the intent that they should not glory but in their humilitie. See Annot. on v. 26. And this sheweth that he prevailed not with the Angel by his own abilitie. Some thinke that Jacob was cured of his maime before he met his brother; yet is not any person to be despised for any such defect; though the typicall priest-hood admitted of none to minister at the Altar, that had any bodily blemish, Levit. 21. from vers. 18. to the 21. yet is none lesse acceptable with God for it; and though Jacob delighted more in the outside of Rachel then of Leah, because she was more beautifull; if she had not a better inside also, God esteemed them both alike: neither the blindnesse of Isaac, nor the lamenesse of Mephibosheth, nor the leprosie of Naaman (and we may take in any other either defect, or deformitie that was not wilfully contracted by mens own wickednesse, as the rednesse of eyes in a drunkard, Prov. 23. 29.) made them lesse beloved of God. The use of such infirmities is (to those that have them not) matter of thanksgiving to Almightie God, who maketh the difference; and to those that have them, to be humbled by them, and withall to endeavour a recompence of their bodily blemishes, with an advantage of spirituall graces, and endowments of their minds.

V. 32. unto this day] The remembrance of this story was kept by generall abstinence of the Israelites from eating of that part in the thigh (in any of the creatures) which in Jacob was sinew-shrunke; and this continued untill Moses wrote this Story without any intimation of fault, or folly therein; and to this day the Jews observe it, though with much vanitie and superstition, as they doe other observances whether of History or Religion: and indeed the story of Gods wrestling is most memorable, wherein though profane wit may finde somewhat to cavill at, as if such a conflict with man were too mean a businesse for Almightie God; yet religious wisdome will consider, that Gods thoughts are not mans thoughts, nor his wayes mans wayes, Esa. 55. 8. For he chooseth the foolish things of the world (as the world judgeth them) to confound the wise; and the weake things of the world to confound the things which are mighty, 1 Cor. 1. 27. If humane wit had been to set down a Sacrament for the Patriarchs, it would have despised such a one as Circumcision: but God chooseth also the base things of the world, and things which are despised and things which are not, to bring to nought the things that are, vers. 28. And for this descending of the Sonne of God to this wrestling with Jacob, what is it to that humiliation of his in being borne in a stable, stooping down to wath his own servants feet, Joh. 13. 5. to his making himselfe of no reputation, and humbling himselfe to obedience even unto death, the death of the crosse, Phil. 2. 7, 8.

CHAP. XXXIII.

Vers. 1. Divided] That if the one part were assailed, the other might escape. See Annot. on Chap. 32. vers. 16. This he doth, making humane prudence subservient and subordinate to Divine providence.

V. 2. foremost] He ranketh them according to their right, and his own respect unto them; they are set before in a time of danger, who in time of safetie come behind.

V. 3. before them] He followed the first company which consisted of the handmaids and their children, and went before the other company where were his wives and their children; Or there were three troopes of presents to Esau, and these because sent at the same time, and being neere together, might goe for the first troope. See Chap. 32. from vers. 16. to the 20. inclusively; and if all these made the first, his wives and concubines with their children might make the second troope, and to them he was the Leader; wherein he sheweth himselfe as a good Pastour, more charie of his charge then of himselfe, putting himselfe neerest to the perill, and keeping them as farre off as he could.

bowed himselfe] By this gesture he partly did reverence to his brother, and partly prayed to God to mitigate his wrath; for the heart may be exercised in devotion to God, while the body performeth an outward ministery to man. See Neh. 2. 4. Of Jacobs homage to Esau, see Annot. on Chap. 32. vers. 4.

seven times] That is, many times, a certaine number for an uncertaine; of ten times, See Chap. 31. v. 7. and the Annot. upon it.

V. 4. Esau ran, &c.] Here be many expressions of reconciliation; too many, too emphaticall and forcible to be thought fained in a man that had neither occasion nor disposition to dissemble; and herein Jacobs advised prudence, and soft language, and submissive behaviour served under Gods providence, to bring this to passe, that he might prevaile with men, as well as with God, according to the note set upon his name, Gen. 32. 28. Thus when a mans wayes please the Lord, the ungodly that are his enemies may be made his friends, Prov. 16. 7.

V. 9. I have enough] Though Esau were a bad man, in this respect there are many worse, who have never enough, Eccles. 4. 8. Prov. 30. 15.

V. 10. if I have found, &c.] If indeed thou art fully reconciled unto me, receive this present from me.

present] The Hebrew word is Minchah, signifying properly a gift, which is given to God, or to man as a superiour, with profession of the excellencie of him to whom it is given, and the subjection of him that giveth it.

face of God] In that his brother embraced him so lovingly contrary to his expectation, he accepted it as a plaine signe of Gods presence. It is the manner of the Hebrews to entitle to God the things that excell, as the mountaines of God, the citie of God. See Annot. on Chap. 23. 6. & Chap. 30. 8. So Jacob taking delight in the lookes and behaviour, and carriage of his brother Esau, as very excellent and worthy acceptance; he compares his face to the face of God; or in his reconciled countenance and carriage, he sees the gracious face of God, whose worke it was, (as Jacob acknowledgeth in the next verse) as it were smiling upon him; hereto accordeth that of David, by this I know that thou favourest me, because mine enemie doth not triumph over me, Psal. 41. 11.

V. 11. blessing] (Josh. 15. 19. 1 Sam. 25. 27. & 30. 26. 2 King. 5. 15. 2 Cor. 9. 5, 6.) That is, an effect of Gods blessing upon me, or a token of my good will, and wel-wishing of blessing unto thee, or of my blessing, or praysing of God for his goodnesse in this turning of thine heart from hatred to love.

V. 12. Let us take, &c.] They are the words of Esau to Jacob for a sociable passage together to Seir the habitation of Esau.

V. 14. according as the cattell] Heb. according to the foot of the worke. By the foot is meant the pace, and by the worke, the cattell, as attended by the worke and ministery of Jacob and his servants.

untill I come unto my Lord] Here Jacob implyeth a promise of following Esau to Seir, where he dwelt, but the Scripture maketh no mention of his performance, and it is thought he did not come according to his promise, because Seir is not mentioned among the stations of his abode by the way; thence some have conceived that when he promised to come, he said not as he thought, not meaning to trust himselfe so farre with a lately reconciled enemy; which is not likely, for Seir was so neere, that Esau upon his failing out of distrust, might soone have returned upon him with a new quarrell: It is more probable that Jacob meant what he said, but after might upon a better consideration, or some warning from God, (as the Wise men had, Matth. 2. 12.) change his mind and course; yet so, as that himselfe with some few of his servants might visit him for a while with some faire and courteous excuse for the rest, who were invited with himselfe. See Rom. 1. 13. 1 Thes. 2. 18.

V. 17. built him an house] Neither of any great cost, or curiositie, for he stayed here but a while; therefore it was like it was a sudden, and slight piece of building, like such cottages or cabines as souldiers suddenly reate for present use, and with a purpose for removall thence.

V. 18. to Shalem] Or, Salem. The word Salem signifieth safe, so some take it not for a proper name of a place, but for an appellative word or Noune, noting the prosperitie of Jacobs passage; that he came safe to Shechem; and thence they inferre that he was healed of his halting, and that before he met with Esau; else he would have made that an excuse for his not following him to Seir; but whether Jacob were so soone cured of his halting, or were not at all cured of it, (and therefore gave the more occasion of the Israelites forbearing of some part of the thigh thereupon, as is noted, Chap. 32. vers. 32.) which is uncertaine; there might be a Citie in the Countrey of Shechem called Salem; and it is thought the same that was called Sychar: See Joh. 4. 5. See Annot. on Chap. 14. vers. 18.

V. 19. he bought a parcell] This was a part of the Land of Canaan, which was his by promise; yet the time of possession of it, according to the grant to him, and his seed, was not yet come; and therefore without distrust of Gods promise, or a renunciation of his owne right, he buyeth a piece of land for his present necessitie, as Abraham did the field of Machpelah, Gen. 23. 17, 18.

children of Hamor] He was Prince of the Shechemites; and his subjects are called children, because a Prince is the father of his Countrey. See the name Abimelech in Annot. on Chap. 20. vers. 2.

an hundred pieces] Or, lambes. That is, for so many lambes in kind, Shalem] It seems altogether most probable to take it Appellatively. Gen. 34. 21. Nah. 1. 12. / So Junius, Gerkava, Ainsw. Dutch version. I seldom find need to depart from this our last Translation, nor would without cogent Reason: but here there seems cause for it. — Nor was Shechem a Country that had divers Cities in it, but one city. kind, or the price of so many; or so many pieces of silver having the picture of a Lamb figured upon them; the same word Kesitah is used, Job. 42 11. of the gift brought to Job, which signifieth a sheepe, and a piece of coine; but a sheep had been a small matter, therefore it is like it was a piece of coyne with a sheep figured upon it; and liker to be gold then silver, especially as the present of the rich: and our Latine word pecunia is so called, either because it is used in commerce as cattell were before, or else because the portraiture of a beast was stamped upon it.

V. 20. El-Elohe-Israel] That is, God, the God of Israel: he gives the Altar the Name of God, not Idolatrously, putting it in the place of God; but figuratively, as the signe for the thing signified; as our Saviour calleth bread, his body, and the wine, his blood: or repeating the word Mizbeahh, that is, Altar, againe, which may well be understood, the words may be read thus, he called the Altar the Altar of God the God of Israel. However, this Altar was set up as a pious, and gratefull memoriall of Gods favour in giving him (according to his new name) power, not onely to prevaile with himselfe for a blessing; but with his brother Esau, to divert destruction; and by putting Gods Name and his owne so together, he more confirmeth his confidence in him, and ingageth his owne fidelity and obedience unto him: or, (as some conceive) the Altar had an inscription upon it, which was the Altar of the mightie God of Israel.

CHAP. XXXIIII.

Vers. 1. Dinah --- which she bare unto Jacob] The most faithfull and holy family may have some fearefull examples of sinfull mishaps; Davids had many; which may serve for a caveat against too much confidence in the piety of parents for education of children; and for restraint of rash censures against the religious, in regard of the faults, or miscariages of their children.

went out to see] Dinah was now about fourteene or fifteene yeares of age, and went upon some festivall day, when the women met, to see them, and observe their persons, their habits, and behaviour: but though she went but to see her owne sexe, she was seene by the other, and being seene, was desired, and desired was lustfully abused by Shechem, the sonne of Hamor Prince of the Countrey. This example sheweth that too much libertie is not to be given unto youth, especially to the weaker sexe, who may be strong enough to provoke to temptation, and too weake to resist it, when it returnes upon themselves with solicitations to lust; it is best for such to be ordered by the Apostles rule, which is, that they be keepers at home, Tit. 2. 5.

V. 2. saw her, he tooke her] Concupiscence is begotten by a wanton eye on a beautifull object, and being begotten it presently groweth strong and maketh hast to the act; if beauty be not covered with a vaile, the eye must be confined with the Covenant of Job, Chap. 31. vers. 1. Dinah was the daughter of Leah, and Leah the first wife of Jacob by intrusion into Rachels right; if she thought upon the wrong both to Jacob and her sister, she might have occasion to conceive that Dinah her daughter did now by this miscarriage bring her sinne to her remembrance; and so her heart, if it were as tender as her eyes, might multiply teares for her owne transgression in that she was a wife too soone, as well as for her daughters, who was not soon enough; being made a bedfellow to him whom she had not time to call her husband.

V. 3. And his soule clave] Lust, though it be a sinne of the flesh, makes the whole man carnall, both soule and body; and the soule rather then the body, for when the body is parted from uncleane society, the soule cleaveth still to the object of concupiscence, and sinneth with it, when the body comes not neere it.

V. 4. to his father --- saying] He asketh his fathers consent, and withall requireth him to be a meanes to make a marriage with Dinah. This proveth that the consent of parents is requisite in marriage, seeing the very Infidels did observe it.

damosell to wife] He had unlawfully lien with her before, and now he would have her to be his wife; thus are the wicked preposterous in their course; so many become mothers with shame who might first have beene wives with credit; and many first make vowes, and after the vow, enquire whether it be lawfull or no, Prov. 20. 25. Yet in this, the example of Shechem condemnes the practice of many, who are so loose in their desires, that they make no account of the bond of marriage; if they may have carnall bedfellowes, they care not for wives, contrary to Deut. 22. 28, 29.

V. 5. held his peace] His wisdome kept silence, though his griefe were great; for it could not be otherwise, since Dinah was his onely daughter, and now as much lamented as an harlot, as before beloved as a virgin; yet he holds his peace; the sorrow is many times the greatest at the heart, which is least in the mouth or eyes. See Job 2. 13.

V. 6. to commune] For pacification of Jacob for the offence of his owne sonne, and for perswasion to a marriage with Jacobs daughter.

V. 7. folly] Sinne and folly in the Scripture phrase are names of the same naughtinesse; the sacriledge of Achan, Josh. 7. 15. and the rape on the Levites Concubine, Judg. 20. 6. are called folly; and the most subtle act, if it be sinfull, deserves no better a title, for in all sinne there is an aversion, or turning from God, who is the soveraigne good, and the hazarding of the best thing within, viz. our soules, and the best without, the Kingdome of heaven, for it; so that the greatest politicians, if wicked withall, shall have cause to passe the censure of the Apostle upon themselves, that professing themselves wise they became fooles, Rom. 1. 22.

in Israel] In the precedent Chapter, vers. 20. and not many yeares before this, the name of Israel was a personall name of Jacob; now it is more generall, extending to the whole family descended from him: or these words may be the words, not of Jacobs sonnes, but of Moses who writeth this story according to the phrase or forme of speech in his time agreeable to the law, which saith, There shall be no whore of the daughters of Israel, Deut. 23. 17.

V. 11. find grace] Chap. 33. 15.

V. 12. I will give] Though the lust of Shechem to Dinah was lewd, yet his love to her (for now treating of a marriage his affection deserveth a better name then before) was in this respect commendable, that he set an high price upon her person after her prostitution, which was his fault if not onely, yet in a degree of excesse above hers; and because he had rob'd her of that which he could neither give nor restore, he would now put a great mulct upon himselfe, that he might buy him a right in her for the future whom by his former abuse he unjustly as well as unchastly possessed. Compare this dealing with that of Amnon towards Thamar, 2 Sam. 13. and Shechem will seeme an honest man. Upon this offer of his some observe that it was the manner of the Easterne Countreys for men to buy their wives, as now it is the manner with us for fathers to buy husbands for their daughters, by giving both them and money or some other dowry with them in marriage; and in some Countreys (as Herodotus reporteth) the manner was to bring all marriageable maides into a publique view, and such as were beautifull were bought by those that would give most for them, and the money paid for them was given in marriage with those that were not so amiable as to be desired meerly for their owne sakes; so they made provision for a numerous increase, that none might be barren by perpetuall virginitie, whether by voluntary resolution, or upon necessitie. Now whereas this example of Shechem is made the ground of the observation of the custome of the East fore-mentioned, to which some adde the Law, Exod. 22. 16, 17. Deut. 22. 28, 29. they do none of them reach to a generall practice of that kind: And it is to be noted that in all these cases the money comes in as a satisfaction for wrong done, not as a bargaine upon free and equall proceeding.

V. 13. the sonnes of Jacob] Simeon and Levi, who were brethren to Dinah by their mother Leah; Jacob it seemes having no mind to heare of the matter, because he was extremely grieved with what was done, and unwilling to treat of a marriage where he meant it not, (for the holy seed of his family might not mingle with the curfed Canaanites, Deut. 7. 3, 4.) suffered his sonnes to make answer to the motion of Shechem and Hamor.

deceitfully] Plainnesse and sincerities was the praise of their father, Gen. 25. 27. and deceitfull dealing is the reproch of the sonnes, though toward Idolaters, and Infidels; They then that teach and practise false dealing with Christians, holding that faith given to heretiques is not to be kept, may be Simeonites and Levites, brethren in evill, but not true Israelites as Jacob was.

V. 14. uncircumcised] They made the holy Ordinance of God a meane to compasse their wicked purpose: It is ill to deceive though in meere civill matters, but much worse to doe it under pretence of Religion, for that is to joyne impiety against God, with injurie to man; See Absoloms hypocrisie, 2 Sam. 15. 7, 8.

that were a reproach] Isaac and Jacob both tooke wives out of uncircumcised families, yet without reproach, but it was worse to give a daughter to an uncircumcised husband, for Circumcision was not an Epicene, or common, but onely a masculine sacrament, ordained for men onely, not for women; yet it was unlawfull for an Israelite, whether male or female, to match with a Canaanite; nor was Circumcision to be obtruded upon them, being unbeleevers, since it was a seale of the righteousnesse of faith, Rom. 4. 11.

V. 17. our daughter] If they had treated in their owne names they should have said, our sister, but it is like they used the name of their father.

kind, or the price of so many; or so many pieces of silver having the picture of a Lamb figured upon them; the same word Kesitah is used, Job. 42 11. of the gift brought to Job, which signifieth a sheepe, and a piece of coine; but a sheep had been a small matter, therefore it is like it was a piece of coyne with a sheep figured upon it; and liker to be gold then silver, especially as the present of the rich: and our Latine word pecunia is so called, either because it is used in commerce as cattell were before, or else because the portraiture of a beast was stamped upon it.

V. 20. El-Elohe-Israel] That is, God, the God of Israel: he gives the Altar the Name of God, not Idolatrously, putting it in the place of God; but figuratively, as the signe for the thing signified; as our Saviour calleth bread, his body, and the wine, his blood: or repeating the word Mizbeahh, that is, Altar, againe, which may well be understood, the words may be read thus, he called the Altar the Altar of God the God of Israel. However, this Altar was set up as a pious, and gratefull memoriall of Gods favour in giving him (according to his new name) power, not onely to prevaile with himselfe for a blessing; but with his brother Esau, to divert destruction; and by putting Gods Name and his owne so together, he more confirmeth his confidence in him, and ingageth his owne fidelity and obedience unto him: or, (as some conceive) the Altar had an inscription upon it, which was the Altar of the mightie God of Israel.

CHAP. XXXIIII.

Vers. 1. Dinah --- which she bare unto Jacob] The most faithfull and holy family may have some fearefull examples of sinfull mishaps; Davids had many; which may serve for a caveat against too much confidence in the piety of parents for education of children; and for restraint of rash censures against the religious, in regard of the faults, or miscariages of their children.

went out to see] Dinah was now about fourteene or fifteene yeares of age, and went upon some festivall day, when the women met, to see them, and observe their persons, their habits, and behaviour: but though she went but to see her owne sexe, she was seene by the other; and being seene, was desired, and desired was lustfully abused by Shechem, the sonne of Hamor Prince of the Countrey. This example sheweth that too much libertie is not to be given unto youth, especially to the weaker sexe, who may be strong enough to provoke to temptation, and too weake to resist it, when it returnes upon themselves with solicitations to lust; it is best for such to be ordered by the Apostles rule, which is, that they be keepers at home, Tit. 2. 5.

V. 2. saw her, he tooke her] Concupiscence is begotten by a wanton eye on a beautifull object, and being begotten it presently groweth strong and maketh hast to the act; if beauty be not covered with a vaile, the eye must be confined with the Covenant of Job, Chap. 31. vers. 1. Dinah was the daughter of Leah, and Leah the first wife of Jacob by intrusion into Rachels right; if she thought upon the wrong both to Jacob and her sister, she might have occasion to conceive that Dinah her daughter did now by this miscarriage bring her sinne to her remembrance; and so her heart, if it were as tender as her eyes, might multiply teares for her owne transgression in that she was a wife too soone, as well as for her daughters, who was not soon enough; being made a bedfellow to him whom she had not time to call her husband.

V. 3. And his soule clave] Lust, though it be a sinne of the flesh, makes the whole man carnall, both soule and body; and the soule rather then the body, for when the body is parted from uncleane society, the soule cleaveth still to the object of concupiscence, and sinneth with it, when the body comes not neere it.

V. 4. to his father --saying] He asketh his fathers consent, and withall requireth him to be a meanes to make a marriage with Dinah. This proveth that the consent of parents is requisite in marriage, seeing the very Infidels did observe it.

damosell to wife] He had unlawfully lien with her before, and now he would have her to be his wife; thus are the wicked preposterous in their course; so many become mothers with shame who might first have beene wives with credit; and many first make vowes, and after the vow, enquire whether it be lawfull or no, Prov. 20. 25. Yet in this, the example of Shechem condemnes the practice of many, who are so loose in their desires, that they make no account of the bond of marriage; if they may have carnall bedfellowes, they care not for wives, contrary to Deut. 22. 28, 29.

V. 5. held his peace] His wisdome kept silence, though his griefe were great; for it could not be otherwise, since Dinah was his onely daughter, and now as much lamented as an harlot, as before beloved as a virgin; yet he holds his peace; the sorrow is many times the greatest at the heart, which is least in the mouth or eyes. See Job 2. 13.

V. 6. to commune] For pacification of Jacob for the offence of his owne sonne, and for perswasion to a marriage with Jacobs daughter.

V. 7. folly] Sinne and folly in the Scripture phrase are names of the same naughtinesse; the sacriledge of Achan, Josh. 7. 15. and the rape on the Levites Concubine, Judg. 20. 6. are called folly; and the most subtle act, if it be sinfull, deserves no better a title, for in all sinne there is an aversion, or turning from God, who is the soveraigne good, and the hazarding of the best thing within, viz. our soules, and the best without, the Kingdome of heaven, for it; so that the greatest politicians, if wicked withall, shall have cause to passe the censure of the Apostle upon themselves, that professing themselves wise they became fooles, Rom. 1. 22.

in Israel] In the precedent Chapter, vers. 20. and not many yeares before this, the name of Israel was a personall name of Jacob; now it is more generall, extending to the whole family descended from him: or these words may be the words, not of Jacobs sonnes, but of Moses who writeth this story according to the phrase or forme of speech in his time agreeable to the law, which saith, There shall be no whore of the daughters of Israel, Deut. 23. 17.

V. 11. find grace] Chap. 33. 15.

V. 12. I will give] Though the lust of Shechem to Dinah was lewd, yet his love to her (for now treating of a marriage his affection deserveth a better name then before) was in this respect commendable, that he set an high price upon her person after her prostitution, which was his fault if not onely, yet in a degree of excesse above hers; and because he had rob'd her of that which he could neither give nor restore, he would now put a great mulct upon himselfe, that he might buy him a right in her for the future whom by his former abuse he unjustly as well as unchastly possessed. Compare this dealing with that of Amnon towards Thamar, 2 Sam. 13. and Shechem will seeme an honest man. Upon this offer of his some observe that it was the manner of the Easterne Countreys for men to buy their wives, as now it is the manner with us for fathers to buy husbands for their daughters, by giving both them and money or some other dowry with them in marriage; and in some Countreys (as Herodotus reporteth) the manner was to bring all marriageable maides into a publique view, and such as were beautifull were bought by those that would give most for them, and the money paid for them was given in marriage with those that were not so amiable as to be desired meerly for their owne sakes; so they made provision for a numerous increase, that none might be barren by perpetuall virginitie, whether by voluntary resolution, or upon necessitie. Now whereas this example of Shechem is made the ground of the observation of the custome of the East fore-mentioned, to which some adde the Law, Exod. 22. 16, 17. Deut. 22. 28, 29. they do none of them reach to a generall practice of that kind: And it is to be noted that in all these cases the money comes in as a satisfaction for wrong done, not as a bargaine upon free and equall proceeding.

V. 13. the sonnes of Jacob] Simeon and Levi, who were brethren to Dinah by their mother Leah; Jacob it seemes having no mind to heare of the matter, because he was extremely grieved with what was done, and unwilling to treat of a marriage where he meant it not, (for the holy seed of his family might not mingle with the curst Canaanites, Deut. 7. 3, 4.) suffered his sonnes to make answer to the motion of Shechem and Hamor.

deceitfully] Plainnesse and sincerities was the praise of their father, Gen. 25. 27. and deceitfull dealing is the reproch of the sonnes, though toward Idolaters, and Infidels; They then that teach and practise false dealing with Christians, holding that faith given to heretiques is not to be kept, may be Simeonites and Levites, brethren in evill, but not true Israelites as Jacob was.

V. 14. uncircumcised] They made the holy Ordinance of God a meane to compasse their wicked purpose: It is ill to deceive though in meere civill matters, but much worse to doe it under pretence of Religion, for that is to joyne impiety against God, with injurie to man; See Absoloms hypocrisie, 2 Sam. 15. 7, 8.

that were a reproach] Isaac and Jacob both tooke wives out of uncircumcised families, yet without reproach, but it was worse to give a daughter to an uncircumcised husband, for Circumcision was not an Epicene, or common, but onely a masculine sacrament, ordained for men onely, not for women; yet it was unlawfull for an Israelite, whether male or female, to match with a Canaanite; nor was Circumcision to be obtruded upon them, being unbeleevers, since it was a seale of the righteousnesse of faith, Rom. 4. 11.

V. 17. our daughter] If they had treated in their owne names they should have said, our sister, but it is like they used the name of their father.

V. 20. gate of their citie] For the people used to assemble there, and there was justice also ministred, Pro. 31. v. 23.

V. 21. these men are peaceable] Thus many pretend to speake for the publique good, when they onely mind for their owne private gaine, and commoditie.

V. 23. shall not their cattell] To the wicked, gaine is godlinesse; as to the good, godlinesse is gaine, 1 Tim. 4. 8. Many choose their Religion with meere worldly respects of profit and advantage, and these are they whose covetousnesse is Idolatry, and who are as easily changed from one Religion to another in time of persecution, as money their Idol being melted, will take any stampe that is set upon it: Yet he might meane it not as a spoile from them, but in regard of gainfull commerce with them.

V. 25. the third day] Wounds received are most painefull to the wounded, the third day.

sore] Circumcision put the circumcised to much paine, and for a time disabled them, though at full age, from bodily motion, or action. See Josh. 5. 8. Yet was it exercised by Gods appointment upon little children; an argument of a Divine power, and authoritie going along with that Ordinance, else it would have beene thought by the wiser sort not a reproach to be without it, as the sonnes of Jacob said, vers. 14. but rather a reproach to receive it as a Sacrament; and being a great paine, not without some perill, especially to tender Infants; neither fathers, nor mothers, nor nurses, nor mid-wives, nor any that had power to refuse or resist, it, would have given way unto it; if Gods stampe had not beene upon it, though but meane metall in it selfe, to make it to passe for current Coine among men. Our entrance into Covenant with God by Baptisme by the sprinkling of water, not by the shedding of bloud, (as in the Sacrament of Circumcision) is an evidence of the Divine Indulgence to Christian Churches, and may be an inducement to a more generall Covenant with God, and a stronger obligation for lightsomenesse, and cheerfulnesse in his service under the Gospel, then that of the Jewes living under the Law.

two of the sonnes of Jacob] Viz. Simeon and Levi; these are mentioned as they that were most offended for the wrong done unto their sister, both by the fathers and the mothers side; but their other brethren mentioned without distinction, vers. 7.13. may well be thought to have had their parts in this bloody plot, yea and it is likely Jacobs servants also, and that in their Masters name, as is observed on vers. 17.

all the males] Because the wrong their sister suffered came from the male kind; and though in respect of man, it was not just to slay the innocent with the wicked in this case; yet all being guilty of sinne and of death before God, he might justly permit this rage to the ruine of that people; and many times he takes occasion upon the excesses or sinnes of Princes, to punish their subjects with them, and for their sakes, as well as for their owne. See 2 Chron. 32. 25. 2 Sam. 24. See Annot. on Chap. 20. v. 7.

V. 27. The sonnes of Jacob] In the twenty fifth verse the sonnes of Jacob are set downe by their number, two, and by their names, Simeon and Levi; here the sonnes of Jacob without distinction of names, or limitation of number, are mentioned: and indeed Dinah had foure more brethren, besides these two, both by the fathers and mothers side, who might be zealous to revenge the wrong as well as Simeon and Levi, though these two in degree of rage and resolution might be leaders to the rest: and because the execution of the slaughter seemes too much for two, it may be probable that others besides those that were named, vers. 25. were drawne into the same bloody combination; and it may be they are here named the sonnes of Jacob for aggravation of their guilt, in that having so good a father as Jacob, they were authours and actors of so great a crime, which that good man so much detested, vers. 30. of this Chapter. and Chap. 49. 5,6,7. As then as a good sonne shall not beare the iniquitie of a wicked father, Ezek. 18. so a good father should not beare the infamie of a wicked sonne, or sonnes.

came upon the slain] Either to take from them their apparel and other appurtenances worth the taking away, and to spoile them generally of their goods; or to execute the remainder of their rage, which would not be satisfied with death onely; such was that of the enemies of Cicero, (towards his dead body) when then cut off his head and hands, set them upon the pulpit of Orations, and Fulvia not content with the crueltie of men, took his head into her lappe, spit on his face, and pricked his tongue with pinnes, as in revenge upon the tongue that had uttered, and the hand that had written those eloquent and vehement Invectives called Philippicks, against Antonius. See Plut. life of Cicero, pag. 881,882. & Stat. in Flor. l. 4. cap. 5. The like barbarous inhumanity is recorded of the Antichristian, as well as of the heathen Romanes, as that which was practised upon the body of Pope Formosus by Pope Stephen his successour, who tooke him out of his grave, arraied him in his pontificall habit, cut off three of his fingers, and cast him into the River Tyber. V. 29. in the house] That is, in every house; in this fact of Simeon, and Levi with their partakers, though as from God, the Shechemites were justly punished partly for actuall guilt, partly for approbation of the sinne of Shechem, and their profanation of Gods Sacrament to serve their owne turnes, and for a purpose to spoile Gods people of all their goods, vers. 23. and albeit the wrathfull vengeance of Simeon and Levi argued either a great deale of zeale against the sinne, or a great deale of pride against the shame of their sisters rape; yet it was a wicked conspiracie, and execution, as being done without the knowledge or consent of their father, and so beyond the measure of regular justice, both in the number of persons (for all were not in the fault that were in the punishment) and in degree of severitie, being both murder, and rapine; and that at such a time as the Shechemites should rather have beene pitied; and all this brought in with treachery against man, and impietie against God, in the abuse of the Sacrament; whereby the Booke of Judith is convicted of grosse errour, and so justly excluded out of the Canon of the Scripture, which approveth the slaughter of the Shechemites by Simeon and Levi, as done by the sword given them by God, and out of a divine zeale, vers. 2. 4. which their father accurseth as proceeding of a wicked, and cruell wrath, Gen. 49. 7.

Judith.

V. 30. And Jacob said] By this reproofe of Simeon and Levi, Jacob witnesseth his great dislike of their wickednesse; But he seemeth to take the matter upon himselfe, when he assigneth that which was gotten from the Shechemites to the power of his sword and bow for obtainment, and bequeatheth it for enjoyment unto Joseph, Gen. 49. 22. Which words of Jacob are taken by some Interpreters as a Prophesie fulfilled in the expulsion of the Canaanites by his posteritie, whose bow he calls his bow, because they were then in his loynes, and speaks of the conquest as already made, because of the undoubted assurance of it upon Gods promise; but most take the words in an historicall sense, and so some referre them to this exploit of his sonnes Simeon and Levi against the Shechemites, wherein he approves of the fact, but so farre onely as it was the execution of Gods Justice for the injury to his daughter, and as God confirmed that title of what was taken from them by casting an awe upon the neighbouring Canaanites, that they durst not offer either revenge, or rescue of the prey out of his possession; this was Gods Sword and Bow, and he may be said to call it his because of the late great league betwixt God and him, whereof, see Gen. 32. 28. & 33. 20. but it is rather meant of that parcell of ground which Jacob bought of Hamor, Sheshems father, who (Gen. 48. 22.) might be called an Amorite, though he were an Hivite, either because he might be an Amorite by parentage, an Hivite by possession, or dwelling place; or the Amorites mingled with the Hivites, and being of more note then they, might give the denomination for them both; and, (which is more then that) the Amorites were so famous among the Canaanites, as to give a name to all the people of the Land of Canaan, Gen. 15. 16. This Land being Jacobs by particular purchase, he bequeathed it with especiall favour as a Legacie to Joseph as a portion above his brethren, as he saith, Chap. 48. vers. 22. Object. But he bought this with his money or lambes, Chap. 33. vers. 19. How then did he take it with his sword and his bow? Answ. It is not unusuall in Metaphoricall phrase to call that by the name of a sword, and a bow, which in effect and use, is answerable to them: now, Money is (as Solomon saith) answerable to all things, Eccles. 10. 19. it is a defence, Eccles. 7. 12. and can do as much as the sword, and the bow; thence was the saying of a publique Warrier, that no City was so strongly walled, but an Asse, laden with gold, might make a breach into it; so may gold be called Artillerie, and great Ordnance, and silver may be called an hooke to take fish, and he that buyes it may be said (according to the proverbe) To catch it with a silver hooke; in like manner Jacobs silver wherewith he bought the ground, may be said to be taken with the sword, and bow; and he may use this phrase in this sense, with particular opposition to the bloody sword, and bow of his sonnes Simeon and Levi: Or that which Jacob thus purchased might be violently invaded by the Amorite when he departed thence towards Hebron, and might by force of Armes of Jacob his sonnes and servants be recovered againe, as some conceive, not without probabilitie; for though nothing of faith or life necessary to salvation, be left out of the Scriptures, yet many particular actions, and occurrences are omitted in the History of both Testaments; and in this particular story of the slaughter and spoile of the Shechemites, though it be not set downe what became of the captives of women and children, which were brought away by Simeon, and Levi, vers. 29. it is not unlike that many of them were by Jacob sent back to the Citie, (for he had not roome for them at home) with a proportion of the spoyle, for their necessary maintenance; keeping what he thought fit, to serve for a recompence of the wrong to his deflowred daughter.

ye have troubled me] A wicked man is a troublesome man, troublesome not onely to others, as Achan, Josh. 7. 25. Ahab, made me] Though with God, the soule of the sonne shall not beare the iniquitie of the father; nor the father, the iniquitie of the sonne, Ezek. 18.20. with men it is usually otherwise; for the miscarriage of the children is many times imputed to the reproach of the parents, though they deserve it no more then Jacob did here; the more must their care be, by good example, and education, and by constant prayer to God, for his blessing upon it; to doe their best to make them unblameable in their wayes, and free from all scandall in their lives, and conversation; this would be a comfort and credit to both sides; and the contrary a double discomfort and disgrace, to parents, and children.

stinke] (Exod. 5.21. 1 Chron. 19.6.) Crueltie and treacherie are odious, and abominable sinnes, both in the sight of God and men, good, and bad; in the sight of the good, by whomsoever they be committed; and in the sight of the bad, if committed by any, but by themselves: for this the Popish Religion is infamous, and the infamie of it should make us keepe aloofe from the ill sent of that abomination.

I being few] That is, I and my family consisting of a small number; The dwelling of a few faithfull among many Infidels is very dangerous; such is the condition of the Protestants with the Papists, who are many for one in the Kingdome of Ireland, who now have shewed themselves as treacherous, and cruell as Simeon and Levi; who not under the check of a good father Jacob, but spurred on rather by the spirit of Esau, a man of the sword, Gen. 27.40. shew no moderation, or mercy in persecution, and pursuit of those, over whom the confidence in their overmatching number makes them insult, and with more intolerable Tyrannie to oppresse them; which will no doubt be a warning to our brethren, if they recover peace in that land; to be more curious in their course of life, that they may rather sweeten their reputation with pious, modest, temperate, chast, kind, and humble behaviour; then by any contrary excesses give any just cause of scandall, to make them as it were to stinke and be abominable to those that live among or about them; It may be an admonition to England to use all good meanes to lessen the number of our English Papists, I meane not by putting them to the sword; for that is their way of advancing their Religion; but by driving out of Priests and Jesuits who seduce them; and by removall of the great scandals of lewd and unlearned Ministers; by setting up godly, able, and painfull Preachers, with especiall choice of them for their gifts and parts, for those places where Papists doe most abound; by taking the children of Papists, especially their heires, from the corrupt education of their owne parents, and placing them where they may be trained up in the truth of doctrine, and holynesse of life, and by other waies and meanes which the wisdome of the State conceiveth to be most meet to worke this effect.

Papists.

V. 31. as with an harlot] The answering their father by such a question, gives an echo or relish of their wrath against the Shechemites, and sheweth that they did not think themselves too rash, but mild towards them; as if they had beene more charie of their sisters chastitie, then her father; or had disliked the lewdnesse of Shechem more then he. Extremitie of passion takes notice of no meane betwixt carelesse connivence at sinne, and cruell violence against the sinner; this sheweth that yet their hearts were bloudy, though their hands were washed; and so in this passionate demand, they bewray further wickednesse, to wit, impenitence for their bloudy fact, impatience at the just rebuke of their good minded, and much grieved father.

CHAP. XXXV.

Vers. 1. God said] By immediate revelation of himselfe to Jacob, whether by vision, when he was awake, or by dreame, when asleepe, it is not set downe; but howsoever, hereby we see that God is ready at hand to succour his in their troubles.

Bethel] That is, the house of God, where, at his going to his Uncle Laban, when he fled for feare of the threatned revenge of his brother Esau, he made a vow to God to be confirmed upon his safe returne. See Gen. 28. from vers. 19. to the end of the Chapter.

An Altar unto God, that appeared] That is, to me who appeared unto thee, as Numb. 26. God speaks as if himself were a distinct Person from the God, to whom this Altar must be built; and thence some inferre, that God the Father commands an Altar to be built to God the Son; and it is true, he being God, is to be worshipped no lesse then God the Father; but though that be true, and it be a sign of a pious mind, to take all good occasions to intimate the doctrine of the Trinity, and the Deity of the Son of God; yet this phrase will not serve to beare up an argument against such as are opposite to that high and hard, though Orthodox or true doctrine; since that phrase, viz. of Gods speaking of himself, as in another person, is used else-where, whence no such observation can be deduced, as both in the third and fourth Commandements of the decalogue.

V. 2. Jacob said] It belongs to the head of the family to have care of those under his charge, that they serve God aright; See Gen. 18.19. Jos. 24.15.

to all] All must serve God in the like pure, and religious manner, therefore no toleration of any in an idolatrous religion; See Deut. 29. vers. 9, 10, 11.

with him] Besides his own household, he might have some of the captive Shechemites with him, Chap. 34.29. for some it is like, were sent back, his house not being of a sufficient receit for them all.

put away] (Josh. 24.23. Judg. 10.16. 1 Sam. 7.3.) Whether such as were stolne by Rachel from Laban, or any taken in the spoile of Shechem, it is uncertain; but there must be no mixture of a false religion with a true; when Gods Altar is to be erected, Idolatry is to be deposed. God is too great to be served by the halves, and mans heart too little, to entertain him, and Idols with him; whose rivall-ship in religion his jealousie cannot endure; therefore where his Arke was set up, Dagon was thrown down, 1 Sam. 5.4. 2 Cor. 6.16.

strange gods] Or estranging, alienating gods, because they draw the heart from the true God; or strange, because it is strange that men should be so simple as to take those for gods, which are made with hands, as Demetrius and the Idolaters of Ephesus did, Act. 19.24. such as the Psalmist and the Prophet Jeremy deride, Jer. 10.3, 4, 5. Psal. 115.5. or such as are the gods of a strange people, with whom the Israelites must not hold communion, especially in marriage, or matters of religion.

among you] Jacob had not all this while since his departure from Labans service (which was about ten years space) wittingly tolerated Idolatry in his household; for he was ignorant of Rachels stealing away her fathers false gods, and confident (upon Labans curious search, and finding nothing in all his Tents) that there was no such vanity in his family; but it is like now Rachels theft was brought to light, and it may be some new strange gods were brought into it by the Shechemite captives.

and be cleane] Outward washing is a sign of inward cleansing of the soule from the sin of Idolatry, Isa. 1.16. which is principally required; for the outward ceremony is nothing to the inward sincerity of sorrow for sin, Joel 2.13. This cleansing argueth the filthinesse of Idols, though made of silver and gold, and therefore they are to be cast away as a menstruous cloth with extreme detestation, saying, Get you hence, Esai. 30.22.

change your garments] They might be changed by washing them, as Exod. 19.10. or putting on other cloathes in stead of them. The cleansing by water, and changing of garments were both ceremonies; though yet the ceremoniall Law was not written, it was in part practised by the Patriarchs (who in many things were to be distinguished from the Heathens) and afterwards committed unto writing by the ministery of Moses.

V. 3. In the day of my distresse] That was at least 30. yeares before, for it was at his going to his uncle Laban; which must admonish us not to forget Gods mercy, when we are got out of misery.

V. 4. ear-rings] (Hos. 2.13.) Which either had been abused to the Idols of Shechem, or might be easily turned to occasion of superstition, as Tablets or Agnus Deies among the Papists; their readinesse to part with the memorials of idolatry, and superstition, though of some price; condemnes the superstitious disobedience of some, who though upon the command of Authority, will not part with superstitious pictures, albeit they be neither in price nor propriety to be compared with these ear-rings, or other pretious appurtenances of Idolatry, which are to be rejected with abhorring detestation, as Esai. 30.22.

hid them] It is like that he first melted them, or otherwise defaced them, lest they should be found, and again abused to idolatry, as Moses did, Exod. 32.20. and Hezekiah, 2 King. 18.4.

under an oake] Idolaters had a superstitious respect unto trees, thence it was that groves were to be destroyed as monuments of Idolatry; Exod. 34.13. Deut. 7.5. & 12.3. and among trees the oake was especially accompted of, as appeares, Esa. 1.29. The Idols there buryed were the more like to lie hid, because they were superstitiously preserved from cutting downe, or digging up.

V. 5. terrour of God] (Exod. 23.27. Josh. 2.9, 11. 1 Sam. 11.7. 2 Chron. 17.10.) Jacob was afraid of the Canaanites, that they being many, and his people few, they would destroy him, and his house, Chap. 34.30. God secures him from this danger by making them to feare, of whom he was afraid. So he exerciseth a power not onely over the hands, but over the hearts of men, to make them timorous who otherwise might be most confident; and on the contrary, to give them most courage who have most cause to feare.

V. 6. Luz] See Gen.28.19.

V. 7. there an Altar, and called the place El-Bethel] That is, the God of Bethel; and Bethel signifieth the house of God. Of this see Annot. on Chap.28.vers. 19. The building of an Altar here at his returne was the performance of his vow there made, as he went to his Uncle Laban, Chap.28.vers.22.

V. 8. Rebekahs nurse] Sent with her when she was sent with Abrahams servant to be married to Isaac, Gen. 24. 59. Her name is here called Deborah: whether she had given sucke to Rebekah or no, is uncertaine; yet it seemeth she had a motherly affection towards her, and not unlike she was a kinde, and carefull overseer of Jacob in his minoritie. Object. But how came she into Jacobs family in his returne from Mesopotamia, who was left with Rebekah in the Land of Canaan? Answ. Rebekah might be now dead, and Jacob now returned into Canaan; and having lived eight yeares in it, though at some distance from his parents dwelling, it is probable he might fetch (or some one for him) Deborah to his family, to comfort and cherish her, as a woman of much prudence, and experience, (being now above or about 100. yeares of age) and that she might be an assistant in the government of his family, especially to keepe peace betwixt his emulous wives, and their handmaids; or she hearing of his returne with wives and children, and store of cattell, might come to see him of her own accord. Some of the Hebrewes say she was sent by Rebekah to Haran, to call home Jacob, and that in their returne she died in the way.

the oake of weeping] For the death of Deborah; though neither Jacob nor his family got by her life, yet they make great lamentation for her death. The affections of good people are more moved with respect to goodnesse, then to gaine.

V. 9. againe] God revealed himselfe in speciall manner to him sixe times before this. The first, Gen. 28. 13. The second, Gen. 31. 11. The third, Gen. 31. 10. which two apparitions though they be reported together, were about sixe yeares distant the one from the other. See Annot. upon those two verses. The fourth, Gen. 32. 1, 2. The fifth, Gen. 32. 24. &c. The sixth, Vers. 1. of this Chapter, and the seventh is that in this ninth verse.

V. 10. not any more Jacob] See Annot. on Chap.32.28.

V. 11. I am God Almightie] See Annot. on Chap.17.1.

multiply] (Chap.8.17. & 9.1. & 28.3. & 48.4.) Multiplication is a blessing often promised by God in favour to man; it is an ungratefull part in many to murmure at his blessing; a wicked part, to prevent it by abortion, a devillish part to destroy the increase, and to make prodigall wast of mankinde, as ambitious warriers doe, who make no more scruple of slaying of a multitude of men, then a reaper to cut down a field of corne.

Kings shall come] In the promises of God touching the seed of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, we are to understand a spirituall posteritie, as well as a carnall; so those are Abrahams children that are true beleevers as he was, Gal. 3. 7. And godly livers doing such works as he did, Joh.8.39. and these, as sonnes of Abraham, shall be received into happy rest, and repose in Abrahams bosome, Luk.16. 22. Taking the Prophesie in this as well as in the other sense we may conceive it fulfilled literally and spiritually; literally in David, in Solomon, in Rehoboam, &c. who lineally descended from the loynes of Jacob; and spiritually in those Kings of the Gentiles, who first became beleeving sonnes of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, and then nursing fathers of the Christian Church, Isa. 49. 23.

V. 12. to thee -- and to thy seed after thee] So it was said to Abraham, Gen. 17. 8. yet he was not possest of a foot of it, Act. 7. 5. viz. as a chiefe owner, but as a sojourner, or not as taking possession of Gods promise, for that must needs be made to Abrahams, Isaacs, and Jacobs posteritie, by warre upon the Canaanites, and victory over them by Gods assistance: yet may the Land be said to be given to Abraham, and Isaac, and Jacob, becaus it was given (to those that did possesse it) for their sakes; so they that fed the hungry, gave drinke to the thirsty, cloathed the naked, and visited the sicke and imprisoned; are said to do all this to our Saviour (whom they never saw) because they did it to others for his sake, Mat.25.40. And as in the intention of the giver, Abraham was he in whose name the originall grant was made (so that whosoever was not of the seed of Abraham could have no right unto it, no nor all the seed of Abraham, for Ismael was excluded, as Esau of the seed of Isaac) so in the acceptation of the receiver, Abraham, Isaac and Jacob tooke that whereof their posterity was possessed, as if they had injoyed it themselves. Or if by the land of Canaan we understand the Canaan above, (as by the seed of Abraham, the true beleever, see Annot. on vers. 11.) we may say that to him, and his spirituall seed is that good Land given; and therefore they that are possessed of it are said to rest in the bosome of Abraham, Luke 16. 22.

V. 13. God went up] As God is said to descend when he sheweth some signe of his especiall presence below, as Chap. 11. 5. Exod. 3. 8. Numb. 11. 17. So he may be said to ascend when he withdraweth it againe, and the apparition is ended. See Chap.17.22. & Judg.13.20.

V. 14. set up a pillar] He set up one in that place about thirtie yeares before; but that was but an extemporary pile of stones, made by him alone, which by this time haply was demolished, or at least profaned; and therefore now he set up a new pillar.

V. 15. Bethel] Of Bethel, see Annot. on Chap. 28.19.

V. 16. a little way to come] (2 King.5.19.) That is, lesse then a mile from Bethlehem, as some say that have seene it.

Ephrath] Ephrath is derived of the word Pharah signifying he hath made fruitfull, or (as some conjecture) from Ephrath the wife of Caleb, 1 Chron. 2. 19. and Bethlehem signifieth the house of bread; the Prophet Micah joynes both names together, Micah 5. 2. There was another Bethlehem in Galilee in the portion of the Tribe of Zebulun, for distinction from which, this is called Bethlehem of Judea, because it was in the portion of the Tribe of Judah; and in this Bethlehem was our Saviour borne, Matth. 2. 1. And he was (as some observe (as by way of fit correspondence betwixt the person and the place) the bread that came down from heaven, Joh.6.33.

V. 18. as her soule was in departing] The beginning of life is when the soule is united to the body upon the configuration of the parts fit for reception of it, and operation by it; and the end of it is when there is a parting of them by the soules departing from the body, which liveth while the soule is in it, 2 Sam. 1. 9. where the English hath my life, the Hebrew Naphshi, my soul, and dyeth when the soule departeth as here; and restitution to life is the returne of the soule unto that body from whence it was departed, 1 King.17.21,22.

for she dyed] Rachel called to her husband for children with such passionate importunitie, as if she should die of griefe, if she had them not; and now she hath her desire, and dies by that meanes. How fond are many in their affections, who think there is no contentment without satisfaction to them, when it may be their greatest affliction, to have them take effect? It is good to be so moderate in our wishes of all temporall comforts, as to crave them onely with condition of Gods good will and pleasure, and that with such indifferencie, as to be pleased without them, if he please not to bestow them.

Benjamin] Rachel gave unto her sonne a name of sorrow, Jacob liked not that because it would be too constant a motive of mourning in remembrance of the losse of his best beloved Rachel, therefore (though he permitted much to his wives in this kinde) he used his own authoritie for the change of that name, and choice of a better, which is, Benjamin; whereby burying the intimation of griefe, he would beare in minde a memento of love, and professe by that name, that Benjamin for his mothers sake should be as neere and deare unto him as his right hand. See Psal.80.17.

V. 19. buried in the way] It is not materiall where one dyeth, or where he is buryed; the body is not curious in what bed of dust it sleepeth; and the soule finds as well a way to heaven, or hell, from one place as another.

V. 20. pillar] Monuments and memorials of the dead are not unlawfull, but may be usefull to minde such as survive, of the vertues of the deceased, for their imitation, and of the hope of their happy resurrection to eternall life; But they must not be set up with too much pompe, nor out of superstition or immoderate affection, which sometimes produce each other; and it is not improbable that Idolatry had its beginning from memorials of the dead made for consolation of the living. See the booke of Wisdome, Chap.14. from vers. 12. to the 23. A cleare conviction of the Papists, who allow that Apocryphall booke the credit and authoritie of Canonicall Scripture.

unto this day] That is the day of Moses writing this Story, which continued many yeares after this, for there is mention made of Rachels sepulcher, 1 Sam. 10. 2. which could not so well be kept in memory, if the pillar remained not: the Papists take upon them to tell that this monument was made up of twelve stones in remembrance of Jacobs twelve sonnes, with a pillar like a pyramis set upon them all under the shadow of an oake; and this Adrich. delivereth upon the report of Bredenbachius who said he saw it: and others tell the like story upon the relation of pilgrims; So Adrich. Delph. Theatr. p. 19. in Tribe Benjam. & Salian. Annal. An. mund.2306. p.340. col.1. But it is like these narrations are either fained to foment superstitious pilgrimages, or that additionall structures were made of later times to revive and refresh the memory of Rachel, and of the deare love of Jacob towards her, both alive and dead.

V. 21. tower of Edar] That is, a thousand paces from Jerusalem, where the Angel appeared to the Shepherds and brought the glad tidings of the birth of our Saviour, Luk.2.8,&c.

V. 22. his fathers concubine] It was a great griefe to Jacob that Dinah was ravished, yet so much the lesse as she was more innocent, being, as it is like, abused by force; but this Act of Reuben and Bilhah was a sinne of greater guilt in them, becaus willing willing (it is like) on both sides, of greater griefe to him, and of greater shame to the whole family; yet it is set downe with the silence of Jacob, or Israel (though as a father to the one, and as an husband to the other, the wrong touched him in the neerest degree) and without censure of the writer: which may teach us to take notice of the faults of religious families, rather with silent sorrow, then with clamorous reproach, if such scandalous sinnes be committed among Christians, that Religion should not suffer for it; the Religion may be good, though some that professe it, may sometimes doe such wickednesse as is not to be named, 1 Cor. 5. 1. And this fact of Reuben teacheth that the Patriarchs were not chosen for their merits; but by Gods mercies, whose election, by their faults was not changed. After this incest of his sonne, Jacob abstained no doubt from Bilhah, as David did from his defiled concubines, 2 Sam. 16. 22.

Twelve] With Dinah the children of Jacob were thirteen, but women come not into the account of the Tribes; and without her the Tribes (taking the two sonnes of Joseph, Ephraim and Manasseh for severall Tribes) were thirteene; but usually they are reckoned but for twelve, because those two were not the sonnes of Jacob by immediate descent, as Joseph their father, and all his brethren were; and now the number of Jacobs sonnes is made up; for after the death of Rachel he had no more.

V. 26. borne — in Padan-Aram] Not all of them, for in this Chap. it is plain that Benjamin was born where his mother died, that is, hard by Bethlehem in the Land of Canaan, where Jacob had continued for the space of eight yeares: So that we must understand these words for the greater part of Jacobs children, and indeed for all but one; See Annot. on Chap. 15. 13. And for that there needed no particular exception to be made, since that is done already by relation of the story of Benjamins birth and Rachels death, in this Chapter; so that no Reader can be mistaken for want of an expresse exception of Benjamin in this verse.

V. Jacob came unto Isaac] That is, with his wives and children, family, and furniture, wherewith God had blessed him; for it is not probable that having lived many yeares in Canaan, and not very farre distant from him, but he visited him divers times at Hebron, before he finally removed himselfe from his former habitation.

V. 28. an hundred and fourescore yeares] A longer life then any of the fathers enjoyed after him; with which, Moses willing here to close up the story of Isaac by a figure called Prolepsis, or ancicipation, brings in his full age 180. yeares, with his death, and buriall, and after makes report of things concerning his posteritie unto the 41. Chapter, which fell out when Isaac was alive, for he lived twelve yeares after his grand-child Joseph was sold into Egypt.

V. 29. gathered to his people] See Annot. on Chap. 25. verse. 8.

CHAP. XXXVI.

Vers. 1. The generations] This genealogie declareth that Esau was blessed temporally, and that his fathers blessing, Chap. 27. 39. tooke place in temporall things. The ambiguities and seeming repugnancies in this genealogie may be briefly reconciled by these rules. First, some persons have many names, as Esau is called also Edom, in the first verse; Jacob also is called Israel, Gen. 32. 28. & 35. 21, 22. So one of Esaus wives the daughter of Ishmael is called Mahalath, Gen. 28. 9. and Bashemath, Gen. 36. 3. and Sarah is called Isca, Chap. 11. 29. And this not onely in proper names, as in the instances forementioned, but in names Nationall, as the same person is called sometimes an Hittite, Chap. 26. 34. sometimes an Hivite, vers. 20. of this Chapter; because the Hivites were the greater Nation, and comprehended also the Hittites; and sometimes an Horite, vers. 24. of this Chapter: and the rather because the one might in habitation be mingled with the other. Secondly, sometime the same name is given to severall persons, as there were two called Anah, two called Corah, three called Dishon, or Dishan, in this Chapter. Thirdly, the grand-father is called also a father, and the grand-child (whether Nephew or Neece) a sonne or a daughter unto him, 2 King. 8. 18. 26. Fourthly, some are called sonnes of others who were not their naturall issue, but adopted children; as Amalek, whose mother was Timnah, yet is he called the sonne of Adah, vers. 12. to the one he was a naturall sonne, to the other a sonne adopted. Fifthly, some men had the names of women given unto them, as Timnah, and Aholibamah, mentioned vers. 40. 41. were called by the names of the first mothers of their nation.

V. 5. And Aholibamah] The wives of Esau are not ranked in the order of their marriage (for the daughter of Ishmael was married to Esau after Aholibamah) it being fittest to name her first of whom he had least to say, and her last who gave occasion by her fruitfulnesse to say the more.

V. 6. went into the countrey] That is, to another Countrey then that of Canaan, where he had dwelt; and herein appeareth Gods providence which causeth the wicked to give place to the godly, Esau removes thence to Mount Seir, that Jacob might enjoy Canaan according to Gods promise.

from the face] This removall of Esau from Canaan, is taken to be after he had dwelt in Seir, and had come thence to solemnize his fathers funerall, Chap. 35. vers. 29. after which time Jacob and he being upon good termes, are thought to have dwelled together, untill their riches (increasing as Abrahams and Lots, Chap. 13. 6.) gave occasion of their parting; Or, it may be thus understood, that after Jacob was gone to Padan-Aram, or Mesopotamia, Esau after a time, being increased in estate, and finding his father, but especially his mother, so affectionate to his brother Jacob, that he had no hope of any joy of living there, when he returned, removed himselfe, with his wives, children, and estate (which he had gotten in Canaan) to dwell in mount Seir, vers. 8. a place which haply pleased him better for commodiousnesse of hunting, to which he was very much addicted, and where he might make himselfe more roome, then as a sojourner with his father in Canaan, could be allowed him.

V. 7. For their riches] Esau being commodiously seated, and increased in riches, resolved not to remaine where he was, conceiving his brothers estate and his would be too much for such a portion of Canaan as in the way of sojourning would be allotted to them; such thoughts as these he might have before Jacob returned, and therein might be confirmed when he saw his increase, and was reconciled unto him; and therein the affections, and intentions of Esau, (though he minded onely his own commoditie) conduced to the accomplishment of the Divine providence, which had designed Canaan for the inheritance of the posteritie of Jacob, not of him.

could not beare them] Not but that the Land of Canaan was both spatious and fruitfull enough to support, and sustain them; but they not possest of it as in their owne right; but sojourning in it, could not be supplied with scope, and compasse enough for all their cattell.

V. 9. father of] To all that descend from another in a right line he is a father, though a grand-father never so remote; and to such a one the descendents in what degree soever are children; so our Saviour Christ is called the sonne of David, the sonne of Abraham, Matth. 1. vers. 1.

V. 15. Dukes] Are leaders, or chiefe Governours, or Heads of some eminent families or kindred; who joyning together made an Aristocraticall forme of Government, that is, a Government of divers choyce and chiefe men, a governing among themselves in an equall tenour of authoritie, without any King ruling over them by any absolute power, though for order sake some one might have the preeminence, as the Duke of Venice hath; such a government the Edomites had at the first, after that Kings, from them they came back to Dukes againe, all being elective, and not by succession. If God dignifie them so much who are not of his houshold, how much will he honour and exalt those that are?

V. 20. which inhabited the land] That is, before Esau did there inhabit; whose posteritie by their sword made themselves roome in the Countrey, by expelling the old inhabitants thence, Deut 2. 12. So verifying Jacobs prediction, Gen. 27. 40. to their gaine, and glory in the world; but withall it is to be noted, that Esau had married Aholibamah neece to Zibeon the third sonne of Seir, vers. 2. & 20. of this Chapter, yet for all this affinitie, Esaus posteritie expelled their kinsmen by marriage out of their possession: There is no trust then in the alliances of wicked men; though they make marriages with one another, they will violate all lawes of affinitie and friendship for their owne advantage. See Gen. 31. v. 23, 24, 29.

V. 24. that found the mules] The word Jemim in the Heb. (as Schindler observeth, and the best Interpreters agree with him) is here, and no where else found in the whole Scripture, which makes the signification of it the more uncertaine; the Vulgar Latine turnes it Duthes, or, hot waters: the most and best Divines take it for Mules, and that his finding them out was by an experiment of his owne, causing a mixture of an asse and a mare, whence mules are ingendred, who can ingender nothing; this did Anah, who not contented with those kinds of beasts which God had created, found out the monstrous generation of mules, betweene the asse and the mare, which as an enormitie against nature, the Lord forbiddeth, not only in that, but in any other kind, Levit. 19. 19.

V. 31. before there reigned any king] The posteritie of Esau was advanced sooner to royall dignitie then the posteritie of Jacob, which in the Egyptian servitude were under a rod of Iron, while Esaus off-spring swaid a golden Scepter. The wicked rise up suddenly to honour, and perish as quickly; but the inheritance of the children of God continueth for ever, Psal. 102. 28. But how could Moses write this since the Israelites had no Kings in his time; this he might write by the Spirit of Prophecie, for he prophecieth of the peoples desire of a King, and gives rules both concerning his choice, and his carriage, Deut. 17. 14,15.

V. 33. Jobab] Many of the Ancients hold this to be that Job of whose patience there is an history, but the words differ much in the Hebrew writing, for this Jobab beginneth with Jod, but Job of Whom the Book is written beginneth with Aleph, and is called Job, or Jiob, never Jobab in the Hebrew Text.

Bozra] A famous Citie of Idumea not farre distant from the Citie Teman. See Amos 1.12. which is brought in allegorically in the Prophecie of Christ by the Prophet Isaiah, Chap. 63. vers. 1.

V. 34. the land of Temani] Heb. of the Temanite. The whole South Countrey of Idumea, so called from the Citie Teman the Metropolis of Idumea, and the Princes Palace, situated on Mount Seir; which Citie might be so named from Teman the eldest sonne of Eliphaz, vers.11.15. and hence it is probable that Eliphaz one of Jobs visitants was called a Temanite, Job 2. vers. 11.

V. 37. Rehoboth] Which is a Citie situate by the River Euphrates, built by Nimrod, Gen.10.11. Some say this is another Rehoboth from that noted in the place forecited, and that it is distinguished from it by the mention of the River; but the matter is somewhat uncertaine, and of no great weight.

V. 40. the names of the Dukes] From Kings they come down to Dukes againe, God having a power to advance, and depose Principalities; to set up, and pull downe, and to change not onely the Governours, but the manner of government as he pleaseth; for whose succession two hundred years or thereabouts (the length of Edoms regiment limited with Moses death, as by some it is) will be found too little; but after the government of Dukes, Moses reckons eight Kings, and after them eleven Dukes again: See 1 Chron. 1.51. for the King of Edom (it may be) he was degraded to a Dukedome, because of his hard hearted usage of his brother Israel returning out of Egypt, Num. 20. 14. 20. To which the Answer may be, that though the Kings succeeded one another, the eleven Dukes might be contemporaries all at once; or if they be accounted in succession, Moses by the Spirit of Prophecie, as well foretels their names, and dignities which did succeed when he was dead; as reports precedent matters for many hundred yeares before his birth. To this may be added a third answer (which is yet not to be preferred before the former) viz. that this might be inserted by some such authour as made up the story of the book of Deuteronomie from the fifth verse to the end of the Chapter.

V. 43. father of the Edomites] Or, of Edom, that is, of that race or off-spring, which hath its Originall from Esaus loines: for all the descendents beare the name of their principall progenitor, though many degrees distant from him; because that virtually they were contained in him, else they could not have been derived from him; so the Jews many hundred years after Jacobs decease, are called Israel, or the children of Israel; whereby we are directed from the condition of the one, to look both forward and backward, to the condition of the other, and to observe how Gods promises, or threats given out with reference to their mutuall relations, are made good upon them in succeeding ages: and withall the name of Edom (being given Esau by occasion of his parting with his birthright for a messe of red pottage, for which he is condemned as a profane person, and thrice repeated in this Chapter as an addition to the name of Esau) is to be taken as a brand of perpetuall reproch upon him; as Jeroboam the sonne of Nebat with this addition, which made Israel to sinne, 1 King.16.26. & Chap 22. vers.25. 2 King.3.3. and elsewhere.

V.1,8,19.

CHAP. XXXVII.

Vers.1. IN the land] The land named was Canaan, the place in particular not named was Hebron.

V. 2. generations] (Chap.5.1. & 36.1.) That is, the story of such things as came to him, and his family with reference unto the generation, or catalogue of his Issue set down before, Chap.35. with the interposition of the generations of Esau, Chap.36. to shew by way of comparison the different condition of Gods Church, and children, and of the families of the wicked.

seventeene yeares old] Some Popish Translators say, sixteene yeares old, a manifest swerving from the Hebrew Text, and with it fron the Greek Seventy; from which some eminent Papists pretend a secret instinct of the Spirit in the Authour of that Translatien, which is a glosse more corrupt then their Text; for if Joseph were seventeen, he was sixteen in truth of story though not of interpretation; but it can be no way true that Gods Spirit would correct in a Translation that which it had dictated in the Originall.

with the sonnes of Bilhah, and] The sonnes of the handmaids, (it seemeth) were sorted together, and with them Joseph, because his mother Rachel was now dead, and he envyed perhaps by Leah, for his mothers sake; and by her sonnes, because he was the darling of his father; therefore Jacob for preservation of peace, divided (as it is probable) both his women, children, and cattell into two companies; in the one was Leah, her sixe children, and a great part of his flock with them; in the other, the handmaids, their children, and Joseph with them; where Jacob might expect more safetie, because there lesse envie would follow the love of his father, or the preeminence which that might produce on Josephs behalfe.

his fathers wives] Not properly so called, for Bilhah, Chap. 35. vers.22. is called a concubine; yet they above others might be called wives, because their sonnes shared in the inheritance in the Land of Canaan with the sonnes of Rachel and Leah who were wives in a proper sense. See the difference betwixt a wife and a concubine, in Annot. on Chap.22.vers.24.

their evill report] Which is thought to be some injurious usage or carriage towards Joseph; yet it may be besides that the sonnes of Bilhah and Zilpah mis-behaved themselves, and raised an ill report upon the family of Jacob, by their criminall conversation, which if it were such as some have imagined, was most abominable. Joseph observing it with dislike, acquaints his father with it, that by him they may be reclaimed from their evill courses; wherein he doth the office of a good sonne, and brother, to his father, and brethren; and acquitteth his own soule from all guilt that might have been contracted by his silence.

V. 3. more then all] That is, more then any of them all.

the sonne of his old age] (Gen. 44. 20.) He was 91. yeares old at the birth of Joseph; now that parents love their young children better then the elder, there may be many reasons; as First, to be parents in old age argueth the continuance of Gods blessing, and of their good and strong constitution, when it was most like to faile for ever. Secondly, they more value such an issue, because they expect no more of that kinde, and that makes it more deare because more rare. Object. But Benjamin was younger. Sol. First, this is to be understood in respect of his elder brethren; and for Benjamin, he was not yet come to any proofe to gaine so much of his fathers affection. Thirdly, in the youngest they looke that the memory should hold out longest, and naturall affection gaineth strength in its course, so that the further it goeth, the stronger it groweth. Fourthly, the young children are commonly more conversant with old men, since they keepe home, whereas the bigger children are much abroad. Fifthly, their innocency breeds acceptation without exception, whereas the elder children commit faults, it may be crimes, (as Reuben did, Gen. 35. 22.) to grieve the hearts of their parents, and shorten their lives. Sixthly, Old fathers decline towards the infirmitie of young children, (as the Proverbe hath it, once a man, and twice a child) and are commonly more tender, and kinde to those who are by their tenderneese more apt to be exposed to injuries by others. Object. But Benjamin he was younger then Joseph, and so was he also son of Jacobs elder age. Answ. True, there was somewhat there besides the reasons here alleadged which made Joseph so beloved of Jacob; as that he was the long desired issue of his beloved mother Rachel, and her first borne, that tooke away the great griefe of her former barrenneese, and left no matter of mis-hap behind to afflict the heart of the father, as the birth of Benjamin, with the death of his mother had done, and he was beautifull like her; and certainly, there appeared in young Joseph the presages of very vertuous acts, and employments of great importance.

a coat of many colours] (2 Sam. 13. 18.) Or, pieces; And it might be both, wherein both pieces and colours were so mingled, as might make most for delight and decencie in the eye: the Greek word Poikilon, used by the Lxx. and the other Greek word Polymita, by the Latines, sound both to the same sense, the one signifieth varied, the other varied in particular by pieces of severall colours. This coat is here mentioned both as an Argument of Jacobs love to Joseph, and as an occasion of his brothers hate, and a colour and cover for their bloody plot from the eyes of their father. Some curiously inquire concerning the matter of Josephs coat, whether it were silke, or of divers kinds of threads, (which afterward was forbidden by the Law to be made of linen and woollen, Levit.19. 19.) and concerning the making of it, whether it were long, or with sleeves or no; but as there is no need of such nicetie, so can there be no good satisfaction given unto it. It is of more use to note that as Jacob loved him better, so he shewed his love unto him by such outward signes, as set him out unto his brethren as an object of envie: it had been better Jacob had loved him more, and shewed it lesse; it is a part of prudence in parents, so to governe their affections, or themselves in the expression of them, that they give no cause of grudge, or malignant emulation among their children, Eph.6.4.

V. 4. hated him] Many things met together to make Joseph maligned maligned of his brethren, as his fathers favour, which in his gay coate was an eye-sore to their envious lookes; his complaint of his brethren; and after this, his dream raised their hatred to a great height, vers. 5,8, &c.

could not speake peaceably] Wherein appeares the power of humane corruption, which is too stubborne to be held in by any bond, either of Religion, or nature; those that are very bad cannot so much overrule their naughty hearts, as to permit a good word to come out of their lips, Matth. 12.23. an evidence against the opinion of the power of free-will in matter of moralitie.

V. 5. dreamed] Of Dreames, see Annot. on Chap. 20.3. & on Chap. 31. vers. 24.

V. 7. Obeisance to my sheafe] This was but a dreame, the dreame of a child, but in the dreame was a mystery; and the meaning of it was that Josephs brethren should bow down to him, as their sheaves seemed to doe to his sheafe; if this had beene acted in the field it would have beene matter of amazement to them all; but then the providence of God in ordering the various affections, passions, and passages of his brethren towards him had not beene so manifest, nor his advancement so strange, and above their expectation; as when the presage was but a dreame, and that but Josephs owne dreame, related of and by himselfe.

V. 9. Behold, the Sunne and Moone] See Annot. on vers. 10.

did obeisance] It was twice revealed to him, how he should be honoured, but he hath no revelation how he should be humbled; for God meant to bring this about by waies unknowne both to Joseph, his father, and brethren; when God reveales himselfe to any, he doth it with stint and limitation; the light he giveth unto them being like that of a dark-lanterne, which may be shut, and opened by severall acts of illumination; so that neither the Prophets, nor Apostles knew any more of Gods secret counsel, then he was pleased by particular informations to impart unto them; for this purpose compare 2 King. 5. 26. with 2 King. 4. 27. And Act. 5. 3. with Act. 10. 17. 21.

V. 10. his father rebuked him] Partly in ignorance whence the dreame came, and how it was to be accomplished; and partly in wisdome, and good will to Joseph, whom he would not have by this meanes become more hated of his brethren.

shall I and thy mother, &c.] Jacob takes himselfe to be meant by the Sunne, his wife by the Moone, and his sonnes by the Starres, according to the promise made to his grandfather Abraham, Gen. 22. 27. wherein he takes notice of his owne preeminence above his wife in the comparison; But though Josephs brethren did most humble homage unto him, Gen. 42. 6. did his father doe so too? if he did, his mother could not, for she died before in travaile with Benjamin. Answ. First, for his father; though that be not expressly written of him, yet before he was made knowne unto him as his sonne, he had him in the estimation and honour of a Viceroy, or Deputie of a great King, and therefore did Josephs brethren call their father his servant, and with that word in their mouthes bowed their heads and made obeisance, Gen. 43. 28. And when Jacob came into Egypt, it is not to be doubted but he gave him respect according to the dignitie of his place; and if Rachel were dead at this time, (which some denie) the words of Joseph might as to her seeme to sound like an idle dreame: Or, the mother of the familie, who was unto Jacob as the Moone to the Sunne, might, when she came with Jacob her husband, doe homage unto him, albeit it be not expressed.

V. 11. observed the saying] (Luk. 2. 19.) He thought there was somewhat extraordinary in it, and though he knew not what it was, he set his mind to observe it.

V. 13. I will send] This was a good while after his brethren had expressed their envy against him, and by this time he hoped it was appeased.

V. 14. whether it be well] Heb. peace. Peace is a compendium of all prosperitie, even the prosperitie of Warre is called Peace, 2 Sam. 11. 7. Text and Margine; as on the contrarie Warre is the Master of all miseries. See Annot. on Chap. 29. vers. 6.

to Shechem] Which was from Hebron where his Father was, (as some compute the distance) sixtie English miles, (as others) eighteene leagues, which wants not much of that measure; those that were rich in cattell, to have them well pastured were faine to keepe them many times at great distance; when Laban by Gods blessing upon Jacobs faithfull service, was enriched, his flocks were sometimes fed at the distance of three dayes journey, Gen. 30. 36. Quest. But how durst Jacob trust his children, and his cattell in that place where his sonnes had committed such cruell revenge upon the Shechemites? and how durst he adventure his darling Joseph upon such a journey alone? Answ. For the first, though his sonnes had gotten them a title to Shechem by the sword, God gave Jacob a peaceable possession of it by an admirable over-awing of the people in those parts, for the terrour of God fell upon the Cities round about, Gen. 35. 5. and by that, or Gods protection otherwise, he hoped his Joseph would be safe, though sent alone, as himselfe had beene, when he travelled a single wayfaring man a farre longer journey, Gen. Chap. 28.

V. 17. Dothan] Dothan (as some write) is as farre distant from Shechem, as Shechem from Hebron; others reckon them to be about eight miles asunder, but if it were no more, yet added to the former journey, it was a great way, and Josephs readinesse to take the paines to doe more then his father did command him, following to the full rather what he meant, then what he bad him doe, is a commendable example of child-like obedience to his father, and might have beene an occasion of great benevolence from his brethren, if they had not beene prepapared with the prejudice of precedent envy, and malice, to requite his good with their evill. In this place (yet not a Citie) was afterwards a Citie built called by that name, 2 King. 6. 13.

V. 18. conspired] The Holy Ghost covereth not mens faults, as the vaine Writers which make vice vertue.

to slay him] To lay him in a dead sleepe, so that he should never dreame againe; In this was Joseph a Type of Christ conspired against by those, whom he came to visit, Luk. 20. vers. 14.

V. 19. this dreamer] Heb. master of dreames. See Annot. on Chap. 14. vers. 13. They give him this nickname in scorne, as the manner of ill minded men is to set termes of reproach upon the Religious; so Christ was called a Galilean in derision by Julian; the Apostle Paul a Babler by profane Philosophers, Act. 17. 18. This age abounds with such abusive appellations cast upon the best Christians, by such as are of an hereticall Religion, or of no Religion at all; the practice of this kind of contumelie is ancient, and the patience under it as ancient, which may make us both to looke for it, and make light of it.

V. 20. pit] The Hebrew word Bor, signifieth sometimes a cisterne, or any receptacle of water which hath no spring to feed it, and so is sometimes dry; the Hebrew Scholiast makes the difference betwixt Beer and Bor, the former, saith he, signifieth a Pit, or Well onely digged; the other the same when it is built up about with stones or other materials.

V. 20. we will say some evill beast] To unnaturall crueltie, they purpose to adde an act of inhumanitie, to kill him, for whose safetie they should hazard their own lives; and being killed, not to vouchsafe him a buriall; and to both these, a probable lye to cover the matter, they will impute their bloody fact to wild beasts; a lye like enough to be beleeved by that we read, 1 King. 13. & 2 King. 2. 24. they would doe a brutish act, but would not own it; How much better is it to be reputed a murderer, and to be none, as Paul was, Act. 28. 4. then to be one indeed, and lay the blame upon another, whether man, or beast, as these would doe?

V. 22. to deliver him] Reuben his halfe brother, the eldest sonne of Jacob by Leah, perswades them not to slay him, but to cast him into some dry pit; whence his meaning was to fetch him out, and to returne him safe unto his father; he made no scruple to pollute his fathers bed with incest, Gen. 35. 22. yet he makes a conscience of being defiled with his brothers blood: and it may be he is the more desirous to redeeme the guilt of his lust with a gratefull office to his father, and to regaine his love. How corrupt is this Church in the Patriarch Jacobs family, when most of his sonnes are tainted with the hainous sinnes of incest, or murder in intent, and indeavour, though not in deed? for they were innocent in fact, but against their wils.

V. 24. into a pit] Their hypocrisie appeared in this, that they feared man more then God; and thought it was not murder, if they shed not his blood, or cared not though it were, while they had an excuse to cover their fault.

V. 25. sate down] Here is not a word how Joseph tooke the matter at his brethrens hands, nor what he said to save himselfe; yet it is plaine by the confession of his brethren among themselves (when they saw themselves entangled by their own fault) that he besought them in the anguish of his soule, to spare him; but they would not heare, Chap. 42. 21. whence we may be directed to supply the sense of a doubtfull place with such additions as in probabilitie of reason are sutable to it.

to eat] They refreshed themselves, or it may be feasted, because now they were freed from their dreaming brother; their consciences were asleepe, as Jonah was in the side of the ship, Jonah 1. 5. so they make much of themselves, and little regard the afflictions of Joseph, Amos 6. 6.

to eat bread] An usuall phrase in Scripture for the sustenance of man, which is put many times for a full meale with varietie of meats, Exod. 18. 12.

Gilead] Which was the way from Arabia to Dothan, and Dothan the way thence into Egypt.

V. 26. what profit] It would be a strong bridle of restraint from sinne, if we would but pose our selves with the question of profit, What shallwe get to gaine the good will of men, and lose the love of God? what ease will it be to our minds to sacrifice innocent blood to our wrath, and when that is allayed, to raise a tempest of anguish, and feare, in our own consciences?

and conceale his blood] Conceale it from men, when it will cry to God for vengeance against us, Gen.4.10. Job 16.18.

V. 27. sell him] Men, especially captives taken in warre, were in many countreys sold upon a price, as cattell were, and therefore the servant is called the masters money, Exod. 21. 21. and because he was his money, if he corrected him so cruelly that he dyed within a day or two after, his master was not to be punished for it. See the place forecited. In after-times such as were taken in warre, and might in warre have been killed, remained in the power of their Saviours (for so are men sometimes called, 2 King.13.5. Nehem.9.27.) for their lives, and for all hard usages on this side death; but against this tyranny, especially among Christians, there have been many both Ecclesiasticall, and secular prohibitions, as against a practice both irreligious, and inhumane. NB.

V. 28. Ishmaelites] It seemes uncertaine whether Joseph were sold to the Ishmaelites, or Midianites, for Vers.25.27. and in this verse, & Chap. 39. 1. the Ishmaelites are named for that purpose, and in this verse also, and vers. 36. the Midianites: the like change or confusion of the names of the Ishmaelites, and Midianites may be observed, Judg. 8. vers. 24. 26. 28. and the reason may be, because though they were a distinct people in their Originall, (for the Ishmaelites came of Ishmael, the sonne of Abraham by Hagar, Chap. 15. 6. The Midianites of Midian his sonne also, but by Keturah, Chap.25.vers.2.) yet they were a mixed people for a good part of them in their habitations (the Midianites living in the countrey of the Ishmaelites, and exercising the trade of Merchandise among them) and therefore the Chaldeans call them both together, Arabians (that is) a mixed people; coming of the Hebrew root Ghnarab, which signifieth to be mixed; and for the particular of selling of Joseph, we may conceive that the Ishmaelites bought him, and such Merchants as were (though by their dwelling and commerce mingled with the posteritie of Ishmael) by descent sprung from Midian the sonne of Keturah; and that here Ishmaelites and Midianites must be two names of the same persons is plaine by the comparison of this verse with the last of this Chapter, where it is said, the Midianites sold him to Potiphar, and in the first verse of 39. Chapter, it is said, that Potiphar bought him of the hand of the Ishmaelites, to which agreeth that which is said in this place.

twentie pieces of silver] In this againe was Joseph a type of Christ, Joseph is sold by those of the twelve, who should have been more affectionate and faithfull to him then any other; so Christ was sold by one of the twelve chosen for especiall service, and fidelitie; and as Joseph was passed over from hand to hand, from his brethren to the Ishmaelites, from them to Potiphar, so was Christ delivered over from hand to hand, Luk.23.7. Joseph was sold for twentie pieces of silver, & Christ but for ten more; and though there were no comparison betwixt the worth of the wares and the price; for Christ was infinitely more excellent then Joseph, (though of a meere man he was of great worth, and renowne) yet they that bought Joseph had the better bargaine, for they were preserved by their purchase, but they (at least some of them,) that bought Christ, bought a stumbling stone, or rocke of ruine to themselves; to whom may be applyed that speech of his; Whosoever shall fall on this stone shall be broken, but on whom soever it shall fall it will grind him to powder, Matth. 21. 44. and though Joseph were sold (in the intent of those that sold him) to save his life, and in the purpose of Gods providence to be a meanes to save others from famishing to death; and Christ were bought with a mind to murder him, yet he saved many more by his death (which was the ayme of the Divine decree for mans redemption) then Joseph by his life; and in this respect Gods providence might set the sale of the antitype Christ upon an higher price, then that of Joseph his type, or figure.

V. 29. and he rent his cloathes] Reuben having carefull thoughts to deliver Joseph out of danger, went some way about (to shun the suspition of his brethren) that he might take him out of the pit; before he came thither, sale and delivery was made of Joseph to the Ishmaelites; whereupon he returned with much anguish of heart, and extreamitie of passion, rent his cloathes, and often made the expression of a troubled spirit, and a signe and testimony of heartie sorrow: which manner was taken up, no doubt, at first by extreamitie of passion, without any regard to the decency of whole apparell, or damage by tearing them; and afterwards from the example of some eminent persons drawne into common practice; for so it seemes to be, Numb.14.6. 2 Sam.1.2. & Chap.13.19. 1 Kings 21.27.2 King. 6.30. & 19. 1. Ezra 9. 3. Job 1. 20. & 2.12. Esther 4. 1. Joel 2. 13. and from practice it was sometimes put into precept, as 2 Sam. 3. 31.

V. 30. The child is not] He cals him a child though seventeene yeeres of age, because himselfe was eldest of all, and Joseph the youngest but one: See Annot. on Chap.22. vers 5. and he saith, he is not, that is, not there, viz. in the Pit, or not at all; for that is the speech used for one that is dead, or so reputed, Gen.42.13.36. Jer.31.15. Matth.2.18. Psal.39. vlt.

and I, whither shall I goe?] He thought some mischiefe had befallen him, because he could not find him, and feared his father would most require account of him at his hands, because he was the eldest; and that he would take it the worse from him, as being prepared for a misconceit by reason of the offence at his former evill act with Bilhah his Concubine, Chap. 35. 22. thence is he in great perplexitie, as not knowing what to doe, or whither to goe.

V. 32. and they brought it] In the beginning of this verse it is said, the brethren of Joseph sent his coat, and presently after, they brought it; in the word sent, there is to be understood messengers, and those messengers are they that brought it.

V. 33. an evill beast hath devoured him] The bloody coat makes Jacob take the matter just as the conspirators had plotted it; but thereby both are deceived; they, who thought their bloudy hypocrisie was sufficiently covered with Josephs coat; and he, who thought his Joseph was unrecoverably lost.

V. 34. rent his clothes] See Annot. on vers.29.

put on sackcloth] This is here first mentioned; a ceremonie of sorrow (among the Eastern people) and used among the Religious also before the giving of the Ceremoniall Law; and was afterwards taken into ordinary practice (as the renting of the clothes before mentioned.) See 2 Sam.3.31. 1 King. 20.31. & 21.27. 2 King.19.1. Neh.9.1. Esth 4.2. Psal.30.11. & 35. 13. Lam.2.10. Joel 1.13. Jonah 3.5. Matth.11.21.

V. 34. and mourned for his sonne] There was more cause to mourne for the wickednesse of his sonnes, that were alive; if he had knowne what they had done, then for Joseph if he had beene dead; for if wild beasts had devoured his body, that is to the soule but as a garment to it; but with this difference, that though the garment may be cut, or pierced, or torne with the body; or the body may be wounded, the garment kept whole; yet the soule can never be harmed by any outward violence; for the wounds of the body are but out-lets of the soule of the just, to a state of libertie and safetie; so that they, that sorrow overmuch for the death of their holy friends, are as Jacob washing the bloudy coat of his sonne with his teares, when his body was rescued out of deadly danger.

V. 35. And all his sonnes] They that had their hearts and hands deepest in the plot that did so afflict their father, pretend a sympathie of sorrow with him, and a desire to minister comfort unto him; thus they increase their owne sin by hypocrisie, while they make offer of lessening his sorrow by compassion.

and all his daughters] That is, Dinah with his sonnes wives, for he had no daughters of his owne but Dinah; nor were his sonnes of age to have children (who being Jacobs grandchildren might be called his daughters, see Chap.31. vers. 43.) to comfort him; for his eldest sonne being not above twenty five yeares old, it was not like that any child of his, or any of the rest were now of sufficient age to be his comforters.

I will goe downe] Jacob was so passionately affected with the conceit of his sonnes untimely death, that by sorrow he is like to hasten his owne; and carried with the tyde of his distemper beyond himselfe, he both refuseth all comfort, and resolveth to carry his griefe to his grave. He was perhaps too fond in his love to Joseph, and now he smarts for it, as David did for doting upon Absolom: 2 Sam.18.v.33 The excesse of one affection (the case being changed) turneth to the excesse of another; in both, the best may offend, and therefore all must watch more carefully over their hearts, that their passions grow not too wild to be governed with grace, and reason.

grave] The word Sheol here used and Englished the grave, signifieth generally the state of the dead, without any reference to paine, or anguish, as Psal.30.3. Isa.38.18,19. and in many other places, especially in this place where Jacob, when he conceived that Joseph was killed, rent his clothes and refused comfort, saying, I will goe downe into the grave unto my sonne mourning; for by the grave he could not mean a place digged below in the earth; for he thought he was devoured and torn in pieces, by some evill beast, vers. 33. much lesse that he was gone to hell, the place of the damned, because he was a good child, and had evident signes of the favour of God towards him; and particularly, it is taken for a low place in the earth, and that either shallower, as the grave, Prov. 30. 16. or deeper, as that devouring gulfe which swallowed Core, and his company, Numb. 16. 33. or for the place and state of the damned, where they are shut up to suffer torment without mitigation or end. The Popish Divines in their annotations upon this place, find fault with our Translation for the word grave, and would faine have it be beleeved, that because Jacob thought his sonne went not into the grave, and meant not himselfe to goe to hell, that Limbus is the place meant by Sheol, a place bordering upon hell, where they must meet, and where there is no paine; and some of them deny the word Sheol to be any where in Scripture taken for the grave; but others of them confesse it is frequently so taken. We may take the word Sheol then here for the grave, or state of the dead, out of commerce with the living; and if the Papists will have the word Sheol to signifie either hell, or some state of the dead next above it, and neere unto it, as Limbus Patrum, or Purgatorie; what will they say of the sheep and oxen and tents which in the sixteenth of Numbers, vers. 33. went downe in the pit? in the Originall the word is Sheol; sure sheep and oxen, &c. went not to Hell, or Limbus.

an officer] The word in the Originall is an Eunuch, that is, a gelled man, Isa. 56. vers. 3,4. but it is not like that Potiphar was so, for he had a wife, Gen. 39.9. And some say a daughter also married to Joseph, but that is an errour: See Annot. on Chap. 41. vers. 45. And because Eunuches were Chamberlaines to the Kings women, Esth.2.3. and consequently Courtiers, and those Courtiers employed sometimes in other offices, the name Eunuch came to be a name of Court honour, or office, and so to be given to some who were perfect men and not gelded, as Eunuches were; such a one might Potiphar be in this place.

captaine of the guard] According to the Hebrew (as the Marginall reading hath it) it is one who is chiefe of the slaughtermen; and the word put for a slaughter-man, is sometimes taken for a cook, as 1 Sam.9.23. because the same man many times killed the meat he dressed, and in some places the Butchers office and the Cooks met in one, the slaughter-house being a neere neighbour to the kitchin; in this place it may be a Captain of the guard, or fence; the Greeke word Magirenein, which properly is to play the Cooke, is used for to kill, and from killing of beasts and fowles, &c. it is made a Military word and put for killing of men: in this place the words rendred captaine of the guard, may be a Provost Marshall, or, chiefe Marshall, so it is in the Marg. variat. in 2 King.25.8. or such a one as was of chief Authority over the custodie of malefactors, and was to see execution done upon them, when they were to be put to death, as a Sheriffe with us. He was fitly disposed of by the Divine providence, that of a sonne being made a slave by his brethren, he might by his Mistresses love, and hate (for he had both by turnes,) and by his Masters jealousie and authoritie be made a prisoner, and of a prisoner a Ruler; that the goodnesse of God might appeare more powerfull then the wickednesse of men; (whereof in Josephs case there is cleare evidence, for his honour was manyfold more then his humbling, for he was in a contemptible condition but thirteene yeares, and fourescore yeares in an honourable estate) and that his children might have faith for the fulfilling of his prophecies, and promises, not onely without the helpes of humane meanes, but against them.

CHAP. XXXVIII.

Vers.1. AT that time] Part of the story in this Chapter fell out after the selling of Joseph into Egypt, but that part concerning Judahs marriage was before; Some take the words [at that time] in respect of his taking of a wife, for the time betwixt Josephs selling into Egypt, and Jacobs sending for to sojourne there; (which was twenty three yeares (or as some reckon twentie two) as may be gathered by comparison of Chap.37.2. & 41.46.) and at the beginning of that account they conceive that Judah married the daughter of Shuah the Canaanite; for otherwise the story of Joseph may seeme abruptly to be left off, and that of Judah to be unseasonably brought in: and secondly, they say that at that time when Joseph was sold into Egypt, Judah dwelt in the presence of his brethren; and therefore it is likely that after this, he made his choice of a Canaanitish consort: but neither of these reasons are convincing, for Judahs story might be brought in in this place because of the dignitie of his Tribe by the descent of Christ from him, and Thamar, according to that which is here reported of them; and because the most of these matters concerning him and his sons, had their course in the time prefixed; and for that which is said of Judahs dwelling in the presence of his brethren, it will not inferre such a strict residence at home, but that he might make a visit to a friend else-where, and there might see, and like, and steale an unmeet match with the daughter of a Canaanite. Therefore this notwithstanding, the story of Judah may have its entrance before the selling of Joseph, and yet might be brought in here because the greater part of it followed after; and so at that time must be understood in some larger latitude, and be referred to the time of Jacobs continuance in Canaan, after his departure out of Mesopotamia; as it is set downe, Chap.37. vers.1. and accounting the time by the story of Joseph being seventeene yeares old when he was sold, and Judah being about twenty one yeares of age, seven yeares before that, that is, at fourteene yeares old he married, and in the three yeares next ensuing had three sonnes successively one after another, viz. Er, Onan, and Shelah; when Er his eldest sonne was about foureteene yeares of age he married him to Thamar, and Er for his wickednesse being smitten dead by God, he gives Thamar to his second sonne Onan to raise up seed unto his eldest brother, who doing as wickedly, God doth as justly by him, and so he cutteth off him also; she then expecting the third sonne, for the same reason that she had the second, and disappointed of her desire; in the disguise of an Harlot is used like an harlot by her father in law Judah, (who was now about thirtie yeares of age) by him she was mother of twinnes Pharez, and Zarah; Pharez being married at foureteene yeares old (as Er his elder brother, and father were) begat Hezron the same yeare, and the yeare after he begat Hamul, that yeare went Jacob into Egypt, and carried those two little ones with him in the fourtieth yeare of Josephs age; so that for the most of the story of this Chapter, we may take the words at that time, or, in that time, for the time after the selling of Joseph into Egypt, onely Judahs marriage (as the ground of the ensuing passages) is related here, though it fell out before, because it was fit to mention things so coherent, together; all the story besides happened after the selling of Joseph into Egypt, and so the whole is most fitly set downe as one continued story in this place. The marriage of Judah, Er, and Pharez, at foureteene yeares old, especially Judah his begetting of Er, and Pharez his begetting of Hezron and Hamul about that age (and so it must be by computation of time, else they could not have beene borne to be brought with Jacob into Egypt, as they were, Gen. 46.12.) may seeme somewhat strange; and so are many things in Scripture, yea in the narration of this Chapter; yet it is not improbable, because in very many of that age there is a naturall abilitie for that purpose, and there wants not instances of some who were fathers sooner then at foureteene, as Ahaz was when he begat Hezekiah which is plaine by comparison of 2 Kin. 16. 2. & 2 King. 18. 2. & 17.1. and Doctor Rivet in his exercitation on this place out of Scaliger, relates a story of one, who was under twelve yeares of age when he begat a child; but no doubt but there are divers instances of such early fruitfulnesse, as at fourteene; and might be more, if men were usually married at that age.

Judah went] Judah is singled out in this story from the rest of his brethren, and brought in with Thamar, because of these two (though wickedly made one) the holy Child Jesus was to be descended, according to his pedegree, Matth.1.

Adullamite] That is, one of the Citie of Adullam, called also Odollam, which in the division of Canaan fell to the Tribe of Judah: See Josh. 12. 15. & Chap.15.35. situate in a lower part of the Countrey, where his father dwelt, and therefore he is said to goe downe thither; David made an escape from Achish King of Gath, and betooke him to a Cave there, 1 Sam.22. vers. 1.

V. 2. saw there a daughter of a certaine Canaanite] He was but a raw youth about fourteene yeares old, and he tooke a wife by sense, not by reason, or religion; for both would have directed him to have made his choyce by his fathers advice, who would never have consented to match an Israelite with a Canaanite; such mixed marriages of the blessed and accursed seed being forbidden, first by his grandfather, Gen.24.3. and after by his father, Gen.28.1.

whose name was Shuah] This was not the name of Judahs wife, but of her father, as the Hebrew Text importeth by the Gender, and as it plainly appeareth, vers. 12.

V. 3. and he called his name] Of these three sonnes the first had his name given by his father, the two latter by their mother; the one it is like by licence, the other by the absence of her husband; for the authoritie of giving names, is principally the mans; and the time of imposition was most anciently at the birth, afterwards at the time of circumcision of the child, Chap. 21.3,4. & Luk.2.21.

V. 5. he was at Chezib] That is, Judah was at Chezib, another Citie of Canaan, (not farre from Adullam) which some conceive to be the same which is called Achzib, Josh.15.44.

V. 6. Judah tooke a wife for] Now Judah hath a sonne, he useth his owne right to dispose of him in marriage, and thereby sheweth the wrong he did unto his father, in marrying himselfe without his consent; children many times use their parents so, as they would not be used themselves by their children, when they have them; it would make them more apprehensive of their dutie, and better disposed to doe it; if they would thinke when they are children, what they would require of their owne, if God doe them the honour to make them parents.

Thamar] Some Jewish Doctors would have her to be the daughter of the High-priest Melchisedech, because Judah doomes her to that death, which in case of whoredome was to be inflicted on the Priests daughter, Levit.21.9. but the computation of time will not allow him at this time to have a daughter young enough to beare children; for he died one hundred and sixteene yeares before this foule fact; It is more like Judah chose for his sonne, as he did for himselfe, a Canaanite, who if she were willing to leave the Religion of her Countrey for that which Judah professed, might be a good woman. Some wicked in the sight of] All wickednesse is in the sight of the Lord, but of some it may be said, rather then of others; as secret sinnes may be said to be in his sight, because no eye but his can see them; and great sinnes and sinners are said to sinne in his sight, or before the Lord, as was said of Nimrod, Gen. 10.9. and the men of Sodome, Gen.13.13. because they sinne with so much boldnesse as if they would professe impietie before his face; and he in justice sets an especiall eye, and observation upon them, to reward them according to their wickednesse: What wickednesse this was, is not set downe; it is thought by some to be the like that Onans was, vers.9. but not of envie, but to preserve the beautie of his wife, which by bearing of children and giving suck, would be impaired; but this was not like to be the consideration of one so young; some hainous and hatefull sinne certainly it was, both for kind and degree; and if it were of that kind, it is not unlike it would have beene mentioned, as well as the sinne of his other brother; and because the wisdome of God thought fit to conceale it, it is not fit to be inquisitive after it.

and the Lord slew him] By a wicked Angel, say some Popish Commentators, quoting for it Psal. 78.49. And some more particularly, that this wicked Angel was Asmodeus the slaughterer of the libidinous husbands of Sarah, Tob.3.7,8. but this is but their conceit; it was doubtlesse, whether immediately by the Lord, or by a good or bad Angel, such a stroke of divine vengeance as might be known to come from the hand of God. He was but young about fourteene yeares of age; (as hath beene noted in the first verse) at this age, and beyond, many make account they have a priviledge for youthfull prankes, though profane or impure; but they should Remember their Creator in the dayes of their youth, Eccles.12.1. lest they provoke him to be their destroyer, either in the midst of their dayes, Psal.55.23. or sooner, as he was to Er in this place, and to his brother Onan, vers. 10. and yet sooner, as he was to the little children who mocked the Prophet, 2 King.2.24.

V. 8. raise up seed to thy brother] This order was for preservation of the stocke, that the child begotten by the second brother should have the name, and inheritance of the first, which is in the New Testament abolished. This is the first example we finde of the marriage betwixt the widow of the dead, and the surviving brother; but when it was first ordained, we finde not, but no doubt it was at the first by revelation from God, but when, and to whom it was first prescribed, doth not appeare; but it is plaine that in Moses time it was made a written Law, Deut. 25. 5. And this was so to be understood, that if there were no naturall brother in the neerest degree of kindred to marry the widow, the next kinsman was to doe the office of an husband to her, Ruth 4. and this was to preserve the preeminence of the first borne, as a type of Christ, and for the distinction of the Tribes, that the Propheste of his descent, and pedëgree might more plainly appeare; otherwise the brothers marriage of his dead brothers widow, was forbidden, Levit.18. 16. And therefore before the ceremonies of the Jewish Church were abolished, Herod was reproved by John Baptist for marrying his brother Philips wife, doing it rather in wanton lust then of charitie or necessitie to raise up seed unto his brother, who died not childlesse, for he had a daughter; but in the Christian Church it is no way lawfull; it is therefore an evidence of Antichristian pride in the Pope (exalting himselfe above God) to dispense with incestuous marriages which God hath perpetually forbidden, as he taketh upon him to doe, and others to defend: he might as well discharge men from the Law of the sixt Commandement, because God in some cases alloweth killing, as in lawfull warres, and execution of justice; and of the eighth Commandement, because he allowed the Israelites to spoyle the Egyptians, as he doth in this case discharge men from the Law of the seventh Commandement, allowing such marriages unto Christians as were permitted onely by way of dispensation to Gods people in the Old Testament, upon especiall reasons, which being made for their peculiar state, with it are at an end. In comparison of such ordinances which seeme to be repugnant the one to the other, as in these forementioned, Deut.25.5. Lev. 18. 16. with others, we must learne to distinguish the constant and perpetuall precept, or prohibition, from the temporary exception; as in the second Commandement, the Law is negative against images for religious use, the exception is the making of the resemblance of Cherubims, Exod. 25. 18, 19,20. and withall remember, that it belongeth to him to make the exception, who makes the Law.

V. 9. on the ground] The lewdnesse of this fact was composed of lust, of envie, and murther; the first appeares, in that he went rashly upon it, it seemes he stayed not till night, for the time of privacie for such a purpose, else the bed might have been named, as well as the ground; the second is plaine by the Text, he envyed at the honour of his dead brother, and therefore would not be father of any child, that should be reputed his, and not his own; the third, in that there is a seminall vitall vertue which perisheth if the seed be spilt; and to doe this to hinder the begetting of a living child, is the first degree of murder, that can be committed, and the next unto it is the marring of conception, when it is made, and causing of abortion: now such acts are noted in the Scripture as horrible crimes, because otherwise many might commit them, and not know the evill of them; It is conceived that his brother Er before was his brother in evill thus farre, that both of them satisfied their sensualitie against the order of nature, and therefore the Lord cut them off both alike with sudden vengeance; which may be for terrour to those Popish Onanites who condemne marriage, and live in Sodomiticall impuritie, and to those, who in marriage care not for the increase of children (which is the principall use of the conjugall estate) but for the satisfying of their concupiscence.

V. 10. slew him also] See Annot. on vers.7.

V. 11. a widow at thy fathers house] By the same reason that Onan was to marry Thamar, the third sonne Shelah was to marry, her (Onan being dead) but Judah fearing the like mis-hap to him which befell his elder brethren, having perhaps a suspition of some fault in her, or that some unluckinesse followed her, had no meaning to make a third marriage with her; and for better prevention thereof, lest by being together she should intice his sonne Shelah, he appoints her to returne to her fathers house, and there to tarry (as he pretended) but untill Shelah were growne up.

V. 12. to his sheep-shearers] It was the manner of old (as appeareth by this place) and it continued many yeares after this (as we see by Nabals practise, 1 Sam. 25. 36) to make a feast at the shearing of sheepe, and it is continued to this day in many parts of this kingdome; at this feast the owners of the cattell had a double evidence of Gods bountie to them; for while some sheepe parted with their wooll to cloath them, others it is like were stripped of their skinnes having lost their lives to feed them.

friend] The same word here rendred friend, the pricks onely varyed, signifieth a Pastour, or Shepherd; both these acceptions happily met together in our blessed Saviour, who was both a good Shepherd to his sheepe, and a very good friend to them, laying down his life for them, Joh.10.11.

V. 14. her widows garments] The manner was (as by this it seemes) for widows to be distinguished by some grave, and mournfull habit, from wives who enjoyed the comfort of their husbands.

in an open place] Hebr. the doore of Enajim, a proper name of a place, or, of the eyes, that is, a place which affords an open prospect to the eyes; or a crosse-way where the eyes are put to it, to looke intentively what way to choose, and what to refuse; or, the doore of two fountaines, a way which is an open passage betwixt two fountaines. Such as are of that tempting profession though to secret sinne, haunt places which are open and obvious to common commerce and recourse; as the harlot by Solomon is set out; Now she is without, now in the street, and lyeth in wait at every corner, Pro.7.12. & Ch.9.14. See Jer.3.2. Eze.16.24,25.

Shelah--grown and--not given] It appeared now to Thamar, that Judah had no purpose to doe the right that belonged to her widowhood; so being hindred by him from being a lawfull wife, she takes thence occasion to make her selfe his bed-fellow by an unlawfull meanes; he being now a widower, as well as she a widow, she thought it more lawfull to be done, and Judah more likely to be drawn unto it.

V. 15. because she had covered her face] That he did not know her by her voyce, the reason might be, either for that she spake to him in a whispering noise, because it was a secret matter; or not suspecting his daughter in law in that place, he might thinke it another, though she spake like her; and his own inordinate passion might, by Gods judgement, be an occasion to blind his judgement; so that hearing he might heare, and not understand; and seeing he might see, and not perceive, Matth. 13. 14. See Annot. on Chap.29.vers.25.

V. 18. and he gave it her] That is, the pledge she demanded, to wit his signet, or seale, his bracelets, and staffe; lust whether for corporall, or spirituall whoredome; is a besotting evill, which makes a man part with his precious things to a pernicious purpose; so did the Israelites with their earerings, to make the golden Calfe, which they set up to their own ruine, Exod.32.

and he came in] Not by the high way, where she stood to tempt, but in some private place not farre off, more like to be chosen for such a sinfull secret. This fact of Judah is recorded for many reasons. First, to shew the impartialitie of Gods Spirit which indicted unto the Pen-men of the holy Scriptures, who useth no connivence to the offences of any; therefore Moses, though he were of the Tribe of Levi, tells his faults, Gen.34.25. & Chap.49.5,&c. as well as Judahs; and his own defects, Ch.38.15,16. Exod.4.13. and Gods displeasure towards himself as well as others, Exod.4.24. Numb.20.12. and David, howsoever he is highly magnified, hath his faults laid open,

V. 12. — He and his friend Hirah the Adullamite] If he go out upon a Journy of pleasure, he must have Hirah with him. Who but Hirah for his company! Judah goes from his Brethren; and becomes intimat with Hirah, the begining & inlet of all the evil yt follows in this Chapter. Mitchel, Obs. 3. p. 134.

V. 12–23. Obs. 1. We had need to keep a special Watch over our selves, when we go forth upon designs of Recreation, and Pleasure. — the spirit of man being in a frolick, lax, voluptuous temper, is ready to entertain any kind of Temptation to Voluptuousness. — Oh What a tame, wild, exorbitant thing is the Spirit of man; when not bridled by the Fear of GOD, nor under seriousness!

Obs. 2. Mournfull & meaner attire in times of Mourning & Affliction, is a meet & suitable thing; and that wch the light of Nature leads to. Fine & flanting Apparel, when under eminent Causes of Mourning & Humiliation; is very absurd, & inconvenious: Eccles. 9. 8, 9. Isa. 52. 1. — not only by an affected garb of Mourning; where the Fineness & Delicacy is Equal — Hence Bravery — much more on solemn days of Humiliation, is very preposterous & Evil, if the inside & under Sorrow & Abasement will not leave some proportionable impression on the outside too: If the Outside be light &

Obs. 4. Horrible & dreadfull is the Sin and Snare that is in fleshly & Unclean Lusts! How they besot & stupify, yea, brutify the Spirit of man, is sadly evident in Judah — hung up in Chains for a fearfull example of Incontinency to the — Worlds End. ——— Oh Tremble at all the kinds and Ways of this Sin of Uncleanness; and at all the Snares thereunto; and most of all, at tempting others to it. though done in secret, as well as others, 2 Sam. Chap. 11. & 12. & Chap. 24. and Jonah reports his own murmuring against God, and tooke a chiding for it, answering nothing in his own defence, and so his booke is ended. Secondly, That we should not make Idols of the Worthies of former Ages; but consider them as fraile men, though never so eminent. Thirdly, To shew them, that the favours they received from God, were not rewards of their works; but the exercises of mercy, whereof the best thought themselves most unworthy, Gen. 32. 10. Fourthly, To take away all boasting of a carnall birth, and therefore our Saviour himselfe though immediatly borne of a pure Virgin, was lineally descended from this Judah, and Thamar; that men might respect him for himselfe, not for the worth of his progenitors in the flesh; and so the vanitie of the Jewes brag is evident, who gloried that they were not borne of fornication, Joh. 8. 41. by Judah (for from him they are called Judæi, Jews) who here committed incest with the widow of his own sonnes. Fifthly, To comfort penitent sinners, though they have foully fallen into grosse offences, for though divers of the Patriarches were great sinners, as Reuben, Simeon, Levi and Judah, yet were their posteritie all sharers in the Land of Canaan, and all their names written in precious stones on Aarons breast-plate, Exod. 28. 21.

V. 20. his friend the Adullamite] (His name was Hirah, vers. 12.) but he had shewed himself a better friend if (when he went with Judah to his sheep-shearers, at which time the fact was committed) he had disswaded Judah from it; but it is like he had his part in consenting to the sinne, as well as in concealing of the shame; but friendship is not rightly understood, nor practised; the truest friendship is to save, or deliver a friend from the greatest evill; and the greatest evill is sinne; but to tempt any to that, or to tolerate him in it, is the part rather of an enemy then of a friend. See Annot. on Gen. 20. 9. see also, Lev. 19. 17.

V. 23. lest we be ashamed] Men are more afraid of shame, in respect of men, then of sinne, in respect of God; yet not so much afraid of shame as they should be, for they thinke not much of that, untill they have made way for it by their wickednesse; else if the importunitie of their carnall desires would give them leave, and leisure to consider what shame attendeth upon sinne, it might be a meanes to withhold them from it, Rom. 6. 21.

V. 24. bring her forth] From the house she dwelled in, to prison; that being first delivered of child, she may be afterward burned.

Let her be burnt] We see that the Law was written in mans heart, which taught them that adultery should be punished with death, albeit no Law as yet was given: of those Laws which were written by Moses, divers were in use, and practise before Moses time, as for Altar, Sacrifices, Oblations, Tithes, the distinction of cleane, and uncleane creatures, with others, and so adultery was punished with death; and it was taken for adultery if a betrothed Virgin plaid the harlot, for which both she and her carnall male were to be put to death, Deut. 22. 23, 24. and the death was stoning, as in the place fore-cited, except in a Priests daughter, and she if she offended in that kind was to be burnt, Levit. 21. 9. In regard that Judah made offer of his third sonne Shelah for an husband to Thamar, vers. 11. and she accepted of it, she was in the case of a betrothed woman, and so her fault was reputed as adultery, at least by the discipline of Jacob, and his sonnes. Now because Judah calls for her out to be burnt, it is probable either that he tooke her as one of his family in relation to his sonne (though dwelling for the present in her fathers house) and that so he had authoritie to Judge her as he thought meet; or that there was some either Law, or practise among the Canaanites to punish adultery with death, and that might sometimes be with fire; for some Heathens have had that sinne in such detestation, as to inflict that penaltie for that fault: See Jer. 29. vers. 22, 23. Or if there were no set Law, or Custome for such severitie against that sinne; it may be such as were of credit and accompt in the place, as Judah was, might propound, and perswade to such a punishment; howsoever Judah (in passion, and disdaine to have his family so disgraced, and with a desire to rid Thamar out of the way, because he was unwilling to match her with Shelah), might in his heat, and hate make such a motion upon the pregnant proofe of her conviction. But herein Judah is himselfe convicted of many faults; First, of his unjust dealing with Thamar, as the widow of his two dead sonnes. Secondly, his unchast medling with her in that habit of an harlot. Thirdly, his rash and cruell sentence against her before he had heard what she could say for her selfe; notwithstanding she was with child, which was in effect to slay the innocent with the wicked; for what fault could be laid to the charge of the child yet unborne, that it should be burnt before it came to light? the light of nature hath taught men to abhorre such cruell executions, unjust as well as unmercifull; God resolves against it, Ezek. 18. & Deut. 24. 16. And with all this severitie towards Thamar, there is joyned much partialitie to himself, who if he had not been too indulgent to himself, would not have been so severely bent as to desire she might be burnt. See 2 Sam. 12. 5. 7. and the Annot. before upon vers. 13.

V. 25. when she was brought forth] What ever authoritie Judah had, his words prevailed so farre with those to whom he spake, that she was brought forth as a capitall offender; but she escaped death by stopping the mouth of her accuser.

whose are these the signet, &c.] The pawnes left with her for performance of his promise to send her a Kid, she bringeth against him, as proofe of his partnership in the crime; she seales up her charge against him with his own signet, entangles him with his own bracelets, and beats him with his own staffe; and very good cause; for he is unexcusable, who is guiltie of the same fault for which he condemneth another, Rom. 2. 1.

V. 26. Judah acknowledged them] He might no doubt have made excuses against her accusation upon such arguments; and if he had not denyed the things to be his, he might have pretended that they were hers, or came unto her hands some honester way, then by an unchast contract with her by the high way; but now the consciousnesse of his own heart, and the force of truth extorts a confession from him, that these things were his, and that they were assured evidences of his offence.

more righteous then I] That is, she ought rather to accuse me then I her; he doth not onely confesse, but with words of aggravation against himselfe, she is more righteous then I; If we compare their faults, in some respects he was more faulty, and she in some others; he, in that he failed to performe what he had promised, not as matter of courtesie, but of right, and whereby her chastitie might have beene preserved, and in that he both perswaded her to the sinne, and covenanted to pay her for it; for though she came forth with an intent to tempt, and to be tempted; if he had not solicited the businesse, she would not have offered to perswade him unto it, and in this she was more righteous then he, because he in his familiaritie with her cared for nothing but his carnall pleasure; she minded more the propagation of mankind. Lastly, he intended to put her to a painfull and shamefull death without any compassion to the innocent within her; she had no such dangerous desire, or designe upon him. But in this he was more righteous then she, for she knew that she lay with her husbands father; he knew not that he lay with his sonnes wife; but his free confession makes him more capable of pardon in respect of God, and her in respect of men; for the cause was like to fall, when the prosecutor was changed from charging of her, to accusation of himselfe, wherein he further testified the truth of his repentance.

againe no more] This is the truest signe of the sinceritie of his confession, when he forbeares the sinne, and doth so no more; many confesse a fault, and soone fall to it againe; but the true contrition is, when a man takes such offence at his owne offending, that with an upright heart he can say, as in the Book of Job, I will not offend any more. That which I see not teach thou me, if I have done iniquitie I will doe no more, Job 34. 31, 32.

V. 27. twinnes were] Which a skilfull Midwife, when the mother was in labour, might perceive.

V. 28. put out his hand] The birth was very painfull, and perilous by the strife of the twinnes, as Chap. 25. 26. and by that God would chastise Thamar for her offence; and though she had all the paine, yet Judah was her partner in the shame, (as well as in the sinne) which was double, for two base begotten children would doe them twice as much disgrace, as one alone.

V. 29. saying] That is, the Midwife speaking in some passion, as fearing lest the manner of the birth would be perilous to the mother, or children, or to both.

this breach be upon thee] That is, imputed to thee. Sarah when she chargeth Abraham with the contumacie of the handmaid, saith, My wrong be upon thee, Gen. 16. 5. Or, this breach be upon thee, that is, the remembrance of it shall be set upon thy name, thou shalt be called Pharez, that is, a breach, because thou hast not put forth an hand as thy brother did, but hast broke through all impediments, and made him draw back his hand againe to give thee precedence, that thou maist be the first-borne; and accordingly is Pharez set before his brother Zarah in the Genealogie, Numb. 26. 20. 1 Chron. 2. 4, 5. and brought in by ~~Saint~~ Matthew, Chap. 1. 3. as a progenitor of Christ. In the birth of these two brothers, we may note the difference in the new birth, which should be whole, and intire as that of Pharez, not like that of Zarah who was borne but in part, with one hand thrust out, and presently drawne back againe; such is their regeneration, or new birth who are religious but in part, and soone depart from the profession they have begun; that birth, though it may make some shew for a time, as Zarahs hand tied about with a Scarlet thread, will not be sufficient for salvation, no more then one thread is enough to make a whole suit to cover the nakednesse of a sinner. Divers Divines of ancient, and late time apply these two brethren to the different state of the Jewish and Christian Church, understanding by Zarah who put forth the hand, the Church of the Jewes, appearing with justification by workes, which are attributed to the hand, and drawing back by unbeliefe, and obstinate rebellion, Rom.10. last; and by Phares the Church of the Gentiles coming after him, yet being a more perfect birth, getting the primogeniture or birth-right from him; and then by Zarahs coming forth wholly after him, the new birth of the Jewes, called to the profession of the faith of Christ in the Evangelicall Church.

V. 30. called Zarah] From a word signifying to arise as the Sunne doth, or to appeare, because he appeared and in part came forth first, as the Midwife said, vers.29.

CHAP. XXXIX.

Vers.1. And Joseph] Moses returneth againe to the story of Joseph (whence he made some digression concerning Judah and Thamar) and goeth on with it to the end of the Chapter.

and Potiphar &c.] See Chap.37. vers.24.36. with the Annotations upon them.

V. 2. a prosperous man] The favour of God is the fountaine of all prosperitie, and therefore though God many times use secondarie means, as a mans owne diligence, and others benevolence, to make him prosper, we must direct our prayers onely to God, that we may doe so; and our praises to him, when it is so.

V. 3. his master saw] By the effects; for though he knew not the true God, he might know that some Divine power ruling over mens affaires, gave good successe to what he did and dealt in. See Annot. on Chap.30.v.27.

V. 4. found grace in his sight] Though he were hated of his brethren, he was favoured by a stranger; that was another effect of Gods favour, and therefore to be sought for at Gods hand, as Neh.2.4,5.

overseer] For this office was requisite some acquaintance with the Egyptian Tongue, to the learning whereof, no doubt, he had addicted himselfe; and he was very capable of that or any other skill; else he could not so soone have beene sufficient for such Offices as were put upon him; it is like at first he spake it imperfectly, but use in one so ingenious, would advance apace to proficiencie: Here we see an instance of the Divine providence, for Joseph was sold to be a servant, a slave, but God preferres him from a state of contempt to a place of Authoritie; his diligence and faithfulnesse made him well accepted of his Master, according to that of Solomon, He that waiteth on his master shall be honoured, Prov.27.18. Thus the prediction of his Dreame begins to worke, which by degrees (though with some interruptions) proceeded to an higher preeminence of honour, and power.

all that he had he put] Because God prospered him, Potiphar thus trusted him, and so he made Religion to serve his profit.

V. 5. for Josephs sake] The wicked doe foolishly in setting themselves against the godly, whom if they would respect, as they ought; they might enjoy as affectionate, and faithfull friends, and trusty servants, on whose fidelitie they might relye with much ease, and advantage to themselves. See Annot. on Chap. 30. vers.27.

V. 6. ought he had, save the bread] The words are taken to be a proverbiall speech, whereof the meaning is, that he was assured that all things should prosper wel, therefore he did eat and drinke, and tooke no care: by bread is meant in the phrase of Scripture, that which is necessary for a mans sustenance, especially his diet; of that he tooke more notice, because he would please his palate; or it may be Joseph had lesse to doe in that, then in other matters, because there was something peculiar in the diet of the Egyptians, whence it was that the Egyptians might not eat bread with the Hebrews: for it was an abomination to the Egyptians, Gen.43.32.

a goodly person, and well favoured] Sometimes God is pleased to joyne inward, and outward grace in the same person; that beautie may make grace more acceptable with carnall people; and grace may make beautie more safe from their solicitations, and from selfe-conceit, 1 Sam.16.12.

V. 7. after these things] After Joseph had served Potiphar first as a servant, then as a more especiall attendant on his person; lastly, as a chiefe Officer in his house, which might take up about nine or ten yeares time.

cast her eyes] Beautie is a dangerous object to a wanton eye, and a wicked heart; in which respect blemishes, and blindnesse may be born with more patience; since by the one we are not so apt to give, by the other, not so apt to take occasion of sinne.

Lie with me] In these words is declared the summe whereto all her flatteries did tend; for it is like her solicitations to lust (at least at the first) were not in the plaine expression here set downe; but her favourable, and familiar usage of him, liker a friend then a Mistresse, (though in the language of our time a Mistresse is but a she familiar) by wanton glances, and sometimes by words of immodest intimation, which in effect sorted to no other meaning then these words expresse.

V. 9. how then can I] The grace of God is a powerfull restraint against the provocation of sinne; so that the godly cannot consent unto it, 1 Joh.3.9. whereas the wicked on the contrary, cannot cease from it, 2 Pet.2.14.

this great wickednesse] Adulterie is a great wickednesse: first, because it is a theft of that which is most precious, and should be most peculiar to the owner, as in this verse is shewed; and therfore the suspition or jealousie of injurie in it raiseth the rage of a man to such an height, that it will not be allayed without revenge, Prov.6.34,35. And it stealeth sometimes an heire into a mans estate, or at least thrusteth in for a portion among the legitimate children, a stranger that hath no right to be a sharer with them. Secondly, marriage being not made without the bond of loyalty, the breach of that bond is treachery. Thirdly, in a religious and godly person it is sacriledge, for the body of such a one is the Temple of the holy Ghost, 1 Cor. 6. 19. and to turne the temple of God to the use of carnall pollution, is a profane sacriledge. Fourthly, besides all this, Joseph if he should yeeld to his lascivious Mistresse, should shew himselfe not onely ungratious towards God, but ungratefull unto a very kind, and respective Master: not without great cause then, he called Adultery a great wickednesse.

against God] The feare of God preserved him against her continuall temptations. See Chap.42.18. Neh.5.15. See Annot on Chap.20.vers.6.

V.10. day by day] Heb. day day. That is, daily: the word doubled imports continuance of time without intermission; so also Exod. 16.5. Or omission, Levit.6.12. Deut.14.22. Or progresse in place without diversion or digression, Deut.2.27. We see here how sinne abounded in the tempter; and in the tempted, how grace abounded much more, with whom such unceasant solicitations could not prevaile; which should be remembred as a patterne of perseverance in the resistance of sinne.

or to be with her] Occasions of evill, 1 Tim.5.14. yea and the appearances of it also, 1 Thes. 5. 22. are to be avoided, as well as the evill it selfe: The societie then of the wicked is to be shunned, Prov.1.15. especially of such as are tempters to sinne, Pro.5.8.

V. 11. his businesse] That is, the businesse that belonged to his office, and that being private (for privacie afforded her a fit opportunitie to tempt) it is like it was ordering the accounts, and reckonings of his charge.

none ---- there within] It is like Potiphar was abroad at some feast, or some publique occasion, and had most of his servants with him; his wife making her selfe an occasion to stay at home with a few of her family, whereof Joseph was one.

V. 12. caught him by the garment] How unruly a thing is lawlesse lust, which breakes through the bonds both of conscience, and of modestie; putting a woman (who by her sexe should be shamefast, and by her calling (as being the wife of a Governour a Mistresse) grave) into an impudent offer to commit a rape upon a man.

he left his garment] He stayes not to parley with her, no not so much as to plead with her against her lewd motion, having done that before; because the temptation came to such an height, it might be more safe to fly from it, then to fight with it; much lesse would he though strong enough (being an able young man) strive with her to recover his garment againe, for he liked it the worse for her sake, and feared he might be tainted with the touch of her.

V. 14. she called to the men] She went out and made a noise to those few that were in or about the house; see vers.11. Where we see the difference betwixt meere lust, and true love; that oft times turnes to hate, whether unsatisfied, as here, or satisfied, as 2 Sam.13.15. whereas true love is constant, and would not make a quarrell for such repulses of sinne, but would rather take them for occasion of thankes, as David did when he was kept by Abigail from his bloudy purpose against Nabal, 1 Sam.25.

to mock] That is, so to abuse one that others may mock, and contemne him; though ordinarily to mock, is to delude, disappoint ones expectation; so Balaam chargeth his asse with mocking him, Numb.22.29.

mock us] To make Joseph the more maligned, she intitles the offence in generall termes, as if it were a nationall wrong of an Hebrew against the Egyptians, who were forward enough to take offence under that title. See Gen.43.32.

he came --- to lie with] The manner of the wicked is to charge that upon the innocent, whereof themselves are most guilty; the blasphemous Jewes charge Christ with blasphemie, Matth. 26.65. And the hereticall Church of Antichrist cals the most Orthodoxe Christians by the name of Heretiques; and many account the best Christians troublers of the State, as Ahab did, 1 King.18.17. when not they, but themselves are those that trouble it.

V. 17. which

V. 17. which thou hast brought] She layeth a fault upon him, that to quit himselfe to her, he may lay more rigour upon Joseph.

V. 20. into prison] It was strange that Potiphar being a Military man, Master of the slaughter men, as is noted on Chap. 37. vers. 36. and so incensed against Joseph for a crime so capitall, brake not out into some mortall violence; this must be imputed to the power of Gods providence, who can bridle mens corruptions, or manacle their hands, as pleaseth himselfe; so he withheld Abimelech from Sarah, Gen. Chap. 20. vers. 6. and David from Nabal and his houthold, 1 Sam. 25. 32, 33. who stoppeth the Lions mouthes, Dan. 6. 22. setteth bounds to the swelling waves, Job 26. 10. and suspendeth the operations of the fire, that though it blaze it cannot burne, Dan. 3. 21, 22, &c. under whose favour, and power is sufficient securitie, against the anger, and terrour of the whole world.

prison] And in the Dungeon also, Chap. 40. vers. 15. his evill intreatment there may be gathered by Psal. 105. 18.

V. 21. But the LORD was with Joseph] He suffered not onely as an evill doer, though he were none; but for an evill doer; for if the truth had beene known, the wife of Potiphar had beene fitter to be put in prison then he; but howsoever he were misdeemed among the Egyptians, God knew his innocencie, and was with him in prison, as well as in the house of his Master. How good is it to have God for our friend, who will be with those he loves as well in their affliction, as in their prosperitie; and will shew them light in the place of darknesse, Psal. 112. 4. though it be the darknesse of a prison?

gave him favour] See Annot. on vers. 4.

V. 22. he was the doer of it] Not that he was as a common drudge to doe every ones worke, but that having the rule of the whole prison, all things were done either by him, or by his command, or direction.

V. 23. looked not to any thing] See Annot. on vers. 6.

the LORD made it to prosper] Psal. 1. vers. 3. See Annot. on vers. 2. & 3.

CHAP. XL.

Vers. 3. He put them in ward] In Josephs case (once a great favourite in the house of Potiphar, and afterwards with wrath, and reproach turned out of his house, and committed to prison) we may observe the fickleness of humane favour; and in these two Court Officers, the slippery condition of Courtiers; who either by their owne errours, or others malice, or the mutability of the minds of their great Masters, suffer many times a lamentable change of their estates; which yet is oftentimes not lamented, because their former elevation (haply abused by insolencie of carriage) hath made them observed with an envious as well as with a curious eye.

V. 4. the captaine of the guard] This may well be thought to be the same Potiphar who before committed Joseph to prison; for by this time, (the Lord being with him and shewing him mercy, Chap. 39. 21.) his innocencie might be made known unto him by meanes of the keeper of the prison, to whom it is like he told the true story of his Mistresses false and foul dealing towards his Master, and himselfe; though for his owne credit sake he might desire to bury that unhonest businesse in perpetuall silence.

V. 5. And they dreamed] See Annot. on Chap. 20. v. 3.

according to the interpretation] (Chap. 41. 11.) The interpretation should be according to the dreame, not the dreame according to the interpretation; The meaning is, that each had his dreame congruous to his condition, which was not idle, but such as did prelage somewhat to come to passe, requiring correspondent interpretation; and it was interpreted accordingly, vers. 12. 18.

V. 8. We have dreamed a dreame] Not both one dreame, but each of them a dreame, as vers. 5.

there is no interpreter] That is, for us to consult with, because being shut up in prison, we cannot have recourse to the Magicians of Egypt, with whom in such matters we should consult. See Gen. 41. vers. 8. & Dan. 4. 7.

Doe not interpretations] You are deceived, if you expect the interpretation of your dreame from such Wisards; the true interpretation of them belongeth to God, and to those to whom he is pleased to reveale them; so Chap. 41. 16.

tell me them] By this he taketh not upon himselfe to be God, for Chap. 41. 16. he saith, it is not in him to give answer to such doubts, as of himselfe; but addressing himselfe unto God, and receiving answer from him, he makes no doubt but he shall be able to tell them both, what is meant by their dreames. See Dan. 4. v. 8. & Chap. 5. 12.

V. 12. are three dayes] That is, signifie three dayes; so it is usually in the Scripture, where there is no Hebrew word to answer our English word signifie.

V. 13. within three dayes] That is, on the third day, vers. 20. which interpretation Joseph had not by conjecture from the three branches, vers. 10. (for branches have no reference unto dayes, and the three might have beene as many weekes, or moneths, or yeares) but by Divine revelation.

lift up thy head] This phrase is sometimes taken for advancing, as Jer. 52. 31. and sometimes it is used for reckoning, numbering, or summing up to an head; so it is used, Exod. 30. vers. 12. Numb. 1. 2. & Chap. 26. 2. In both these senses it may be taken in this place; for the Butler was to be lifted up againe to the office from whence he was deposed, and to be reckoned, and accounted in the number of his Court officers as before.

V. 14. thinke on me] Though Joseph could tell when the Butler should be released, and restored to his office; it seemes he knew not the time of his own deliverance, as the man of God that came out of Judah, who prophesied against the Altar set up by Jeroboam, knew not the calamitie which was to come upon himselfe, 1 King. 13. See Annot. on Chap. 46. vers. 27.

make mention of me] He refused not the meanes to be delivered which he thought God had appointed; we may trust in Gods providence, and yet use what meanes is in our power to bring his purpose to passe; without which though he can worke what he will; yet it being his revealed will to us, that we shall use the meanes, we must not divide them from the end. See Annot. on Chap. 7. vers. 1.

bring me out of] Servitude, or restraint, if God put it upon us, must be patiently borne; yet libertie is rather to be desired if it may be had, 1 Cor. 7. 21.

V. 15. I was stollen] There was a stealing of men forbidden upon paine of death, Exod. 21. 16. and men were stollen to be sold, as there it is said; now Joseph by the injustice of his brethren was stollen from their father, or, (which is all one) conveighed away from him without his knowledge, and sold to the Ishmaelites, Gen. 37. 28, &c.

the Land of the Hebrewes] That is, the Land of Canaan; so called, because the posteritie of Abraham the Hebrew, Gen. 14. 13. were the best of those that dwelled in it; and for that by especiall grant from God they were the true Lords and owners of it.

I have done nothing] Innocency is no protection against the power of malice; yet may it well be pleaded against the wicked, and thereby God may have the glory of the patient suffering of his people; and the wicked may have the shame of their unjust dealing with them. See Joh. 10. 32. Act. 24. 12, 13.

V. 16. white baskets] The word Chor rendred here white, is a substantive, though the sense be adjective; and it signifieth whitenesse, and so it is referred to the baskets made of white pilled twigs, or to the white bread in the baskets: and it signifieth also an hole, for such baskets might be wrought with holes, and the more loosely twigged to let in the aire; but of this we need not be very curiously inquisitive, since they were but baskets in a dreame, which doe not require a reall determination to passe upon them.

V. 17. in the uppermost] There were all manner of baked meats, so farre goeth the Text, no further; but some say that in the middlemost and lowermost there was bread and nothing else.

V. 19. lift up thine head] The same phrase that was used, vers. 13. and afterward, vers. 20. but in a contrary sense, as the words following [from off thee] shew, whereby may be meant that his head should first be stricken off and lifted up as the head of a traitor, and afterward his body hanged on a tree.

the birds shall eat] The Gentiles, it seemes, did not cut those down they hanged up, (as did the Jewes according to the Law ordained of God, Deut. 21. vers. 22, 23.) the same day of their execution; and herein Joseph doth freely and faithfully forewarne him of his danger, that he may prepare himselfe the better to undergoe it: It were to be wished that Physicians, and those that attend on sicke folke, would, if they see any signes, or presages of death, take occasion to warne them to make them ready for another world; the neglect of this dutie hath endangered many a soule, while the Physitian loath to affright his Patient, lest it should hinder the operation of his Physick; and the friends of the sicke, unwilling to speake an uncomfortable word; have suffered them to depart without due preparation for so great a change; and if they be unwilling to heare of death, they must heare it for all that, that they may be made willing, for none come to heaven against their will.

V. 20. birth-day] It is a practise of great antiquitie and of long continuance (for it is the practice of many people to this day) annually to celebrate the remembrance of their birth-day in particular, as God did the worlds birth-day in generall by a solemne and weekly Sabbath; whereof though we find but two examples in the Scripture, and those not of good men that did it, viz. Pharaoh in this place, and Herod, Matth. 14. 6. And two examples of good men who cursed the day of their birth, Job Chap. 3. 1. & Jeremy, Chap. 20. 14. yet the example of Abraham making a Feast at the weaning of Isaac comes somewhat neere it, for at the birth of the child the mother was too weake, (and sometimes the childs birth is the mothers death, as Benjamins was to his mother Rachel, Gen.35. 18.) to beare a part in such a solemnitie; at the circumcision the child was in too much paine for an occasion of her rejoycing; and the first fit opportunitie was, when the child giving over milke, was growne up in strength to feed on stronger meat: and if a birth-day be remembred with thanks-giving to God, as the Lord of life and death, the author of health and strength, the giver of children, Psal.127.3. and done without superstition, or vanitie, or excesse, or abuse of Gods creatures; learned and godly Divines give allowance to it; who teach also that it might be lawfull for Pharaoh and Herod to keepe their birth-day, and yet deny the Popish celebration of the Festivities of Peter, and Paul, and other holy men or women; for it is one thing for one to keepe a memoriall of his own, or anothers birth-day, while he is alive; another, to make a perpetuall practise of it, when he is dead; one thing to doe it onely by a way of thanksgiving to God, and for his honour onely; another, to performe Idolatrous devotions to the Saints, as the Papists doe.

V. 22. he hanged the chiefe Baker] His birth-day celebrated with mirth and magnificence gave him occasion to take notice of his chiefe officers, and to retaine, change or discharge, and deale with them as he saw cause; so came the Butlers and Bakers faults to his consideration, and censure; and in both, Joseph was approved a true Prophet.

V. 23. but forgate him] The ungratefulnesse for favours received, and unmindfulnesse of men in misery, is a grievous sinne; this was the Bakers fault towards Joseph, and that fault is complained of by the Prophet, Amos Chap.6.vers.6.

CHAP. XLI.

Vers.1. AT the end of two full yeares] That is, two yeares after the Butlers returne from prison, and restitution to his place, which might be the third yeare of Josephs imprisonment; for he had, before the Butlers and Bakers commitment, given some good evidence of his vertue, and fidelitie, which caused the Keeper to give him so much trust, as to commit them to his custody.

dreamed] This dreame was not so much for Pharaoh, as to be a meanes to deliver Joseph, and to provide for Gods Church.

behold, he stood] That is, he dreamed that he stood.

river] That is, the river Nilus, which watereth the plaines of Egypt, and so makes them fruitfull without raine.

V. 2. out of the river] That is, Nilus, whose inundation if it be deepe, promiseth plentie; if shallow, it threatneth famine; see in what degree of both the observation of Plinie, Annot. on vers.34. of this Chapter. Thence may both the fat kine signifying fruitfull yeares, and the leane signifying yeares of famine, be fitly said to come out of Nilus; and since the chiefe substance for mans sustenance consits in kine and corne, the yeares both of plentie and of famine are sutably set forth in both kinds.

V. 6. the East wind] Is a very strong and drying wind; by that the waters of the red Sea were divided, Exod. 14. 21. and by that tempests are raised, Job 27.21. Ezek. 27. 26. and ships ruined, Psal.48.7. fruits dryed up or blasted, Ezek. 19. 12. and by that, together with the heat of the Sunne, was Jonah made faint, Jon.4.8. And this wind is so much the worse for Egypt, as it cometh with more force and vehemence from the desert of Arabia.

his spirit was troubled] (Dan.2. vers. 1. 3.) How weake is the spirit of kings! how strong and powerfull is the King of kings, who in their sleep can make trouble ready for them against they be awake, and can make waking misery of a representation in a dreame! and more then that, even in dreames he can terrifie them, and make their time of repose, and rest, a time of tribulation: See Chap.40.6. & Matth.27.19. So it was with Job, (and it may be as ill with any whosoever) When I say my bed shall comfort me, my couch shall ease my complaint, then (saith he) thou scarest me with dreames, and terrifiest me through visions, Job 7. 17. There is good cause then to close up the day with supplication to God, that the words of Solomon may be made good unto us, When thou lyest downe thou shalt not be afraid, yea thou shalt lye downe and thy sleepe shall be sweet, Prov.3.24. and when day returnes (after a comfortable and quiet night) to make that mercy a part of our mornings praise, and thankesgiving to God, by whose onely favour we have enjoyed it.

Magicians] They are called also Wisemen, Exod.7.11. Soothsayers, Dan.5.7. Sorcerers, Astrologers, Dan.2.2. that is, such as professed a curious art of telling secrets, and of foretelling future things, which they did by observation of the Starres, and other superstitious wayes, wherein concurred the suggestion of Satan, either revealing the secret sought after, or craftily concealing his ignorance by giving answer in ambiguous, and doubtfull termes; yet so often did he discover secret matters by such instruments, that it was believed by the greatest kings, they could tell almost any thing: as when Nebuchadnezzar had dreamed, and forgotten his dreame, he called the Magicians, Sorcerers, and Astrologers, and Chaldeans, who were much exercised in such curious arts, and threatned them, that if they would not reveale his Dreame, both what it was, and what it meant, hee would cut them in pieces, and make their houses become a dunghill, Dan.2. vers.2.5. And though they would not take upon them to tell what was his dreame, they undertooke if he would tell it to interpret it, vers.7. a manifest evidence of the strong illusions of Satan, whence Atheists may be convicted: for if there be a devill, and devillish divination, there must needs be a God, and Divine revelation; and happy is the world by the coming of Christ, as in many other respects, so in this for one, that the Devil and his Chaplaines have not had that power to deceive, and mislead the world, as they had before his incarnation.

none that could interpret] The wisest of the world understand not Gods secrets; but to his servants they are revealed: See Gen.18.17. Psal.25.14. The Magicians at this time seeme to be astonished, or stupified, that they had nothing to say by way of probable conjecture, though the dreames afforded them ground, and scope enough for such a purpose; surely this silence of theirs was of God, as was Josephs speech, according to that of the Prophet Isaiah, Surely the Princes of Zoan are fooles, the counsel of the wise counsellours of Pharaoh is become brutish, Isa. 19. 11.

V. 9. I doe remember my faults] God gives the Butler occasion to call Joseph to mind, whom he had forgotten till now, at least had not made good his promise to remember him to Pharaoh; he beginneth with a confession of his fault, but so as meaning rather to please Pharaoh, then to performe his promise made unto Joseph, of whose condition he had no mind to thinke, or speake, because he had endured it as an aggrievance: and he was loath to remember Josephs state to the King, lest the remembrance of his owne fault (if he were guiltie) should be renewed, or the Kings wrong (if he were innocent); yet this forgetfulnesse was serviceable to the divine providence, for thereby Josephs knowledge of interpretation of dreames was reserved to the best occasion to make use of it, to the fittest season, when the Magicians consulted with (about Pharaohs dreames) could not say any thing for the interpretation thereof.

V. 11. we dreamed a dreame] See Annot. on Chap 40.8.

according to the interpretation] Heb. according to the solution of his dreame. See Annot. on Chap.40.vers.5.

V. 13. me he restored] If we referre the words to the person last spoken of, they may be meant of Joseph, me he restored, that is, Joseph restored, viz. by his interpretation he declared, I should be restored; or Pharaoh restored, &c.

V. 14 called Joseph] The wicked seek to the Prophets of God in their necessitie, whom in their prosperitie they abhorre: but thus God doth promote his owne purpose by wicked men, though they think not of it: and this was to make Josephs humiliation a ladder of promotion, to make his enemies his friends, as his brethren were his enemies; and by means of dreams, to enlarge, and advance him, who by occasion of his dreams was sold for a slave, and afterwards thrust down into the dungeon.

out of the dungeon] The word is taken usually for the lowest place in the prison; but Joseph at this time was not there; (being ruler over the prisoners) or there not as a prisoner himself, but as overseeing the rest in that place; it may (by a Synecdoche of the part for the whole) be taken for the prison it selfe, as many Interpreters render the word in this place.

he shaved himselfe, and changed &c.] Such as were in a condition of great distresse, did usually neglect the ornament of the haire, and therefore suffered it to grow wild without cutting or trimming; but their state being changed, especially when they were to appeare in the presence of Kings or very great persons, they put themselves into a forme of decency both for their haire and habit of attire; for true pietie and civill decencie well suit together. It is therefore a grosse errour of some Popish Monks, who thinke they cannot seeme holy enough, unlesse they shew themselves slovens in their persons and apparell.

V. 16. It is not in me] Joseph assumeth not unto himselfe so much wisdome, but ascribeth it to God, as though he would say, If I interpret the Dreame, it cometh of God, and not of me, So Dan.2.28.

an answer of peace] By peace is meant all manner of welfare, and so the words are an apprecation of all prosperitie to Pharaoh; or, by an answer of peace we may understand, such an answer as may quiet his troubled mind concerning his Dreame.

V. 17. Pharaoh said unto Joseph] Though Pharaoh were a great King, Joseph but young, by condition a Prisoner, by Nation an Hebrew, (and so an abomination to the Egyptians) yet he disdaineth not to propound his Dreame unto him, and to desire a resolution from him, touching the interpretation thereof; None should think himself too great, or too wise to learn of any one who can teach him any thing: See Eccles.9.15.

V. 21. still

V. 21. still ill favoured] What is shewed here in a dreame, is many times true in story; when those that have good things have not Gods blessing in their use, it is with them as though they had them not; and though they snatch on the right hand, and greedily devoure on the left, they are not satisfied, Isa.9.20. it is so with some wicked ones in the dayes of plentie, who are poore, not so much by their own portion, as by their unmeasurable desires, which admit of neither brim nor bottome; whereas it is said of the godly, that in the dayes of famine they shall be satisfied, Psal.37.19.

V. 25. The dreame is one] In signification; that is, both dreames signifie the same things.

V. 26. seven good kine are] That is, signifie, so vers. 27. A figurative speech, as when it is said (in the Sacrament) of the bread, This is my body, and of the wine, This is my blood, so the figure of a Calfe is called the Calfe, Exod.32.19,20.

V. 30. shall be forgotten] Because the grievousnesse of the famine shall fill their hearts, and minds, with matter of complaint for the present misery; so that by the importunitie of their famishing desires, they shall have no list, nor leisure to look back to what they have had; but forward, to what they may get to supply their necessitie.

V. 31. shall not be known] According to the meaning of the precedent verse; See the Annot. upon it.

V. 32. dreame doubled] Repetitions of things in the Scripture have their use, and the use is to make the deeper impression upon the minde, and to import assurance, and expedition in the act; so it is in this verse.

V. 33. let Pharaoh looke out a man] Comminations of misery doe not exclude mans carefull endeavours, either to avoyd, or qualifie it, that it may be more tolerable.

V. 34. a fifth part] Why not rather the halfe, since the eares of plentie and of famine were even. Answ. A fifth part might suffice; First, because it was fit that in the deare yeares, men should be more frugall in their diet, and content with lesse. Secondly, there was somewhat in stocke of former yeares, before the dreames of Pharaoh which foretold the famine. Thirdly, though Nilus did not overflow the fields in the deare yeares as at other times, and therefore tillage was laid down, Chap.45.6. yet this was not so universall, but that neere the bankes of Nilus, somewhat might be sowed and returned with increase. At other times the measure of increase in the Land of Egypt was commonly according to the proportion of Nilus over-flowing, if it overflowed but twelve cubits deepe, it was like to be a famine; if thirteene, a scarcitie; if fourteene, a competency; if fifteene, a securitie; if sixteene, a plentie: See Plin. Nat. Hist. lib.5. cap.9. Fourthly, as Pharaoh was according to Josephs advice to buy up such a proportion of corne, and lay it up in store under the custody of officers in every citie, so it is like (by his example) that other great men would be buyers and storers to the same purpose, according as in Josephs judgement would be convenient.

V. 36. for store] He foretells not onely the misery to come, but the meanes so to mitigate it, that it may be borne, by laying up provision against it come.

V. 38. in whom the spirit of God is] (Dan. 5. 11.) The godly are most worthy of offices of honour; it is the same Spirit which maketh holy, that maketh wise, 1 Cor. 12. 4, &c. and therefore for the Spirit sake holinesse should be as highly accompted of as knowledge, though of prophesie; yea and more, for with true prophetick knowledge men may goe to hell, Matth.7.22. but none that is truly holy shall come thither.

V. 39. none so discreet, &c.] Wisdome, and holinesse are meet qualifications for the same person; which discovereth a double folly of many, the one of those who thinke they shall not seeme wise enough, unlesse they be sometimes profane; the other of such as thinke they cannot but be wise enough, if they be zealous, though they be not discreet; and so on both sides, there is made a divorce betwixt those qualifications which Christ hath marryed together, Matth.10.16.

V. 40. Thou shalt be] Men should be preferred according to their parts; and none put into any office, who have not gifts and endowments to make him able to discharge it. See Numb. 11. 17. Act.6.3.

be ruled] Or, armed, or at thy mouth shall all the people kisse. For, so the words may be rendred from the Hebrew Text; the sense comes all to one, for this last phrase imports very submissive observance, as kissing the commands that come from his lips, not only assenting to them, but professing their assent with a kinde of delight; and though sometimes superiours did kisse their inferiours; yet was it many times an act of homage of the inferiours to their superiours, as 1 Sam. 10.1. Psal.2.12. Prov.24. 26 importing a submission, rather of affection, then of compulsion; of love, then of feare.

V. 42. tooke off his ring] The ring was an ensigne of honour, as we find it mentioned both in holy Scripture, as Esth. 8. 2. & Luk.15.22. and in divers humane Authours: but withall, this ring might be a signet of royall authoritie to seale and confirme such commands, orders, and decrees, as Joseph should signe for the peoples observance.

fine linen] (Exod.25.4. Revel.19.8.14.) According to the countrey, for Egypt was famous for fine linen, and broidered worke, Prov.7.16. Ezek.27.7. The word is taken also for silke, especially for white silke, in such were the noblemen arrayed, and were thereby distinguished from vulgar persons.

gold chaine] This likewise was an ornament of honour, Prov.1.9. Ezek.16.11. Dan.5. vers.7. 16.29. How lawfull it is for godly persons to weare such precious things, and with what conditions, see Annot. on Chap.24. vers.22.

V. 43. the second chariot] Which was for him who was next to the King, the second man in the Kingdome; all the precedent honour he might have within doores; and that his dignity without might be sutable to this, when he went abroad, as Mordecai was mounted on the Kings horse, Esth. 6. 8. so Joseph must ride in the Kings Chariot; but in the Throne the King reserved to himselfe a settled preeminence, vers. 40. and in the Chariot did he reserve to himselfe a movable preeminence, so that he would have the first place; Joseph shall have the second, and so shall be known to be the second man in the the Kingdome; which is more honour then Daniel had for his reading of the writing on the wall of Belshazzars palace; for he was made for it, not the second, but the third man in the Kingdome, Dan.5.5.29.

Bow the knee] The word is Abrech, which some expound tender father, or father of a King; for Ab is father in Hebrew, and Rech in the Syriack is sometimes used for a King; from whence perhaps the Latine word Rex, might have its derivation; and Joseph saith of himself that God made him father of the King, Chap.45. vers.8. Some derive the word from Ab, which is father, and Rech, which is tender, as meaning Joseph to be a father in prudence, though young and tender in yeares: howsoever, it is a title that cals for reverence, and that reverence may well be bowing of the knee; in which sense also the word is taken by many learned Divines.

V. 44. I am Pharaoh] The words may be taken by way of protestation, as if he had said, As sure as I am Pharaoh, &c. Of the name Pharaoh, see Annot. on Chap.12. vers.15. All the Kings of Egypt were called Pharaohs almost 1400. yeares from the first of that name.

hand or foote] A proverbiall Hyperbole, or figurative speech, whereby as much authoritie as may be, is signified; that lesse then is truth, may not be conceived; or it may be understood of the publique affairs in the government of the Kingdome, wherein nothing shall be done, no man shall use his hand to doe any thing in the affaires of State, his foot to goe on any publique message or ambassage without Josephs advice. By all this hath Joseph a temporall recompence of his wrongs; for his servitude, he hath a ring, an ensigne of libertie; for course raiment, such as was sutable to a servile condition, he hath a suit of silke or very fine linen; for the fetters of his feet, Psal.105.18. he hath a chaine of gold about his neck; and for a fixed prison, or dungeon, from whence he could not stirre, a movable Chariot (at his pleasure) to bring him abroad with honour; and for contumelious termes, and reproaches, such as his lewd Mistresse loaded him withall, loud acclamations of honour; as Abrech, tender father of a King, or bow the knee; last of all, for a full accumulation of comforts, he hath as ample recompence in proportion of time, as in the kind of his usages; for the yeares of his affliction, were but about thirteene; the yeares of his honourable preeminence or principalitie, fourescore: which may cheare up the hearts of the godly, though for a season they suffer under the prevailing power, and spight of the ungodly; for they may assure themselves that God (if they suffer not as evill doers) will doe them right, and make them a full amends for all their wrongs.

V. 45. Zaphnath Paaneah] Egyptian words, as the most of those who professe especiall skill in the Orientall Tongues take them; and some so leave them without any interpretation at all; the Vulgar Latine repeating them addeth [in the Egyptian tongue] but those words are not in the Hebrew Text: the former word Zaphnah some derive of the Egyptian word Zephon, signifying an Idol, whose name is given in honour to Joseph as the names of Bel and Nebo, Isa.46.1. to Belshazzar, Nebuchadnezzar; but as some expound the name, according to the Egyptian tongue it signifieth the Saviour of the world: because Joseph, by his storing up of provision against a generall famine, was a meanes to preserve them from perishing by famine. But they that reduce the former word to an Hebrew Originall render it [a revealing of secrets,] and that is more pertinent to this story, wherein the most memorable thing reported and most acceptable to Pharaoh is the interpretation of his dreame of the seven yeares of plentie, and famine; and his provision by the former, against the latter. This giving a new name, especially with such a signification, is an act of favour, with an intent of honour: See Gen.17.5. & Dan.1.7. The latter part of this Name is left by some learned Hebrewes as in explicable, though it be ſaid by an eminent Hebrician in his cenſure of the Vulgar Latine of the Pentateuch, that the Egyptian, Punick, Arabick, and other Eaſterne Tongues are Dialects of the Hebrew and of neere affinitie with it.

daughter of Potipherah] This is not the ſame man whom Joſeph firſt ſerved, when he came into Egypt, for there is difference betwixt the writing of the names, and the titles and offices of the men; nor is it like that in ſo ſhort a time (the time of Joſephs impriſonment) the Captaine of the Kings Guard or Provoſt Marſhall of Pharaoh, ſhould become either a Prince, or Prieſt of On; but moſt improbable that ſo good and chaſte a man as Joſeph was, would take to wife the daughter of ſuch a mother, as his wanton, and (many other waies) wicked Miſtreſſe was: the firſt Potiphar was of the Citie Memphis, this of On.

Prieſt] (Exod.18.1.) Or, Prince: the word is taken both wayes, becauſe anciently both offices met together in one man, who was both Prince in the Family, and Prieſt in the Church; and for that (as ſome obſerve) it was the manner of Egypt, out of Philoſophers to chooſe Prieſts, and out of Prieſts, Princes: but if this Potipherah were a Prieſt, he was an idolatrous Prieſt, and then Joſeph would not for Religions ſake, accept of his daughter for a wife, it might be a fitter match for him if he were rather a civill Prince, then a Prieſt, and yet being an Idolater, though not a Maſter of Idolatrous myſteries (as the Prieſt was) it is queſtionable whether it were well done of him or no. In the generall it is not good, nor ſafe to be unequally yoked in reſpect of religion, whether heatheniſh, or hereticall; 2 Cor.6.14. ſince there want not wofull inſtances in ſome who of the ſtronger ſex, and wiſer ſort have been drawn by the weaker, to ſide with the worſer part; and ſo, though with hope, and purpoſe haply to winne others, have loſt themſelves; if then it were not ſome onſet of unavoidable neceſſitie, or that Joſeph had not eſpeciall direction from God in his marriage (as in other things he had) the act was ill in him; and if the caſe were ſuch, that he could make no better a choyce, or were diſpenſed with for it by Divine inſtinct, the example as rare, or extraordinary, is not to be drawne into a rule, nor can be lawfull where the reaſons are not alike, becauſe of the expreſſe prohibition thereof, Exod. 34. 12. Deut. 7. verſ. 3, 4. 1 King. 11.1. Neh.13.26. Exod. 34.15,16. 2 Cor.6.14. and the great perill thereby, 1 King. 11.1. Neh.13.26. Exod.34.15,16.

of On] A Citie of Egypt (called alſo Aven, Ezek. Chap.30. verſ. 17.) in circuit about a hundred and fourtie furlongs, more uſually called by the Greek name, Heliopolis, (which by interpretation is the Citie of the Sunne) then On, or Aven; and in latter times the more common name is Damiata.

V. 46. thirtie yeares old] His age is mentioned to ſhew that his great prudence proceeded rather of revelation from God, then of experience in the world; and alſo to note that he ſuffered impriſonment, and exile twelve yeares and more, that is, foureteene at the moſt, if when he was ſold into Egypt at the ſeventeenth yeere of his age we reckon the ſeventeenth but current or new begun, and account this thirtieth not for new begun but for compleat, and ended. On the age of Joſeph divers obſerve that it is an age of ripeneſſe for publique imployment, for at that age David began his reigne, 2 Sam. 5.4. Ezekiel his Propheſie, Ezek.1.1. John Baptiſt and Chriſt their Evangelicall miniſtery, Luk. 3. 23. the Levites their ſervice in the Tabernacle, Numb.4.3. which ſhould admoniſh thoſe that are about that age, or above it, to extend their thoughts beyond their owne particular intereſts, and to ſet them on worke, ſome way to promote the publike good.

when he ſtood] By this phraſe in Scripture is underſtood a ſerviceable attendance, as Dan.1.19. 1 Sam.16.21. as to be ready at hand to receive commands, and to goe preſently to put them in execution.

V. 47. by handfuls] Or, heapes. viz. from one graine ſo many as would fill the hand, or make an heape; by which ſpeech is meant a very great increaſe.

V. 48. gathered—the food] That is, the corne principally, not other fruits in generall; for of many there was no great need, and many would not keepe.

V. 49. untill he left numbring] He laid up the proviſion by rule, and proportion, and reduced the Barnes, and Bayes of building to number, with the quantitie of corne contained in them; and when he had ſufficiently provided for the publique ſupply of Egypt, he laid up afterward without any ſuch exact account, as before he uſed.

V. 50. Prieſt of On] See Annot. on verſ.45.

V. 51. hath made me forget] It is thought by ſome, that notwithſtanding his fathers houſe was the true Church of God, yet the company of the wicked, or proſperitie, cauſed him to forget it. But that he did not altogether forget his fathers houſe is plaine, becauſe he maketh mention of it; this forgetfulneſſe then is to be referred to the toyle he endured (for that he expreſly ſpeaketh of) and to that which was offenſive to him in his fathers houſe; which yet he needed not to forget, but ſo farre as not to think of it by way of offence, (as God may be ſaid to forget or not to remember mans ſinne) or in a ſenſe of affliction as before is premiſed, Iſa.65.16. And whereas he continued divers yeares in Egypt, ſome principall part whereof (as the Citie of Memphis) was but about fiftie miles diſtant from Hebron, where was his fathers family, and his father heard not from him all the while, untill he ſent for him into Egypt, it may be thought he failed ſomewhat, if not in his faith, yet in his filiall affection; but though Joſeph made not himſelfe knowne unto them, he might ſend privately to them, and be informed of their welfare though they knew not from whom the inquirie came; and for concealement of himſelfe ſo long from them, he might doe it as foreſeeing a fitter opportunitie to reveale himſelfe unto them afterwards; but certainly Gods providence diſpoſed of his diſcovery ſo, as that it fell upon the fitteſt ſeaſon; and if Joſeph were ſomewhat faultie towards his beſt friends, it is no marvell, ſince he had his infirmities as a man, and might have the more failings as a Courtier, eſpecially his condition being ſo ſtrangely changed, and his favour, and honour, and power ſo great with a King, and people who had the Hebrews his naturall kindred, and Countrey-men, in extreme diſdaine.

V. 54. And the ſeven yeares of dearth began] The ſeven yeares of plenty were now fully ended, the ſeven yeares of famine preſently followed; which may warn us in times of plenty to think of want that may come after, and to take heed we doe not haſten it, by a wanton waſtfulneſſe of Gods good creatures, nor by unthankfulneſſe to him that giveth them.

as Joſeph had ſaid] Divine predictions never faile of full effect.

dearth was in all lands] That is, in all thoſe lands that were neere to Egypt, as Phenice, Canaan, Syria, and Arabia, which are next in ſituation to it, and border upon it, not in all without exception: as Cæſar is ſaid to taxe all the world, Luk. 2.1. which Taxe extended not beyond the bounds of the Romane Empire.

there was bread] That is, corne laid up in ſeverall Cities, ſo as with conveniencie to furniſh the whole Land.

V. 55. famiſhed] That is, vehemently hungred, the private ſtock of proviſion now being ſpent.

cried to Pharaoh] Though it were knowne to the people that Joſeph was appointed both to lay up, and lay out the proviſion made out of the ſeven years of plenty; yet many of them came unto the King; and it may be the more, becauſe Joſeph was a ſtranger borne, and of that Nation which the Egyptians had in great abomination; and becauſe Pharaoh was (as a common father) to ſee to the ſafetie and ſuccour of all his people; therefore in the famine of Samaria, a woman called upon the King for helpe, 2 King.6.26.

V. 56. all the face of the earth] Which words are to be limited, as verſ. 54. See the Annot. there.

all lands] See Annot. on verſ. 54.

CHAP. XLII.

Verſ. 1. Jacob ſaw] That is, heard, or underſtood, or as ſurely beleeved as if he had ſeen it, (though he had it but by report, verſ. 2.) becauſe the ſight gives beſt aſſurance (for one eye-witneſſe is of more credit then many eare-witneſſes) therefore it is many times uſed for the notice that is taken, or comes in by hearing; as the people are ſaid to ſee the thunderings, and the noiſe of the Trumpet, Exod.20.18. and ſometimes alſo for the knowledge of things by the other ſenſes, as, ye have made our ſavour to be abhorred in the eyes of Pharaoh, Exod. 5.21. Savour is apprehended by the noſe or palate, not by the eies. Yea, by reaſon alſo, or by faith; becauſe many things are apprehended as aſſuredly by the light of reaſon, and evidence of faith, as if they were ſet before our eyes.

corne] Heb. breaking. Why corne is called breaking, ſundry Writers give ſeverall reaſons; ſome ſuppoſe it is called breaking becauſe it breaketh hunger; ſome, for that it is broken, or taken off from the heape; ſome, becauſe it is broken by the mill; and ſome, for that it is broken into divers parts, and diſtributed when it is ſold; and ſo Sheber the Hebrew word here uſed (which ſome read breaking) ſignifieth buying and ſelling, Amos 8. 5. Or, generally any act whereby diſtribution is made.

Why doe ye look] Or, gaze: as men deſtitute of counſell, or ſo perplexed and amazed in mind, as not knowing what to doe to be furniſhed with food againſt the famine; a grievous, and terrible affliction, when the violence is ſometimes ſuch, as makes many like hungry dogs, to feed upon abominable meats, and to pay a deare rate for them; as in the famine of Samaria an Aſſes head was ſold for foureſcore pieces of ſilver, and a little Pigeons dung for five pieces of ſilver, 2 King.6.25. (the Pigeons dung (as Joſephus noteth) ſerved in ſtead of ſalt, Joſeph. Antiq. lib. 8. cap.2. pag. 227.) and ſometimes it is ſo fierce 42.7.—Strange—] I do not apprehend that Joseph is to be faulted for this kind of Carriage to his faulty Brethren; nay, it seems proper & Necessary; that so he might, in a little time, take them freely into his Embraces, without any after-Reckoning. Decr. 6. 1716. 'Tis a Stranger that frowns, and Chides, and Strikes: Joseph made known, is all upon the Embracing endearing Strain, and that perpetually, without any interruption, or Allay.

that it makes the mother to use her teeth, instead of her lips, to her owne child, to bite without pitie the infant which she was used to kisse, and instead of giving it suck, to let out the bloud of it, Deut 28. verf.57. which hath beene done in a famine, not onely by some hard hearted mothers, but by such as were of a kind, and tender nature, as the Prophet Jeremie sheweth, The hands of the pitifull women have sodden their owne children, they were their meat in the destruction of the daughter of my people, Lam.4.10. and they that have nothing besides themselves to offer up in sacrifice to this mercilesse tyrant famine, are made sometimes to be so fierce towards themselves, as to eat the flesh off their owne armes, Isa.9.20. The consideration hereof may be a motive of thankfulnesse to God, though but for scraps, or crums which fall from the Tables of the wealthy; and may be a Caveat against murmuring at ordinary wants, and against wanton abuse of Gods bounty, when he gives abundance: and Jacob and his family having their part in this common calamitie (which was also the lot of his father Isaac, and of his grandfather Abraham, Gen.26.1.) may be remembred, to warne even the best, and holiest, that they expect not a priviledge from the common crosses of this life, nor bee too much perplexed (as it seemes Jacobs sonnes were) when God giveth them occasion to exercise their faith, and patience in the like kind; for that which is famine to others, shall be but a fast or more moderate diet unto them; for God their Father will so provide for them (as in this case he did) that in the dayes of famine they shall be satisfied, Psal.37.19.

V. 2. get you down] Egypt lay lower then Canaan, and therefore when Joseph sends his brethren for his father to Canaan, he saith, goe up, Chap.45.ver.9. but when he bids them bring his father into Egypt, he saith, Bring him downe hither, verf.13. and Egypt lying lower was the fitter to be made fruitfull by the overflowing of Nilus. See Annot. on Chap.13.v.1. See also, Chap.46. verf.4.

live and not die] (Chap.43.8. Psal.118.17. Isa.38.1.) To live, and not die, is all one; yet the phrase is not idly, either varied, or doubled, but to expresse a strong affection in the speaker, and to imprint the like in the mind of the hearer; and sometimes the first imports a blessing of long life, the second a preservation from the second death, by which damnation is noted, Revel.20.6.14.

V. 4. But Benjamin] Jacob was very tender towards Benjamin, as Josephs brother by Rachel, whom he most dearly loved, and as the youngest of all his children. See Annot.on Chap.37. verf.3.

V. 6. bowed] (Chap.43.26.28. & 44.14. & 50.18) Doing this homage to Joseph, as Master of the corne, they make good, though unwittingly, his prophetick dreame of his brethrens sheaves doing obeisance to his sheafe, Chap.37. v.7.

V. 7. he knew them, but they] Some of them were at mans estate when they sold him, and by them he might guesse at the rest, especially hearing, and understanding their speech one to another; but he being then but seventeene yeares old, and now very neere fourtie, was so changed in countenance, and language, (speaking the Egyptian Tongue) in habit, and condition (being nobleman-like, which they little looked for, having sold him for a slave) that they could not know him.

made himselfe strange unto them] This dissembling was more sutable to the condition of an heathen Courtier, then to the qualification of a true Israelite in whom is no guile, Joh.1.47. and is therefore to be taken rather as an example of Caution, then of Imitation: But this strangenesse was kept with the better decorum, because he had so ordered the sale of corne, that whereas he imployed others to sell to the natives, he himselfe sold unto strangers; for which purpose he appointed a peculiar place to furnish them, and that was the chiefe Citie of the Kingdome.

spake roughly] They deserved no better entertainement at his hands, who dealt roughly with him, and had no pitie on the anguish of his soule when he besought them to spare him, v.21. but Joseph did not this by way of grudge, or revenge; but to make them the more sensible of their owne ill dealing with him, and of his kindnesse to them, when he discovered himselfe unto them.

V. 9. to see the nakednesse] (Exod. 32. 25.) That is, the weaknesse of the Land by want of wals, or other necessary safegard; for he that hath no armes or defence, may be said to be naked, as exposed to perill from the hands of enemies; as he that hath no cloathes, is exposed to the sharpenesse of the wind and weather.

V. 11. all one mans sonnes] That shews they were no Spies, for no man would send so many sonnes together for such a purpose: when Spies were sent by Moses to take a view, and to give information of the Land of Canaan, they were not sent many of one family, but one of a Tribe, Numb.13.2. and their direction was to see the Land what it was, and the people that dwelt therein, whether they were strong or weak, few or many, and what they dwelt in, whether in Tents, or in strong holds, and what the Land was, whether it were fat, or leane, whether there were wood therein or not, Numb.13.18,19,20.

V. 12. Nay; but to see] See the second Annot.on v.7.

V. 13. one is not] (Lam.5.7.) That is, not alive, Chap.44. verf. 20. See Annot. on Chap. 37. verf. 30. Or, not in this world, as was said of Enoch though he were not dead, but taken up alive, Gen.5.24. Heb.11.5.

V. 14. This is it that I spake] That is, you pretend you have another brother, and have not, and therefore being false in this, ye are Spies and no true men.

V. 15. by the life of Pharaoh] Some read, Pharaoh liveth, some, let Pharaoh live, or, (which is the meaning) as Pharaoh liveth; Hebr. the lives of Pharaoh; if the words be rendred, Pharaoh liveth, or, let Pharaoh live, or, (which is the same in effect) as Pharaoh liveth, the sense may be, as truly as Pharaoh liveth ye shall not goe hence, as Ezek. 33. 11. As I live (saith the Lord)][I have no pleasure in the death of the wicked] So also, 1 Sam.1.26.& Chap.17. verf.55. If [the lives of Pharaoh,] the meaning is, by the life, or, lives of Pharaoh, (of which expression in the plurall number, see Annot. on Chap.2.verf.7.) and so we may conceive Joseph had got a taint of the Courtiers language, which was to honour, and flatter the King, by taking his name into their attestations; so in after ages, it was the manner to sweare by the life or genius of the Emperour: a sinne which God hath forbidden, as a great dishonour to himselfe, Deut. 6. 13. compared with Matth. 4. 10. so great, as if it were uncapable of pardon, Jer.5. verf. 7.

ye shall not goe hence] That is, ye shall not all goe hence. Hebr. if ye shall goe hence; the words are suspensive, where the later part, which is implicitely a curse, is forborne; the sentence made out may be, if ye goe hence, let me be punished, or, I will be punished for you. See Annot. on Gen.14.23.

V. 16. else by the life of Pharaoh] He sweares againe by the life of Pharaoh; it is like that he had contracted a custome (by his ill company) so to sweare; which sheweth how dangerous it is to be familiarly conversant with the wicked.

ye are spies] Though he sweare he doth not forsweare, for he calls them spies but conditionally, if they brought not their younger brother to him; which condition they accepted of, and so were to be taken as spies, if they did not bring him.

V. 18. I feare God] (Nehem.5. 15.) And therefore will be true and just in my promise. See Annot. on Gen.20.11.

V. 21. we are guiltie] Affliction as a rack, inforceth the confession of those faults, which otherwise would not be acknowledged, and consequently not pardoned, Prov.28.verf.13. 1 Joh.1.9. Though then affliction be not pleasant, as a banquet; it is profitable, as a medicine, for the recovery of the soule from the sickenesse of sinne; though it have been of long continuance: for the guilt of their sinne was about twentie yeares old, though the smart and anguish of it was not felt untill now, affliction wakened their consciences which before were asleepe; their bonds, and imprisonment were a meanes of freedome to their soules from the bonds of wickednesse, according to the words of Elihu; If they be bound in fetters, and holden in cords of affliction, then he sheweth them their worke, and their transgressions that they have exceeded; He openeth also their eare to discipline, and commandeth that they returne from iniquitie, Job 36. 8,9,10. See Hos. 5. 15.

therefore is this distresse] Here they doe well to entitle their trouble to their sin; though they were no politique Spies, yet they deserved as much and more then they suffered; and herein their present state is answerable to their precedent fault; for they disdained that Joseph should have any preeminence above them, and now they are faine to doe humble homage unto him; they conspired against him, and he hath a plot to perplexe them; they bound him, and cast him into a pit; he commits them to close custody, whence they could not stirre; and binds the chiefe of their conspiracie before their faces; they would not heare him, when he begged to them for mercy, and he sheweth himselfe inexorable towards them; and so is Joseph a minister of divine justice upon them, for God hath said; Who so stoppeth his eare at the cry of the poore, he also shall cry himselfe, and shall not be heard, Prov.21.13. See Judg.1.7. Matth.7.2. Jam.2.13.

V. 24. wept] (Chap.43.30.) Joseph had acted the part of a severe Inquisitour towards his brethren untill now; and now he can hold out his hypocrisie no longer; nature puts forth eye-witnesses of good affection to them, while art pretends both cause and purpose, of rigorous dealing with them: which was an assured proofe that he troubled them to doe them good, and not because they did or meant him hurt: and here we see how naturall affections are too strong to be kept in by artificiall disguises. Joseph was wise, yet could he not so keepe on his dissimulation, but his kindnesse overcame his craft; hence it is that hypocrisie will not long be hid, and that a lying tongue is but for a moment, while the lip of truth is established for ever, Prov. 12. verf. 19.

bound him] Simeon had a chiefe hand in the massacre of the Shechemites, and it is like he shewed himselfe most harsh, and hard hearted to his brother, for if he had been but as well inclined to him as Reuben and Judah were (he being the eldest sonne but one) they three by their senioritie might have prevailed much with the rest in their brothers behalfe, wherefore he had most need of humbling; and it may be Joseph feared his perverse disposition would disswade his father from sending Benjamin unto him, and hoped that Simeon being the worst of his brethren, the detaining of him would be the least affliction to his father; howsoever he being left in his hands, Joseph wanted neither meanes, nor mind to use him with more respect, when he saw a meet season for it.

V. 25. provision for the way] To serve both them and their cattell, that is, their asses, vers. 27. in the way, that they might bring home all they had bought without diminution.

V. 27. as one of them opened] That there was but one sacke opened in the Inne may seeme by this saying; which appeares the more probable, because when they came home and emptied their sackes before Jacob, they were all afraid to see every man his money restored againe, which had not so much affected and affrighted them, if they had all opened them before in the Inne; and though Judah say they opened their sacks in the Inne, Chap. 43. 21. They that hold there was but one single sacke opened, reply to that, that as Noah, in the five hundreth yeare of his age, is said to beget Shem, Ham, and Japhet, Gen. 5. 32. whereas he then began to beget them (and the same may be said of Terah, Gen. 11. 26.) so they were said to open when they did but begin to open their sackes in the Inne, and finished the discovery at their coming home: But it seemes not probable, that when one sacke was opened, and they so troubled, but that they would presently make triall of the rest; and it is enough that the rest are mentioned to have done the like, Chap. 43. 21. and though upon the opening of their sacks in the presence of Jacob they were affrighted againe, that might be, not as at a new thing, but upon some new reason of danger discovered by their father, which from his apprehension of perill might worke a stronger operation of feare in them then before they conceived; or it might have so much new force as to renue their former feare, for a time intermitted.

V. 28. afraid] Guiltie persons are very timerous, and easily take a fright, even at that which is done in favour, if it be strange and beyond expectation. See Levit. 26 36.

that God hath done unto us] Because their consciences accused them of sinne, they thought God would have brought them to trouble by this money; Though they were most of them very faultie towards Joseph, and otherwise wicked, yet they rightly apprehended that punishment was the reward of sinne, and God the author of that punishment, and the disposer of that matter by his providence, which reacheth even to the smallest matters, Matth. 10. 29.

V. 35. they were afraid] Sore afraid, for the Hebrew phrase is, their heart went out of them; upon the sight of their money, when they opened their sackes in the Inne, they were afraid that there was some subtle devise to ensnare them; See Annot. on vers. 27, 28. and now they open them at home, it is said they were afraid; it is like the first feare was sudden, and short, at least that it did not last untill they came home; yet with a second sight of the money their passion might returne upon them, especially their father being taken with it, and giving reasons for it, might easily receive the passionate apprehension of his sonnes, and so they were now (father and sonnes) afraid together: or, the sonnes would not acknowledge they had opened their sackes before, and found the money in them, lest their father should have chidden them, and so they faine a feare with him, as if now they had first taken notice of the matter.

V. 37. Slay my two sonnes] He had foure sonnes, Gen. 46. 9. therefore some read, for slay my two sonnes, slay two of my sonnes, or two which were then present, the other two at that time absent; but what securitie was this to Jacob, who would be more loath to slay two of his grand-children, then to send his sonne Benjamin? this was a passionate and inconsiderate speech of Reuben, yet so that Jacob might thinke that though his words were rash, there was some reason for his confident undertaking for Benjamins returne.

CHAP. XLIII.

Vers. 1. THe famine was sore] The longer it continued in time, the more it increased in degree; this was a great temptation to Jacob, to suffer so great a want where the Lord had promised to blesse him with abundance; see Gen. 28. 13. This was the second yeare of that great famine.

V. 2. eaten up the corne] That is, when there was very little left, and after a while like to be none, without a new supply.

buy us a little food] To serve us in the famine of this present yeare, for Jacob knew not that five yeares famine were yet to come; he had a great family of sons, daughters, grand-children, and servants, which by conjecture might amount to two or three hundred, so that a great deale of corne might be held but a little in respect of so great a company; but by calling it a little, he might meane in regard of the spare diet which men were to be tied unto in hard times, so that now they were to spend lesse in provision, then when the Lord sent it in a greater proportion.

V. 3. not see my face] With favour or safetie to your selves, for I will apprehend you and punish you as spies, except your brother be with you.

V. 4. buy thee food] They were to buy for themselves as well as for him, and he was but one, they many; yet he saith to his father we will buy it for thee, because they went at his command, and for that the care of the whole family belonged to the father of the family.

V. 5. we will not goe] Because it will be in vaine, for otherwise we shall get no corne, and not without danger; for we are threatned if we come againe, and Benjamin be not with us.

V. 8. And Iudah said] Reuben had spoken rashly without heed, and his speech was as little heeded by Jacob, as by himselfe, and so he prevailed nothing with him; Simeon, the next in age to Reuben, was kept prisoner in Egypt; Levi next to him in birth and too neere him in the blood of the Shechemites, having for that fact little acceptation with his father, either wanted heart to speake, or hope to speed; especially seeing Reubens motion was refused; Judah the next in senioritie speaking more wisely at a better opportunitie, (for now the necessitie of supply made Jacob the more willing to yeeld, what before he had denyed) obtained his consent to bring his brother Benjamin into Egypt; The way then to prevaile with an unwilling mind is to use a mediatour, who hath some gracefull acceptance with the partie to be moved, and for such a one to use prudent perswasion, and to watch the advantage of the best opportunitie, to make the motion successefull.

the lad] He was now about twentie foure yeares of age, and a father of divers children, Chap. 46. 21. yet he calls him but a lad, because he was the youngest, and in his fathers affection as deare and tenderly beloved and cared for, as if he were but a boy. See Annot. on Chap. 37. vers. 30. and on Chap. 22. vers. 5.

V. 10. this second time] That is, if we had not been delayed, we might have made a second returne with corne by this time, that is, if thou hadst not stayed us in retaining Benjamin, we might, &c.

V. 11. If it must be so] There is no wisdome in striving with necessitie; when we cannot frame our condition to our wils, we must bring downe our wils to our condition; and it was better that one should be adventured upon some uncertaine danger, then that all the family should be left to the certaine danger of famine.

best fruits] In Hebrew, take of the melodie, musick, or singing of the earth. That is, excellent fruits, which are received with praise, and used with delight.

a present] Jacob resolving to referre the matter concerning himselfe, and his sonnes to Gods providence, doth yet use his owne prudence to speed his purpose; and therefore to ingratiate them in the favour of that great Lord in Egypt (whom he knew not to be his good sonne Joseph) he sends a present, which (as Solomon sheweth) is a meanes to pacifie anger, and to obtaine favour, Prov. 21. 14. & 18. 16. & 17. 8.

a little balme, and a little honey, &c.] Balme was very precious, and therefore a little of that might be a competent present, and a little honey, though Canaan were said to be a Land flowing with milke, and honey, Levit. 20. 24. and in many other places, yet in a time of so great dearth, honey being of use for humane sustenance, a little of it with other things might be accepted.

spices] The Hebrew word is Nechoth, which some render by the gumme of the Balme tree; some, Waxe; some, aromatick, or oderiferous spices: others more generally, defireable things; some (as the Vulgar Latine in this place) expresse it by the word Storax, which signifieth a kind of tree, and the teare, or gum which issueth out of it, of which Diascorides writeth, lib. 1. cap. 78. & Plin. lib. 12. cap. 25.

nuts] Or, Terebinth nuts; or, nuts of the Turpentine tree; the originall word is not (as some observe) found any where, but here, in the holy Scripture.

V. 12. double money] This double money may have a double meaning; one is, that they took their money back which was found in their sacks mouthes, and money for more corne to be bought in Egypt; the other that (besides the restitution money) they tooke the price they formerly paid, and made an augmentation above that they paid before; either because the price of the corne, by the continuance of famine, was increased; or the proportion was to be doubled.

carry it againe] Restore the money which you brought back unawares, for you cannot have a right both to the money, and the corne.

peradventure it was an oversight] The men, that should have received, received and kept the money, being busily employed with many at once, might bee mistaken, and so might you be some way or other; howsoever misreckoning is no payment, the corne being ours, the money is theirs that sold it, therefore take it with you, and restore it. Jacobs justice in bargaine condemnes the ill dealing of many, who make no conscience upon how cheape termes they get another mans goods; It is naught, it is naught, (saith the buyer) but when he is gone away then he boasteth, Prov.20.14. When by displaying the ware he hath pulled downe the price, he makes brags of his bargaine, and the seller saith as fast, It is good, it is good; and if he can screw up the buyer to an unconscionable rate, he is as ready to boast of his gaines; but if either be mistaken to his prejudice, no restoring will be made: and yet the saying is most true, without restitution (either indeed, or in desire) there is no remission.

V. 14. God Almightie give] Our chiefe trust ought to be in God, and not in worldly meanes; the hearts of men are in his hands, Prov.21.1. And though it be a point of prudence to doe what we can to winne them, yet it is a part of piety to repose our confidence in Gods mercy to us, and in the mercies of men, but as by his meanes.

If I be bereaved] He speaketh these words not so much in despaire, as to make his sonnes more carefull to bring againe their brother; and withall to expresse his resolution to referre the matter to Gods providence, whatsoever became of him, or his; as Esther did, when, purposing to put her selfe upon the Kings displeasure for her peoples safetie, she said, If I perish, I perish, Esther 4.16.

V. 18 were afraid] See Annot. on Chap.42.v.28.

that he may seeke an occasion] Guilty persons are very suspicious, and are as injurious many times to well meaning minds, by their mistrusts, as by their injurious dealing. See 1 Sam.17. vers.28.

V. 21. every ones money was] See Annot. on Chap.42. vers.27.

full weight] See Annot. on Chap.23.v.16.

V. 23. your God, and the God] This being the speech of Josephs Steward, it appeareth that notwithstanding the corruption of Egypt, yet Joseph taught his family to feare God.

hath given you treasure] The good we receive from men is to be ascribed to the goodnesse of God.

I had your money] I acknowledge the receit of it, there was no theft nor fault in you.

V. 24. washed their feet] See Annot. on Chap.18.v.4.

V. 29. saw--- Benjamin] He saw him before, but he would not seem to take any especiall notice of him; now he professedly set his eyes upon him, speaking both of him, and to him, in an affectionate manner.

to thee my sonne] Joseph called Benjamin his sonne as he was a father in the Civill state, Chap.45.vers.8. So are they that are Governours in the Common-wealth, to whom honour is due under the title of fathers, under the fifth Commandement.

V. 30. his bowels did yerne] (1 King.3.26) The worthiest persons are most tender-hearted, as being likest unto God. See Jer.31.20.

V. 32. for him by himselfe] There were three tables at least in the roome, one and the chiefe for Joseph as Viceroy to Pharaoh; another for his eleven brethren; and a third for the Nobles of Egypt invited by Joseph to the feast; so that they dined together in respect of the roome, not together in respect of the tables.

eate bread] Bread is put for all things that are served in at a meale, or feast: See Annot. on Chap. 31.54. It might seeme strange for so great a man as Joseph to entertaine strangers of no higher ranke then his brethren seemed to be, in that manner; but Josephs wisdome was such, and so well knowne, that most would conceive he had some good reason for it, though they knew it not.

abomination unto the Egyptians] Not onely because they were shepherds, as Chap. 46. 34. (for the Egyptians had flocks of sheepe, Gen. 47. Exod. 9. 3. 17. whose milke they did eate, and weare their wooll, which might be as the Livery of servants; for they worshipped such cattell) But because they did feed upon such cattell as the Egyptians did worship; and though the Egyptians did feed on Buls and Oxen, they did not eat Kine; for they worshipped the females in honour of Isis, who the Poets faine was turned into a Cow, and afterwards returned againe to the forme she had before; but above all things the head of any beast was an abomination unto them, because upon the head they used to poure out all their imprecations, therefore that, as most execrable, was most abhorred by them; hence it is that they cannot indure to have sheepe, or kine to be killed, though by way of sacrifice, and therefore such sacrifices were an abomination unto them, Exod.8.26. and so were such as either did feed upon such creatures as they did honour, or on such, either in whole, or in part (especially the head) as they did abhorre. Besides it is the nature of the superstitious to condemne all others in respect of themselves, and to contemne them too, (so did the Egyptians other Nations) as uncleane in respect of themselves.

V. 33. and the youngest according] Though Benjamin were the sonne of Rachel, the mother of Joseph, yet are the sonnes of the hand-maids Bilhah and Zilpah set above him; so much is senioritie, or prioritie of time to be accounted of? and in many cases precedence is best swayed by that consideration, since it is neither subject to doubt nor envie.

and the men marvelled] Who? and at what? if by the men be meant the brethren of Joseph, some thinke it was matter of marvell to them, how he, being an Egyptian, (as they thought him) knew how to ranke them according to their seniorities; but it seemeth rather that they placed themselves; and then their marvell was at somewhat of the Egyptian fashion, contrary to that of their owne Countrey; or that Joseph sat neither with the Egyptians nor with the Hebrewes; yet that would be no matter of marvell, since he was a Prince, and so it was a Princely prerogative to sit alone; or that themselves were so honourably entertained in the Kings Court, being at home but Countrey Shepherds, and that their brother Benjamins messe was five times so much as any of theirs: and these two might be causes of marvell, not only to them, but to the Egyptians also.

V. 34. sent messes to them] Heb. he elevated elevations from his faces unto them. The meaning is, that the meat was set before Joseph and he distributed what he thought good unto the Guests; the Hebrews call the messes elevations, because they were carried up on high for honour sake; and from his faces; that is, of the meats that were set before his face, the plurall number put for the singular.

Benjamins messe] The manner of those times and Countreys was not, as with us, to serve in dishes, as in common, whereof those that sat at Table might indifferently partake; but every one had his portion distributed to him by himselfe: some take this not for the whole meale, but that towards the end of it, some parcels of banquetting-stuffe were distributed to Josephs brethren, and that in them Benjamin had five times as much as the rest.

five times so much] In Hebrew it is five hands, for five parts: for gifts or parts are called hands, or handfuls, because they are given and taken with the hand. He sheweth so much more respect to Benjamin then any of the rest, because he onely was his brother both by the fathers, and mothers side; so did Elkanah by a better portion to Hannah, shew that he preferred her before Peninnah, 1 Sam. 1. 4, 5.

dranke, and were merry] Sometimes the word here used signifieth to be drunken, but here it is meant but of a free use of drinke; for chearfulnesse, not for excesse, as Cant. 5. 1. So is the Greek word, Joh. 2.10.

CHAP. XLIIII.

Vers.2. Put my cup] We may not by this example use any unlawfull practises, seeing God hath commanded us to walke in simplicitie, 2 Cor.1.12. & Chap.11.3. Joseph did this haply to try their affections to their brother Benjamin, whether they were well affected to him, or envious at him, for the extraordinary favour he had shewed unto him.

V. 4. follow after] Pursue them with a convenient number of horse, that you may overtake them, and bring Benjamin from them, though they would offer to rescue him.

V. 5. whereby he divineth] It was the manner of the heathens, (and it is like among them, of the Egyptians) in the Ceremonies of Divination, sometimes to use a Cup, sometimes a Bason; and Joseph bearing himselfe as an Egyptian, and supposed by the people to be such a Diviner, and to use such Ceremonies, he taketh the matter upon him; or his Steward in his name speaketh as if he divined by that Cup: Or the words may be, not in which, or by which he divineth; but of which, that is, he can divine, that is, tell where it is, and who hath taken it away, or by this Cup discover your dealing in this businesse, though it were done in secret: Or the word in the Originall may signifie a prudent presaging or insight by conjecturall tryall; so there is no need to conceive that Joseph played the Soothsayer, after the Egyptian manner; which no doubt he detested, having a divination, or revelation from God of an higher, and holyer kind then this; yet in that he was content to be taken for an Egyptian Diviner, or fained that he consulted with Soothsayers, his simulation was his sinne, as his swearing before; for he was but a man, though of the best sort, and as a man no doubt had his faylings, as others of the Patriarchs: his example then is no patterne for any ones profession, or practise of such superstitious discoveries.

V. 8. we brought againe] This is brought in as an argument of their true dealing, who were so ready to restore, not charged, or perhaps not chargeable by any with any wrong.

V. 9. let him die] This was a speech both too generall, and too severe, like that of Jacobs their father, Chap.31.32. but in this the more inconsiderate, because they should have remembred, how their money was put into their sacks before, without their knowledge, and have thought that the like might be done concerning the Cup; yet such a confident asseveration was an argument of innocencie in those that made it.

V. 10. shall be my servant] The servant of Joseph speakes thus, as in his Masters name, and right; for Joseph himselfe came not out after them; for at his brethrens returne to the Citie, he was yet in his house, vers. 14.

V. 13 rent their clothes] To signifie how greatly the thing displeased them, and how sorry they were for it: see Annot. on Chap. 37. vers. 29. This was very hard usage by Joseph, but it was of good use for triall and exercise of humilitie and patience, and it lasted but a while, and at last was recompensed with comfort.

V. 15. can certainly divine] See Annot. on vers. 5.

V. 16. What shall we speake] Their consciences were cleare, and their conviction seemed as cleare, so that for the present they knew not what they should say by way of apologie for themselves.

God hath found out] Here is nothing said nor pretended by way of excuse, or defence, but rather a confession, as though they were guiltie of the fact, when they were all free; for Judah speaking first, (and it may be in some haste, as more engaged in the matter then the rest, because of his undertaking for the returne of Benjamin, Chap. 43. vers. 9.) might upon the sudden misdoubt there was some fault in some of his brethren, or if not concerning the Cup, he might recall to mind the conspiracie against his brother Joseph, and thinke that God was meet with them for that, as Chap. 42. vers. 21. Howsoever, if we see no evident cause of our affliction, let us looke to the secret counsell of God, who punisheth us justly for our sinnes.

we are my Lords servants] Judah first gives up their libertie lost, who was the first mover for the selling of his brother Joseph for a servant, Gen. 37. vers. 26, 27. The law concerning theft was in Moses time, that restitution should be made in some cases double, in some foure-fold; and he that could not make such a recompence, was to be sold, and become his slave, to whom he was a thiefe, Exod. 22. vers. 3. but in this case their owne words exposed them to a greater perill, even to the losse of their lives, vers. 9. and though therein they spake not wisely, here they answer honestly, and professe themselves (at least Judah for himselfe and the rest, and none of them spake a word to the contrary) ready to make good, what they had said though they die for it; which may be justly applied to the reproofe of those, who will stand to nothing they say, if it make against themselves; and so for their advantage, or to avoid damage, make no scruple to break their words, and sometimes also their solemne oathes.

V. 18. in my Lords eares] Judah coming neere, and desirous to speake in Josephs eare, seemeth to be repugnant to that, Chap. 42. vers. 23. where it is said, that Joseph spake unto his brethren by an Interpreter, or (as in the marginall variation according to the Hebrew) an Interpreter was between them; because the Hebrews understood not the Egyptian tongue, nor would Joseph bearing himselfe as an Egyptian, seeme to understand the Hebrew tongue; why then did Judah draw neere, and desire to speake in his eare, as by way of secret whispering? Answ. First, for his drawing neere, it was convenient for him that spake, to advance a little before the rest of his brethren, towards him, who was to be spoken to. Secondly, for that he saith of speaking in his eare, it doth not necessarily imply any whispering speech to be heard by one alone, as may appeare by the like phrase, Gen. 50. vers. 4. Exod. 11. 2. Deut. 5. 1. and in divers other places. Thirdly, if Judah did come neere, and desire to speake to him privately without an Interpreter, it were not repugnant to that, Chap. 42. vers. 23. for in Egypt Joseph was generally knowne to be an Hebrew, for he was accused under that name, Chap. 39. vers. 14. 17. and so committed to prison, and in prison he was taken for an Hebrew, Chap. 41. 12. and under that title sent for to the Court in great haste, vers. 14. And so being famous by his divine wisdome, interpretation of dreames, and by his great change from a poore prisoner, to a prime Courtier, it might easily be known to his brethren, (especially now at their second coming, having beene so entertained by him, as no strangers were but they) that he was an Hebrew, though they knew not of what particular Family he was, nor durst presume to take further notice of him then he was pleased to allow of.

even as Pharaoh] That is, having his royall power for a great part of it, in thy administration, and though not in equall authoritie with him, yet next unto him.

V. 19. Have ye a father] This passed betwixt Joseph and his brethren at a former conference, but is not set downe untill now, when Judah tooke occasion to relate what had passed.

V. 20. child] The word Jeled, in the Originall properly signifieth a child newly borne, as Exod. 1. 17. & Chap. 2. vers. 7, 8. Or a child not yet weaned, Gen. 21. vers. 8. and the same word was applied to Joseph when he was seventeene yeares of age, Gen. 37. vers. 30. And this extenuating terme is given either out of compassion, importing tendernesse, such a tendernesse as one would use to a little child, as in that case of Joseph; or it is taken by way of excuse, as an officious lie, as in this place, to keepe Benjamin at home with his father, as if he were so little and so tender, that he were unfit and unable to take, or to be brought so long a journey.

a little one] That is, the least in yeares, though by this time the father of divers children, (for at his coming into Egypt with Jacob he was the father of ten, Chap. 46. vers. 21.) and then (as some account his age) he was thirty years old, at the least foure or five and twenty.

V. 26. We cannot goe downe] In the 43. Chap. vers. 5. Judahs words are we will not goe downe, but here rehearsing them to Joseph he saith, we cannot goe downe; this repeating is a kind of repenting, or correcting of his phrase: we will not, hath a savour of contumacie in it, we cannot, may agree with filiall duty; the former was said to Jacob on a sudden, the latter upon better advice, as under the awe of a superiour power, of which he was to expect rather justice then favour. So we see second considerations are wiser then the first, and that feare will amend the faults which familiarity commits.

V. 27. my wife bare me] He saith not his wife Rachel by way of distinction from Leah, but calleth her his wife by way of eminence, as being first in his choyce, and deerest in his love, in comparison of whom the other was no wife, and had beene none, if there had not beene more fraud in her father, then there was love in him towards her.

V. 30. bound up in the lads life] If he came not backe he would thinke some deadly mischiefe had befallen him; as he did of Joseph; and such was the tendernesse of Jacobs heart, that if Benjamin should die, he could not live; this strength of affection was the weaknesse of that good man; yet commonly the parents are more kind to their children, then their children to them: and so there is not ofter an errour of excesse on the one side, then of defect on the other. But in this pathetick supplication and pleading, Judah sheweth more love to his father, and his brother, then to himselfe; offering himselfe a prisoner, that Benjamin may goe free, and so his father may have none occasion of such griefe, as may hasten his death. A good example for sonnes, that they shew themselves carefull of their parents content, and that they doe not (as many doe) either by their wickednesse, disobedience, or dissoluteness, grieve their hearts, and bring their heads before, or when they be gray, with sorrow to their graves.

V. 31. to the grave] See Annot. on Chap. 37. v. 35.

V. 34. how shall I goe] Meaning he had rather remaine there prisoner, then returne and see his father in heavinesse: yea to see him die for griefe of that ill tydings which he should bring, if he came backe without his brother Benjamin.

CHAP. XLV.

Vers. 1. Could not refraine] That is, from teares.

goe out from me] Not that he was ashamed of his brethren, (for he did owne both them, and his father, as is plainly shewed afterward) but that he would cover his brethrens fault, which he did it seemes not onely from the Egyptians, but from his father also; for otherwise, it is probably conceived, that if Jacob had knowne it, he would have made an Item upon it among his farewell speeches concerning his sonnes, as he did of the fact of Simeon and Levi, Chap. 49. Besides, it was not suitable to the person of a man in place so great, and reputed so wise, to weepe before others, according to his naturall loudnesse, which was very great.

V. 2. wept aloud] As he shewed great wisdome in keeping in so great affection, without discovery untill now; so now he expressed a most kind and compassionate disposition to his brethren, notwithstanding their wicked and cruell usage of him in former times; an excellent patterne of a placable heart, estranged from revenge, though both their dealing deserved it, and he had power, and opportunitie to pay them to the full.

the house of Pharaoh heard] Some Egyptians were neer and heard immediately, but the house of Pharaoh had it by report, as vers. 16.

V. 3. troubled at his presence] The sense of guilt, and feare of punishment, put them into a silent amazement.

V. 4. Come neere] It is like Joseph as a great Lord sate in some state, and his brethren kept a reverend distance from him; now he calls them neere, that they might take better notice of him, and he might speake more privately to them, that which was not fit for any other to heare, but themselves.

V. 5. Be not grieved] This example teacheth, that we must by all meanes comfort them which are truly humbled, and wounded for their sinnes; lest they should be swallowed up of too much sorrow, 2 Cor. 2. 7.

for God did send] See Annot. on vers. 8. & Psal. 105. vers. 16, 17.

V. 6. Earing nor harvest] That is, no tillage, no seed sowen, no harvest to be reaped, (except in the places neere the bankes of Nilus, see Annot. on Chap. 41. vers. 34.) because they had not store, and stocke enough to serve for bread, and seed; and it was to no purpose to sow, when Joseph by revelation knew there would be no returne to recompence the cost; the earth being by barrennesse unable to pay not the use but the principall also; God revealing this unto Joseph, made him a meanes of much mercy to thousands of people, who (but for his providence and provision) might have perished by famine.

V. 8. But God] Albeit God detesteth sinne, he turneth mans wickednesse to serve to his glory; as Joseph saith unto his brethren; Ye thought evill against me, but God meant it unto good to bring to passe (as at this day) to save much people alive, Chap. 50. vers. 20. So that Joseph in this speech doth not meane to cleare his brethren from all fault, but to cheere them up in contemplation of Gods providence, who turned their malice, and his misery into a meanes of great mercy; And indeed God is so good, that out of the worst conspiracies, and deeds of the wicked, he can worke the greatest welfare; as from the bloody counsels of Herod, and Pilate, and many others against our Saviour, Act. 4. 27. the salvation of the elect, Ephes. 1. 7. This may minister comfort, and confidence against the plots, and attempts of the wicked; wherein though they meane nothing but mischiefe, God can by his omnipotent providence bring forth quite contrary effects to that they intend; and as he brings light out of darknesse, 2 Cor. 4. 6. so he can bring peace out of warre, quiet and orderly government out of confused rebellion; and the ruine of Antichrist by that way, whereby he hopes to reigne with glory, and securitie: and this may likewise moderate our minds towards the wicked (as we see in Joseph toward his brethren) that we neither malice their persons, nor breake out into any unwarrantable dealing towards them.

a father to Pharaoh] That is, a counsellour or teacher; for such a one is called a father, Judg. 17. 10, 11. For he that counselleth, and teacheth another, doth (if the one be wise, the other tractable) rule and governe him, as if he had the authoritie of a father over him; so was it betwixt Joseph, and Pharaoh; Joseph advised, and Pharaoh assented; and so much regarded his judgement, that in the publique affaires, none might move a hand, or foot against his mind, Chap. 41. vers. 44.

V. 10. Goshen] Goshen was a Province in Egypt situate betwixt the river Nilus, and the red Sea, bordering upon the Land of Canaan, it was a fruitfull soyle, fit for the breeding, and increase of cattell; where Jacob, and his sonnes might commodiously keepe their flockes of sheepe, with lesse offence to the Egyptians, then any where else, Shepherds being generally an abomination to the Egyptians, Gen. 46. 34. and this promise Joseph maketh to his father either after particular conference with, and licence from Pharaoh to that purpose, or out of confidence of his favourable assent, whensoever the motion was made unto him, as appeareth, Chap. 47. vers. 4. 6.

thou shalt be neere] For the Citie of On where Joseph had his chiefe habitation, was neere to Goshen.

V. 12. that it is my mouth] Your eyes and eares may both be witnesses, that I your brother Joseph spake unto you, by mine own mouth, without an interpreter, whom before I used, Chap. 42. 23. and in Hebrew, our native tongue, have I told you such things, as, were I not your brother, I could not tell you.

V. 15. kissed also his brethren] See Annot. on Chap. 29. vers. 11. & on Chap. 31. 55.

and wept upon them] See Annot. on vers. 2. of this Chapter.

V. 16. it pleased Pharaoh] It was more easie for Pharaoh to be well pleased with the coming of Josephs kindred, because he was too high to envie him or any of them; but it was much that Courtiers were so farre from envie, as to rejoyce in so much grace conferred on a stranger favourite, which yet might be but a dissembled content; and while they seemed to honour Joseph, they might but humour the King.

V. 17. And Pharaoh said] Pharaoh for Josephs sake sheweth himselfe very kinde to Josephs kindred; A good man in honour and favour in the Court, may be a meanes of much good to many in the countrey.

V. 18. the good of the land] That is, the chiefest fruits, and commodities.

the fat of the land] The Hebrewes call that by the name of fat in many things, which is the best of that kinde. See Gen. 27. vers. 28.

V. 20. regard not your stuffe] That is, what you cannot conveniently carry with you, doe not care to leave it behind you; for you shall be furnished here with what you shall have need of.

V. 22. changes of raiment] That is, (as some conceive) a course garment for private use within the house, and a more precious suit to weare abroad; Or change of garments, is such precious garments as will move a man to change those he had before, to put the old off, and put on these, 2 King. 5. 22. Zach. 3. 4. Or, changes of raiment might be of upper garments, which were not made for any body in particular, but might indifferently be worne by any; such garments they put on often; and it may be they had more need of change, because they used in passionate griefe to teare their cloathes, especially those which covered all the rest, as Chap. 37. 29. 34. & Chap. 44. 13. and many other places. Hence it was that change of garments were not onely given in testimony of honour, or favour; but as wagers upon contestation, or triall of any matter in doubt, as Judg. 14. 12.

but to Benjamin] He sheweth more kindnesse to Benjamin then to any of the rest, as appeareth not onely here, but Chap. 43. 34. and vers. 14. of this Chapter, because he was his brother by both parents; which sheweth that the greatest measure of naturall affection belongeth to the neerest degree of naturall kindred.

V. 23. after this manner] That is, (as some conceive) both money and changes of raiment, in proportion to that he gave unto his brethren, and according to the respect he bare unto him; but it is more probable that after this manner should be referred to what followeth, then to the particulars fore-mentioned.

V. 24. fall not out by the way] Of this caution there was some need, because it was like one would lay the blame on another, and by excusing on one side, and aggravating on another, they might make a quarrell about him, who had remitted all the wrongs, and was now reconciled to them all.

V. 26. Jacobs heart fainted] The conflict betwixt hope, and doubt; joy, and feare, but especially feare prevailing put Jacob into a swooning or fainting fit.

he beleeved them not] Vehement passions whether of joy, as Luk. 24. 41. or of feare, are great impediments to faith; and there was the lesse beliefe given unto them, because they had told a lye of Joseph to make Jacob beleeve that Joseph was dead; A just reward for a Lier, that when he telleth truth, he should not be beleeved.

V. 27. revived] It is said, his spirit revived, when he saw the wagons, but if he were as dead in a swoone before, (and if he were not, how was he revived?) he could not see them. Answ. His fainting, or fayling of spirit might not be so much as to take away his senses; or if it were, they might return before he recovered the livelinesse of his spirit; and then seeing what was sent from Egypt, and thereby assured against all doubting, he was cheered up with the beliefe of Josephs safetie and honour, as they had reported it.

V. 28. It is enough] Enough content for me, that Joseph lives; and enough for life, if I may be so happy as to see him once before I die, Gen. 46. 30.

CHAP. XLVI.

Vers. 1. Beersheba] A place distant from Hebron (where Jacob now dwelt) about eight Germane miles: that is, of our English miles thirtie two: it was the ready way from Egypt to Canaan, and the utmost part of the Land of Canaan Southward toward Egypt. The word Beersheba, signifieth the well of the oath, or swearing: whereof see Annot. on Chap. 21. vers. 31. Here Abraham and Isaac had dwelled a long time, where they had built Altars, and offered sacrifices to God many times; and here doth Jacob offer sacrifice unto him, by way of thankfulnesse for former mercies, and of supplication for further favour in his journey. It is good to have recourse unto God, which way soever we take our course in the world.

the God of his father Isaac] Whereby he signified that he worshipped the true God, and also that he kept in his heart the possession of the Land, from whence present necessitie drove him; and he calleth him the God of his father Isaac, rather then of Abraham, (though he were his God also) because he learned to know him, and serve him by his father, and not by his grandfather. See Annot. on Chap. 31. vers. 42.

V. 2. in the visions of the night] God watcheth in the night over the welfare of those that sincerely serve him in the day. What this vision was, and in what manner it was, the Scripture is silent, and it becometh not us to be curiously inquisitive after it; but the apparition was no dumbe ceremonie, for the word of God was joyned with it. Of visions see Annot. on Chap. 15. vers. 1.

Jacob, Jacob,] Moses calleth him Israel, and God calleth him Jacob, and that twice together; so in the fifth verse he is called once Israel, and Jacob twice; therefore when the name Israel was imposed, and the name Jacob forbidden, the prohibition was not absolute, but comparative: See Annot. on Chap. 32. vers. 28. The doubling of the name was to raise up Jacobs attention, as Chap. 22. vers. 11. & 1 Sam. 3. 10. and for assured confirmation, for there is that use of doubling of words, as there is of doubling of dreames, Chap. 41. vers. 32.

V. 3. feare not] Though Jacob had good cause to hope well both both of his warrant for this journey into Egypt, of his welcome thither, and welfare there; yet his thoughts by the way might suggest unto him causes of feare of many kinds: First, concerning himselfe, he might feare, whether he might lawfully goe downe into Egypt, though for reliefe against the famine, because Isaac his father was forbidden to goe thither upon the like occasion, Gen.26. 2 He might feare that being old and feeble, he might dye by the way: 2.ly. concerning his posteritie he might apprehend perill both to their soules, and to their bodies; to their soules by idolatry, because the Egyptians were much addicted to it, (and indeed afterwards it appeared the Israelites were infected with it, who learned to worship a Calfe of them who worshipped a Cow) and by dissoluteness, because it was a pleasant, and plentifull Countrey, and the people were given to ease, and delicacie; which corrupt the manners, and incline the mind to sensuall pleasures: and for their bodies, knowing the prediction of their servitude in that Countrey, Chap 15.13. he might feare that now to come downe into Eygpt, was to make haste to that miserable condition, which but too soone would come upon them: And thirdly, concerning both; he might haply feare, that going thither his eies might see that which would not so afflict him if he kept him thence; and that he and his posteritie going thither, might seeme to forsake the Land of Promise, the pledge of the heavenly Canaan.

there make of thee a great nation] God promiseth there a great multiplication of his off-spring, where he most feared their suppression; and he made good his word to the full, for they went into Egypt but seventy soules; Exod.1.5. and there came out of Egypt of those that came out of Jacobs loines (notwithstanding the Egyptians did what they could to diminish their number) about sixe hundred thousand men, besides children, Exod.12 37 which was a miraculous increase; especially if we consider that it was brought forth in the space of two hundred and fifteene yeares: whereas in two hundred and fifteene yeares (next before Jacobs descending into Egypt,) the posteritie of Abraham by Isaac and Jacob, was increased but to seventie persons: See Deut.10.22.

V. 4. I will goe downe with thee] Conducting and defending thee by my power, and disposing of thy condition, and those that are thine, by my providence; so that though I be every where, I will be with thee there in especiall favour, to blesse thee, and those thou bringest with thee.

bring thee up againe] That is, in thy posteritie; for the Progenitors live in their posteritie who descend from them, and are a part of them, especially when God doth good unto them, in the name of their forefathers, and for their sakes; which is the case betwixt Israel, and his seed, who are therefore (though many descents removed from him) called by his name, not onely the children of Israel, but Israel, in many places of the Scripture, both of the Old and New Testament. Besides, when Jacob was dead, he was brought back, and buried in the Land of Canaan, Chap.50.13. to take possession of the promise.

his hands upon thine eyes] Shall shut thine eyes, when thou diest; which appertained to him, who was the chiefe and most dearely beloved of the kindred; thus God incourageth Jacob against all his feares, and indeed it had beene enough (if he had said no more) to cheere him up, and to secure him against all discomforts that he said, he would goe downe with him; but out of the abundance of his goodnesse, besides that most gracious, though generall, promise, he tels him that he will bring him (viz. in his posteritie) up againe, and that Joseph shall there close up his eyes.

V. 6. gotten in the land of Canaan] Jacob had gotten much riches in Mesopotamia, but that is not reckoned of in comparison of his increase in the Land of Canaan: besides, his children now had stocks gotten there, who were not of age to get riches in the Countrey from whence he came into that Land; here is no mention of servants, yet having servants (as so great an estate could not well be without them) it is not like they left them behind them.

V. 7. his daughters] He had but one daughter of his owne, which was Dinah, and but one of his sonnes had a child of that sexe (it was Asher) and he had but one daughter, to wit, Serah, vers. 17. so that here we must take the word daughters (by enallage, a figure putting one number for another) for daughter, as sonnes for sonne, vers.23. of this Chapter, which is often used in the Hebrew Tongue. See Chap.21.7. & 50.v.23. Numb.26.8. 1 Chron.2.8.31.

V. 8. these are the names] A register of their names, and the number of their persons is here brought in at their entrance into Egypt, that it may appeare how strangely they were multiplied at their going out of Egypt. See Deut.10.22.

V. 12. Hezron and Hamul] These were borne afterward in Egypt, yet they are said here to come with Jacob into Egypt, because they came in the loines of their father Pharez, in which they lay hid.

V. 15. thirtie and three] Making Jacob himselfe one in this account; as vers.8.

V. 20. Priest of On] See Annot. on Chap.41. vers.45.

V. 21. The sonnes of Benjamin] Of which are reckoned ten, where may be said of some of them as of Hezron and Hamul, for he was but twenty foure yeares old when he came into Egypt.

V. 26. soules] That is, persons, by a Synecdoche familiar and frequent in Scripture, whereby the soule, the better part, is put for the whole man: for the soule it selfe cometh not from the loines of the fathers of our flesh, but from God the Father of Spirits, Heb.12 9. Eccles 12.7.

loines] Or, thigh. This is put, in modestie, for the part betwixt the thighs; and the rather because (as Anatomists write) there bee veines in the thigh, which rising from the veines of the loines, goe along to that part, and carry in the matter for the seed of generation. Of the modest expressions of the Scripture, see Annot. on Gen. 4. 1. and the fourth Annot. on Chap.49.10.

threescore and sixe] Not reckoning in this number either Jacob or Joseph, or his two sonnes, who were in Egypt already.

V. 27. threescore and ten] (Exod.1.5. & Deut.10 22.) This is made the totall summe of all the house of Jacob which came into Egypt; and to make up that number, Jacob, as head of the family, is one, and Joseph, (though he were in Egypt before) is another, and Josephs two sonnes born in Egypt are reckoned with them, and all foure added to the number of sixty sixe (noted, vers. 26) are just seventy: so that this number consists wholly of Jacob, and his off-spring, whereof all but three came with Jacob into Egypt; of those three, one was Joseph who came before, and two came not at all, being borne there; yet they that came with him, are said to be seventy, the totall taking its denomination from the greater part; but without any appearance of errour or fraud, in that the story setteth downe plainly, not onely who came with Jacob, but who came not, v.12. and in this vers. In this place there were no great difficultie, but that Act.7.14. Stephen addeth five more to these seventie, saying, Then sent Joseph and called his father Jacob unto him, and all his kindred, threescore and fifteene soules: The Seventie Interpreters, though they keepe the just number of seventie in their Translation of Deut. 10.22. yet in this verse, and Exod. 1.5. they make the number to be seventie five, which five are Machir the sonne, and Gilead his sonne, and nephew, or grandchild of Manasses, and Sutalam and Taham two sonnes of Ephraim, and Edom his grandchild by Sutalam; which they seeme to have taken as a supplement out of 1 Chron.7.14.20. though neither the names nor number well agree; and to the five forenamed, they adde two more, vers.29. So that by their account, if they reckon right, they should give in for the full number not seventy five, but seventy seven. But for that Translation of the Septuagint, which was not free from errour, when it was at the best, but now is much more corrupt then it was at first, there needs no more adoe, but to correct it by the Hebrew text in this vers. which must be the Standard to all Translations, and Testimonies. For this matter that which is more considerable, and questionable is, how it cometh to passe that Stephen speaking of the number, and ~~Saint~~ Luke writing of it, both set down no fewer then seventy five, Act.7.14. The Doway Translators (in Augustines name) making the doubt insoluble, give it up as a mystery to meere silence; and this the rather, because they would have the Scripture conceived to be so hard, that it is not fit to be read by Lay people: and they that answer the Objection, either endevour to cleare the greater number from errour, or else confesse it with Caution against inconveniencies, that may ensue upon it: For the first, the reconcilement is endevoured by some, by saying, that to make up that number, there is use of the figure called Anticipation, whereby they are put in, as then brought into Egypt, who were not borne untill afterwards; who yet might be said to come in with Jacob, because they were once in his loines who came thither, though not then when he came in, their father being both borne, and in Egypt also before the time of Jacobs removall; so Levi is said to pay tithes to Melchisedec in Abraham, Heb.7.9. though Levi were not till at least an hundred and fiftie yeares after their time; as Leah is said to beare unto Jacob 33. sonnes, and daughters, vers.15. of this Chapter, and Zilpah to beare unto Jacob sixteene soules, vers. 18. whereas they were not all their immediate children, but many of them grandchildren, for which they never groaned, for they had other mothers, both to conceive and beare them; and of those who are reckoned for the children of Benjamin, who are of the number of them that make up the seventie that came with Jacob into Egypt, Naaman and Ard, named, vers.21. were grandchildren to Benjamin, the sonnes of Bela, Numb.26.40. which were borne after Jacobs coming into Egypt, for Benjamin was then too young to be a grandfather, when Jacob came thither; and there is this relation betwixt the progenitors, and their off-spring; that as the children are included in their parents, so the parents are sometimes included in their children; as where God cheering up Jacob concerning his journey, telleth him not onely that he will goe downe with him into Egypt, but that he

he will bring him up againe into Canaan, verſ. 4. which is principally to be underſtood of his poſteritie: See Annot. on verſ. 4. Object. But if theſe five be added, becauſe they were virtually in the loines of Jacob, there might be added as well five thouſand, yea ſixe hundred thouſand, to which the Iſraelites increaſed, as hath beene noted on verſ. 3. for all theſe are virtually included in Jacobs loines. Anſw. That will not follow: Firſt, becauſe the ſcope of this genealogie was to diſtinguiſh the Tribes, and to ſhew from how ſmall a number they increaſed to ſo great a multitude. Secondly, that being the purpoſe it muſt be confined to a certaine number, and that number made up of ſuch as either were, or might be, of one family; as the father, ſonne, and grandchild, and great grandchild, which Jacob might ſee before he died. And of theſe the moſt being ſuch as he brought with him out of Canaan, they might all in reference to Jacob, be ſorted to his company. Some conceive that beſides Jacob, and thoſe that are reckoned as deſcended from him, there might be added five women of his company, who were wives. If this doe not ſatisfie, the other anſwer is the confeſſion of errour, and that is diverſly applied. Firſt, to the Seventie Interpreters. Secondly, to thoſe that copied out the Scripture at the firſt. Thirdly, to Stephen. Fourthly, to Luke. Firſt, for the Seventie Interpreters of the Old Teſtament, though divers Popiſh Doctors hold they were inſpired by the Holy Ghoſt (and ſo make it of unqueſtionable authoritie) yet it is, eſpecially as now it is extant, very erroneous, and in this point in queſtion contradictory to it ſelfe; for in Deut. 10. 22. and this place it tranſlateth (but according to the Hebrew Originall) threeſcore and tenne, or ſeventie; and Exod. 1. 5. it addeth five more. Secondly, for thoſe that copied out the Scripture in the New Teſtament (being ignorant in the Hebrew) they might either corrupt the Greeke Originall, by conforming it to the Text of the Septuagint, which was in much uſe and account in the Primitive Church, even in the time of our Saviour; or might miſtake the word Pente, five, for Pantes, all; and this if it were their errour, was very ancient, elſe it could never have beene ſo generall; nor would the Syriack Tranſlation have ſeventie five; (as the Septuagint Greek hath) and that for the New Teſtament, is ſo ancient, that in time it came very neere the Originall, and is thought by ſome to have beene made in the time of the firſt Antiochian Chriſtians. Thirdly, for Saint Stephen, ſome conceive he related the ſtory of Jacobs coming into Egypt, according to the Edition of the Seventie Interpreters, which was in much uſe and eſtimation in his time, and which brings in the number with variation, for it twice reckons ſeventie five, and but once ſeventie; which whether it may be imputed to his ignorance of the Hebrew, as ſome ſay, or (confeſſing that he underſtood and ſpake Hebrew at that time, as others, both by conjecture onely) to his unwillingneſſe to contradict a Tranſlation ſo accounted of by the beleeving Greeks, or to ſuch a meaning of the words of addition, as hath beene formerly ſet downe, is not eaſie to reſolve; and in caſe he ſhould miſtake the Tranſlation for the Originall Text, and ſo be in an errour (which is the worſt that can be made of the colliſion, or oppoſition betwixt this place, and Act. 7. 14.) the matter is not ſo dangerous, as ſome conceive it; for though Stephen were ſaid to be a man full of the Holy Ghoſt, Act. 6. 5. & Chap. 7. 55. yet that is no more then was required for qualification of all the ſeven Deacons, Act. 6. 3. Nor was he an inſpired Penman of the Scripture, more then any of the reſt of that rank; nor were the Apoſtles alwaies, and equally inlightned by the Holy Ghoſt, though the ſame phraſe be uſed of them, which was applied to Stephen (as of Peter, Act. 4. 8. and of Paul, Act 9. 17.) and that in a ſenſe importing more infallible aſſiſtance; for Peter who could tell by the Holy Ghoſt, that Ananias, and Sapphira told a lye, Act. 5. 3. was not told by the Holy Ghoſt, what buſineſſe the men had with him that came from Cornelius, Act. 10. 21. Nor did he know the meaning of the viſion of the veſſell like unto a ſheete, when it was ſhewed unto him, verſ. 17. and when God ſpake to him to kill, and eat of that which was preſented to him, he anſwered (not by the inſtinct of the Holy Ghoſt, but rather as reſiſting it) not ſo Lord, verſ. 14. Nor was he ſo guided by the Spirit as Paul was, when he deſerved ſuch a ſharpe rebuke, as Paul gave him to his face, Gal. 2. from verſ. 11. to the 15. Nor was Paul alwaies in the ſame ſort aſſiſted by the Holy Ghoſt, and therefore he diſtinguiſheth betwixt direction given by himſelfe, and that which cometh by inſpiration from the Lord, 1 Cor. 7. verſ. 10. 12. See Annot. on Chap. 40. verſ. 14. It is not neceſſary then to beleeve that Stephen was infallibly aſſiſted in all hee ſaid in his Apologie to the Councell; and if he did either not know the Originall Hebrew, which ſaith ſeventy ſoules; or cited the erroneous Greeke of the Septuagint not knowing it to be erroneous in a matter of ſo ſmall moment as this (which in effect is of no great weight for faith, or manners) ſince he was neither an Amanuenſis, or Scribe to the Holy Ghoſt; nor delivered that number of ſeventie five, as a Dictate of the Holy Ghoſt; the miſpriſion is no prejudice at all to the truth of Religion, or to the Authoritie of the holy Text, on which we are bound to ground our beliefe. Fourthly, and laſtly, for Luke, (though ſome think him as ignorant of the Hebrew Text in this Chapter, and Exod. 1. 5. & Deut. 10. 22. Or as complying with the times, wherein the Greeke Edition of the Seventie was in great reputation) I doubt not but without any ſuch excuſe as binds to the impeachment of his authoritie, (as this doth) we may ſay, that though Stephen were miſtaken, he was not; for as an Hiſtorian, he was bound to make the report according to Stephens ſpeech; which be it good, or bad, true, or falſe, muſt in hiſtoricall truth be related, as it was; and ſo we need not conceive there was any corruption of the Sacred Text, whereof we ought to be more chary then of Stephens credit, when it is no more concerned, or impeached, then in the premiſes hath beene ſhewed; for to ſay that it is erroneous, generally erroneous in all, or in moſt of the Copies in this place, is to bring the whole Bible under doubt, and ſuſpition of errour, and ſo to ſhake the foundation of our faith; and if the tranſcribers of the New Teſtament might juſtly here be ſuſpected, ſo generally to have miſ-written this Text, Act. 7. 14. it had beene requiſite by the Hebrew Originall in this place to have corrected it how ancient ſoever had been the errour, whether of the Syriack, or any other Language whatſoever. But ſuppoſing Stephen to have ſpoken (as hath beene noted) and Luke to have truly written what he ſpake, there can be none inference made from that, which we may not ſafely acknowledge without diminution of due reſpect to, and with reſervation of infallible aſſiſtance in the holy Scripture. Object. If it be ſaid, that God promiſed ſuch aſſiſtance of his Spirit to thoſe, that ſhould be called in queſtion for his Cauſe, (as Stephen was) that they ſhould not need to take any thought for what they ſhould ſay, Luk. 12. 11. And ſo what they ſaid muſt be taken not for an humane, but for a Divine anſwer; and conſequently muſt of neceſſitie be free from errour. Anſw. Thoſe words are no generall promiſe to every one that is drawn to the Barre of an unchriſtian Tribunall, but to the Apoſtles, as is plaine by Matth. 10. 19. And though God might, and doubtleſſe did, many times inſpire apologies into the hearts of other holy witneſſes of his truth; yet this promiſe in regard of perſons, and of perpetuitie, was the peculiar priviledge of the Apoſtles.

V. 28. to direct his face] That is, to meet him at Goſhen, and to appoint a convenient place for that purpoſe.

V. 29. he fell on his neck] That is, Jacob fell on Joſephs neck; for Joſeph, notwithſtanding his greatneſſe in Egypt, no doubt came downe to performe the offices belonging to the affections of a ſonne; and ſo in that poſture Jacob fell on his neck, and wept over him with teares of exceeding great joy. See Chap. 45. 1.

V. 30. let me die] See Annot. on Chap. 45. verſ. 28.

V. 31. unto him, My brethren] He was not aſhamed of his kindred, though they were of mean condition in the opinion of the Egyptians: See Chap. 47. 7. In this Joſeph was a Type of our Saviours humilitie, who though he were Lord, not of Egypt, but of all Lands, and of heaven as well as of earth; was not aſhamed to call the meaneſt of the godly, brethren, Heb. 2. 11.

V. 34. in the land of Goſhen] Herein Joſeph ſheweth his modeſtie, prudence, and goodneſſe, in that he would not place them in the Court, where they might be corrupted with ill manners.

abomination] God ſuffereth the world to hate his, that they may forſake the filth of the world, and cleave to him: and they were an abomination becauſe they did kill and eate thoſe creatures which the Egyptians did adore as Gods: See Exod. 8. 26. Yet the Egyptians nouriſhed ſuch cattell, though not for meat, or ſacrifice, yet for delight and profit by their milke and wooll, and manuring of the ground, and by paſſing them by bargaine and commerce. See Annot. on Chap. 43. v. 32.

in the land of Goſhen] Pharaoh made a franke offer of all the Land of Egypt for their choice, and uſe, Gen. 45. verſ. 18. 20. and it ſeemeth Goſhen was moſt commodious for them, both as neereſt unto Canaan, and freeſt from offence to the Egyptians; to whom ſhepherds (and ſuch were Jacob and his children) were an abomination, Chap. 46. verſ. 34. and here they were placed at firſt by vertue of that generall power which Joſeph had in all the Land of Egypt, or by Pharaoh his profeſſed favour, Gen. 45. verſ. 18. 20. but afterward this Land, upon the requeſt of Joſephs brethren, was by particular allowance, the place of their abode. See Annot. on Chap. 45. verſ. 10.

V. 2. Some of his brethren] Hebr. Of the extremity of his brethren, five in number; which five they were, is not ſet downe; though ſome Jewes take upon them to tell them by name, as the Papiſts do by the Wiſe-men that came by the guidance of a Starre Starre to worship our Saviour. Some think because of the word Extremity, or the last, or outside of his brethren, that he took five of the eldest, or five of the youngest, which were the extreames, and left the middlemost; others conceive he made no choyce at all, but took such as came first, or were readiest when he required their presence before Pharaoh; others think he made choyce of the worst, such as might be least like to be taken for his servants, or to be made Courtiers, whereof he was unwilling, because he was loath to adventure them upon the corruption of the Court; others that he made choice of such as were most gracefull, and least lyable to scorn, or contempt of curious or envious Courtiers: But he made choyce of such as himself best liked, and were fittest to be brought into the presence of the King; and this he did that the King might be assured they were come, and might see what manner of men they were.

V. 3. What is your Occupation?] A meet question for a Magistrate to aske, to which they that cannot give a reasonable answer are to be suspected to be idle, and ill conditioned persons; for he that hath no lawfull calling to follow, is loose and at leisure to be taken into the Devils service; the ground that is not tilled, will bring forth noysome weeds; and the standing Poole (not the running River) will soone stinke; and if the Sea did not work, and were not in continuall motion to purge it self; it would corrupt the ayre; and the ayre (but that winds do fan and purifie it, by moving it to and fro) would be infectious: So it is with those that are idle, they are most commonly vicious in themselves, and the causes of corruption unto others; therefore have the wisest States made the strictest Lawes against idle persons, whose severity is vertually approved by the Apostle, condemning idlenesse as a capitall crime, to the pain of death, yea, to one of the worst of deaths, famine; enacting, as the fundamentall law of a Bride-well, He that will not labour let him not eat, 2 *Thess.*3. 10.

Shepherds] Hebr. A shepherd in the singular number, that is, every one of us is a shepherd; the like Enallage, or joyning the singular number with the plurall, see *Gen.*27.29.

V. 4. No pasture] In Canaan there was a failing of the pasture sooner then in Egypt, because that is an higher ground then Egypt; and Goshen is the lower part of it, and so better stored with water, both in the ground it self, and with ditches and gutturs deriving water from Nilus.

Let thy servants dwell] This request of Josephs brethren was made no doubt, by his direction; wherein his modesty appeareth, in that hee would not take upon him to settle them there without the Kings allowance. See Annot. on *vers.*1.

V. 6. Is before thee] That is, open to thee for thy free choice; and since they desire to dwell in the Land of Goshen, let them dwell there.

Of activity] Pharaoh would not set over his cattell any one that was not meetly qualified for the sufficient oversight of them; much more curious choyce should be made of those who must have the oversight of the flock of Gods pasture, who are men, *Ezek.*34.31. then of flocks of sheep or heards of cattell.

V. 7. Brought in Jacob his father] See Annot. Chap. 46. vers.31.

Jacob blessed Pharaoh] That is, prayed for him; as *Numb.*6. 23, 24. Rom. 12. 14. and gave thankes to him for his great favour to Joseph, and to himselfe, and the rest of his sonnes, praising him for his beneficence to them; for the word Blessing is used in that sense, *Ephes.*1.3. James 3.9. and in many other places.

V. 9. Of my pilgrimage] That is, variable abode, or sojourning; such is the life and condition of all the faithfull in this world, who account themselves as Pilgrims, and strangers here, 1 Chro. 29. 15. *Psal.*39.12. and 119. 19. Hebr. 11. 13. and heaven to be their home, (which is meant by the Apostle, *Hebr.*13.14.) to which they are travelling every day: yet Jacobs condition was a pilgrimage in respect of frequent changing of his dwelling, as from Canaan to Mesopotamia, Chap.28. 5. from Mesopotamia to Canaan againe, Chap.31. vers.17,18. and in Canaan from Succoth to Sechem, Chap.33.18. from Sechem to Bethel, Chap.35.6. from Bethel to Ephrath, vers.16. from Ephrath to Hebron, vers.27. from Hebron to Egypt, Chap.46. which must be remembred by such as by crosses are occasioned to shift from place to place, wherein they may take comfort, if their affections be as like unto the Patriarch Jacobs, as their condition; since God dealeth none otherwise with them, then with such as he dearly loveth.

An hundred and thirty yeares] By a Chronologicall comparing of places, not onely the age of Jacob in some remarkable passages of his life is to be observed, but the ages likewise of his children; Jacob when he was brought before Pharaoh was an hundred and thirty yeares old, that being the third year (though not compleat) of the famine, Cha.45.6. Joseph was then betwixt thirty nine, and forty yeares old, for seven yeares before the famine began, he was thirty yeares old, Gen. 41. 46. so that he was borne the 91. yeare of Jacobs age, and the fourteenth yeare of his service under Laban, which began in the seventy seventh yeare of his age, and Jacob now being an hundred and thirty yeares old, Joseph about nine and thirty, Reuben was about six and forty, &c.

few and evill] (Job 14.1.) Few, in comparison of many of his fore-fathers; evill in respect of his manifold crosses, which some reckon to seven, some to ten.

years of the life of my fathers] For his father Isaac lived to an hundred eightie yeares of age, Chap. 35. 28. his grandfather Abraham to one hundred seventy five, Chap.25.7.

V. 10. blessed Pharaoh] It is like that as his first salutation was with a blessing, so was his farewell. See Annot.on vers.7.

V. 11. the land of Rameses] That is not a Towne or a City, (though there were a Citie of that name built a good while after this by the Israelites, Exod.1.11.) but a speciall part of the Province of Goshen, (as an Hundred within a Countie) where Jacob and his sonnes were first placed by themselves, but afterward multiplying into a great number, they spread further, and had Egyptian families neere unto them, and among them; whence it was that the Angels distinguished their doores by the sprinkling of blood, Exod.12. vers.7.23. and that the Israelites departing, borrowed jewels of their neighbours the Egyptians, Exod. Chap.12. vers.35.37.

V. 12. according to their families] Or, as a little child is nourished. Heb. even to the mouth of the little one. That is, from the greatest to the least; or with such tendernesse as that wherewith a Nurse feedeth her little one; or with as little care, or paines to Jacob and his off-spring, as children use in providing for themselves: a figurative speech, importing Josephs great care for them, and their secure confidence for provision by his meanes; and an evident proofe of Gods gracious providence, in sustaining his Church with fulnesse among strangers, and, by their Religion, enemies unto it; when they themselves were scanted in allowance.

V. 13. the land ---- fainted] That is, the people of the Land.

V. 14. all the money] He went not into Canaan to gather money, but that which was brought out of Canaan to buy corne withall, and the money wherewith the Egyptians bought their provision, he brought unto Pharaoh; wherein he declareth his fidelitie toward the King, and his mind free from covetousnesse.

V. 18. the second yeare] Not the second yeare of the famine, (for it was the sixth yeare) but the second of those extreme hard yeares, wherein they were put to the greatest straits to procure provision, not having any money after the ordinary manner of commerce to buy it; the first yeare of such straits was the fifth yeare, when the people (all their money being spent) bought bread with flesh, giving their flocks, and heards in exchange for corne; this is reckoned for the first yeare of their extremitie; and this yeare ended, they came the next yeare after, (which is reckoned the second yeare) and set themselves, and their lands to sale for bread.

V. 19. we and our land] The Land cannot properly be said to die; but as death is the destruction of man for this life, so the destruction and desolation of the Land is a kind of death to it; and it may be said to be desolate, when either it wants seed to be sowen upon it, or men to dwell in it; as when men have eaten up the corne that came of it, and the ground hath eaten up the men that dwelt upon it; and as trees while they beare fruit are said to live, so may the ground; and fruitlesnesse and barrennesse is a kind of death to both.

V. 19. give us seed] That, as to the most, might be corne for bread, (for that which is for seed will serve for bread) but to some who had ground upon the bankes of Nilus, it might be in use to sow for increase; for there onely was hope, though none abundance to be expected.

V. 20. Joseph bought all] How excellent are those creatures in their want, which when they abound, are esteemed as base, and wasted in abuse? now the famine is grievous, corne is precious, and worthy to be bought with money, goods, lands, liberties, and all; for without it men cannot live, and what service can all these things doe a man when he is dead? God doth both wisely, and justly, when by such restraint he makes men know the worth of what they had, by the want thereof.

V. 21. from one end of the borders] Having gotten their lands for corne, he made them change their habitations, that they might not plead an ancient possession, and might with more chearefulnesse pay their rent, which they would more willingly doe in those places, where they were but new comers, then in those whereof they had beene ancient owners. It may seeme strange that so many being pinched with famine, would have the patience to part first with their money, then with their cattell; lastly with their lands, and liberties; and that they did not mutinously meet, and violently breake open the Barnes, or storehouses where the corne was kept; this was the effect of Josephs prudence, but especially of Gods power, and providence, which stilleth the noise of the sea, and the tumult of the people, Psal.65.7. Quest. But did not Joseph deale injuriously, or uncharitably with them, by such advantages of their necessities to ingrosse all their goods, and to inthrall all their persons?

V. 5–7. Think it not needless to recall and renew Repentance for old Sins. This was comitted about 42 years before; yet now the Lord will have the wound bleed afresh: We should, at times, bleed out our Confessions and Repentances, even for old Sins. These two were rugged pieces needing many knocks.

Obs. 5. Those Evils that the Lord inflicts upon his people, and that for Sin; He can, and does, upon their Repentance, turn them to great Good: tho this is not seen presently. This Dispersation in Scattering the Levites all Israel over — was after turned into great good; both to themselves, and unto Israel; when upon their zeal for God against Idolaters, they were consecrated to be Teachers in Israel (Jewish writers say, the men of Simeon's Tribe became Scribes, and Teachers of Schools: but that is uncertain) See Exod. 32. 26–29. Deut. 33. 8, 9, 10, 11. ——— Thus in many Sufferings of the martyrs, they have seen them to be just upon them for their Sin: and God hath it may be secretly, but swiftly chastised some Sin of theirs therein: but yet He hath turned them properly into another Channel, and made them to be to them a Crown of Honor. ——— Mitchel, p. 214.

To that it may be answered; First, that Joseph was the means under God to save their lives, (as themselves acknowledged, vers. 25.) from an horrible death, and therefore by him they received more good, then hurt. Secondly, the corne he sold was the Kings, at least the most part of it; and Joseph was, in fidelitie to him, to take a valuable recompence for it. Thirdly, he did this with favour, for though they sold themselves for corne, he restored their libertie. Fourthly, whereas he might have taken halfe, or foure parts, and left them but the other halfe, or one of five; he allowed them foure parts, and conditioned but for a fifth unto the King, vers. 24. which was no more then was laid up in the yeares of plenty, Chap. 41. vers. 34.

V. 22. Onely the land of the Priests] This proceeded not of Josephs care (for he would not be so respective of Idolatrous Priests) but of Pharaohs, and yet the lands of the Priests might the rather be kept from alienation, because Potipherah, Josephs father in law, was Priest of On; for whose sake he is supposed by some to have favoured all the Priests; but in this Indulgence, though Joseph had an hand, he had no heart; but as an Officer of Pharaoh, made an order, or drew up a sentence, for reservation of the rights and revenues of the Priests, which had beene anciently allowed them by the good liking of Prince and people, throughout the whole land: the case is much alike among the reformed Christians in France, who pay their tithes to the Idolatrous Priests of the Romish Religion, because they are not left at liberty to withhold them from their hands: this (though it make not for the Popish opinion of exemption of the Clergie from the Secular power, (for which they plead by this example) yet it condemnes the irreligion of many Christians, who shew little reverence or respect, if not much uncharitableneſse, or contempt toward the Ministers of the Gospel; against whom the men of Egypt in the Day of Judgement shal rise up, and condemne them, as the men of Nineveh, against those that regarded not the preaching of our Saviour, Mat. 12. 41.

V. 23. seed---- and you shall sow] This was the last of the seven yeares famine, and the next was to beginne with the returne of former fruitfulneſse.

V. 25. Pharaohs servants] Tilling the land as his farmers and tenants, and not making claime to any as of their proper right, according to their title and possession in former times.

V. 29. thy hand under my thigh] See Annot. on Chap. 24. vers. 2.

V. 30. But I will lie] Heb. I will sleepe. Which may be meant with reference to the resurrection of the dead; which some Papists (with the Sadduces) say, it cannot be proved by the Books of Moses; but here sleeping implieth a waking again, and death is the sleepe, resurrection an awaking from that sleepe.

with my fathers] Jacob had no mind of the company of Idolaters, neither living nor dead: See Annot. on Chap. 23. 9. And he desired to be buried with his fathers for many reasons; as first, because there was the true worship of God most to flourish: secondly, thither his posteritie were to direct their thoughts with expectation of returne out of Egypt: thirdly, there the Sepulchre of their worthy Progenitours might be an incitement to them to the imitation of their lives, and preparation for their ends: lastly, because Christ was in that Countrey to lead his life and to take his death, and thence to rise and raise himselfe to the highest heavens.

V. 31. Sweare unto me] By exacting an oath of Joseph, he doth not so much shew a mistrust of his simple promise if he had not sworne, as expresse his owne serious desire to be buried out of Egypt; and the rather, that Joseph might doe it with lesse offence to the Egyptians, who, though they would not like the carrying away of Jacobs corps, could not but allow of Josephs keeping of his oath.

bowed himselfe] Some conceive it was to turne himselfe towards the East, or toward Canaan; others, that he bowed towards Joseph as to a great Lord of the Land of Egypt: but first, whatsoever Joseph was in relation to Pharaoh, in which respect (according to his dreame) his father was to doe homage unto him; yet as Jacobs sonne, and in his fathers family, he was more ready to performe such an homage to him, (as appeareth, v. 12.) then to expect any from him: Secondly, Jacob being very devout, especially drawing neere his end, it is reasonable to take his bowing to be religious, since at this time chiefly he had (no doubt) many things in his mind, which might be matter both of prayer to God, and of prayses of God; and though he were aged and weake, he would not present his devotion to God without an outward expression of humilitie. See Annotat. on Chap. 17. vers. 3.

upon his beds head] (1 King. 1. 47.) Or, on the top of his staffe: So the Seventy Interpreters turne the Hebrew word; and the Apostle in the Epistle to the Hebrews followeth that Translation, Heb. 11. 21. It seemed the Seventie followed a Copie which had no points, for the same letters varied in one vowell stand for both; for Mitteh, is a bed, Matteh, a staffe; the former is preferred, and seemeth the rather to be the right, because the same word is used in the same sense againe, Chap. 48. vers. 2. This difference when it was debated by the Composers of the last Translation of our English Bibles, one of them would have had both readings joyned together thus: Israel bowed himselfe upon his bed-staffe; but that opinion prevailed not: while he thus bowed, it was not (for ought appeareth either in this Text, or any part of Jacobs story) with any respect to the East, or towards the Land of Canaan; but his outward gesture with his inward worship, were both immediately directed towards God.

CHAP. XLVIII.

Vers. 1. With him his two sonnes] To professe a dutifull respect unto their venerable grandfather, and to receive his blessing at his farewell from the world.

V. 2. strengthened himselfe] The approch of his most honoured and most beloved sonne Joseph, so affected his heart and quickened his spirits, that he could raise up himselfe from lying, to sitting, as if a new degree of strength had beene put into him.

V. 3. at Luz] See Annot. on Chap. 28. 19.

V. 4. an everlasting possession] Which may be understood literally, in respect of the carnall seed of Israel, and the earthly Canaan, but then it must be taken with condition of keeping Covenant with God; and spiritually in respect of the true Israelites (who are the faithfull onely) and the heavenly Canaan, which is indeed an everlasting possession in the most literall and strongest acception of the word everlasting; for both the place it selfe, heaven, is everlasting, and shall never either perish, or be impaired; and the possession is everlasting, to those that once make entrance into it, for once admitted thither, they shall never be excluded thence.

V. 5. Ephraim and Manasseh] Joseph names them otherwise, Manasseh, and Ephraim, according to their birth, (for Manasseh was the elder, vers 14) but Jacob putteth Ephraim first, according to the preeminence of his blessing: See vers. 19.

are mine: as Reuben and Simeon] That is, as if they were not my grandchildren, but immediate sonnes unto me, but two of mine eldest sons, as Reuben and Simeon are; and they shall be particular Tribes, Numb. 1. 32. as none of the children of mine other sonnes shall be, and shall have their distinct portion in the Land of Canaan: and so in them two, thou shalt have a double portion, and therewith the prerogative of the birthright, which Reuben by defiling his fathers bed, hath forfeited, 1 Chron. 5. 1. this double portion (as many other things forementioned) being in practice among the Patriarchs before Moses his time, was afterwards put into a law, Deut. 21. 17.

V. 6. which thou begettest after them] Joseph at that time had no more, but these two, Manasseh, and Ephraim; and whether he had any children afterward, it is uncertaine; the Scripture saith nothing of them, though Jacobs words imply, either that already he had, or in aftertimes was to have others. But we need not be inquisitive after them, since if he had any more, they were to be sorted (as his grandchildren were) to one of the two Tribes of his forementioned sonnes, and to be called after their names in their inheritance, either Ephraimites, or Manassites.

V. 7. as for me] The presence of Joseph put Jacob into a stronger apprehension of his most beloved mother Rachel, which affected him much, and moved him to say, as for me, making mention of her death, that lay close to his heart, and was remembred and loved as himselfe.

Rachel died by me] He maketh mention of her, not onely because his mind was so much set upon her, that he could not forget her, (though dead long before) but partly to intimate a reason in her name, why he bequeathed the birthright to Josephs children, which might be because Rachel in right was his first wife, and (had his father in law done him right,) Joseph had beene his first-borne; and partly to give a reason why loving her so well, he did not bury her there where his ancestors were buried, and where he meant to be laid himselfe; whereof the reason was the urgent necessitie of her buriall neere Bethlehem, who dying in child-bed by the way, could not well be kept unburied untill she could be brought (especially by the slow pace of the flocks) unto the Sepulchre of the Patriarchs.

in the way of Ephrath] This is remembred to make Joseph more willing to bury his father, with his fathers, in the peculiar buriall place separate from participation with Idolaters; for though it were but a little way to Ephrath, or Bethlehem, from the place where Rachel died, Jacob chose rather to bury her in the way, then to bring her body to be laid up among the Sepulchres of Idolaters. See Annot. on Chap. 23. vers. 9.

V. 8. said, Who are these] He had named them before, v. 5. but did either not see them, or not well discerne them, by reason of the dimnesse of his sight, vers.10. they might be at this time about twenty yeares old.

V. 9. God hath given] The faithfull acknowledge that as the gift of God, which carnall men doe most account to come of themselves.

I will blesse them] The blessing of Jacob, as of Isaac, and Abraham, was more then a meere apprecation of prosperitie; for so may the lesser blesse the greater, and so any one may blesse another; but there was more in it then so, for it was guided with an especiall energie, or operation of Gods Spirit, and so ratified by God, as ordinary blessings were not. See Gen. 27.33.

V. 11. I had not thought ---- and loe] God crosseth the conceits of his children to their great comfort, and is good unto them farre beyond their expectation; Jacob thought never to have seene the face of Joseph, and now he seeth both him and his sonnes.

V. 12. from betweene his knees] Joseph sitting downe, his two sonnes kneeled before him betwixt his knees, whom Joseph thence brought neerer to his father, and set them in a convenient posture to receive the benediction of their grandfather, with imposition of his hands upon the: See the first Anon v.14.

he bowed himselfe] This bowing of Joseph might be ceremoniall to his father, and religious towards God, upon different grounds and motives; so the people bowed downe their heads and worshipped the Lord, and the King, 1 Chron.29.20.

V. 13. toward Israels right hand] The right hand hath the preeminence of the left, because it is stronger, and more active, (although with some people, as with the Turkes, the left be the better hand) especially among souldiers, because it giveth a man some power over his weapons, commonly worne on the left side; and lest Paul should be thought to have the preeminence of Peter, as being placed in a picture or tablet on Peters right hand, some Papists will have it, that in Ecclesiasticall matters the left hand is better, though in civill the dignitie belongeth to the right; but that is refuted by this instance of Jacob and Joseph, for blessing is an Ecclesiasticall, not a Civill thing.

V. 14. Stretched out his right hand] Here we find the first mention of imposition of hands, which was afterward often used; First, in benediction, as Matth.19. vers. 13. Secondly, in offerings, Levit. 1 4. Thirdly, in testification or witnesse-bearing, and assenting, Levit.24.14. Deut.17.7. Fourthly, in extraordinary collation, or bestowing of gifts, and graces, Act.8.17. Fifthly, in miraculous cures, Mark 6.5. Luke 4.40. Act.28.8. Sixthly, in admission, and ordination of Magistrates and Church-officers, Numb.8.10. Deut.34.9. Act.6.6. and 13.3. 1 Tim.4.14. which is used in the ordinary Ordination of Pastours of the Church, neither as implying a power to communicate the gifts of the Spirit, nor in any mysticall, or sacramentall signification in that ceremony, but as notifying the party ordained, to the eye by the hand, as well as to the eare by the tongue.

upon Ephraims head] Because from him were to descend the Kings of the ten Tribes. Secondly, this Tribe in glory and number was to be superiour to the Tribe of Manasseh, as Jacob foretold, v. 19. Thirdly, because of Ephraim was Joshua to spring, who was to conduct the people into Canaan, wherein he was a type of Christ.

Guiding his hands wittingly] Hebr. Making his hands to understand. Feeling with his hands which was the fuller, and bigger, he wittingly laid his right hand upon the head of Ephraim the younger, and so transferred the birth-right from the elder to the younger, as it was in the case of Esau and Jacob, Chap. 27. and therfore when the Tribes are numbred, Ephraim is mentioned by the name of Joseph, Num 1.32. and Manasseh by his own name, v.34. & Rev.7.6. so in the sealing of the tribes it is said, Of the tribe, not of Ephraim, but of Joseph were sealed twelve thousand, Revel.7.8. intimating that Josephs prerogative descended upon Ephraim, not upon Manasseh. The Doway Translators in their Annotations on this place would have it beleeved, that Jacob crossed his hands in blessing his grandchildren, to prefigure the forme of the Crosse, and Christ dying upon it; whereas it is plaine that Joseph having placed his sonnes so, that Ephraim was set next his left hand, and Manasseh next his right hand, Jacob meaning to bestow the blessing otherwise then Joseph conceived, and had plotted in the posture of them both, was occasioned to lay his armes acrosse, that he might put his right hand upon the head of Ephraim, and his left hand upon Manasseh.

V. 16. The Angel] The word Angel here, must be understood of Christ, (who is called an Angel, Mal.3.1. & Exod. 23. vers.20,21.) not of a created Angel; for a created Angel did not redeeme him from all evill, as he saith of him in this verse.

let my name be named] That is, Let them be named the sons, or seed of Jacob, or Israel. See Isa.14.1. Jer.14.9. Some Papists from hence would inferre the Invocation of the deceased Saints; and presenting prayers and supplications to them; but others more learned (though Papists also) acknowledge an Hebraisme in the phrase, and expound it in the sense forementioned.

multitude] As fishes doe increase, as the Hebrew phraseth it, for they multiply exceedingly, and so did these sonnes of Joseph, for of them in Moses his time were numbred eightie five thousand and two hundred men meet for warre, Numb.26. vers.34.37. which is above the increase of any of the Tribes, reckoning Manasseh and Ephraim as both reduced to Joseph, and descended from him, for none of his brethren in number of their issue were equall to his Tribe.

V. 17. it displeased him] Joseph failed in binding Gods grace to the order of nature: Joseph was for the eldest sonnes preeminence, but Gods blessings goe not by a carnall seniority, but by spirituall grace, and choyce; so Abel, Sem, Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, Judah, and Joseph being younger, were preferred in favour before Cain, Japhet, Haran, Ishmael, Esau, Reuben, Simeon, Levi, their elder brethren: in this difference betwixt Jacob and Joseph, we may note that betwixt the holiest and worthiest persons in neerest relations, as betwixt Jacob, and Joseph; there may be difference in opinion, affection, and endevour, for a time. See Gal.2.11. Act.15.39.

V. 19. greater then he] More in number; so in the numbring of the Tribes, Numb. 1. there were reckoned 8300. men more of Ephraim then of Manasseh, and though Numb. 26. the Tribe of Manasseh have the exceeding number, yet after that againe Ephraim is numbred by ten thousands, Manasseh but by thousands, Deut.33.17. and though both were the progenitours of eminent persons; as of Ephraim came Joshuah and Jeroboam, and others; of Manasseh, Gideon, Jephthah, &c. yet Ephraim in the placing of the children of Israel about the Tabernacle, had precedence before Manasseh, Numb.2. vers. 18.20. and had the name of Joseph, as Manasseh had not, Numb.1.32. Revel.7.8. And in regard of the prevaling of Jeroboam over the ten Tribes, the name of Ephraim is taken for the whole Kingdome of Israel, as Isa. 7.2. and in divers other places; yet was that Tribe more guilty of Idolatry, then the Tribe of Manasseh, yea more then any; and in most kinds of impietie more infamous then any of the other; in whose example is seene the uncertaintie of goodnesse by descent, and the proneneſse of corrupt nature to Apostasie from God; when Ephraim, once so gracious with God, and man, as to have his name brought into a proverbiall benediction, v.20. fals so far frō grace as hath beene said; what trust then to succession of persons, for truth or goodnesse, whether in families, or Churches?

V. 20. In thee] That is, in thy name; or using thy name; or with reference to thee, or for thy sake; for, for Josephs sake, and in his stead was the blessing of Jacob the father pronounced upon the heads of these two sonnes; so saith Jacob to Joseph.

Shall Israel] That is, my posteritie, called by my name.

saying, God make thee as Ephraim] A forme of benediction shall be taken up in their names, (as in the blessing of Ruth, God make this woman like Rachel and like Leah, Ruth 4.11.) for some speciall graces, and favours of God conferred on their persons, or their Tribes; which might be known among them, though it be not noted in the Scripture: and of those two Tribes as they were personally fruitfull above the rest; so their portions in the Land of Canaan, were famous for fertilitie, Adrichom. Delph. Theatr. p.23. & p.70. & 75. So the Jewes used, and at this day (as Pagius noteth) they use to say over their males, God put thee, or make thee as Ephraim, and Manasseh; and over their female children; God put, or place, or make thee as Sarah, and Rebekah. Of the like forme in cursing, see Jer.29.22.

V. 21. I die: but God] Though our neerest friends, as mortall and mutable in their condition, leave us; yet God that cannot die, will not faile to be with us, and with our surviving posteritie after us, if we by wickednesse doe not give him occasion to forsake us; as Deut.23.14.

land of your fathers] Which they had by faith in the promise.

V. 22. Moreover] Of this verse see the explication in the first Annot. on the 30. vers. of the 34. Chapter.

CHAP. XLIX.

Vers.1. Gather your selves together] To some that were then present he giveth this charge, to call the absent, that they may come together, and heare all at once, what he hath to say unto them at his farewell with the world; and he doubleth this charge, for it is repeated againe vers. 2. they were brethren, and though divers in person, yet in him united as the branches in the stock; and by this joynt injunction for their assembly unto him, he intimateth the union that should be among them, which the Psalmist highly praiseth, in the comparison of it to the precious ointment, wherewith Aaron was anointed, and to the dew of Hermon, Psal.133. vers. 2, 3. the ointment was most pleasant, as made up of many sweet ingredients,

Gen. 48. 19. Neque enim hoc intelligi potest de numerosa Ephraimi prole: utpote qua tribus Juda præpollebat. Et vox Goijm Ethnicis propria est. Itaque hic sensus fuerit: ex Ephraimo descendent innumeræ gentes, quæ suo tempore confluent ad Evangelium.

gredients, exquisitely tempered and put together by the art of the Apothecarie, Exod. 30. vers. 23,24,25. And the mountaine of Hermon (which in the allotment of the Tribes was part of the portion of Issachar) was a very fruitfull mountaine, by the dew of heaven descending upon it, where for that reason the cattell were fed, which were offered in sacrifice to God; Adrichom. Delph. Theatr. pag. 36. col. 2. Such is the delight, and benefit of brotherly union; nor is it more acceptable, or profitable to man, then pleasing unto God, for where that is he is so well pleased with it, that there he concludeth the blessing, Psal. 33. vers. 3. he causeth blessednesse to settle there, as it were solemnly enacting a law that unitie and felicitie shall dwell together; as on the contrary, discord, and distraction breed want, and woe not onely to particular families, but to whole States, and Kingdomes, Mar. 3. 24,25.

that I may tell] Being now to leave the world, he leaveth such advertisements with his sonnes, as the remembrance of them may doe them good when he is dead; whose example should be a patterne to other dying men (though they have not the Spirit of Prophecie as Jacob had) to deliver some memorandums at the time of their death to their surviving children, and friends, if they be apprehensive of the approach of it, and have understanding, memory, and speech to enable them; as to recount unto them what remarkable things have hapned in their dayes, what notable judgements or mercies either upon the State in generall, or particular persons, God hath shewed in their times, and what have beene conceived to be the motives, and meanes of either; what changes they have observed, and what peculiar acts of providence, to make the condition of man either better or worse; what have beene the waies, and methods of Satan to intice unto sinne; and what helps and escapes they have had to get from it; what comfort and lightsomenesse of conscience they have enjoyed in a sincere constant attendance on Gods Ordinances, and in an holy care to make their conversations conformable to them; and what discomfort they have felt by neglect of them, or straying from them; what they thinke of sinne, and of this world, compared with holinesse, and the happinesse of the world to come; and for this purpose it would doe well if they made some preparations in the time of health and life, by storing up such observable matter as may be like to worke most effectually upon children, servants, and friends, who shall be witnesses of their last words; for a mans last words are the more heeded by those that heare them, because first, then his heart being more affectionately set upon God, his tongue is the more likely to be guided by God. Secondly, because then what he saith is conceived to be spoken in sinceritie; for whatsoever he doth in the time of life, and health, no man almost dare dissemble at his death. Thirdly, because with the words the person that spake them will be readily remembred, and the state wherein he was at that time he spake; which being the common condition of all men (for all are mortall) may dispose them to make a more serious application of all to themselves.

tell you] He telleth them all together, what he hath to say to every one of them in particular, that every one may receive benefit, not onely by his owne proper portion of Jacobs speech, but by his brethrens likewise. It was wisely done of Jacob thus to order his discourse unto them; that being good in it selfe, it might by communication be the more good; and it should be every ones desire (and will be so in such as are sincerely religious) not to confine those advertisements to one alone, or to a few, which they may with hope of more fruit impart unto many.

last dayes] (1 Tim. 4. 1. 2 Tim. 3. 1.) That is, in after-times, yet a great while to come: see and compare Act. 2. 17. with Joel 2. 28. More particularly in the last dayes, that is, your last state in this Land, when God shall bring you out of Egypt; and because he speaketh of the Messias (viz. vers. 10.) as farre off as to his coming in the flesh, which was 1680. yeares after this prophecie, the state, and time of the Gospel may be called the last time, because after that there will be no change of the Church from Christianitie to the worlds end; before the flood, and a good while after, the Church was ordered without a written Law, untill Moses; and then came in the Leviticall Priesthood, and Ceremonies, which lasted untill Christ: Last of all came in the Christian Religion, (that Priesthood, and those Ceremonies being abolished) which without any change of Doctrine, or Sacraments, shall last untill the worlds end. Now in that Jacob, when the eyes of his body were dimme, Chap. 48. vers. 10. had his soule so enlightned as that it could pierce to the apprehension of future events so farre off, and could discerne through so many thousand darke nights as were to come betwixt the prophecie and the event, it is an assured evidence of the assistance of a Divine Spirit; for neither humane policie, nor judiciall Astrologie, (for though a starre was appointed to guide the Wise men to Bethlehem, when he was borne, Matth. 2. 2, &c. all the starres of the firmament could not (if they had beene consulted with) have told any tydings of his coming many hundred yeares after this time when Jacob foretold it) nor Angel, nor Devil, could at Jacobs death (without a revelation from God) have prophecied of the Messiahs birth.

V. 3. Reuben thou art my first borne] As the eldest sonne, there belonged to him divers worthy, and honourable priviledges; as that when the father was dead, he succeeded him in the headship of the family, so that his younger brethren were to reverence him, and rise up unto him as a father; to maintaine the honour of this preeminence, he was to have a double portion to any of the rest in the estate of his father. So was it established by expresse Law in Moses time, that if a man had two wives, the one beloved, the other hated, or lesse loved, (as it was with Jacob, Gen. 29. 30,31.) he might not make the sonne of the beloved first borne, but should acknowledge the sonne of the hated first borne, by giving him a double portion of all that he had, Deut. 21. 17. which, (though not by the instinct of nature, yet by some revealed light) with many other Ceremoniall particulars (which came into an expresse Law in after times) was in use and practice among the Patriarchs before the Law was written. See Annot. on Chap. 35. vers. 2. & on Chap. 48. v. 5.

my might and the beginning] That is, the first effect of my paternall power, and vigour, whereby God enabled me to beget thee as a father first of all, and the first that of my family, and off-spring had the manhood and maturitie of strength, as Deut. 21. 17. & Psal. 78. 51. Or, who by thy senioritie and eldership shouldest have beene the prime Pillar of my family.

the excellency of] Thou shouldest, and mightest, as my first borne, have enioyed an excellencie of dignity, power, and authoritie (with a double portion, as Deut. 21. 17.) above thy brethren, and therein I should now have confirmed thee, and thy posteritie after thee, by my fatherly benediction, if thou hadst not lost thy birthright by thine offence; but as thou hast behaved thy selfe, I must from God speak of thee otherwise then in my fatherly affection I could wish, or thou out of love to thy selfe wilt be willing to heare.

V. 4. Unstable as water] Water hath a qualitie to coole, and make cleane, but Reuben is not likened to it for that, because he was hot by lust, and uncleane by polluting his fathers bed; but he is compared to water for its lightnesse, and unstabilitie, which is easily moved by the windes into waves, and naturally cannot containe it selfe in its owne bounds, but where-soever it is powred out runneth to the lowest place; and for the greatest part of it, the Sea, it is in continuall motion of ebbing, and flowing; such is the mind of a man led away with his lust, as Reuben was: for concupiscence of women taketh off the constancie of man, (as we see in Solomon) making his heart too effeminate, and feeble to be stable and stedfast in any good thing. The word here used is joyned with vaine, Judg. 9. 4. [vaine and light: or, unstable persons] the word in the Originall rendred light, is the same which is here used; and with [treacherous] Zeph. 3. 4. for they that are unstable, or light, or vaine men, by their lightnesse, and unconstancie are easily drawne to be treacherous towards those that trust them, being apt to be deceived themselves, 1 Pet. 2. 14. they are ready to be used for deceit of others, and to divide from them to whom they should adhere; thence were the divisions and grudgings of the Reubenites among themselves, Judg. 5. v. 15,16.

thou shalt not excell] The words in the Originall are Imperative, doe thou not excell, or excell thou not, but the sense is Indicative, or prophetick; as our Translation hath it; and yet the Hebrew phrase imports, that though Reuben may seeme in his levitie and unstableness to follow his owne mind, and to doe his owne will, he doth thereby undergoe the curse which God as by a kind of commanding law hath laid upon him, as David observed of Shimei his cursing, 2 Sam. 16. 11. and accordingly it appeareth in the holy Historie, that he did not excell either in the number of his Tribe, as it is in the 33. of Deut. vers. 6. after the Originall reading; or in valour, or any excellent atchievement.

Because thou wentest up] For a pang of lawlesse lust, and a moment or two of sinfull pleasure, he lost the prerogative of his birth-right, which would have been a setled and perpetuall honour to him, and his posterity: So fat doth sensuality besot and befoole men, when they give way unto it, and therefore is the lustfull wanton by the Wise-man called a simple one, a young man void of understanding, Prov. 7. 7. and his going to the house of an harlot compared to a fooles going to the correction of the stocks, vers. 22. Reuben might haply think that this fact, committed about forty yeares before, was now both forgiven, and forgotten; and it is but barely related, not reproved, in the first notice taken of it, Chap. 35. 22. But it is not time, (how long soever) but true repentance, that taketh off the guilt of sin; and God is alwayes free to take his own time, either to reprove, or punish it, to whom al things are alwayes present, though in years, or ages they be never so far distant, and not only slipped out of the memory of man, but rased out of all Records, and humane memorials: which must admonish us still to renew our repentance, and in our riper yeares to bewaile the wickednesse of youth, and to pray for pardon of it, as David did, Psal.25.7. and withall, to beware that we misdeem not the judgement of God, when it doth not presently proceed to the punishment of offenders, since it neither winkes nor sleeps towards the wicked; but forbeareth, that his goodnesse may lead them to repentance, Rom. 2. 4. or if they remaine impenitent, that upon their treasuring up of wrath against the day of wrath, they may be more lyable to the righteous judgement of God, vers.5.

He went up] He spake to him before; now, as in indignation at him, turning his eyes from him, he directeth his speech to his brethren, that they may take his censure as a caution unto themselves; whereby we see that zeale against sin may consist with charity to the sinner; for Jacob, as Reubens father, as inspired now by the Holy Ghost, as a dying man, was doubtlesse free from malice towards him, and all the world; So it was with dying David, when he gave advice to Salomon to do justice upon Shimei, 1 King.2.9.

V. 5. Brethren] In evill, Proverb. 18. 9. not more naturally of kinne by blood, then morally and mortally by cruell bloodshed, principally in the massacre of the Shechemites, Genes. 34. 25. and it may be also in conspiracy against Joseph, as those of the Tribe of Levi and Simeon were against Christ (of whom Joseph was a type;) for Levi, it is certain his Tribe was deeply guilty of his death, for the Priests, who were of that Tribe, were his most bitter, and bloody enemies; and (as some say) Judas was of the Tribe of Simeon.

V. 6. O my soule come not] By this pathetical Apostrophe, or converting of his speech from Simeon, and Levi to his soule, he professeth his zealous detestation of their outragious act, lest when he was dead he might have been thought either a favourer of it, or not an enemy to it; and it is a point of pious prudence (especially in persons eminent for godlinesse) before their death to cleare themselves of such aspersions, or suspicions, as upon their silence might be imputed unto them, with prejudice to the religion they have professed; and for this reason, it is well done by many learned and godly Protestants, to make a confession of their faith at their death, that Papists may not be beleeved, when they report their Apostasie from the true Church to the Popish, as they did of Calvin, Beza, and others.

Mine honour, be not thou] By honour may be meant his soule, which is the honour and glory of a man; and by the word here used for honour, or (as some reade) glory, is sometimes understood the tongue, as Psal. 16. 9. and Psal. 30. 10. Act. 2. 26. for that also is the glory of a man above the dumbe creatures, and by an eloquent use of it, one man glorieth above another. The meaning may be, that he neither consented to them in word, or thought; and therefore he would not suffer in his honour and reputation for their sakes; and though some would glory in the contriving and successe of such a mischievous designe, he was so far from glorying in it, that he did detest and abhorre it.

Slew a man] That is, Hamor the King, the Prince Shechem his son, and their subjects the citizens; for the singular number is put for the plurall, as the plurall number is also divers times put for the singular in the Hebrew tongue.

Selfe-will] If in sodaine wrath the ill deed had been done, it had not been so bad; but there was time to consider of the project, and reasoning against it, and a wilfull resolution against that reason; and the more wilfull, especially upon deliberation, the more wicked.

They digged downe a wall] The words (as some render them, for they are ambiguous) are, They houghed an oxe, or bull, so the Seventy, by the bull meaning him who like a bull rushed upon a rape, and who was as the bull of the herd, the chiefe of the city; but an oxe is put for oxen, the singular number for the plurall; and so the words are understood of the violent driving away of the spoile of the Shechemites cattell, Chap. 34.28. and cutting them with their swords that would not drive sociably with the rest of the herd. But the best reading is, they digged downe a wall, and though it may be then the city was not walled, they made some violent breaches into the walls of particular houses, or chambers, and most likely where Hamor or Shechem were; because their chiefe quarrell was at them, for the abuse of their sister.

V. 7. Cursed be their anger] He curseth not their persons, but their wrath; we must pray rather against the wickednesse of the persons, then against the persons of the wicked, as David prayed not against the person of Ahitophel, (as that he might come to nought and hang himselfe as he did) but that God would turne his counsell into foolishnesse, 2 Sam. 15. 31. Yet sometimes he curseth wicked persons, Psal.109. from the 17. to the 20. and else-where, whereof we may say, that his cursing might be either a prediction, not an imprecation; or if so, yet conditionall, (upon supposall of their perseverance in sin, or unlesse they repented) not absolute; or if absolute, Davids judgement, and zeale being guided by Gods Spirit, (as Jacobs now was) that might be lawfull to them, which to persons not so qualified, would be unlawfull: much lesse is it lawfull to do as Simeon and Levi did, for that of Solomon is a good rule in the generall, Say not, I will recompence evill, but wait on the Lord, and he shall save thee, Prov.20. 22. And if Jacob by this meant any evill to the persons or posterity of these two sons, it was but a temporall evill, and that not without the condition of impenitence.

I will divide them in Jacob] By Jacob and Israel here must be meant not the person, but the posterity of Jacob, or Israel; and whereas he saith, I will divide them, he meaneth, God, by whose Spirit he spake, would divide them, or that he would divide them by his prediction, or prophesie, as it were, passing his word they should be divided; as Ezekiel is said to come to destroy the City, Ezek.43.3. where the meaning is, (as in the marginall variation on that place it is rendered) [when I came to prophesie, that the City should be destroyed] Now Simeon and Levi, they were not only divided from each other, (for so it was with the other Tribes) but their separation was different from the rest; First, for the Tribe of Levi it is cleare, and certain, that it had no distinct portion of the Land of Canaan, but only certain Cities allotted, dispersedly placed among the other Tribes, which were to the number of forty eight, Josh.21. 41. but the Levites themselves had none inheritance, Josh. 13. 14. but tithes and oblations, which was an occasion of dispersing them abroad, when they went about to gather them. But after their zealous execution of the command of God (by Moses) upon the principall offenders in the Idolatry of the golden Calfe, Exod. 32. 26. &c. this dispersing of theirs was converted to a blessing, for they were consecrated to teach Jacob Gods Judgements, and Israel his Law, Deut.33.10. So the people had the benefit of their instruction, and they the honour and acceptation due to that office. And for the Tribe of Simeon, as it was lesse honourable then the rest, and had in the more contempt for the wicked act of Zimri the son of Salu, a Prince of a chiefe house among the Simeonites, Numb. 25. vers.6.14. (for which cause it is conceived Moses would not vouchsafe to blesse it with the other Tribes, Deut. 33.) so it was divided; for first, it was not provided for by a distinct portion, but was as it were an Inmate to the Tribe of Judah; and that, not so much for Simeons sake, as because Judah had too much, out the portion of the children of Judah, was the inheritance of the children of Simeon, Josh.19 9. So that the Tribe of Simeon was under Judah, till God gave them the place of the Amalekites, 1 Chr.4.43. Thus they were divided, part living there, & part in the Tribe of Judah, as hath been said. This curse of their division is denounced as a meet punishment for their cursed union. It so falls out many times by the distribution of divine Justice, turning many wicked conspiracies into mutuall hostilities. And we see by experience, none are more bitter against each other, then those whose society hath been too sweet, and communion too neere, that hate being mutuall, and reciprocall; which was but on one side in the businesse of Amnon, and Thamar, 2 Sam.13. in setting down this curse so fully, we may observe the sincerity of the sacred Writer, who (though he were descended of the stock of Levi) committeth to perpetuall record the crime, and curse of his progenitor: if his pen had been guided by any motion of flesh and blood, he would not have blazed his sinne, and shame in this sort; but this is the manner of those who are guided by Gods Spirit, to dishonour themselves to honour God; So doth Moses againe, Exod. Chap.4. and so did David, 2 Sam.6. 21, 22. Jonah, Chap. last, Paul and Barnabas, Acts 14. verse 14, 15.

V. 8. Shall praise] The passages betwixt Judah, and Joseph his unknowne Brother, but knowne Lord of Egypt, Chap. 44. vers. 16. 18, &c. and his pleading and prevailing with his father for the sending of Benjamin thither, Chap.43.3 &c. shew him to be a man of good parts, and spirit; yet this seemes rather to be spoken not of the person of Judah (who died in Egypt, and while he lived, did no great matters to make him famous, nor did appeare in any preeminence, being obscured with the splendour of Joseph, and in a state of subordination under him) but of the Tribe, which excelled in courage, vers.9. in dignitie, vers.10. and in sinceritie to God; for when others are blamed for their deceit, Judah is commended for his fidelitie, as in the 11. of Hosea, Ephraim compasseth me about with lies, and the house of Israel with deceit; but Judah yet ruleth with God, and is faithfull with the Saints, Hos.11.12. The word used by Jacob hath an elegant alluſion to the name of Judah coming of Jadah, to praise, or to confesse; and while they praise him, they shall confesse his prelation above them. It is observable that Judah having formerly offended with Thamar, his fault is passed over in silence; while the sinne of Simeon and Levi is remembred with reproach, and imprecation; whereof the reason may be, that as the crime of these conspiring brethren was more hainous; so their dispositions were more harsh, and hard-hearted; for Judah confessed his fault with termes of aggravation, Chap. 38.26. and they stubbornly stood to what they had done, when their good father with much griefe and anguish of heart rebuked them for it, as fearing the mischiefe that might come of it, even to the ruine of himselfe and all his family, Chap. 34. vers. 31.

in the neck of thine] This implieth the courage of Judah to pursue pursue his enemies, and his prevailing over them; which is observable in that Tribe above the rest, for it was the Tribe which was first in ranke in the Israelites marching in the wilderness, Numb. 10.14. and first tooke the passage through the Red Sea, and the first that (when Joshua was dead, by the appointment of God) set upon the Canaanites, and got the victory, Judg. 1. vers. 1,2,4. And of this Tribe was David, (whose speech, 2 Sam.22.41. agreeth to this) Zerubbabel, and many other valorous, and victorious Warriours.

thy fathers children shall bow] He saith, thy fathers children, rather then thy mothers, as in Isaacs blessing of Jacob, Gen.27.29. for Isaac had but one wife, so it was all one to have given the blessing to the issue of the parent of either sexe; but in Jacob the case was otherwise; where they that had all one father, had divers mothers; some whereof were wives, some handmaids.

bow downe before thee] This was literally most verified in David, and Solomon, who were of this Tribe; and spiritually in Christ, the Lion of the Tribe of Judah, Revel. 5.5. to whom all knees shall bow, Phil.2.10.

V. 9. Lions whelp] The courage of Judah is compared to a Lions whelpe; such was the Tribe of Judah in the first assayes of warre in the time of Joshua; afterwards it increased to the vigour of a Lion at full age, and old, in comparison of a whelpe, such it was in Davids time, and by age and experience subtle as well as strong; for David of that Tribe was so wise, that Saul was afraid of his wisdome, 1 Sam.18. vers.5.14,15. and very couragious; see 1 Sam.17. from vers. 32. to 51. as the Lion above other beasts, who by his courage, and strength is a King over them, Numb.23.24. Prov.28.1. & Chap.30.vers.30. Amos 3.8. Mic.5.8.

from the prey my sonne] That is, having taken the prey thou hast gone up in a triumphant manner.

he stouped downe, he couched] Jacob varieth the person, sometimes speaking as to his sonne, sometimes speaking of his son; as the Prophetick Spirit moved him; such variations are used in the Scripture; the meaning is, that as after full satisfaction by spoil and prey, the Lion coucheth down to rest; so after great victories of the Tribe of Judah, by the successefull valor of David, there should be rest, and peace under the reigne of Solomon his son, of which it is said, Judah and Israel dwelt safely every man under his vine, and under his fig-tree, from Dan even to Beersheba (that is, from one end of Canaan to another) all the daies of Solomon, 1 King.4.25.

who shall rouse him] His enemies shall so feare him, that they will not dare to rouse or provoke him.

V. 10. The scepter shall not depart] All Christian Writers generally expound these words as a Prophecie of the coming of the Messiah, that is, Christ; and of the authoritie, state, and condition of the Tribe of Judah, or of the Jewes (who take their name from him) with reference to the Messiahs coming; and hereto agree many of the learned Jewes, as we see by the testimonies of Manass. Ben. Israel, in his 65. Quest. upon Genesis; though in the particular exposition, and application, there be much difference, not onely betwixt the Christians and the Jewes; but betwixt both sorts of them, among themselves; the words which are of most importance in the Prophecie, which require the most exact discussion, and clearing, are the words Scepter, Judah, and Shiloh; yet the other words, having some ambiguitie in them, must not be slighted. First, for the word Scepter, (in the Hebrew Shebet) in its first signification it is taken for a Rod, or a Staffe, as the Rod which marked out the Tithe, Levit. 27.32. is called Shebet. Secondly, because there might be a Rod or Staffe of other matter, in figure and measure like unto that which grew out of a tree; the same word is used for that Rod which is made of Iron, Psal. 2.9. Thirdly, it being the use of such as are in Authoritie to have a Rod, or Staffe in their hands, as a signe of preeminence, and power (as Judah had his staffe, or rod, Gen.38.18. and Moses his, Exod. 4.2.) (though the word be Mateth and not Shebet) a staffe or rod is taken many times for the rod, or staffe of a Magistrate, but especially for that of Kings; and because, though Kings at the first used such staves as naturally grew, yet afterwards (for greater glory and majestie) they were made of gold, as Hest.4. vers.11. thence fourthly, by a Metonymie, whereby the signe is set for the thing signified, the word Shebet, or Scepter is taken for a Kingdome, Dominion, or power of Government; as, The Lord hath broken the staffe of the wicked, the scepter of the rulers, Isa.14.5. where the former word is Mateth, the latter Shebet; and there are many other places where it is used in the same sense. Fifthly, the word Shebet, signifieth a Tribe, Judg.18.19. either because the Tribes came of one stock, that is, Jacob, as many rods or branches out of the body of one tree; or because every Tribe had a severall Rod, with its name written upon it, Numb.17. vers.1,2. though there the word be Mateth, not Shebet, which is also divers times taken for a Tribe; as Numb. 1.4.16. Sixthly, because a rod or a staffe is used to strike withall, and strokes are not indured without paine; the word Shebet is taken sometimes for a blow, a wound, or for affliction; because when it is felt, the body and mind both are afflicted: So saith Job, Let him take away his rod from me; the word is Shebet, Job 9.34. There be other acceptions of the word Shebet, but they nothing concerne the explication of this Text. In this place the word Scepter, or Shebet in the Hebrew, may be taken first, for a Rod, or Scepter, or some other thing which is carried; either by Magistrates, or by others before them; to import their power, and imprint a terrour in the minds of such as are subject to them, Rom.13. vers.3,4. As before the Romane Consuls, were carried Rods and Axes; and our Magistrates have a Staffe in their hands, a Mace or Sword carried before them by others, which are not to be taken onely for ceremonies of State, or power; but for monitories of duty, as of justice in the Governours, and of obedience in those that are under their charge. Secondly, for that which is signified by a Scepter, that is rule, dominion. Thirdly, the word Shebet a Scepter, is taken for a Tribe, Judg.18.19. So it may be said that the Tribe of Judah, (that is, the posteritie of Judah bearing his name, as the posteritie of Jacob, or Israel, bare the name of Israel) shall not faile, neither in succession, or appellation and title, untill Shiloh come.

shall not depart] He sheweth not when the Government shall begin with Judah, but when it is begun, how long it shall continue, and hold on, and when be at an end; to wit, at the coming of Shiloh: this continuance, or not departing of the Scepter, presupposeth an approaching or coming of it to that Tribe, and both together are evidences of Divine favour, if they be so taken and so used, as they should be: when therefore the Royall Scepter is conferred on any Family or Tribe, and continued for many successions in one line, or pedegree; or when Nobilitie, and Gentry is with honour lineally drawne downe in a great length, for many descents; it must not make men proud of the antiquitie or eminencie of their parentage, or disdainfull of others, whom therein they excell; but humble and thankefull to God, gentle, and courteous to all, contumelious or injurious to none; otherwise, if they be haughty in themselves, harsh unto others; the dignity or gentilitie of their birth, though never so ancient, is rather inveterate vice, then venerable vertue, and indeed rather profane Gentilisme then Christian Gentility.

from Judah] By Judah is meant not the person of Judah, because the Prophecie foresheweth what shall befall in the last dayes, vers.1. but the Tribe of Judah, or the Nation of the Jewes with relation to that Tribe: this blessing of Jacob looking beyond the person of Judah, and a great part of his posteritie, may admonish us to reach out our respects to the good of those, who are remote, and farre distant from us; a consideration which may correct the common neglect of most, who confine their care to their owne times, not caring what becometh of those, who must come after: hence are some so indifferently minded to the remainders of Idolatry, that while they fear no return of it in their time, they forecast no caveats for the future; so many wast woods, and very few plant any, not thinking what need their posteritie may have of timber to build, and fewell to burne; but many more rashly rush into marriage, not thinking so farre before-hand, as to their next issue, nor counting beyond the duall number of man and wife, to provide an inheritance for the heritage of the Lord, Psal.127.3. which may increase to a numerous posteritie.

nor a Law-giver] Heb. a Scribe. That is, one that hath the power of making lawes, whether of himselfe, or with others, so that he hath the preeminence either in proposall, or in confirmation of them, or writing them for Rules unto his people.

from betweene his feet] To the Scepter, a Law-giver is joyned; so that the power of the Ruler is not meerely arbitrary, but legall, as a power put into rule of law; for the sway of the Scepter, is not lawlesse or boundlesse: this Law-giver shall come from him by lineall descent. The phrase [from betweene his feet] may be a modest Periphrasis of the parts of generation and birth, as Deut.28.57. and may meane his descent from Judah; or betweene his feete, may note some eminent officer sitting under the chief Governour, betweene his feet, or at his feet, Deut. 33.3. and in his name, or by his power proposing lawes to be made, or pronouncing, or publishing them, when they are made: but the former exposition is the better, as noting the honour and power, not of one that sitteth under him, (who may be of another Tribe) but of one that cometh from him; and so the modestie of the Scripture phrase is to be marked, keeping so farre off the mention of the part intended, as from the middle to the feete: So the denyall of neerest familiaritie is phrased by not knowing of a man, Gen. 4.1. Judg. 11.39. 1 King.1.4. Matth.1.25. Luk.1.34. and easing of nature is veiled over with the phrase of covering the feet, Judg. 3.24. 1 Sam. 24.3. which was done by the sideneſse of the upper garment in use among the Jews; See the marg. variat. on the second of Kings, 18.27. & the marg. variat. in Arias Montan. Bible upon Isa.36.12. See also Isa. 7.20. & Exod.4.25. Which may turne to the rebuke of such as apply their wits to impure jests, as divers doe, especially such as are Poeticall; it is not much unsutable to the Romane Poets to be obscene in their conceits, as many of them were; for they tooke a Strumpet for a Goddesse; but it is most repugnant to the profession of a Christian, who beleeveth in a Virgin God, the Sonne of a Virgin Mother, to vent such immodest fancies as may make the face of a modest person to blush, when they are read or heard.

untill Shiloh come] The word Shiloh, saith the Jesuit Salmeron, prolog.4. (that he might bring in the Scripture of our Saviour as suspected to be corrupted by the Jewes) signifieth nothing, but he is confuted by the best Hebricians in their Dictionaries, and by many of his owne side in their Commentaries; the Popish party following the vulgar Latine render the word he that is to be sent, as if the originall word were Shiloach from Shalach, he hath sent. But the word in the Hebrew text is Shiloh, derived from Shalah, which signifieth to cease and be quiet, and peaceable; and the same is taken not only in a passive sense to be so; but in an active, to make so, and so it is put for a prosperous, or safe maker, or Saviour, the Author of quietnesse, and safety to others; it is taken also for the tunicle or skin in which the child is wrapped in the mothers belly, because there the child lieth in peace and quietnesse; whence by an usuall Metonymie or figurative taking of the continent for the thing contained (as the Cup for the liquor in the Cup, the house for the people in the house) it is taken for the child that was wrapped in it. In both senses it is applied to Christ, for he was most quiet, and peaceable, of whom it was fore-told that he should not strive, nor cry, nor should any one heare his voyce in the streets, Isa. 42. vers.2. Who indured contradiction of sinners against himselfe, Heb. 12.3. and when he was reviled, reviled not againe, 1 Pet.2.23. Who was brought as a lamb to the slaughter, and as a sheepe before the shearers is dumbe, so he opened not his mouth, Isa.53.7. and by this he was a Peace-maker for others, and a Saviour of others; for, as the Prophet saith, The chastisement of our peace was upon him, and by his stripes we are healed, vers.5. that is, he was chastised, that our peace with God might be procured; He was wounded for our transgressions, and bruised for our iniquities, vers.5. that we might sleepe in a whole skin, and obtaine safetie by his slaughter. And in the other sense, as Shiloh is taken for a sonne, he is Shiloh, that is, a sonne of the linage of Judah; It is evident (saith the Apostle) that our Lord sprang out of Judah, Heb.7.14. and therefore as Judah is compared to a Lion, v.9. of this Chapter, so is he called, the Lion of the Tribe of Judah, Revel.5.5. wherein the Elders who used that phrase might allude unto the title given to Judah in this Chapter, and whereto our Translators direct the Reader in their marginall reference set upon Revel.5.5. untill Shiloh come, the Scepter shall not depart from Judah, but then it shall; whereby it appeares that God appoints the periods of Kingdomes, and States; whereof, besides many others, there is an illustrious evidence in the finishing of Belshazzers Kingdome, Dan. 5.26. and as the periods, so the pauses and stops of government, by insurrection, and rebellion, are to be referred to the same over-ruling power, as that of the Irish Rebels, of which we must conceive, that his providence is not asleepe, but his justice awake, and that in their devillish cruelty there is a Divine chastisement; which must admonish us to conclude a Peace with God, by making warre with sinne, and to beseech him to take part with his owne people, and to make good the Cause of his Sonne Christ Jesus against the band, and faction of that man of sin, the sonne of perdition, designed to destruction, 2 Thess.2.8.

Ireland.

The summarie sense of this Prophecie made up out of the explications forementioned may be thus: The Authoritie of ruling in the highest degree of preeminence, and the longest time of continuance (though in a divers forme of Government) shall be in the Tribe of Judah; or if in any other Tribe, yet so, that Judah shall have the name, and honour of the Kingdome, Common-weale, and people who are of the posteritie of Jacob or Israel, which shall not be styled the Kingdome, Common-weale, or people of Reuben, Levi, Gad, or Naphtali, &c. but of Judah; nor they Reubenites, but Judæi, Jewes; and that Tribe shall be a distinct Tribe of it selfe, and shall neither be confounded, nor obscured as the other Tribes after their captivitie in Babylon, but (which cannot be affirmed of the rest) it shall evidently appeare who rightly deriveth his pedegree from that Patriarch; of which honour, when once it is possest, it shall not wholly be deprived untill he come who is Shiloh the Prosperour or Saviour, the sonne of Judah by lineall descent; and the true expected Messiah Jesus Christ; and about the time of his coming (if we take it not punctually for the day, or moneth, or yeare of his birth, but with some latitude of time, as a little before, and a little after, for an orderly accomplishment of the Prophecie) shall the Jewish Common-weale be dissolved, and their Government broken in pieces, they dispersed, and scattered in severall Countries, without any Governour or Law-giver of their owne Nation, and wholly in the power of the Princes, or Potentates, or States in whose Land they live.

When, and how this Prophecie was to take effect.

They that conceive this Prophecie within a while after Jacobs death tooke effect, are mistaken, for the first Magistrate the Israelites had out of Egypt, was Moses, stirred up by God for their deliverance from their yoke of bondage, about two hundred years after the death of Jacob, and Moses was of the Tribe of Levi, not of Judah; and though the Tribe of Judah were first in the march, and his Standard placed formost, Numb. 10. 14. yet was Moses the Supreme Governour over all the Tribes. After him succeeded Joshua, and he was not of the Tribe of Judah, but of Ephraim; aftewards was the Government by Judges for three hundred yeares; in that time there were successively fifteene, of which onely two, Othniel and Ibzan, were of the Tribe of Judah: After these Judges came up the Government of Kings, of whom the first was Saul, but he was not of the Tribe of Judah but of Benjamin; after Saul succeeded David, and he indeed was of the Tribe of Judah, and began his reigne in the yeare of the world, 2891. 636. yeares after this Prophecie of Jacob; so long was it before this Prophecie began to worke towards effect; and therefore Jacob said not when Judah should begin to sway the Scepter, but having begun, how long it should hold on; and it continued in that Tribe untill the captivitie of Babylon; viz. foure hundred thirtie seven yeares: during this time was that eminently seene which is said, 1 Chron. 5. Judah prevailed above his brethren, of him came the chiefe rulers, vers.2. and the Royall Regiment ended in Zedechiah, 2 King. 24.17. After the captivitie, the dignitie of the tribe of Judah (returning as an entire Tribe, as the others did not) revived in Zerubbabel a Prince of the Tribe of Judah, and from him continued the Principalitie in that Tribe, by the space of two hundred and seventy yeares, untill the Maccabees, of the Tribe of Levi, got into the Government as high-Priests; of whom some tooke upon them to be Kings; the first that did so was Judas Aristobulus, who put the Diadem on his head, and caused himselfe to be called a King, as Josephus sheweth, Antiquit. lib.20. cap.8. which to Hircanus was forbidden by Pompey, (when he had taken Jerusalem by force) though he committed the government of the Jewish Nation unto him, Ibid. These were called Assamoneans from the first of that ranke, Mattathias Assamonæus, (as is commonly conceived) but Jacobus Boulduc labours to prove a mispriſion in the word Assamoneans, and he will have them rather called Cedmoneans, from Onias Priscus, Heb. Cedmonæus, betwixt whom and that Mattathias there were nine, who were successors to the one, and predecessours to the other; and he takes them to be a Sect, or societie, as the Enoscei, or Esseni, which are farre more ancient then the Maccabees; and conceiveth that though they were Priests, they might be of the Tribe of Judah, as well as of Levi. Jacob Boulduc of the Church before the Law, lib. 1. cap. 17. These (as he maketh the computation) continued untill Herod the Askalonite began to reigne; which was about the thirty fourth yeare before the nativitie of Christ. For a great part of which time there was a Synedrion, or Sanhedrim (as some commonly and corruptly call it) or Senate, which was threefold; the first consisted of three persons, the second of twenty three, the third and principall of seventy two; in whom was the Supreme power; these, though at first they might be chosen sixe out of every Tribe (except the Tribe of Levi, and out of that but foure were chosen, as Junius conjectureth in his exposition on the place) yet after the captivitie, it consisted most of the Tribe of Judah, of whom the chiefe were the posteritie of David; those carried the greatest sway in elections; and of this Tribe with the Tribe of Benjamin, (which stuck to Rehoboam when the other ten Tribes revolted) consisted the maine body of the Common-weale, and so Jacobs posteritie were called not Reubenites, nor Simeonites, &c. but Jewes from Judah. So taking the Scepter not meerely for a signe of Regall Authoritie, but for a Principalitie, and preeminence of power, (though with a divers forme of government) the Tribe of Judah carried the credit from all the rest, even untill Herod (who was an Idumean) was made King of Jury by the Romane Senate; Josephus Antiq. l. 14. c. 26. which was about the time above said before the birth of Christ; but yet the Authoritie of the Sanhedrim, or Synedrion forementioned, continued untill Herod in the thirtieth yeare of his reigne slew them all; Josephus Antiq. lib. 14. cap. 17. page 362. yet some power and Authoritie remained in the Jewish Nation, and consequently in the Tribe of Judah, (which made the principall part of their Common-weale) for they had a Synedrion after this in their Synagogues, as is plaine, Matth.23.34. Act.5.17. & Chap. 9. vers. 1, 2. & 23. 5. in which, beside the high-Priest, there was another President, as some hold; and though after the coming of Christ, the Romanes restrained the Jewes authoritie in capitall punishment, Joh.18.31. yet all but such they might exercise according to their law; and sometimes leave was given to inflict capitall punishment according to their law: see Joh. 19. 7. & 18. 31. and sometimes they did as much without leave, as Act. 7. 59. wherein they were sometimes winked at, sometimes punished: for though they had a law to stone unto death, Deut. 21. 21. yet for stoning James the brother of Jesus, was Ananias deposed from the Priesthood, Joseph. Antiq. lib. 20. cap. 8.

Calvin. Luc. 1. 5.

cap. 8. so that the Jewish power, or Scepter departed by degrees, for it was much weakned by Pompey, Joseph. Antiq. lib. 14. cap. 8. after that it was much shaken by Herods intrusion, but not finally broken, untill the destruction of Jerusalem, by which time it was manifested, that Shiloh was come; and after that the Jewes had no forme nor face of common-weale, as before, nor any Authoritie or distinction of any Tribe, as before they had: hereby then it is evident, that the Messiah is come, whereby the Christians may be confirmed in their faith, and the Jewes convinced of obstinacie. Where they seeke to cleare themselves by objecting that this Shiloh or Messiah must come in the last dayes, but our Messiah came many hundred yeares agoe, long before the last dayes; to this the Annot. on vers. 1. will be sufficient answer. Some will have Saul, and some Nebuchadnezzar to be the Shiloh; but with manifest repugnancie either to the Tenour, and intent of the Text, or evidence of storie. Some put in other cavils; but the wiser, and learneder Jewes renouncing them all, give way to the reference of Judahs Scepter to Shilohs coming, as not come to passe before the birth of Christ; but withall they would faine make the world believe that Shiloh the Messiah is not yet come; and therefore they yet pretend to have Princes of the Tribe of Judah and linage of David; So Manass. Ben. Israel ex Rabbi Isaac Quæst. in Gen. 65. But all men of judgement know they are but Impostures, and ridiculous pretences; since their genealogies are perished, their Tribes confounded, and they no where enjoying any Scepter-like sway; but being meerely in subjection in the severall Countries where God hath scattered them.

to him shall the gathering] When he is revealed to be a Saviour both by preaching, and doing; the people not of one Nation onely, but of all Nations, shall be gathered together into Churches, to heare the glad tydings of salvation by him, and shall present their service, and worship to him; for (as Haggai cals him) he is the desire of all nations, Hag. 2. 7. for though in his passion, his beauty was obscured; as the Sunne was eclipsed, so that there appeared ~~no~~ no forme or comelinesse, no beauty that he should be desired, Isa. 53. 2. yet even then, to spirituall eyes, he was white and ruddy, the chiefest of ten thousand, Cant. 5. 10. white in innocencie, ruddy in shedding his bloud with patience; yea so desirable, that the Jewes did waite for his law, and the Gentiles seek him, Isa. 11. 10. and put their trust in him, Rom. 15. 12. and in him find rest, a glorious rest, Isa. 11. 10. to his mountaine the Nations have flowed (according to Isa. 2. vers. 1, 2.) in thousands of temples, and gatherings of the people in them for his service; so that this part of the Prophecie is clearely fulfilled, and the former part, (though in it selfe obscure) more cleared by it.

V. 11. unto the vine] Because the close of the precedent verse is expounded of the Messiah, some conceive these words to be a Prophecie of him also; for the spirituall blessings that he brings with him are signified by the mountaines dropping downe new wine, and the hils flowing with milke, Joel 3. 18. by which is meant the plenty of Evangelicall preaching, and of divine grace; and applying the words to him, they are transformed from the literall sense into an allegoricall, thus, the Messiah shall bind with the cord of faith, and hope, and charitie, unto his vine; that is, unto his Church; his foale or asse-colt, that is, the people of the Gentiles, being as a young colt not accustomed to the yoke of the law; and the asse, that is, the people of the Jews, to the choice vine, that is, to the Messiah himselfe; and to strengthen this interpretation, they read the words thus, binding his foale to the vine, and his asse, O my sonne, to the choice vine; the word beni, if Jod be an affix, signifieth my sonne, and the word Sorec, signifieth a choice vine; but the difficultie lieth in the word beni, where Jod is sometimes paragogicall, or redundant, and so it is in the first word asri, binding, in this verse; now taking the word beni paragogically, it is not to be read O my sonne, but to be construed with the next word, and so it signifieth the sonne of his asse, that is, the foale of his asse; for the young of any creature is called in the Hebrew phrase, by the name of a sonne, as a calfe is called a sonne of the herd, or beeves, Gen. 18. 7. and lambes are called sonnes of the flocke, Psal. 114. 4. and a young Unicorne, the sonne of the Unicorne, Psal. 29. 6. and reading the words thus, they may (notwithstanding the interposition in the precedent verse) be a continuation of Jacobs blessing of Judah; wherein (though we should read the words O my sonne) he might vary the person, as in the ninth verse; and taking Vines as a part of his blessing, they may import such abundance of fruitfull Vines, that the asses, accustomed to eat thistles, might mend their diet, and feed upon Vine leaves; or that the portion of the Tribe of Judah should be so well furnished with Vines, so well growne, that the asse might be tied to them as to other trees, and so stored with grapes, that he should not need to be shifted from Vine to Vine for his load; but might have it from one Vine alone; See Numb. 13. 23. And though some part of Judahs portion were smitten with barrennesse by the burning of Sodome, yet the greater part remained untouched, which might by the blessing of God, have a recompence of that losse; for it was the best and largest portion of the Tribes, as Adricom. describeth it, Theatr. pag. 38. and Arias Montan. in his Book called Chaleb, saith the like, expressing the situation of it, all to be in the South, which makes much for the fertilitie thereof; and he addeth also that it was very spacious, and copious in Vineyards, and pastures, so that in the abundance of provision for meat and drinke, for food and rayment, this prophecie of Jacob was abundantly verified after the letter.

blood of grapes] The juyce of the grape is called blood by a figurative speech, without any reference to a Sacramentall sense; See Deut. 32. 14. no marvell then if it be so called when it is used to signifie the blood of Christ; but it is strange, that they that take upon them to be great Divines, will be so grosse as to stick to the letter, and not admit of a figure, when our Saviour called the wine of the Sacrament his Blood, and the bread his Body.

V. 12. red with wine] The rednesse of the eyes is procured by the quantitie of wine, especially of that which is of the best kind, and hath spirits of the strongest operation, Prov. 23. 29 30. all these are implyed by this phrase; which gives no allowance to excessive drinking, no more then our Saviour doth to theft, when he compareth himselfe, in his coming, to a thiefe, Revel. 3. 3.

white with milke] By the former phrase, the fruitfulnesse of the Vineyards is prophecied; by this, the blessing of the pastures, abounding with cattell, and they with milke.

V. 13. Zebulun--at the haven of the Sea] The portion of this Tribe was neere to the River Jordan, in the fruitfull region of Galilee; extending in length from the Lake of Genesareth, to the shore of the great Sea, which is nigh unto Mount Carmel; the breadth of it is about five miles from Mount Tabor extended toward the North; and the situation of Zebulun was commodious for commerce; for it did not only extend to the Sea, but bordered on such parts of it, as afforded fit and safe havens, and harbours. So that when they of Zebulun went out to ship, they might be cheerfull in their sayling (though the Sea be fearfull to such as are faint-hearted) according to the blessing of Moses, Rejoyce Zebulun in thy going out, Deut. 33. 18. In this prediction of Jacob, if there were nothing else in it memorable, we have this to observe (as of that he foretelleth of some other Tribes touching their portion in the Land of Canaan) that it is evident Jacob here spake by the instinct of the Spirit; for this (which the whole world knows was fulfilled of Zebulun) fell not out in effect till about two hundred yeares after Jacobs decease; and then that portion was allotted to him, not by choyce, but by lot; for the Land of Canaan was divided by lot among the Tribes, Numb. 26. 55, 56. So that howsoever the division seemes casuall, it happened none otherwise then the divine providence not only foresaw, but fore-ordained; and so it is in all the dwellings of men, For the earth is the Lords, and the fulnesse thereof, Psal. 24. 1. and whersoever he pleaseth to place any, they must be contented with their condition. And for this of the Tribe of Zebulun in particular, three things are especially observed of it; First, that there was situate the City of Nazareth where our Saviour was conceived, Luke 1. 26. and where for many yeares he was concealed, or obscured, living as one of common and ordinary quality, and (as is probably thought) exercising himself in the mechanicall occupation of his reputed father, a Carpenter, Marke 6. 3. Secondly, that here is Mount Tabor (as hath been noted) where he was gloriously transfigured, Matth. 17. 2. Thirdly, here (that is, in the Land of Zebulun) by the way of the Sea, he began to preach, Matt. 4. 15, &c. for there it is probably conceived was most need of it; For first, the neighbourhood of the Sea maketh rich, and riches make men proud, and pride makes men many wayes very wicked. Secondly, where there is commerce by Sea, there is a confluence of severall Nations, who send not out the best, but the boldest for Sea-adventures; and they most commonly corrupt one another with the vices of each Country. Thirdly, having opportunity for piracie, and robbery, and a kind of exemption from ordinary justice, (which is resident upon the Land, not upon the Sea) Sea-faring-men are oftentimes not only lesse religious, but more unjust, and more oppressive then those that have their abode upon the Land; so that of such especially is verified that of the Prophet, Thou makest men as the fishes of the Sea, as the creeping things that have no ruler over them, Hab. 1. 14. There being as much disorder and oppression in the ships (especially of Pirats) as in the Seas among the fishes, under them.

His border shall be unto Zidon] In setting down the limits of Zebuluns allotment, which is exactly done, Jos. 19. from verse 10. to the 16. there is no mention of Zidon, and in the topography, Zidon hath nearer reference to the Tribe of Asher; it is therefore to be understood that Zebuluns border though it reached not to Zidon, yet the coasts of it were over against Zidon, and so situate as to be fit for easie and ordinary commerce with the Merchants of Zidon.

V. 14. Asse couching betwixt] Issachar is compared to a strong Asse, or (as it is in the originall) a strong boned Asse, or an Asse of of great bone; whose force shall be great, but he shall want courage, to resist his enemies.

And the Land pleasant] Issachars Tribe placed in a fruitfull, and pleasant portion, and being of a dull spirit, shall rather give themselves to husbandry at home, then any valiant, or diligent undertakings abroad, as either those of Judah by wars, or those of Zebulun by merchandize; yet being strong, they shall be laborious in tillage, and so addict themselves to that peaceable, and quiet life, as rather to subject themselves to much toyle, and tribute within their own portion, then either to enlarge their their bounds, or to free themselves from tyranny, and oppression. It is so with many of the people in France, (as is observed by such as have seen the manner of that country) whose earthly minds are taken so much with the fruitfulnesse of the soyle, that if they may have a part in it with peace, they submit themselves to a most servile condition, whereby they undergo most heavy burdens of tribute, and other oppressions, rather like slaves then subjects; yet like a generation of Issachars, or dull Asses, beare all; which is a just ground for the proverbiall speech of the French King, and such vassals, viz. That he is the King of Asses, whereas other countries which hardly will maintain their people, make them more hardy and courageous.

France.

V. 16. Dan shall judge] In the originall there is a Paranomasia, or an affinity of like sounding syllables, as Chap.30. v.6. for the words are Dan jadin ghammo; the like is observed of Japhet, Chap.9.vers.27. and of Judah, v.8. of this Chapter; and this is said of Dan the first borne of the hand-maids issue, to incourage him against the conceit of neglect, and contempt, in regard of the condition of his mother; and he shall judge, not only as a distinct Tribe, which shall have Princes, and principall men ordinarily to judge them, as Numb. 1. v.4, 16. but sometimes extraordinarily, to judge and deliver both them, and their brethren from the hands of oppressours; so did Sampson, who was a Danite by his Tribe, Judg.13.2.24. and he judged Israel twenty yeares, Judg.15.20.

As one of the Tribes] Yet not as every one of the Tribes; for every one shall not have that honour, for neither the Tribe of Reuben, Simeon, Gad, nor Asher had any Judges; they that had it, were the Tribe of Benjamin, of which was Ehud, Judg.3. 15. and the Tribe of Manasseh, of which was Gideon, Judg.6.15. and Abimelech his son. Judg.9. and Jair, Judg.10.3. and Jephthah, Chap. 11. &c. and the Tribe of Issachar, of which was Tola, Chap.10 1. the Tribe of Judah, of which was Ibzan, Cha.12.8. and the Tribe of Zebulun, of which came Elon, Chap.12.11. the Tribe of Ephraim, of which came Abdon, Chap. 12. 15. the Tribe of Dan, of which came Samson, Chap.13. vers. 5. and the Tribe of Levi, of which was Samuel, 1 Chron.6.34.

V.17. Dan shal be a Serpent] That is, what he wants in strength, he shall make out in subtilty, and sodaine surprisall; making warre, and getting victory rather by politick stratagems, then by force of armes: Moses compareth him to a Lions whelpe, Deut. 33.22. but (as to the condition of the Danites in generall) it is in regard rather of the suddennesse of a Lions leap, when he seeth the advantage of the prey, then of his strength or courage. So Samson of the Tribe of Dan, though extraordinary strong, and so might be likened to a Lion, yet as a Danite he dealeth with his enemies as well by his policie, as by his strength, See Judg. cap. 15. and cap.18. of the Danites taking of the City of Laish. Some of the Ancients have conceived that Antichrist shall come of this Tribe, partly because it is likened to a Serpent, and an Adder, and partly because Dan is omitted in the sealing of the Tribes, Revel.7. whereas the prediction of Antichrist, 2 Thess. 2.3, &c. Revel. 17. and the accomplishment of it, as we find it by story and experience, plainly discover that conceit to be vaine and frivolous; and for the omission of Dan, it is rather to be referred to the Idolatry wherewith that Tribe was especially branded, Judg. 18.30. 1 King.12.29. and that upon better ground then to the rising of Antichrist out of his Tribe, for which there is no probability either of Scripture, or reason; and they might as well say that Antichrist shall come of the Tribe of Simeon, because Moses in the 33. of Deut. maketh no mention of him in the benediction of the Tribes, as that he shall come of Dan, because he is omitted by John; but it is most like that the one was omitted by Moses, chiefly for his bloody treachery against the Shechemites; the other by John, for his notorious Idolatry. But the Fathers, good men, standing so farre off the acme, or full growth and progresse of Antichrist, are to be pardoned in their mistaking; which the Doway Translators should not in modesty (if they care not for truth or probability) have offered unto their Readers liking, (as they do in their Annotation on this verse) since that errour (as if it had been taken to use by some erroneous Writers of after-times) is so improved and increased in ridiculous repugnancies to Scripture, reason, and sometimes to it selfe; that whosoever is not extremely destitute of religion, and ingenuity, may be ashamed of it, as our Protestant Authours have plainly discovered, who have exactly discussed the question of Antichrist.

Antichrist.

V. 18. I have waited, &c.] (Psal.25. & 130.5. Isa. 26.8.) This cometh in without any particular coherence with that which went before, or followeth after; motions of the spirit are not tied to rules of method, or Logicall order; and therefore must not be misliked as impertinent, because they are not led in by a series of precedent words or matter, which yet may have good coherence with silent and smothered thoughts, whence their expressions burst out; thence it is that in the writings of the inspired Pen-men we find such various mixtures of commination and comfort, and as it were sudden ascents or precipices from the one to the other.

for thy salvation] Jacob seeing the miseries that his posteritie should fall into, breaketh out in prayer to God for reamedie; and this he doth, as for them in generall, so especially in respect of this Tribe, which by the Spirit of prophecie he foresaw in a double danger, both of great adversitie, Judg. 1. 34. and of grosse Idolatry, 1 King.12.29. and withall, having by the same spirit an apprehension of the Messiah, or Saviour under the name of Shiloh, his soule no doubt thirsted for the accomplishment of his salvation, and full deliverance from all trouble by his meanes and merit; for the Fathers before Christ, had none other Rock of salvation then Christians since his coming, 1 Cor.10.3,4.

V. 19. Gad, a troupe shall] (Chap.30.11.) As in the names of Judah, Zebulun, and Dan, so in the name of Gad doth Jacob make a nominall allusion in that he saith; for Gedud is a band, or Army; the condition of the Tribe of Gad situate beyond Jordan Eastward, Josh.13.8. towards the confines of the Land of Canaan, was to be subject to incursions of bordering enemies, and so might sometimes by sudden troupes be overcome; yet they must not be discouraged, for afterwards they shall encounter their enemies with better successe, and conquer them: this is the condition of Gods Church and children, for a time to have the worst in conflict with their enemies, but with Gad they shall have the best at the last; they shall be as sure of the conquest, as of quarrell or conflict; for their great Captaine hath overcome the world for them, Joh.16.33.

V. 20. --- Ashur his bread shall be fat] That is, out of the portion allotted to Ashur he shall have plenty of corne, which being sowne shall grow up into a full eare, which is called a fat eare, Gen.41.5. Marg. The chiefe commodities which most abound in that part of Canaan are corne, and wine, and oyle, but especially excellent wheat, Adric.p.1. so that though by bread all necessary provision be figuratively signified, yet in this place it may be literally taken in respect of the excellencie of that graine, which maketh the best and purest bread; of the store of oyle Moses maketh mention in his benediction, saying, Let him dip his foot in oyle, Deut. 33. 24. And in the next verse he mentioneth Minerals of Iron, and Brasse under his feet, v. 25. marg. reading.

royall dainties] Which might consist not onely of such pure wheat as hath beene spoken of, but of fowle, and fish, and fruit of the best kind, which may be delicates on Kings tables.

V. 21. Naphtali is an hinde] Judah is likened to a Lion, Issachar to an Asse, Dan to a Serpent, and Naphtali here to an Hinde, Benjamin to a Wolfe; whence it may be that families are knowne by their Armes; and they distinguished by the formes of beasts, or other creatures, as the Lion is a fit Ensigne of Regalitie, for that with the Scepter is attributed to Judah: and if men fetch their Heraldrie so high, as some do, it will doe well from the same fountaine to derive some relish of religion, to adde unto such outward signes some holy Motto, or sacred sentence of the Scripture, which may be a memento to them to set out their gentrie or dignitie of birth more by their reall vertues, then by painted Scutchions or coats of Armes.

an hinde let loose] He saith not he is like an hinde let loose, nor said he of Dan that he was like a Serpent, nor of Issachar that he was like an Asse, nor of Judah like a Lion, but he is an Hinde, a Serpent, an Asse, a Lion; which to take in a literall sense were very absurd; so is the Papists taking of the words of the Lords Supper, This is my Body, This is my Blood, according to the letter, which this and many such like phrases direct us to expound in a Sacramentall sense. Now Naphtali is here compared to an Hinde let loose, to note the pleasantnesse of his condition, of which Tribe Moses in his benediction saith, O Naphtali satisfied with favour, and full with the blessing of the Lord, Deut. 33. 23. So Naphtali placed in a safe and fertile soyle, is as an Hinde taken, but let loose to be delicately brought up, delighting in a fresh and free pasture, having nimblenesse of feet like an Hinde either for flight, or pursuit, as occasion shall require, Psal. 18.34.

he giveth goodly words] He is gentle and affable, winning favour by faire words, and prevailing more by plausible Court-ship then by perillous valour.

V. 22. Joseph is a fruitfull bough] Though we read not by expresse mention of any more children that Joseph had but two, yet it may be he had more, for so the speech of Jacob doth import, Chap.48. vers.6. but if he had not, he was a fruitfull bough in his two branches, Ephraim and Manasseh, who multiplyed exceedingly.

a fruitfull

v. 26. these my Blessings extend to ye bound or end of ye Hills; i.e. all the World over, & so long as it endureth. Ainsworth.

a fruitfull bough by a well] The words are doubled for emphasis, and assurance, or because of his two sonnes Ephraim and Manasseh; and it is said, by a well, because moysture is a meanes of fruitfulnesse, Psal. 1.3.

whose branches run over] In the Hebrew, whose daughters; which hath occasioned some to understand that the daughters of the Egyptians, or women of Egypt when Joseph passed by, got them upon the wals to behold his beauty; but first, they are Josephs daughters, not the Egyptians: secondly, the learned in the Hebrew language know it usuall to call that which cometh from another by the name of a sonne, (and sometimes of a daughter, as here) whether it be naturall, as a sparke is called the sonne of a burning coale, Job 5.7. See the marg. variat. or artificiall, as the arrowes are called the sonnes of the quiver, Lam. 3.13. (see there also the marg. variat.) and of the bow, Job 41. 28. And by the like figurative speech is the corne called the sonne of the floore, Isa. 21.10. because it is there beaten out of the sheafe, or taken thence.

over the wall] Moysture and heat are the causes of fruitfulnesse; the Well here spoken of is a meanes of the one, the Wall of the other; for those plants that are set by a wall, as Vines, and Apricocks, and Cherries, and the like; by the reflexive heat of the Sunne thrive better, and ripen sooner, then those which are planted by themselves.

V. 23. The archers] The Archers (as this verse sheweth) were those that hated him, and they that hated him were his brethren, who sold him, and would have killed him, Gen. 37. and the wife of Potiphar, who falsly accused him, entitling his name to her owne crime; and Potiphar himselfe, who thereupon imprisoned him; and it may be the Magicians of Egypt, who were by him put downe in their art of divination; and the Courtiers of Pharaoh, who envied to see a stranger advanced to such honour in their Countrey; whose arrowes were such as David complaineth of, They whet their tongues like a sword, they bend their bowes to shoot their arrowes, even bitter words, Psal. 64.3. these were slanders proceeding out of the bitternesse of their owne spight, and tending to make him of an unsavourie relish with others, especially with Pharaoh, whose chiefe favourite he was: and because these Archers are in the Originall called masters of arrowes (which terme implieth a skilfulnesse in shooting: See Annot. on Chap. 14. vers. 13.) it is like that some of them were very subtle in their malicious suggestions against him, and their words were as venomed arrowes, Psal. 64. 3. shot by those who bend their tongues like their bowes for lies, Jer. 9.3.

sorely grieved him] He was sore grieved, when his brethren stript him of his coat, and cast him into a pit, Gen. 37. vers. 23, 24. for then he besought them in the anguish of his soule to spare him; but they would not heare, Chap. 42. 21. and it could not but sorely grieve him, when he was sent to prison as guiltie of a rape upon his Mistresse, (in his endeavour, though not in effect) which his soule abhorred; yet that which sore grieved Joseph, may much comfort others, in that in him they may observe, that sore griefe from the wicked, and great love from God, may meet together in the same man.

V. 24. But his bow] That is, the weapon or instrument wherewith he made good his cause against his enemies, which was his innocencie, patience, and other vertues, which were more vigorous against them, then their vices against him.

by the hands of the mighty] Joseph was strong, but not of himselfe; but made strong by the Divine power assisting him, and resisting his enemies, so that he mightily prevailed over them all; Which may teach us to take heed that we neither trust to our selves in any undertaking, nor boast of our good hap when things succeed as we wish; but using our best providence to repose our affiance upon God, and to give him the praise of all prosperous events; according to that of the Psalmist, I will not trust in my bow, neither shall my sword save me; But thou hast saved us from our enemies, and hast put them to shame that hated us. In God will we boast all the day long, and praise thy Name for ever, Psal. 44. vers. 6, 7, 8.

from thence] That is, from the power and providence of Almighty God.

the shepherd, the stone] That is, Joseph was made a shepherd, to feed his father Israel in the time of famine; and a stone, on which he built his hopes for a comfortable habitation for himselfe and his family, in the Land of Egypt; in which words likewise by the Spirit of Prophecie he might looke as farre as to Christ, of whom Joseph was a type, and to whom as a shepherd, Joseph was a sheepe, Psal. 80.1. And he is also called a stone, a tryed stone, a precious corner stone, a sure foundation, Isa. 28. 16.

V. 25. blessings of heaven above] That is, in the kindly operations of heaven from the Sunne and Moone, which are named in Moses blessing, viz. the precious fruits brought forth by the Sunne, and the precious things put forth by the Moone, Deut. 33.14. with which the favourable and fruitfull influences of the Starres are implied; and from the heaven below, that is, in the sweet dewes and showers coming from the ayre, according to the promise mentioned in Ezekiel, I will cause the shower to come in his season, and there shall be showers of blessing, Ezek. 34.26. and in the wholesome temperature of that element, which is more necessary for health, then good diet; for of this men feed but at certaine houres, of ayre (which they draw in with their breath) every moment: and in the blessings of heaven, may be comprehended the fruitfulnesse of delicate fowle, who flye above the earth in the open firmament of heaven, Gen. 1.20.

blessings of the deep] That is, Springs and Rivers, (which water the earth, and refresh both man and beast) the usefull creatures that are in the waters: and since it appeareth, both by the benediction of Jacob, and Moses, that God meant very variously, and abundantly to blesse the Tribe of Joseph, the blessing of the deep that lyeth under may be in the Mines of the earth, whereof some are most necessary, some most precious. — Mines.

of the breasts and of] By multiplication of creatures, and of milke to nourish them: the blessing of the breasts is named first, because the nourishment is there provided before the creature be brought forth; for God in his fatherly providence (according to the Proverbe) never sends a mouth, but he sends meat for it: of the joyning of these two (viz. the bringing forth, and breeding or nourishing) in one person, see Annotat. on Chap. 21. vers. 7.

V. 26. have prevailed] That is, I have blessed thee in thy two sonnes, more then my father, or grandfather blessed their two sonnes; for my grandfather Abraham gave way that Ishmael should be cast out; and my father Isaac gave the blessing to me, from my brother Esau; but I have blessed thy two sonnes with a fatherly affection to them both, though I gave the preeminence to Ephraim the younger; Or the blessings of me thy father have prevailed above the blessings of my progenitors; for though thou hast had crosses, notwithstanding my blessing, I, though I had their blessing, have had more in number, and longer in continuance; or I have more expressly, or with more tendernesse of affection blessed thee, then my progenitors blessed their children; because from a child thou wast most deare unto me, both for thy beloved mothers sake, and for thine own: and finding thee alive, whom I supposed to be slaine; and not onely so, but so highly favoured of God and man, and so good and kind a son to me, and brother to thy brethren; that by thy meanes we enjoyd a safe, and comfortable, and honourable condition in a strange land, and an hard time; by the greatnesse and generalitie of the famine; I cannot but inlarge my benedictions towards thee, and strive to out-blesse my forefathers in multiplication of blessings upon thy head, above their measure; and my blessing added unto theirs will make thy condition more happy then mine hath beene.

utmost bound of the everlasting hils] Moses in the 33. of Deut. pronounceth a benediction of Joseph in these words; Blessed be his land, for the chiefe things of the ancient mountaines, and for the precious things of the lasting hils, Deut. 33. vers. 13.15. for there be precious blessings upon the hils, as Olives upon Mount Olivet, called (for the plenty and goodnes of them growing there) commonly in the Scripture the mount of Olives, as Matth. 21.1. Luk. 19.37. Act. 1.12. See Adrich. Delph. Theatr. p. 170. And on Mount Libanus there grow Olives, Cedars, Pine trees, sweet Cypresse trees, Fankincense, and other sweet gummes; besides, out of it flow many excellent veines of water, and from thence have many famous Rivers their Originall, Adrich. Ibid. p. 110. Expounding then the words of Jacob by the words of Moses, the meaning is, that he wisheth unto Joseph all manner of blessings, both from places neere and farre off, to come upon his head, as water falleth from the hils unto the valleys.

everlasting hils] Some hils, are hils of sand, or rubbish, lately heaped up; some are raised up by industrie of men, some are made, and some swallowed up by Earthquakes; but there are hils of more soliditie, and firmenesse, and such as are like to last to the worlds end: Jacob here meaneth the blessing of Joseph for continuance to be like unto them, and not onely to be plentifull in measure; but perpetuall in duration, and to hold out as long as the everlasting hils; and so it must imply the condition of obedience, as Deut. 28. 1.15. And he saith hils rather then vallies (though they also be perpetuall) because he implyeth an eminent happinesse, as discernible as an high hill, as well as an happinesse permanent.

that was separated] (Deut. 33.16.) When he was sold from his brethren into Egypt, and exalted to such an height above them, by his high and great authoritie in Egypt.

V. 27. Benjamin shall ravine] These words some understand of the Citie of Jerusalem, situate in the Tribe of Benjamin; where was the Temple, and the Altar, that like a Woolfe devoured the sacrifices; but it is a prophecie of men, not of stones, or fire; and of that Tribe was Saul the King, who was a great warriour, and made a prey of many people, 1 Sam. Chap. 11. & Chap. 14. and Saul the convert, who before his conversion ravened like a Wolfe upon the flock of Christ, Act.9. verf.1,2. Gal.1.13. but the Prophecie is rather to be underſtood of the whole Tribe, which was greedy of the prey, rather of perſons, then of goods, and therefore had the heart to encounter with the other Tribes, when they were about ſixteene to one; for the Benjamites were but twenty ſixe thouſand ſeven hundred, and the reſt were no fewer then foure hundred thouſand, Judg. 20. verſ.15,16,17.

Augustin. Psal. 78. col. 877.

devoure the prey] That may be meant of the perſons of his enemies, devoured with the ſword, 2 Sam. 2. 26. This Prophecie ſome apply to the victory and prey of Saul, Eſther, Mordecai, who were of this Tribe.

and at night] As the Wolfe watcheth his opportunitie for prey, early in the morning, and late in the evening; ſo will the Tribe of Benjamin watch upon all advantages to ſpoyle his enemie: He beginneth in the morning, which noteth his forwardneſſe to warre; and holding out untill the evening, noteth his conſtancie in battell untill he conquer; for dividing of the ſpoyle is a conſequent upon victory. In likening Benjamin to a Wolfe, he may meane him no diſgrace; for God likeneth himſelfe to a Leopard, and a Beare, as well as to a Lion, Hoſ. 13.7,8. in regard of his wrath and rage when he taketh vengeance on his enemies; or if he meane it of Benjamin in an ill ſenſe, to ſignifie a mercileſſe diſpoſition, and an unſatiable greedineſſe after ſpoyle, (as it is probable he did) it is an argument that his affections were overruled by the Spirit of God; for Benjamin, as the ſonne of his old age, was moſt dearely and tenderly beloved of him, of whom he would have ſpoken better, if he had ſpoken of himſelfe, as his naturall and indulgent father.

V. 28. All theſe are the twelve tribes] That is, of theſe twelve ſonnes of Jacob, deſcended and were denominated the twelve Tribes of Iſrael: they are uſually numbred twelve, though there were thirteene, reckoning two Tribes for Joſeph which came of him; ſo that though ſometimes a Tribe be omitted (as Simeon in the benediction of Moſes, Deut.33. and Dan in the ſealing of the tribes, Rev.7. whereof ſee the reaſon Annot. on v. 17. of this Chap.) yet the number of twelve continueth, for where others are omitted, Levi is taken in; and the reaſon is, becauſe they are reckoned according to their diſtinct portions in the Land of Canaan, which the Levites had not; See Annot. on Deut. 10. verſ. 9. And for their order, ſometimes they are brought in according to their birth, as Gen.29. verſ.22, &c. & Chap.30. from the ſixth verſe forward, without any reſpect to their mothers, whether wives, or hand-maids; ſometimes they are mentioned according to the ſenioritie, or acceptation of their mothers; as firſt the ſonnes of Leah, then the ſonnes of Rachel, after them the ſonnes of Bilhah Rachels hand-maid, and laſt of all the ſonnes of Zilpah Leahs hand-maid; ſo are they ranked, Gen.35. verſ.23, &c. Sometimes they are brought in according to the order of birth, partly of dignitie, ſo Judah is named firſt, Revel.7.5. partly according to their lot in the Land of Canaan, and for that reaſon is Zebulun placed before Iſſachar, in this Chapter, though Iſſachar were the elder brother by the ſame father and mother, Gen. Chap. 30. 18. 20. Sometimes they are ranked ſo, as we cannot give a reaſon of their order, as in the benediction of Jacob here, and of Moſes, Deut. 33. where they both ſpake as they were moved by the holy Ghoſt; but for the moſt part Reuben is named firſt, not alwaies, as not in Numb.2.3. Revel. 7. Whence the Papiſts argument drawne for Peters great preeminence from a nominall precedence is convinced to be vaine; for Reuben did not excell, but loſt the birth-right; for Judah had the preeminence of the Scepter; and the Prieſthood Levi had; and the birth-right was given to Joſeph; and they cannot ſay that Peter was alwaies named firſt, for James was named before him, Gal.2.9.

and bleſſed them] That is, having called them all together, and ſpoken to them in particular, he diſmiſſed them with a generall benediction, praying for them all; and though that he ſpake of Reuben, Simeon, and Levi, ſeemeth liker a curſe then a bleſſing, yet if he ſaid no more then hath beene noted, his whole ſpeech might be called by the name of bleſſing, the denomination being made according to the greater and better part; and it ſeemes they had their bleſſing with the reſt, for they had their portion of the Land of Canaan as well as their brethren, and their names were ſet in the precious ſtones of the breſt-plate of Aaron as well as the reſt, Exod.28.21. and of their Tribes are as many ſealed as of the reſt, Revel.7. verſ.5.7. and that ſevere reprehenſion of them by their devout and dying father, might worke upon them to repentance, and thereby make them more capable of their portion with the reſt, and ſo it was a bleſſing to them; and like unto a potion, though bitter in taſte, yet of wholeſome and healthfull operation.

every one according to his bleſſing] That is, the bleſſings are ſet downe, as they were particularly applied to every Tribe, according to their ſeverall references to his twelve ſonnes.

V. 29. gathered unto my people] That is, his ſoule to ſociety of the Saints above, viz. the ſpirits of juſt men made perfect, as Heb.12.23. See Annot. on Chap. 25.8. who are the people of his ſpirituall kindred; and his body to lodge with ~~with~~ the bodies to which he had alliance by the fleſh; thus he accounts himſelfe a Pilgrime here: See Chap.47.9. and thoſe his people, who are gone hence to the reſt and peace of a better world, to which he now apprehends himſelfe ready to paſſe; and his holy life makes him not doubt of an happy death, whereof he can both thinke, and ſpeake, with cheerfulneſſe and comfort.

bury me with my fathers] See Annot. on Chap.47. v.30.

V. 30. In the cave, &c.] He repeateth many particulars of this buriall place, to make his ſonnes the more mindfull of the Land of Canaan; and to furniſh Joſeph with more matter of excuſe to Pharaoh, when he ſhould make report of his requeſt, that it might be entertained without offence; and withall, having beene abſent thence by the ſpace of ſeventeene yeares, and having no written evidences to ſhew (for they were not in uſe at that time) he ſetteth downe the matter the more exactly, that his right to the buriall place might be the better cleared, if any other ſhould lay claime to it, or queſtion, or doubt of his intereſt in it.

V. 33. he gathered up his feet] Which (haply) hung down before, as he ſate on the bed ſide; and ſo he compoſed himſelfe quietly and deliberately for the ſleep of death, having enjoyed the uſe of memory and ſpeech unto the laſt; and ſo in the one hundred fourty ſeventh of his age, and the yeare of the world, 2256. he yeelded up the ghoſt. A life and death worthy our moſt ſerious thoughts; for marke the perfect man, and behold the upright, (ſaith David) for the end of that man is peace, Pſal. 37. 37. and though as perfect and upright as man may be, his peace may be put off, till towards his end; few men had more croſſes in their lives, none more comfort at their deaths, then Jacob: If it be our lot to follow him in afflictions, let us hold on our pietie and patience, as he did; and we ſhall be ſure of peace at the laſt, a laſting peace that never ſhall have end.

CHAP. L.

Verſ.1. And Joſeph fell upon his face] All the brethren of Joſeph it is like (unleſſe Simeon and Levi through offence at their fathers reproofe and imprecation were more diſpoſed to anger then griefe) ſhewed themſelves mournfull for the death of Jacob, but if they did, Joſeph as in other commendable endowments, ſo in this exceeded them all: every word of the Text importeth a ſad weight of ſorrow, whereby we may obſerve him a better ſonne to his father as before, and after this, a better brother to his brethren, then they were to him; Religion doth not reject naturall affection, but rule and governe it; ſometimes intending, ſometimes abating the force of it, that it may be proportionable to the cauſe, and the perſon; and here we ſee in Joſeph the combination of piety and charity, in an eminent degree. None of all the ſonnes of Jacob more devout towards God, or more kind to his kindred, whether in direct or collaterall line; if then parents would have their children to be good children to themſelves, let them by prayer, and precept, and example, doe what they can to make them good children to God. See Deut.6.7,8. Epheſ.6.4.

wept upon him] Some men account weeping an argument of womaniſh weakneſſe; but we find, that men of an excellent ſpirit have beene noted for their weeping, as David, 1 Sam. 30.4. 2 Sam.3.32. & Chap.12.22. & 13. 16. & 18. 33. the man of God, 2 King.8.11. Hezekiah, 2 King.20.3. Nehemiah, Chap.1. verſ.4. yea Chriſt himſelfe, who was never knowne to laugh, is recorded twice to have wept, once over dead Lazarus, Joh. 11. 3. another time over the foreſeene deſolation of Jeruſalem, Luk.19.41. and Joſeph is recorded to have wept ſeven times; the firſt time we read of, is Gen.42.24. the ſecond, Gen.43.30. the third, Chap.45.2. the fourth, Chap.46. verſ. 29. the fifth, in this verſ. the ſixth, verſ.10. and the ſeventh, verſ.17. of this Chapter. Jacob mourned much for Joſeph when he thought he was dead, Chap.37. verſ.34. now Joſeph repaies thoſe tender teares; and notwithſtanding his Courtly dignity, his naturall pietie ſeriouſly laments the loſſe of the Arch Patriarch, his father: and this affection of ſorrow, and expreſſion of teares is lawfull, if it neither be produced from diſtruſt, nor proceed to exceſſe; yea the want of it is a fault. Iſa.57.1. See Act.8.2.

and kiſſed him] Though many things were in uſe with the Patriarchs, before they were put into precept in the Leviticall Law, that which made men uncleane by touching of the dead, Numb.19.11. was none of them; yet ſome take it that the touch of the dead was not forbidden; but if a man did touch he was ceremonially uncleane ſeven dayes, and was to purifie himſelfe by precept in a ceremoniall manner there preſcribed, v.12. which if he did not performe, he was an offender, but not by touching ſimply, of which there was no expreſſe prohibition. Howſoever it were then, now there was none; and Joſeph expreſſing

The thoughts of those dear, precious, and gracious Saints that are gon into the Grave and into Heaven ——— that have led us the way into the Cave of Machpela; may sweeten and encourage our passage after them; and make us holily willing and desirous to be with them! There is Abraham & Sarah — there is good Company in the Grave. Good women, be not afraid of the Grave: there is Sarah, whose Daters you are. All the Saints are gathered to the Cave of Machpela when ye dye; i.e. laid up in a Bed of Rest & Peace, [Isa. 57.2.] in a Sweetned & Spiced Grave in Union to Chr and the Stock of Abraham — &c. Mitchel.

A burying place for us Gentile Strangers hath the price of the blood of Chr purchased. Every Burying place is to the faithfull as ye Cave of Machpela. Look to the Burying place; you may say, There is such a precious Minister, such a Godly Magistrat, such a Sweet Christian; and there I buryed Leah ——— 49.28. Blessed] There is a Blessing in Reproof and Chastisement, to the people of God. ——— Oh there is a Blessing in it, that the L. will only chasten us and check us, not cast us off. If He own us as his people, and give us a portion in his Covenant, and Canaan among his people; we have a Blessing from Him then tho He smite and smite us; tho we have a Rod with it. Ps. 89.30–34. pressing his deare affection to his dead father, yet on the earth, and not long after to be laid within it, broke no part of his due obedience to his heavenly father. And here we see that though there be great difference betwixt a living and a dead body, and that difference cause a perpetuall separation of the dead from the living, (how kind soever they have beene in communion of life) yet filiall affection in a good sonne towards a good father, dieth not when he dieth, but surviveth, and sheweth it selfe by offices of love afterward: and there are the like workings of good will in other relations both of kindred, and of friendship, which sometimes are manifested by the lips when they are closed to kisse, as well as when they are opened to professe a deareneſſe of respect: so was it with Joseph towards Jacob in this place; wherein there might be (and some say there was) somewhat of ceremonie, as a funerall usage in former times; which hath descended to latter ages, and is used in some places among Christians to this day; though not alwaies with such sinceritie as in this act of Joseph; for sometimes it is done with so much hypocrisie, betweene such as have beene unequally yoked, (as where personall liking is not reciprocall) that they have kissed those when they were dead, whom they could have found in their hearts to have killed, while they were alive.

V. 2. his servants the Physicians] The word for Servants, in the Originall is ghnabadim, which is used of serving of God, Deut. 6. 13. Isa. 19. 23. Psal. 2. 11. and of man, Gen. 25. 23. 1 Sam. 4. 9. 1 King. 12. 7. and of the tilling of the earth the same word is used, as if it were a serving of the earth, 2 Sam. 9. 10. And the word rendred Physicians is Ropheim, of Rapha, which properly signifieth to heale, or cure, literally the body, metaphorically the mind; the word Rephaim, or Raphaim, as Nephilim, Anachim, Emim, Zuzim, and Zamzummim, are commonly conceived to be Giants; but Jacob Boulduc takes paines to prove them to have beene eminent men for religion and holinesse of life, lib. 1. cap. 3. & cap. 10. & cap. 19. of his Booke of the Church before the Law; but here doubtlesse the word is to be taken not in a religious, but in a civill, or physicall or medicinall sense; where we see the practise of physick, and the approbation of Physicians is very ancient; and it was but the ignorance of the Romanes, who when they came from Greece to Rome, banished them by the counsell of Cato, as sent by the subtle Greeks to torture the Romanes, Morn. de verit. Relig. c. 8. p. 101. And yet some ignorant Physicians there might be who might be as like to kill as to cure; for the knowledge of physick at the first (as it falleth out in other professions) was but little, else should not men have beene Deified for so small a matter as the skill of drawing of a tooth, and of loosening the body by a purgation, as AEsculapius was, Cicer. l. 3. de Nat. Deor. p. 248. Nor would Menecrates have taken so much upon him for the curing of his Patients, as to assume unto himselfe the title of Jupiter, Aelian. Var. Hist. l. 12. c. 51. But though Physicians how excellent soever, be not to be esteemed Gods, yet their calling is honourable, and of their calling have beene very excellent men, as Luke who was one of the foure Evangelists, called by Paul the beloved Physician, Col. 4. 14. who though he began in the flesh, ended in the spirit, contrary to those carnall and unconstant Galatians, Gal. 3. 3. and was constant to his holy companion Paul when all others forsooke him, 2 Tim. 4. 10, 11. And though it be so honourable, yet might they without disparagemẽt be servants to Joseph, because he was so great a man that throughout the whole Kingdome of Egypt none might lift up an hand or a foot without him, Gen. 41. 44.

embalmed] That is, bespiced, or sweetned the dead body, thay it might not be of an offensive smell to such as came neere it. The Egyptians, because they wanted convenient and seasonable buriall places, by reason of the inundation of Nilus, and would not burne their dead bodies (because they thought fire a wild beast, as the Persians did not burne their dead, because they esteemed fire to be a God) betooke themselves to the art of embalming; and therein have been so good proficients, that they have kept some of them thousands of yeares; and from Egypt they are transported into other parts of the world to be used for medicine. And hence the Jewes brought their custome of embalming, which they used in the buriall of Kings and great men, as of Asa, 2 Chron. 16. 14. and of Christ, for which they made use of Myrrhe and Aloes, Joh. 19. 39. Myrrhe (so called from the Hebrew word Mor) is a gumme issuing out of a tree, in taste bitter, but in smell very sweet; and therefore the graces of Christ and his Church are compared to it, Cant. 1. 13. This was a principall ingredient into the pretious oyntment of the high Priest, Psal. 133. 2. which with other spices was made into a curious confection by the Apothecary, Exod. 30. 25. Aloes (so named of the Hebrew word ahalim, or ahaloth) is a sweet wood, whereof perfumes were made; with these other sweet odoriferous ingredients were compounded, and the more for that the body was to be carried a great way to the buriall, and because the Egyptians were curious this way, as Herodot. sheweth, lib. 2. and their curiosity now and then proceeded to a ridiculous vanitie, for sometimes they furnished tables with meats, and set them before the dead, as if they were to take their meales like living men; and they used to keep their parents dead bodies at home, and sometimes to pawne them, and he that did not redeem such a pawne, was held infamous. By this embalming, the godly which survived might be admonished of such a corruption of nature by sinne, as makes the body of the most holy Saint subject to an ill and unsavoury sent; only Christ was embalmed without necessity, for his Body was secured from corruption, Psalm. 16. 10. Act. 2. 31. and 13. 35. though haply they that bestowed that cost and paines upon it, did not thinke so of it: the Papists will not permit him that peculiar priviledge, but as they make the Saints partners with Christ in other his prerogatives, so do they in this; for they tell us of Fr. Xaverius, one of the first ten that set up the Society of the Jesuites, that his dead body after fifteene moneths was found covered with lime, and that it was not only untoucht, or untainted, but that it breathed out a very sweet smell to them that came neere it. So Bellarm. de notis Ecc. l. 4. c. 14. Tom. 2. p. 274. and of their Saint Catharine, he saith he saw her body at Bononia entire, and uncorrupt, though shee died above an hundred years before his time; and he saith the same of the body of their Saint Clare, though shee had been dead about three hundred yeares before; Bellar. de Relig. sanct. libr. 2. cap. 3. Tom. 2. p. 933. Lastly, religious persons hereby meant to remember themselves of the resurrection of the body, and the preservation of it eternally afterwards.

V. 3. Threescore and ten dayes] The time of mourning for the dead among the Hebrewes was thirty dayes, Numb. 20. 29. Deut. 21. 13. and 34. 8. and the Egyptians mourning seventie dayes, may seeme to out-sorrow them in time, but for degree of griefe, doubtlesse the Israelites exceeded them; But in this mourning, it is like there was a meeting of the Egyptians and Israelites custome together; the Israelites agreed with the Egyptians in the long and curious ceremony of embalming for forty dayes, which were dayes of sadnesse, because they were spent in applications to the dead; and the Egyptians agreed with the Hebrews in their thirty dayes of mourning, in the places fore-mentioned. There is afterward mention made of a mourning by the space of seven dayes, vers. 10. those were solemnized in Canaan somewhat neere the buriall, but whether next before, or next after it, is uncertain; these were spent in more serious sorrow, the greater number were rather ceremonies of mourning, and consisted much in forbearance of white and glorious apparell, of delicacy in dressing and trimming the body and the haire.

V. 4. Joseph spake unto the house of Pharaoh] That so great a favourite, so honourable a person as Joseph was, should need mediatours to the King, or that he should use them without need, may seeme not to consist with his preeminence, or prudence; yet there might be many reasons for it; it might be his modestly, to be beholding to some Courtiers to mediate for him with the King, who haply had done the like office for them; and by making them mediatours, he tooke occasion to give them full information, and satisfaction touching his motion, and to engage them to speake for it, who otherwise would be forward enough to frame exceptions against it, and to traduce him for it, as if he meant to desert the King, or did disdain his Kingdome, as not good enough for the interment of his dead Father, which had kept him while he was alive: And he might have cause to feare offence the rather, if (as it may befall the best and worthiest men, by the fickleneſſe of the Kings favour, or the falshood of supplanting Courtiers) his authority and acceptation were any whit weakned, the times of necessity which caused his advancement, being now expired. Or it may be the ceremony of mourning required his residence about the dead corps: Or last of all, perhaps it was against the ceremony of the Court, for a man in a mourning habit to appeare in the presence of the King, as Esth. 4. 12. For such reasons as these, (and it may be there were others, which Josephs wisdome might keep to himselfe, or communicate unto the servants of Pharaoh) might he at this time make use of such intercessours, to make knowne and present his request to Pharaoh.

V. 5. Made me sweare] That he may not seeme to disdaine the buriall of the dead among the Egyptians, he pleads the obligation of an oath from his dying father, that so if any exception should arise, it might die with him; for men are not so apt to cavill at the dead, as at their survivers, nor at what is pleaded by necessity, as what is in our liberty to do, or to leave undone; least of all is it offensive which is done out of conscience to God, and fidelity to the dead, whereof the light and instinct of nature makes men piously and affectionately apprehensive, though they want the institution of the true religion.

which I digged] Or, bought. For a word which is a descendent of the same root is put for buying, Deut. 2. 6. Hos. 3. 2. So they that thinke it hard to say, that Jacob digged the buriall place which was prepared by his grand-father Abraham, suppose it to be more like that Jacob might buy it, not in regard he was in the loynes of his grand-father when he bought it, (for so he might as well be said to dig it as to buy it) but because his title might be questioned, and his possession disturbed, and so he might be compelled to pay for that againe, which his grandfather had purchased before. But it is most probable that the buriall place, which Abraham bought, was so spacious that he and his son, and grand-children, might dig themselves severall cells or repositories for their dead bodies in it, as they conceived they might have occasion to make use of them; and it was the manner of many in former times so much to mind their mortality, as to build sepulchres for their dead bodies, as well as to build houses for living habitations.

bury me] The bodies of the dead have in divers ages and countreys been diversly disposed of; some have been embalmed and not buryed, as hath been noted of the manner of the Egyptians, some buryed without embalming, as the ordinary people every where, some embalmed and buryed, and of them some had the Aromatick spices incorporated into their bodies, and some had their dead bodies laid upon them and so were buryed; for some sweet odours were burned at their buriall, 2 Chron. 16. 14. & Chap. 21. 19. and sometimes the bodies themselves were burned, 2 Sam. 31. 12. And this among the Jewes; among the Romanes burning was taken up by Sylla, that others might not doe by him, as he did by Marius, whose reliques he removed from their buriall place, and scattered them abroad: Cic. lib. 2. de leg. pag. 340, 341. Plin. Nat. Hist. lib. 7. cap. 54. and some people wrapped their dead in skinnes, and hanged them up upon trees; so did the Colchi. Aelian. Var. Hist. lib. 4. cap. 1. Yet buriall, as it is most ancient, so it is most ordinary; so that to want it is complained of as a calamitie in respect of Gods people, Psal. 79. 3. and threatned as a judgement on the wicked in generall, Jer. 7. 33. and on Jehojakim in particular, of whom the Lord saith, He shall be buried with the buriall of an asse, Jer. 22. 19. that is, not buried at all, but cast out of the gates to the common dunghill, where dogs and fowles may devoure his body as the body of an Asse. Dub. But is not burning better then burying? Answ. In some respects it is, for so neither men nor devils can abuse the body of the dead; but in this respect buriall is better: First, because it is more answerable to Gods decree and doome concerning man; Gen. 3. 19. Secondly, because it is a sowing of the body in the earth, with expectation of the resurrection of the dead, as of the sowen corne, to which the Apostle compareth it, 1 Cor. 15. 36. 42, 43. and in this respect it is not fit that any creatures, who are not raised from the dead, should be solemnly buried; which was practised by Poliarchus, who used with great solemnitie to bury his dead dogs, and cocks, which he tooke delight in, and to set up pillars, and write Epitaphs upon their graves, which is noted as a luxurious vanitie by Aelian; Var. Hist. lib. 8. cap. 4.

V. 6. as he made thee sweare] The very infidels would have oathes performed.

V. 7. all the servants] A very great number of them; for all is sometimes used for many, as Matth. 3. 5. as many is put sometimes for all, as Rom. 5. 19. By one mans disobedience many were made sinners, that is, all. It is not usuall for Court grace to hold out so long as Josephs did, especially to one of another nation; but being the favorite of God he made him the favourite of great men; and such was his prudence, and sweetnesse of disposition, that he kept the height of honour without hate or envy.

V. 8. onely their little ones, and their flocks and herds] The little ones could not looke to themselves, much lesse to their flocks and herds, therefore some great ones were to be left, to take the charge, and care of both.

V. 9. a very great company] Some for defence and inforcement in case they should be assaulted by the Canaanites in the way, or their way stopped, or the buriall place denied; and for Jacobs more constant and honourable memoriall, for as he honoured God in his life, so he is honoured at his death; for them that honour me (saith God) I will honour, 1 Sam. 2. 30.

V. 10. valley of Atad] The place is so called from the multitude of brambles or thistles, for atad signifieth a bramble or thistle; in after times it was called Bethagla, that is, the house of the wayne or circuit, (as many expound it) for the first part it is Beth, a house, and for the rest, some conceive it is derived from galal which signifieth (among other acceptions) to lead or compasse about, as those that mourned for Jacob went about to bring him to his buriall place, or compassed his corps, or grave, about with great solemnitie.

beyond Jordan] If they went the next way from Egypt to the buriall place (which was the cave of Machpelah before Mamre) that was in respect of Egypt on this side Jordan; and then their mourning at Atad or Bethagla was well toward fiftie miles beyond the sepulchre; if so, they buried the corps afterward, and then there were so many miles of lost labour in comming backe to do it, for which no good reason can be rendered. It may be more probable that they went about, though not for feare of the Canaanites, (for the Egyptians at that time were more formidable to the Canaanites, then the Canaanites to them) nor that they mystically went that way, by which the Israelites afterwards were to passe from Egypt into Canaan, yet for more commodious passage for so great a company, which could not conveniently travell in a narrow way, they fetched a compasse about, which occasioned them to passe the river Jordan before they could come to Atad or Machpelah, which was beyond Jordan, not onely in respect of Moses his abode when he wrote this story, but in respect of the locall situation in the order of their journy. Some learned Hebricians make a great difference betwixt begueber and megueber, the former they will have to signifie on this side, the latter beyond; but they make not good their observations by any fit instances, nor will their exposition sort with the situation of places, according to the exact topography of this journey.

sore lamentation] The Egyptians made very great shews of much mourning; see the Annot. on v. 3. They mourned by themselves, and Joseph and his company by themselves; and howsoever that mourning of the Egyptians were full of vanitie and superstition, yet that of Joseph (it is like) was grave, religious, and sincere, with such discourse as so holy an example might minister unto them.

V. 13. field of] The most ancient buriall, even of the best beleevers, and most religious persons, was in the field; for that purpose Abraham bought this field of the children of Heth. Chap. 23. v. 17, 18, 19. And Moses was buryed in a valley, though the particular place of his sepulchre be unknown, Deut. 34. 6. And so were Kings also buryed, some in their fields, 2 Chron. 26. 23. and some in gardens, 2 King 21. 18. And so was our Saviour buried, Joh. 19. 41. The heathens in their burials observed a double caution; the one that the dead should not be buryed in cities; which was forbidden by the Emperour Adrian, upon a penaltie of fourtie crownes upon them that did it, and the Magistrate that suffered it: Cœl. Rhodig. Antiq. Lect. lib. 17. cap. 19. The other, that out of cities buriall places should not be made in fruitfull, but in barren ground. ib c. 20. So Plat. in his second book of Laws among the lawes of Lycurgus, one was that buriall places should be in the ground neere to Churches and round about them, that youth accustomed to the sight of graves might be the more hardened against the apprehension of death. Plutarch in the life of Lycurgus, p. 58. Among Christians the places of interment are used with much difference; some bury in places remote from the communion of men, some in Churches, and Churchyards; At the first, buriall in the Church was allowed onely to the patrone or incumbent; after, such as were of eminency for holinesse, or estate, were admitted to it, as by especiall priviledge; now it is so common, that it becomes very incommodious to humane society; besides, many are so tainted with superstition in it (though they be not Papists, who most abound with that vanitie) that if their friends, children, or other kindred dye of the pestilence, they thinke they are not buryed like Christians, unlesse they be laid where others are, who did not dye of a contagious disease. Dub. But is it not better ordinarily to bury in Churches and Churchyards then else-where? Answ. First, In respect of the dead it is all one whether he be drowned, or burnt, or buried; and if buried, all one where the grave is made for him. Secondly, in respect of the living, it is noysome and unwholesome to bury there whither the living have often occasion to make their recourse; especially, in pestilentiall times, and most of all if the graves be not digged very deep. Thirdly, though we put no religion in places in the time of the Gospel; yet it is not comely for religious persons to make the house of God a Golgotha. Dub. But is it not lawfull for any to be buried there? Answ. Yes, for the bodies of the Saints, having been living Temples of the holy Ghost, 1 Cor. 6. 19. are better then the materiall Temples of wood and stone. But yet they that survive (if a living dog be better then a dead lion, Eccles. 9. 4.) are more to be respected then the bodies of the dead; especially, in this locall ceremony, which doth them neither good nor hurt; and so it were simply better that none at all should be buried in Churches, then that it should be so common as now it is.

of Machpelah] See Annot. on Chap. 23. 9. & Chap. 49. 30.

V. 16. sent a messenger] Hebr. they gave charge, or, advertisement to Joseph, without any expresse mention of a messenger, or messengers; yet such were used, two say some Hebrewes, and they name them, Dan and Naphthali, who were brought up together with Joseph, and sociably imployed in attendance on Jacobs flocks, Chap. 37. 2. Others take it to be rather Benjamin, who was most gracious with Joseph; both are uncertaine; all that may be safely affirmed in this matter is, that some one was employed in the message who was no stranger, and such a one as was worthy of such trust.

thy father did] It is not like their father knew it, (so charitable was Joseph to his brethren, so chary of his good fathers contentment) for if he had known, he would have given some touch of it in his speech to his sonnes, Chap. 49. as well as he did of the faults of Reuben, Simeon and Levi; and if he had known it, Jacob knew Joseph to be so good, that he would need no such message to doe them no hurt; It is probable then, that their guilt making them afraid, they fained somewhat in their fathers name, that might deliver them from their brothers displeasure.

V. 17. so shall ye say unto Joseph] To make their peace with Joseph,

Joseph, whose goodnesse was suspected by their guilt, they plead for pacification and pardon by many arguments; First, by the desire of his most honoured, and dead father, whose request to Joseph had the power of a command, which he might have charged upon him with an oath, as vers. 5. Secondly, the relation of brethren, who under that title were to be tenderly dealt withall, though (when time was) they did not deale with him accordingly. Thirdly, as penitents, they confesse a fault, and crave pardon; and as unworthy to be called Jacobs sonnes, they call him Josephs father, wherein also they insinuate his paternall tendernesse to Joseph, loving him more then all his other children, Gen. 37.3. Fourthly, they adde to these motives of charitie, a motive of pietie, which is, their agreement and consent in the service of God; Forgive the trespasse of the servants of the God of thy father; by which phrase the God of thy father, they seeme to imply, that as Joseph loved his father for Gods sake and his own; so they would have him love God for his fathers sake; and by pleading thus, they meane that having one God, they should be at one among themselves.

wept] As pitying their perplexity, and grieving that they made doubt of his good will towards them, of whom they had so good proofe before his fathers departure out of this life.

V. 18. fell downe] Here againe they confirme the prediction of Josephs dreame, Chap. 37 vers. 7, &c.

V. 19. am I in the place of God] Or (as some Hebricians render the words) am not I under God? First of the former reading. They had called themselves Gods servants, vers. 17. and presently they fall downe before him, vers. 18. and call themselves his servants, as if they put him in Gods stead, by fearing him more then God; for it seemes they feared his revenge more then Gods vengeance; This might make him thinke worse of their homage done unto him, then at other times before, and give him occasion to aske this question, Am I in the place of God? that is, in Gods stead to revenge my selfe, or take vengeance into mine hands, which belongeth to him; See Deut. 32.35. Rom. 12. 19. Heb. 10.30. Or, may I take upon me to turne that to your hurt, which God hath ordered and disposed for your good, as if I were a God as well as he? The former exposition hath best coherence with the words that went before, and the latter with those that follow after; and either may be true. Secondly, the other reading, am I not under God? may beare this sense; If God who is rich in mercy doth abundantly pardon the penitent, why should I, who am under him, and in subordination to him, be obdurate against my relenting brethren?

V. 20. but God] You plotted, but being but men, could not performe; but God, whose will is his deed, really made good his gracious purpose towards you. Gods godnesse over-masters the malignitie of men, turning their evill into good, and making a medicine of a poyson; See Psal. 119. 71. In this acknowledgement Joseph taketh off the thankes and praise of their preservation from himselfe, and giveth it to God. See Gen. 45.5. Act. 3.12,13.

much people] The Egyptians, and other people, who in the famine were furnished with corn, by the store which Josephs providence had laid up in the years of plenty.

V. 21 nourish you] By their plot, Joseph was like to perish, or famish in a pit; but he, when he had them in his power, was so farre from returning them like for like, that he recompensed their wrongs with beneficence, doing good for evill, (which our Saviour requireth of Christians, Matth. 5.44.) overcoming evill with good, as the Apostle prescribeth, Rom. 12.21.

V. 22. fathers house] That is, his household, or family, called the house by a figure which putteth the thing containing for the thing contained.

V. 23. third generation] In the Originall they are called sonnes of the third, that is, grandchildren to Ephraim in the fourth, and to Joseph in the fifth degree; so Ephraim (though younger then Manasseh) exceeded him two descents; for Joshua was the seventh from Ephraim inclusively, 1 Chron. 7. 26, 27. but Zelophehad (who was contemporary with Joshua and died in the wildernesse) was but the fifth from Manasseh inclusively, Numb. 27.1. and so Jacobs Prophecie of Ephraims more numerous posteritie, Chap. 48.19. took effect betime, even while Joseph lived.

the children also of Machir] Or, the sonnes of Machir: (for the word in Hebrew is of the Masculine gender) whereby some understand onely Gilead, by an Enallage of number, the plurall number for the singular; as Gen. 46. 23. Matth. 27. 44. Luk. 23. 36. Yet we find in the genealogie of Manasseh that Machir had two wives, and though by the one he had but one sonne, who was named Gilead; by the other he had two sonnes, Peresh, and Sheresh, 1 Chron. 7. 16. but these of the second marriage haply were not borne in Josephs time, for he lived but fiftie three yeares after his father Jacob.

brought up upon Josephs knees] The words according to the Originall are, they were borne on Josephs knees; a phrase most properly used of the female sexe, Gen. 30.3. as that of coming from between the feete, Deut. 28.57. yet as this latter is sometimes figuratively applied to men, as Gen. 49.10. so may the former be, in that loving fathers delight to see their new borne babes, children, or grandchildren, and to shew such kindnesse to them, as may well be expresst by laying on the knees, or sitting on the lap.

V. 24. surely visit] He speaketh this by the Spirit of Prophecie to exhort his brethren to have full trust in Gods promises for their deliverance, and to stirre up their memories and meditations of them, by bringing of his bones to take possession for him, though dead before.

V. 25. tooke an oath] As his father tooke an oath of him, vers. 5. so did he of his brethren, and kinsmen, though not for his buriall, yet for the bringing of his bones into the promised Land upon their deliverance from the Egyptian Tyranny, which was not to beginne untill Josephs person were out of sight, and his good deeds out of mind, Exod. 1.8. This deliverance was accomplished about one hundred and fourtie years after his death, which fell out in the yeare of the world (as some reckon) 2309. as others, 2399. the reason of which difference ariseth from the divers account of the birth of Abraham; which some referre to the seventieth yeare of Terah, some to the one hundred and thirty, and some place Cainan in the genealogie, and allow thirty yeares to his age, whom others omit.

of the children of Israel] It is not said, of his brethren, because they might all of them be dead before the Israelites departure out of Egypt, and it is like were so, for all of them (but Benjamin) being elder then Joseph, it is not probable that they, or any of them, outlived him one hundred and fourty yeares; of Levi we find that he lived one hundred thirty seven yeares, Exod. 6. 16. the Scripture being silent of the age and time of the rest; therefore it is most like that this oath concerning the translation of Josephs bones, was so often renued and taken againe, or at least remembred and reported by the parents and their children, that it might be surely performed by that generation, in whose time their deliverance was brought to passe.

ye shall carry] After God hath visited you in mercy, you shall depart hence, and take possession of the promised Land; in the meane time he desired not his body to be carried out of Egypt, as his fathers was; for the Egyptians would have taken it ill from him, though from his father they did not: besides, it was some comfort to his surviving kindred, that he was (though but in his body, and at last, but in his bones) remaining with them; whereby his memoriall was had in more honour with the Egyptians; and the Israelites might expect the more favour from them while Joseph their brother was remembred among them.

my bones from hence] From Egypt, which was accordingly done, Exod. 13.19. and the place whither they were brought was the Land of Canaan, which was the Land promised to Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, as is said in this place, v. 24. and they were not carried thither, or kept here, for reliques to be worshipped, but to be buried, and so they were, Josh. 24.32. Nor were they brought to Canaan as by way of restitution, because Joseph was sold thence, for that had been but as if he that had stollen a bagge of gold, should restore the empty bagge, when the gold is gone; besides he was sold from Dothan, Gen. 37.17, &c. and the remainders of him were buried at Shechem, Josh. 24.32. Nor did he desire to be removed into the Land of Canaan, because (as some Jewes have conceived) there will be a readier resurrection from that soyle, then from any other, for that is but a vaine fancie, which Josephs wisdome could not imagine: But to testifie his assured beliefe that God would make good his promise for the Israelites deliverance from Egypt, and their settlement in the Land of Canaan; and his love to his Progenitors, with whom he desired communion both living and dead; and to stirre up the memories and meditations of his brethren and kindred, concerning the promises that God had made to their Progenitors for the possession of the Land of Canaan.

V. 26. an hundred and tenne yeares old] Whereof fourescore yeares passed in an honourable Principalitie in Egypt; for he was advanced in the thirtieth yeare of his age, Gen. 41.46. and about nine yeares after he received his father in Egypt, and presented him before Pharaoh, after the seven plentifull yeares and two of the yeares of famine were expired: See Gen. 45.11. & 47.1. after which time he held on his dignitie and authoritie seventy one yeares; which added to the thirty, and the nine yeares forementioned make up the just number of an hundred and ten yeares.

in a coffin] Chest, or Arke; for the word aron here used is the same which is used for the Arke of the Testimonie or Covenant, Deut. 31.9. yet though they agreed in name, they differed much in their fabrick, both for matter and figure; and were placed at a distance one from the other; for the Arke of the Testimonie was kept in the Holy of holies of the Tabernacle, where no other Arke or Coffin was admitted; so there were two Arkes when the Temple was built; that of the Covenant, and another which had an hole in the top of it, to receive the oblations for the repaire of the Temple, which was placed neere the Altar on the right side, at the entrance into the house of the Lord, 2 King. 12.9,10.

An Appendix to the Historie of the buriall of Iacob and Ioseph, clearing the doubts of Stephens speech, Act. 7. 16. concerning the buriall of Jacob and the fathers in Sichem, in the Land of Canaan.

THere is none, that frequently, and with an attentive mind is conversant in the holy Scripture, but upon his reading the Historie of this fiftieth Chapter of Genesis, will transmit his thoughts as farre as to the speech of Stephen in the seventeenth of the Acts of the Apostles, vers. 15,16. and he that reads that passage, will reciprocate them backe againe to this story, and it may be also to the 23. Chap. vers. 16,17,18,19,20. and the 33. Chapter and 18. verse of this booke; and to the 24. of Josh. 32. and therefore it is not out of place, nor out of season, here to search for a solution of that difficultie, which, while it is doubtfull in the Acts, casts back a shadow of obscuritie upon those places of the Old Testament, which will not vanish untill this Text breake out with some more brightnesse of illustration, then from so short an exposition as a marginall note can be expected, and such an one is that which is upon Acts 7.16. forementioned; for when that was made (and the same may be said of some others) the Printer had no purpose to publish a Commentary on the Text alone, but to affixe the exposition of it to the margine of the Bible, otherwise they (who have made briefe notes) as they were well able, so would they have beene very willing to have made large Annotations; though in such varietie of Agents as have contributed their paines to this worke, it may be some (according to the divers inclinations and bent of their genius) laboured for Laconicall brevity, that they might say much in few words, while others gave more way to an Asiaticall length, lest they should be so short as not (by an ordinary Reader) to be understood.

Now for the more cleare and full discussion of the doubts in the speech of Stephen, it will be convenient briefly to set downe, first the words of Stephen, which are these, So Jacob went downe into Egypt, he and our fathers, and were carried over into Sichem, and laid in the sepulchre which Abraham bought for a sum of money, of the sonnes of Emor, the father of Shechem.

And

Anno mundi, 2309. Or. 2399.

And secondly, the originall Stories of the Old Testament, whence they are taken and whereto they referre; as first, that in Gen. Chap. 23. Abraham weighed to Ephron the silver which he had named, in the audience of the sons of Heth, foure hundred shekels of silver, currant money with the Merchant. And the field of Ephron, which was in Machpelah, which was before Mamre, the field, and the cave which was therein, and all the trees that were in the field, that were in all the borders round about, were made sure unto Abraham for a possession, in the presence of the children of Heth: And the field, and the cave that is therein, were made sure unto Abraham for a possession of a burying place, by the sonnes of Heth, v. 16, 17, 18. & 20.

Secondly, that in Chap. 50. vers. 13. --- his sonnes carried him into the land of Canaan, and buried him in the cave of the field of Machpelah, which Abraham bought with the field for a possession of a burying place, of Ephron the Hittite before Mamre.

Thirdly, that of Joshua, Chap. 24. vers 32. And the bones of Joseph, which the children of Israel brought up out of Egypt, buried they in Shechem in a parcell of ground which Jacob bought of the sonnes of Hamor, the father of Shechem, for an hundred pieces of silver; and it became the inheritance of the children of Joseph.

To which we may adde (and it will helpe to solve the doubt) a passage out of the Gospel of John, Chap. 4. vers. 5. Then cometh he to a citie of Samaria, which is called Sychar, neer to the parcell of ground that Jacob gave to his son Joseph.

Out of which we will first gather up what is without controversie: secondly, we will set downe the severall doubts which arise out of the seeming contradiction of one Text to another: thirdly, we will endeavour the resolution of them, so as may be with most securitie to the credit, and authority of the Scripture.

First for the first, It is cleare that the field, and burying place which Abraham bought, Gen. 23. from v. 16. to the 20. & Chap. 50. 13. is not the same which Jacob bought, Gen. 33. 18, 19. & Josh. 24. 32. For they were divers in respect of name, situation, or place, of use, of price, and of persons.

1. For the name; that of Abraham was called the field of Machpelah, that of Jacob had no such name, but was called a parcell of ground which he bought of the sonnes of Hamor, Josh. 24. 32. which he gave unto his soune Joseph, Joh. 4. 5. and which became the inheritance of the children of Joseph, Josh. 24. 32.

2. For place; the field of Abraham was before, or over against Mamre, or Hebron, in the Tribe of Judah; that of Jacob was neer the City Sichem, or (as it was corruptly called in our Saviours time) Sychar, Joh. 4. 5. a Citie of Samaria, in the tribe of Ephraim, at about the distance of 22. miles, accounting for a mile as much in length as takes up an houre in ordinary travaile.

3. For price; that of Abraham cost foure hundred shekels of silver, Gen. 23. 16. that of Jacob cost but an hundred pieces of silver, Josh. 24. 32. Heb. an hundred lambs, or an hundred silverlings, stamped or marked with the representation of a lambe.

4. For use; the field of Abraham was bought for a burying place at first, and there Abraham and Sarah his wife, Isaac and Rebekah his wife were buried, there (saith Jacob) I buried Leah, Gen. 49. 31. and there Jacob bespake his own buriall place, vers. 29, 30. Chap. 50. v. 5. and there was he buried, Gen. 50. 13. but the field of Jacob was bought for another purpose, and was first used, not for a buriall place for man, but for an Altar for God; Gen. 33. 20. although afterward the bones of Joseph were buried there, and it is probable also, the remainders of the other Patriarchs.

Fifthly and lastly, they differed in persons, both buyers and sellers; for Abraham bought his field of Ephron the Hittite, Gen. 23. 17. Jacob bought his field of the sonnes of Hamor, Josh. 24. 32. Act. 7. 16.

Secondly, It is manifest, that these two purchases, being so distinct in themselves, seeme to be confounded in the speech of Stephen.

Thirdly, That though that were granted, and therewithall that Stephen erred, that cannot impeach the truth and authoritie of ~~Saint~~ Lukes relation, for a true Historian may write that which is not true, in the name of another; for there may be an Historicall truth, where a morall truth is wanting; as where Moses writeth that Jacob saith, I am Esau thy first borne, Gen. 27. 19. 24. and Ezra, Jeremiah, or Hezekiah, or who ever was the penman of the first book of Kings, wrote an historicall truth, Chap. 13. v. 18. where we read, that the old Prophet said to the young, that an Angel had spoken to him, to bring him back to take refreshing at his house, though in him that spake it, it was a morall lie.

Fourthly, If Stephen (making a long speech on the sudden) did mistake, and misreport somewhat of the Story of the Old Testament, that cannot prejudice either the truth of Scripture, or the holinesse of Stephen, or that assistance which he had from the holy Ghost, though it be phrased [he was filled with the holy Ghost:] for that doth not import a perpetuall, and infallible guidance of the Spirit in all particulars, as hath been observed in Annot. on Chap. 46. v. 27.

Secondly, These propositions premised, the doubts to be discussed are partly generall, partly particular.

First, The generall doubt is, how it can be said, that Jacob, and the fathers, (whom Stephen calleth our fathers) were carryed into Sichem, and there buried; Act. 7. 16. since we read onely of the buriall of Josephs bones in that place, Josh. 24. 32.

Secondly, For particulars, the doubts are two; First of Abraham, How the fathers can be said to be laid in the sepulchre which Abraham bought of Hamor, when Abraham bought his burying place of Ephron, Gen. 23. 16. and Jacob purchased the field of Hamor, Josh. 24. 32.

Secondly, Of Hamor, whereof there are three scruples. First, whether he were the father, or the sonne of Sichem. Secondly, whether the father of Ephron were called Hamor.

Thirdly, Why Hamor is said to be the father of Shechem, rather then of any other of his sonnes.

Thirdly, For resolution of the doubts; To the First (how it may be said that Jacob and the Fathers were buried in Shechem, when we reade only of Josephs bones that they were brought thither, Josh. 24. 32.) it may be said, First, That the affirming of Joseph, is no denyall of the rest. Secondly, Though it be not mentioned in the Scripture, it might be revealed to Stephen; as the names of Jannes and Jambres, the enchanters of Egypt, though we find them not in the Book of Exodus, nor in any other of the old Testament, & Paul knew and wrote their names, 2 Tim. 3. 8. and Jude knew of the prophecy of Enoch, whereof there was no mention in the old Testament, Jude v. 14. Thirdly, It is very probable that what Joseph required concerning his bones, was done by the rest in conformity to his example.

But the greatest doubt is concerning Jacob, who was certainly buried in the sepulchre of Abraham, as the rest were not. Whereto the Answer is divers.

First, Some say, that they were buried at Shechem, but were removed to Machpelah by the Shechemites, as not enduring them to lye in their soyle, out of a malignant remembrance of that which was done by Simeon and Levi against their people & city; but it is not probable, that they that liked thē so little, would honour them so much, as to bring them so far to an honourable burying place.

Secondly, Some conceive the words may be distributively taken; for as there be two sorts of persons spoken of, and two places of buriall, the one, that is, Jacob, might be buried in Abrahams buriall place, the rest at Shechem; but the words seeme rather to be spoken of one buriall place, then of two.

Thirdly, That there is no necessity of either of these answers, for though Jacob and the rest be joyned together in a state of mortality, Act. 7. 15. yet the 16. ver. of their burial may be confined to them, as the next Antecedent, without taking him into their number, as touching the buriall in Shechem, though he, and none but he, of those that dyed in Egypt, were buried in the sepulchre of Abraham.

To the second Doubt (how the Fathers can be said to be laid in the sepulchre which Abraham bought) divers answers are given: First, Some conceive there is some misprision in the transcribers of the Scripture, who mistook the name of Abraham for Jacob; but that is not like to be true, nor safe to admit: not the first, because all, or most copies have it so, not the second, for if the originall, wherein so many copies are concurrent, should be corrupted, it would extenuate the authority of the holy Text. Secondly, Some rather think (and it is more like, and lesse dangerous) that Stephen mistook the name of Abraham for Jacob. Against which answer, if it be said, that his adversaries, if he had been so mistaken, would have taken him with it, and reproached him for it. The reply may be, that their rage against him was so great, that it might be they took no notice of his error in a matter of no great moment; or if they did, it might be omitted in this historicall narration. Thirdly, Some conceive they avoid the inconveniences last mentioned, by saying that Abraham is not here to be taken in the Nominative case, but in the Genitive, understanding Jacob, the grand-child of Abraham, for the word son or grand-child may as well be understood, as the word brother, 2 Sam. 21. 19. where Elhanan is said to slay Goliah the Gittite, that is, the brother of Goliah, as the word is supplied, 1 Chr. 20. 5. or as the word sister, 2 Sam. 21. 8. where it is said, he took the five sons of Michal, that is, the sister of Michal, for shee had no children, 2 Sam. 6. 23. or as the word mother, Mark. 15. 40. as is noted afterwards; all which words, mother, brother, and sister, are omitted by a figure called Elleipsis, or Eclipsis; which is clearer in the Greek, by the article of the Genitive case, then in the Hebrew, which hath no such distinction by various terminations of cases, as the Greek tongue hath. Or as others, the name Abraham may be taken in the Nominative case, and so they say, that the name of the parents, or progenitors, is sometimes put for the posterity, as the name of Israel or Jacob, is put for his off-spring, many degrees of descent distant from him: So the name of David is put for the Messiah, the descendent of David, Jer. 30. 9. Ezek. 34. 23. So Joseph is put for his two sons, Ephraim and Manasseh, Gen. 48. 15. and so David is named where Rehoboam is meant, 1 King. 12. 16. and Abijah the son of Rehoboam, is called Rehoboam in the report of the warre betwixt Jeroboam and him, when Rehoboam was dead, as will appeare by comparison of 2 Chro. 13. 3. with 1 King. 15. 6. Now by such an exposition though Stephens speech (if that were his meaning) might be free from error, yet if he were not understood in such a sense (which is not obvious to an ordinary apprehension, and hardly light upon without study) he might by the hearers be thought to falsifie, in putting one name for another; therefore some endevour to remove the doubt by that which followeth.

Thirdly, The answer to the third Doubt, which is concerning Hamor; where were three scruples: First, whether he were father or son to Shechem. According to the vulgar Latine, and the Geneva, it is the son of Shechem; others say the father of Shechem; the originall saith neither, but tou Sichem, that is, of Sechem, which in respect of Grammar may be either; but the originall story, Josh. 24. 32. (whence the word must be supplied) saith the father of Shechem: the like construction we have Matth. 1. 6. & 10. 2, 3. & Luke 24. 10. where we reade Mary of James, which is made up by addition of a word, Mary the mother of James, Mark 15. 40. The second, Whether the father of Ephron were called Hamor, so some say, that Zohar Ephrons father, with whom Abraham bargained for the field of Machpelah, cap. 23. 17. was called also Hamor; and so they think the difficulty of this place is best cleared, making the buriall place to be that of Abrahams, not that of Jacobs purchase: But this is yet too short to reach home to the removall of the Doubt; for though it be true, that it is not strange in Scripture for one man to have divers names, yet it doth not appear to be so in this case, nor that this Hamor had a son called Shechem, as that Hamor of whom Jacob bought his portion of ground had; where we are to answer to the third scruple, which is, Why Shechem only of Hamors sons is mentioned, when others, and not he, made the sale of the ground which Jacob bought. Answ. Shechem was amongst his sons of chiefe note, and accompt; for it is said, he was more honourable then all the house of his fathers, Gen. 34. 19. and since he is named, the rest not mentioned, it is most probable that he had most to do in this businesse, and that the rest consented to his transaction.

The summe of all is, that whatsoever contradiction may seeme to be betwixt the report of Stephen, and the records of the story of the old Testament, Luke relating only what Stephen said, is a true Historian, though Stephen were not. Secondly, that by the second Answer to the second Doubt, a sodaine slip of memory in Stephen may be confessed without inconvenience, or avovded by the third Answer. And if (as some say) the father of Ephron had [illegible]; and Hamor was one of them (which some learned men think th[illegible] way to resolve the doubt) that may sway the resolution for Abrahams [illegible] as the other Answer, that is to say, the third Answer to the second [illegible]th for Jacobs.

ANNOTATIONS
ON THE SECOND BOOK OF MOSES, called EXODUS,

According to the Greek; (which signifieth a going forth or departure; viz. out of Egypt) and according to the Hebrew, Veelle Lemoth, that is, and, or now, these are the Names: which are the first words of this second Book, after which manner the other foure ensuing Books, are named.

THE ARGUMENT.

THE second book of Moses (containing a story of about 146. yeares (to wit, from the death of Ioseph to the finishing of the Tabernacle) sheweth the multiplication of the posteritie of Iacob, from a small number, (even 70. soules (i.) persons, which came with him into Egypt, Gen.46.26,27.) augmented to six hundred thousand men (besides children): so they are numbred, Exod.12.37. and afterward the accompt given of them (in the second yeare, and second moneth of their departure) is six hundred thousand, three thousand, five hundred and fiftie, Numb.1.45, 46. wherein none under twentie yeares old, none decrepit, or unserviceable for the warres, none of the tribe of Levi, no Women were numbred. These (for their numerous increase) were feared and hated by the Egyptians: whereupon (for their own securitie) they endeavoured, by murthering the male children, and manifold tyrannies over the rest, to reduce them to a smaller number. But the more they were oppressed, the more they multiplyed, and God intending to get him honour over their oppressours, exercised his Iustice on them, his compassion on his people, and his power on both, in a miraculous deliverance of the one, and destruction of the other.

Having brought his people out of Egypt, he led them in the wildernesse, and there both cherished and upheld them, with extraordinary supplyes and support, and yet chastised them for their manifold offences, (especially murmuring, and Idolatry) Nevertheless, he made a covenant with them, at Horeb, where he delivered them Lawes, Morall, Iudiciall, and Ceremoniall, for their Government, both as a Church, and as a Commonweale.

CHAP. I.

Vers.1. NOw] or rather And according to the Hebrew importing a continuation of that Story, which (though it conclude the Book of Genesis) is not yet concluded. It is an observation of some, that (among the Hebrews, Chaldees, and Greeks) Writers begin their Discourses, with words of coherence, not to the words or matter next precedent, but to their own foregoing thoughts, to which the words following do agree. But it is more reasonable, to suppose that somewhat of the beginning of the book is wanting, or that the books are divided, which before were united: for so it was with the five books of Moses, which Originally made but one Volume, though now they be divided into five; as is observed in the generall Argument of the Pentateuch.

houshold] That is, his Children, and Nephews, for servants (who were not of the tribes of Israel) were not taken into this accompt.

V. 2. Reuben, Simeon,] The children of Israel or Jacob, are often reckoned, as Gen. 35. 22. Chap. 45. 8. Chap. 49. 3. Exod.6.14. 1 Chron. 2. 1. and in a divers order, upon divers occasions, as in the next verse, and on vers.6.

V. 3. Benjamin] Benjamin was the youngest, and so should have been named last, if he had been ranked by his age: but he is here placed the seventh in order, as the youngest of the sonnes of Jacobs wives, and before the rest, because they were the sonnes of the handmaids, and of them the first named are the children of Bilhah (Rachels handmaid) Genesis 30. 3. and then the children of Zilpah, (Leahs handmaid) Gen. 29. 24. Joseph is not written in this Registry, because he was in Egypt before these came thither.

V. 5. the souls] That is, the persons, Deut. 10.22.

seventie souls] Deut.10.22. See Annot. on Gen.46.27.

V. 6. and all his Brethren] Here Joseph is named first, in regard of the preeminence of his dignitie, not by the precedence of his birth: for many more of his Brethren were elder then he: nor of his death, for some dyed before him, and some lived after him.

all that generation] Or kindred, as some read, but the Hebrew word Hador properly signifieth a generation, and by generation is meant all of that age or time with Joseph and his Brethren, whether Hebrews or Egyptians: this (by probable computation) was about the 109. yeare of the Israelites abode in Egypt.

V. 7. the land was filled with them] Vers. 12. not the land of Egypt, but the Province or land of Goshen, (allotted to the Israelites for their habitation) This multiplication of so many (whereof see the generall Argument of this Book) from so few at first, in so short a space, (for it was from the death of Joseph to the beginning of their afflictions, as is diligently computed about, or not much above fiftie yeares) might come to passe, by beginning to be fruitfull sooner, and continuing longer then other women, by bringing forth many at a birth: and that might be the rather, because (as Philosophers and Physicians say) there are seven severall Cells for conception, wherein may be formed so many distinct Embryons, which proceeding to a perfect shape, may be so many children: and as (upon experience) it is reported, that some have brought forth five at a birth, foure times over, that is twentie, Arist. hist. animal.l.7.c.4. And as by such frequent conceptions their number might much increase, so also by Gods withholding of abortion, whereby that which was conceived, was happily brought on to a perfect birth.

V. 8. a new king] Acts 7. 18. whom some Historians call Mephis, some Rameses, some Armesesnianus, some Amonophis, or Amenoptes: but as this King knew not Joseph, though dead not much above fiftie yeares before him, so may this King well be unknown to Writers, which were many hundreds of years, in time behind him: and he might be called a new King, because he was of another race, or family, from the former, or for that he took up a new way of government, or had new devices to bring about the Innovations he had designed.

V. 9. moe and mightier] Not absolutely moe and mightier then all the Egyptians; but comparing the Province, or Country where they were planted, with any of the like compasse, the Israelites in number farre exceeded them, and so (by their increase) grew stronger then their enemies, Psal.105.24.

V. 10. dealt subtilly] See also Acts 7. 19.

lest they multiply] They were multiplyed before, vers. 7. and that the Egyptians confessed, and complained of in this verse: therefore they take new counsels and courses to prevent their further increase.

Get them up out of the land] Into Canaan: and so we shall lose the commoditie, which we might reap by their riches, and service, while they are kept under our subjection. Envy at their number, feare of their Power, covetousnesse of gaine by their service, and hatred of their Religion, (whereof see Exod. 8. 26.) made them desirous to retaine them, as captive slaves, whom their fathers received as guests, and enjoyed as friends, and as benefactors.

V. 11. Taskmasters] Heb. Masters of tribute: which may be exacted as well in worke as in money.

Afflict them with their burdens] This God foretold Abraham, Gen. 15. 13. the cause whereof, was not meerely the suspition, subtiltie and malignitie of Pharaoh, and his People: but it is like, the Israelites procured this unto themselves by their provocations of God, by their Idolatries: as appeareth by Josh. 24. 14 Ezek. 20. 7, 8 9. and chap 23. 3.

treasure cities] Cities of Tabernacles, as the vulgar Latine turnes the Hebrew word, mis chenoth, which may be rendered rather Repositories: and they might be Storehouses of Artillery, Granaries for Corn, and Treasuries for royall and publique riches: but certaine it is, that the Egyptians imployed the Israelites, in raising so many and so great buildings, (whether of Cities, Castles, or Treasuries) as might still keep them in a painfull, and servile condition.

Pithom and Rameses] Two cities situate in the confines of the kingdome: and for the latter, it is to be observed, that there was a part of the countrey of Egypt, called the land of Ramesis, which was given to the Israelites by Pharaoh, (for their possession) at their entrance into Egypt. Gen. 47. 11. called the best of the land: there they built a citie, and called it by the name of the whole Countrey: because it was the best part of the land of Egypt, Gen. 47 11. Or Moses might give it the name, which it had when he wrote his History, though it might be called by another name, when it was built: some take it for a citie called Pelusium, different from Rameses forementioned: Gen. 47.

V. 12. The more they multiplyed] Heb. and as they afflicted them, so they multiplyed. Fear and hard usage was in ordinary operation like to give impediment to procreation of children; but (that their fruitfulnesse might appeare to be by the especiall blessing of God) the more they are molested, the more they are multiplyed; as is said of Camomile, the more it is troden, the faster it groweth: but with this difference, that it is naturall to that hearb to thrive by oppression; but it is not so by the nature of man, but by the favour of God, for the godly to prevaile against persecution: which may be one great cause, why they should wish well, and beare good will unto their enemies; since though they meane them never so much hurt, their malignitie may become an occasion of very much good unto them: as the grudge of Josephs brethren was converted to his honour, and to the comfort of himselfe and them, and of many thousands moe. Gen. 50. 20. And hereby we may observe that of the Wise man made good, against the wicked Policie of the world, There is no wisdome, nor counsell, nor understanding against the Lord, Prov. 21 30.

they were grieved because] They meant to grieve the Israelites, and themselves are grieved: so their punishment is suitable to their sinne, (and a great sinne it was to grieve not for their own wickednesse, but for anothers welfare) and envy becometh both their crime and their curse.

V. 14. All manner of service] Both in the field, and in the citie, to man, and to beast: many whereof were so base, that such as were ingenuous might disdaine them; and so toylesome, that those who were weake and tender, could not indure them.

V. 15 Shiphrah and Puah] That these were Egyptian and not Hebrew midwives, is conceived by their answer, vers. 19. wherein they speake of the Hebrews, as differing from themselves: but some rather thinke, they were Hebrew midwives: because it is not like (say they) that the Hebrews would admit of those that were Egyptians, at their labour; and that to have obtruded such upon them, would soone have discovered that the male children were made away by the Kings command: yet that seemes more probable, then that the Hebrew women should either for feare, or hire, be drawn to destroy all the males that were born of their own people: and though these midwives be said to feare God, vers. 17. that phrase doth not necessarily inferre that they were right in Religion, as we see Jonah 1 16. But the greatest doubt is, why these are mentioned, and none else? why two and no more? The question is not easily resolved: some conceive these midwives were such as were of note, and use in noble families, and so might do cruell execution upon the chief of all the Hebrew children: but the Egyptians made no such difference of the Hebrews; how noble soever some were by birth, they were all made base by slavish servitude: yet these midwives might be Mistresses of that art, and so by them others might receive that charge, which they received from the King, and they might receive it from him, being much imployed by the women of his Court.

V. 16. stooles] The Hebrew word obnajim (found only in this place) is taken particularly for a stoole, or seat framed for the use of women in travell, that the midwife may doe her office, with more ease, and safetie to the mother, and the child.

kill him] By strangling or otherwise, so as may be done with most expedition and certainty; lest they should doe the like to the Egyptians, if they were suffered to live to be men: and yet it must be done cunningly, and secretly, with some private pinch, that the child may be thought to have had some mishap in the birth; which cunning practise (though for a while it might) could not long be concealed: but malice is so blind, that it seeeth but a little way beyond it selfe; the foiles and failings with the just recompences of it, are neither foreseen nor feared by the malicious, untill they are surprised by them.

but if a daughter] They were content they should live; because of their infirmitie, unable to resist their rigour; and because they were desirous to reserve them for their sensuall satisfaction, being more beautifull then the Egyptian women: See the last annotat. on this chapter.

V 17. feared God] To feare God, and honour the king, are the sociable duties, of pious persons, and loyall subjects, 1 Pet. 2. 17. while the subordinate power doth not controll the supreame; but if so (as in this place) the resolution of the same Apostle must be our rule. We ought to obey God rather then men, Acts 5. 29.

V. 19. Hebrew women are lively] The Hebrew word Haioth which signifieth quicke, or quickning, may note (as the Vugar Latine rendereth it) a skill, quickneese, or dexterity in doing the office of a midwife, which is many times prevented by the expedition of the birth: and it may be, (as some Rabbines conceive) they might expresse the promptnesse of the Hebrew mothers, in this manner, by a comparison of contempt, (that they might be the lesse suspected by Pharaoh of pitie or partialitie towards them) as if they would have them to be taken to be like unto beasts who (when they bring forth) have no need or use of midwives assistance, they are so quick and lively in their deliverance. But it is most like that the Hebrews (acquainted with the cruell command of the King) might rather make use of their ordinary neighbours, for assistance to travelling women, then commit themselves to the hands of professed midwives of the Egyptian Nation, and (if obedient to the Kings command) professed murderers: yet it might be true of many of them, that they were delivered, before the midwives came unto them: for those that are laborious (when they are with child) have quicker labour, (when their burden cometh to the birth) then others have. Howsoever this answer of the midwives is diversly censured; for some from their feare of God, mentioned, vers. 17. and the recompence of their pitie vers. 21. inferre, that they made a free and bold profession of their faith, avowing to the face of Pharaoh, (with adventure of their lives) that the power and favour of God was with them, and therefore (notwithstanding the Kings command) they would doe nothing against them: and yet it is generally conceived, that herein (to save the little Jews alive) they told the king an officious lye (as Rahab did, Josh. 2. 5, 6. and David, 1 Sam. 21. 2. and Elisha, 2 King. 6. 19.)

V. 21. made them houses] In this or the like expression, God often professeth favour to those he loveth: as 1 Sam. 2. 35. 2 Sam. 7. 11. 1 King. 2. 24. & chap. 11. 38. Which phrase importeth not so much the place of habitation, or abode; as the blessing of families with increase and prosperitie, as by a numerous, long-lived, and prosperous off-spring: and the off-spring (in the Hebrew Tongue) may be the rather called an House, because the word Ben, a sonne, is derived of the word Bana, which signifieth to build; for of children are families made up, as houses of the materialls, whereof they are composed. Hence some inferre, the officious lie of the Midwives was lawfull: but their act being a mixt act, consisting of Pietie to God, pitie to his people, and fallacie in lying to the King; the two first graciously accepted, and rewarded by God, the third was mercifully passed by and pardoned by him.

V. 22. And Pharaoh charged all his people] The Midwives being as kind to the male children, as Pharaoh to the females, (vers. 16. & 22.) he giveth the charge more generally, and (that no doubt) with commination of crueltie on those who could not find in their hearts to be so cruell, as he would have them: which tooke such effect (at least for a time) that the parents of Moses could not long conceale him, Chap. 2. vers. 3. yet this violence did not continue all the time of the Israelites continuance in Egypt; because there were many young Hebrewes, under twenty yeares old, when they went out of Egypt: and it is like, this bloudy decree died with the death of the Tyrant that made it; and that he died the sooner, because he was so cruell, according to the prophecie of the Psalmist, Psalme 55. 23.

cast into the river] In the Hebrew there is no mention of the River:

V. 21. x St. Austin hath assured us, that ye salvation of ye World, (if Possible) ought not to be procured by (but) an officious lie. Reynolds, sinf. sin; p. 280.

Ch. 2. 12. Compd with Act. 7. 25. Moses was raisd up by God to be a Judge — thō ye people refusd to own Him — ; for wch ye Deliverance was put off 40 Years. Ridgley. p. 306.

River: but that is the meaning, whereby it might be knowne, whether the Midwives obeyed the Kings command or no: wherein is observable the practise of Tyrants, which is to make up their bloudy plots, sometimes with Fox-like subtiltie, and sometimes with Lion-like crueltie: so (according to the Proverbe) the Lions skin pieceth up the Foxes, as well as the Foxes doth the Lions, as they see occasion to make use of either.

and every daughter] When the charge was given to the Midwives to murder the Males, it was with caution, and exception, to save the Females alive, v. 16. and now it is enlarged to all the people, to be slaughtermen to the sonnes of the Hebrewes, the Tyrant still continueth his reservation of the daughters, that they might be spared, and kept alive; but this was not out of pitie towards them, but because he had no such feare of them, as of the other sexe: and it is like, the daughters of God were more pleasing to these sonnes of men, (as the daughters of men were to the sonnes of God, Gen. 6. v. 2.) then their owne native Countrey-women: and so they would keepe them, either for their lust; or to raise a fairer and more beautifull breed then their owne: For some such reason was it, that Abraham feared the beauty of his wife, would be a snare to his life among the Egyptians, and that (according to his feare) it came to passe, that the Princes of Pharaoh commended her, and thereupon she was taken into his house, Gen. 12. 14, 15. This was another Pharaoh, much ancienter, then the Pharaoh mentioned in this story. See Annot. in Gen. 12. 15.

CHAP. II.

Vers. 1. A Man of the house of Levi] The Levite was called Amram: and of Amram it is said, Chap. 6. 20. that he tooke him Jochebed (his fathers sister) to wife: which mariage may seeme to be incestuous: but (in that place) the word sister may be taken for a kinswoman, as the word Brother is taken for a kinsman, Gen. 13. 8. and Chap. 14. vers. 12. 14. of the same book compared: and if she were indeed his fathers Sister, or his Aunt, such mariages were then tolerated, while there were but a few of a Tribe; but afterwards, (viz. about an hundred years after, (for Moses was eighty yeares old and Aaron eighty three, when they stood before Pharaoh) they were fordidden, Levit. 18. 12.

V. 2. The woman conceived] This was not her first child: for Aaron was Moses his brother, and elder then he, by 3. yeares, Chap. 7. 7. and their sister Miriam was born before them both; and Aaron and she, before the bloudy Edict was made by the King against the children of the Hebrews.

a goodly child] Acts 7. 20. That is said here to be done by affection, which Heb. 11. 23. is attributed to faith: his parents trusted in Gods protection, for the preservation of their child, (notwithstanding the bloudy decree of Pharaoh) and their affection became serviceable to their faith, when it quickned them up to use all the good meanes they could, to reprieve him from perill.

V. 3. no longer hide him] By reason of the severe charge, given by Pharaoh, Chap. 1. vers. 22. and the strict search for the male children, which (no doubt) was severely enjoyned (as a meanes conducible to his end) though by Moses it be not mentioned.

an Arke of bulrushes] Made like an Arke, or chest, and capable of the child: of such materials some were of greater capacitie, and were used in stead of boats, or ships: for in such vessels the Ambassadours of Ethiopia crossed the Sea, Esa. 18. 2. that is, the Red Sea, which divided betwixt the Easterne Ethiopia, (which was part of Arabia) and the Westerne: and in Egypt the manner (of old) was, to use boats or vessels of rushes or reeds, Plin. nat. hist. lib. 7. c. 56.

put the child therein] Here is no mention of pitching of the Arke, but it is like it was pitched, (as Noahs Arke was) within and without, Gen. 6. 14. Thus (by humane prudence) they served the divine providence, and shewed faith and affection without presumption.

flagges] Which are a water-reed, long, broad and sharp-pointed like a sword; among these he was charily laid; both because they were neare the brinke of the river, (where the child might easily be seen) and where being staid by the flagges, it could not easily be carried away, by the streame.

V. 4. his sister stood afarre off] That is, Miriam, who (being a Propheteſſe, Exod. 15. 20.) might be guided by God, to give this advice concerning the child: or if she were but about tenne or twelve yeares of age, (and then no Propheteſſe) she might be taught by her mother, what to doe in that matter.

V. 6 This is one of the Hebrews] So said Pharaohs daughter; (whom Josephus calleth Thermutis) she said so when she had opened the Arke, and viewed the child; which might be known to be an Hebrew by his circumcision: for at this time the Egyptians had not received circumcision, though afterward they did: or probably conjectured, by her fathers Decree against the Hebrews: or by the beautie of Moses, for the Israelites were more beautifull then the Egyptians; and he eminently beautifull above other Israelites, verse 2. of this Chapter, and Act. 7. 20.

V. 7. a nurse of the Hebrew women] Gods providence excludes not mans prudence: the making of the Arke and dawbing it with slime and pitch, (as it is like it was) the placing of it, and the child within it, among the flagges, neare the rivers brinke, vers. 3. and setting his sister to watch it, and her watchfulnesse at due distance, and discreet and seasonable advice to Pharaohs daughter, were all effects of humane wisdome, and subordinate meanes to the providence of God for the preservation of the child.

V. 10. her sonne] Heb. 11. 24. By adoption, or free choyce, not by humane conception: haply she had none of her owne, or if she had, she had none so beautifull as he; But as freely as he was chosen (in his infancie) so he freely refused that relation, and all the credite and comfort that belonged to it; when he came to maturitie in manhood, but especially in grace: for then he chose, to be a fellow in affliction (with his brethren) rather then to have no fellow in Court-favour, and honour; and yet he lost no honour by his change: for afterward, he grew mightie in words, and in deeds, Act. 7. 22. prevalent in discourse, and counsell, and powerfull in many great and miraculous operations.

his name Moses, Because] Joseph. Antiq. lib. 2. cap. 5. (and many from him) conceive the word to be a compound (in the Egyptian Tongue) of Mo water, and yses saved: but the word is rather to be thought an Hebrew word, called Mosheh, derived from Mascha, signifying, hath taken out, or drawne out: because he was drawne out of the water: and in that sense, that is, as signifying, not simply drawne out, but drawne out of the water; it is used, 2 Sam. 22. 17. & Psal. 18. 16. and in those two places onely is that word found in Scripture. But what ever the name was in the Egyptian, Moses rendred in the Hebrew Tongue: And it is like his parents gave him a name before at his birth or circumcision, though what it was, is not set down; but this name was put upon him as a memoriall both of his danger, and deliverance: wherein if there were a concurrence in sound and sense, both of the Egyptian and Hebrew Tongue, it was the more usefull to such a purpose.

V. 11. was grown] At fourtie yeares old, Act. 7. 23.

an Egyptian smiting] Philo the famous Jew conjectureth (and it is like enough) that this Egyptian was one of the rigid governours of the Hebrews.

one of his brethren] The Hebrews call all brethren which are of the same Family or Nation.

V. 12 slew the Egyptian] By which act, (wherein he was warranted by revelation from God) he meant to intimate (to his Hebrew brethren) that he was to be their deliverer from Egyptian bondage, though at this time they understood it not Act. 7. 25.

V. 14. as thou killedst the Egyptian] He pretends deadly danger to himselfe, that he may indanger the life of Moses, who was so farre from killing any of his brethren, that by his good will they should not receive any wrong from any: Malice and anger is very forward to slander; as here Moses is made an usurping executioner; so was Lot made an usurping Judge, by the lewd Sodomites, Gen. 19. 9.

Moses feared] Not without good cause, and therefore he fled, verse 15. but in the eleventh to the Hebrews, the Apostle saith, by faith Moses forsooke Egypt, not fearing the wrath of the King, verse 27. which that it may not seeme contradictory to this of Moses himselfe, we must distinguish of the departures of Moses from Egypt, which were two: the former that here mentioned, wherein his feare appeared to be more then his faith; the latter was after his contestation (by miracles) with Pharaohs stubbornesse, Chap. 10. 28, 29. and in this, his departure was not by way of fearefull flight, but of faithfull and couragious conquest.

Surely this thing is knowne] Though verse 12. he looked this way and that way, lest any one should see him; but he that felt him, or his brother, who was beaten by the Egyptian; yet some body saw him, or the Hebrew made some report, so that the secret came out.

V. 15. But Moses fled] He saved himselfe by flight from Pharaohs wrath, whereby he was reserved for a better opportunitie to contest with the Tyrant in the cause of his Master, and brethren: that this is no way repugnant to Religion, or to that courage, which the profession of it requireth, doth appeare by many places of Scripture: as by Gen. 28. 6, 7. 1 King. 19. 3. Matth. 2. 13. & chap. 10. 23. & chap. 12. 15. & chap. 24. 16. Joh. 8. 59. Luk. 4. 30. 2 Cor. 11. 33.

land of Midian] A citie so called, was built by Midian (the sonne of Ceturah) whence the Region round about was called Midian.

V. 16. Priest of Midian] The Hebrew word Coben, signifieth a Priest, and sometimes a Prince, or chiefe Ruler, as to water their fathers flock] In thoſe dayes the calling and courſe of a ſhepheard was no diſparagement to worthy perſons: though it were not ſo honourable, as that Kings daughters ſhould be employed in ſuch a ſervice, as here is mentioned. See Annot. on Gen.24. verſe 15.

2 Sam.8.18. Text and Margine: and it may be he was both, becauſe the principall men in thoſe dayes were Prieſts; as Noah, Melchiſedec, Abraham, and others. Euſebius lib.9. cap. ult. de præparat: Evangel: calls him Jethro, King of Arabia, of whoſe Kingdome Midian was a Province: but he ſeemeth here, rather to be a Prieſt, then a Prince: becauſe his daughters are ſo meanely imployed, ſo little reſpected by the Shepheards, verſe 17. His name is Hobab, Judg.4.11. who was the ſonne of Raguel, (the Midianite) Num.10.29. elſewhere he is called Jethro, Exod.3.1. & Chap.18. many times.

V. 17. drave them away] The men-ſhepheards uncivilly wronged the women, taking the water that they had laboured for, to ſpare their owne paines, and ſtriving to have the firſt turne at the time of watering; which was uſually done by many together, haply for the removall of the cover of the Well, and drawing of water with more eaſe. See Gen. 29.10.

but Moſes ſtood up and helped them] Being ſo great a man in Egypt, he might have ſome ſervants to attend him, who might aſſiſt him, in reſiſting the wrongs, done to women; if he had none, he ſhewed more goodneſſe and courage, in taking part with the better cauſe, againſt the ſtronger ſide.

V. 18. Revel their father] He was (as ſome thinke) their grandfather, and (in Scripture) the Ancients (in a direct line) are called fathers, and their nephewes children, Gen. 31.43. and ſo one man may have many fathers, Act.24.14. But here it is more probable, that one father had many names, and that this Prieſt of Midian, was called Revel in this place, and Jethro, 3.1. & Chap.18. often, and Hobab, Judg.4.11. whoſe father was Raguel the Midianite.

V. 19. An Egyptian] So Moſes ſeemed by his habite, and he told them (haply) that he came out of Egypt.

V. 21. content] The word Foal, in Hebrew, ſignifieth no more of it ſelfe, but to be willing: but the vulgar Latine forceth it, to ſignifie an oath, which ſenſe it will not naturally admit: in the firſt of Sam.14.24. the ſame word is uſed for adjuration, but it is with an accuſative conſtruction, which here is not.

gave Moſes Zipporah] Children are the goods of their parents, which may not be taken from them, unleſſe they give them: how ſoone it was that Moſes had this gift is not extant in the Scripture: it may be it was a good while after his admiſſion into Jethroes family, becauſe fourtie yeares (after his coming to Midian) at his returne unto Egypt, one of his two ſonnes was not yet circumciſed, Exod. 4.25.

V. 22. Gerſhom] Chap.18.3. The word ſignifieth a deſolate ſtranger: and it was given (for the name of his ſonne) for remembrace of Moſes his eſtrangement from the land of his Nativitie, whence he was driven; and for admonition to others, (eſpecially his ſonne who bare that name) to mind them of their inheritance in the land of Canaan, where they were to expect a more permanent abode.

V.23. ſighed] Though the Tyrant was dead, yet tyranny was not: Gods people were ſtill oppreſſed, albeit that Pharaoh were ſuppreſſed: for an other Pharaoh ſucceeded him in Power as great, and in oppreſſion as grievous to the children of Iſrael.

came up unto God] His eye ſeeth what the wicked doe unto his people, verſe 25. of this Chap. and this eare heareth, when they complaine of what they ſuffer, Exod.3.7.9. V. 25. had reſpect unto them] Heb. knew them. That is, acknowledged them, for his people, and ordered the courſe of his providence, for their deliverance, ſo as might be moſt profitable for them, moſt honourable for himſelfe.

CHAP. III.

Verſ. 1. Kept the flock] Moſes (from his childhood) had been a Courtier about fourty yeares; and now he cometh downe to the condition of a ſhepheard, and continueth in it fourty yeares more; and for a third fourtie yeares, he had a more honorable, and leſſe quiet condition, being a politique Paſtour and Governour of the nation of the Iſraelites.

his father in law] The word Chothen ſignifieth not a father-in-law alone; but generally, a kinſman; yet here it is to be contracted from the generall acception, to the particular relation, betwixt Jethro and Moſes, upon the marriage of Zipporah.

backſide of the deſart] Proceeding further and further, in the deſart, to find out freſh paſtures for his flocks: the Hebrew Scholiaſt thinks the name of the place to be the further deſart.

mountaine of God] Which was not ſo called, untill God made eſpeciall choyce of it, for the publication of his law, Exod. 19. 11. from that it was called the mountaine of God: and it was named alſo Sanai, from the ſtore of Bramble buſhes in that place, for Seneh, in Hebrew, is ſuch a Buſh: it was called likewiſe Horeb, from the dryneſſe, and ſolitude of the place; yet might this hill, like Pernaſſus, have two tops, the one called Sinai, the other Horeb.

V. 2. the Angel of the LORD] As Gen.48.16. Judg.6.12. Act. 7.30. This is not a created Angel, but the Angel of the Covenant, Exod. 23. verſ. 20,21,22. (to wit, Chriſt) who is not onely the Angel of the Lord; but the Lord of Angels, Heb.1.6,7. and (by appoſition) the Lord the Angel, or the Angel the Lord; for he is called God, verſ. 4.6. 13. Jehovah, verſ. 7.

appeared to him] As ſome conceive in an humane ſhape, as a preludium or fore-ſhewing of his Incarnation in time to come: but the Text ſaith, (in the next words) it was in a flame of fire.

in a flame of fire] A repreſentation of glory, and terrour, to make him awfully apprehenſive of the divine Majeſtie, and (withall) as well to erect him, with confidence, as to humble him, with reverence.

buſh not conſumed] The word Seneh ſignifieth a dry buſh; the more ſtrange that it was not conſumed, ſince God is a conſuming fire, Heb.12.29. but that is to the wicked, who are compared to briars and thornes, Iſa.9.18. to ſuch his indignation is a devouring fire, an everlaſting burning, Iſa.33.14. But this buſh ſignifieth the Church, and therefore though it ſeeme all on fire, either by reaſon of the divine preſence, or humane perſecutions; it is ſo preſerved by God, that it is not conſumed. See Iſa.43.2. & Dan.3.27.

V. 4. And when the Lord ſaw] He is called an Angel, ver.2. here Jehovah, and the Angel (who is Jehovah) is Chriſt, called the Angel of the Covenant. See the firſt Annot. on verſ.2.

Moſes, Moſes] The doubling of Moſes his name, importeth not onely favour, but familiaritie, and an affectionate mind to the matter in hand, as Luk.22.31.

V. 5. put off thy ſhooes] So Joſh.5.15. Act.7.33. The ſhooes (being next the earth) are uſually moſt foule, as the foot of ſuch as goe barefoot; and therefore by putting off the ſhooes, and waſhing of the feet, is ſignified the puritie which is required in our approaches to God. See Heb.10.22. Joh.13.10.

holy ground] Becauſe of Gods preſence, & in relation to it; not by any inherent holineſſe, whereof the place is not capable, nor any permanent holineſſe, when the preſence is withdrawne.

V. 6. afraid to look up] Ever ſince our firſt parents were rebels againſt, and runaways from their Maker; the moſt religious of their race have been affected with fear of the glorious preſence of God: for this ſee Heb.12.21. Dan.10.7,8. Matth. 17.6. Revel.1.17.

the Canaanites, and the Hittites, &c.] Sometimes the Inhabitants of the Land of Canaan, are ſignified under one name, as the name of Canaanites, or Amorites, or Hittites, here they come under 6. appellations. Deut.7.1. we find 7. named, yea ſometimes their diſtinction ariſeth to tenne ſeverall denominations, as Gen.15.verſ.19,20,21. and yet that enumeration and Nomenclature ſeemes to be imperfect, becauſe the Hivites are not numbred among them: the reaſon hereof may be, becauſe ſome names are more generall, ſome more particular, ſome more, ſome leſſe eminent; ſome obſervable on one occaſion, ſome on another: as the people of Iſrael are ſometimes noted, by their common Name, Iſraelites, as the ſonnes of Jacob or Iſrael; ſomtimes by the diſtinct names of their ſeverall Tribes; ſometimes one name of eminence compriſeth the reſt, as the Jewes have their name from Judah, the Prince of the Tribes.

V. 9. Now the cry] He heard before, but now he will make others know, that he did both obſerve, and pitie their oppreſſed eſtate, and meant to take a courſe for their deliverance out of it.

the difficultie of the service, to deliver an oppressed people from so potent and malignant Tyranne: and so he would faine be excused the undertaking thereof.

V.12. Certainly I will be with thee] So that thou needest not to fear either thine own Feebleneſſe, or the Power of them, against whom I send thee.

this shall be a token unto thee, &c.] Tokens and signes, given for assurance, doe usually goe before the thing whereof they are signes, or tokens, as Judg. 6. 37. 39. or are concomitant with them, as Luk.2.12. but here Moses having seene a miraculous signe of Gods especiall presence, and God having spoken unto him, and assuredly promised his presence with him, he had evidence & confirmation enough for the undertaking of his charge, but now he would have him to inlarge and stretch out his faith (beyond the assurance of his commission, and the good successe of it, in the deliverance of the people) to that, which was a consequent upon it, and did (in reason) presuppose it: to wit, the gratefull memorie of their deliverance, when God would appeare to him againe, and the people with him, at the Mountaine where then he was: and it would be meet for him, (at his returne) to have an especiall Memorandum, that the Lord was with him still, for his incouragement to undergoe the further conduct of his people to the Land of Canaan: and (in the meane time) he was pleased to give him full assurance of his powerfull presence with him, and assistance to him, by many precedent signes, and tokens, precedent to his contestation with the Tyrant, which had their place, before this service (now foretold) and favour promised, come to passe: and thereof he giveth him (as a present earnest of more miracles to come) not onely this vision of the burning, but not burned bush; but other miraculous experiments; whereof see Chap.4.vers.3,4.

V. 13. What is his Name] Moses an Ambassadour from God, desires particular direction from him, touching what he must say unto the people: for Ambassadours are not to speake their owne words, but his that sends them: and God being called by many names, it was of some moment, by what Name he would now be mentioned unto them, especially, since many of his names were abused, by application to Idols: To this purpose some observe that when God judgeth, he is called Elohim; when he warreth, Sabaoth, Lord of hosts; when he professeth mercy, Jehovah, Exod.34 6. Howsoever, Moses (doubtlesse) had good reason (though it be not apparent in the Text) why he moved that question, and God by his answer sheweth his allowance of it.

V. 14. I am that I am] Or, I will be that I will be. For (in the Hebrew) the Future Tense is often put for the Present: the word importeth an eternall being, according to the expression of the Apostle, Heb.13.8. Rev.16.5. an incomprehensible being, and Independent being, on which yet, all other things doe depend, both for beginning, and continuance: and (withall) a constant performing of his promise, having both unresistible power, and immutable will to make good his word.

V. 15. The Lord God] In the Originall the word is Jehovah, the same in sense with the name Ehieh, in the former verse, but more in use then it, and better knowne; and so by two names the impression was to be made the stronger; that their faith might be more firme for beliefe of his promises.

V. 18. sacrifice] Because Egypt was full of Idolatry, God would appoint them a place, where they should serve him purely, without mixture with Idolaters; safely, without danger from Idolaters, to whom their sacrifices were such an abomination, that to offer them before their eyes, would provoke them to stone them: Exod.8.26.

V. 19. not by a mighty hand] Or, but by a strong hand. Exod. 6.1. & 13.3. Psal.136.12. Wherein is no contradiction: for though God had done many miracles, which could not be done but by a mighty, yea an Almighty hand; yet the stubborne Tyrant would not yeeld, but by a very strong hand, so farre stronger then his owne, that he could have no hope to prevaile by strugling against it: by such an hand at last, he let them goe; because (against it) he could not hold them any longer. And by the same hand, he could have wrought their deliverance sooner, but that his long contesting with the contumacie of the Tyrant, made much for the manifestation of his Power, in multiplicitie of miracles; of his Justice, in varietie of Judgements, upon the Egyptians; and of his mercy and faithfulneſſe to his people, in their so strange redemption from such intolerable bondage.

V. 21. favour not goe emptie] See Annot. on Chap.12. vers. 36. Chap.11. vers.3. Gen.15.14. Psal.106.46. Pro.16.7.

V. 22. every woman shall borrow jewels of silver, &c.] This sheweth, that (though Goshen were principally possessed by the Hebrews, yet) there were Egyptians among them, as among the other Egyptians, there were some Hebrews: as is plaine by the story of the Passeover, Chap.12. And these things they borrowed, or asked, (for the word doth not necessarily signifie borrowing) might be either a reward or wages for their former service, (as Gen.31.9.) or a mulct, or spoile of their Enemies, (raising an unjust warre against them: which might also serve for provision of precious materialls, for the ordering of the Tabernacle) Of this example some make very ill use: But it must not be a president for the like practise, but in the same case, and upon the same warrant; which were both extraordinary; and therefore this act of the Israelites must not be taken for a patterne in after-times. Which is to be noted, against the injustice of the Anabaptists, who pretending a right to every mans estate (especially if they take them to be wicked, and out of Christ) by vertue of the Apostles speech, 1 Cor. 3.22,23. take upon them, (without either asking, or borrowing, or buying,) to take from them, what they please: wherein they lay a ground for the greatest injustice that may be, even to the confusion and ruine of all Common-weales: for which they can have no faire or probable pretence out of Scripture, but very much against it. And for that distinction they make, of the godly, and the wicked; though there be great difference betwixt them, in Religious, there is not the like in Civill respects: for as (the Wise man observeth, No man knoweth love or hatred (i. of God) by these things, Eccles.9.1. for (as touching temporall things, as it followeth in the next verse) all things come alike to all, to the righteous and to the wicked; to the cleane and to the uncleane; to him that sacrificeth, and to him that sacrificeth not; to him that sweareth, as to him that feareth an oath: and even of those, that belong to the Covenant of election, some may seem for a time to be reprobates, and contrariwise; (as it was with Paul and Judas) so that had they lived together, Judas (who was a thiefe, as our Saviour called him, Joh.12.6.) should by their doctrine have had a right to rob and spoyle Paul of all he had. But their opinion and practise is yet more pernicious: for from this libertie (which the Anabaptists usurpe over other mens estates) they proceed to deprive the owners of them of their lives, thinking them unworthy to live upon the earth, as the enemies of Paul censured him, Act.22.22. Of the Injustice and crueltie of this Anabaptisticall spirit, much is written by divers Protestant Writers, especially by Bullinger and Sleydan, l.5. & 10. of his Commentaries; which if it were well considered, would awaken and quicken our spirits, for discovery of them, and for caution against them.

CHAP. IV.

Vers. 1. They will not beleeve] By the speech of Stephen, Act. 7.25. (it seemeth) he was too credulous of the peoples apprehension, and of their assent to his successefull undertaking of their deliverance; for he supposed they would take his killing of the Egyptian for a signe that by his hand God would rescue them from Egyptian, rigour; and now (on the contrary part) he is too diffident: It may be, he might mistrust his Countreymen (the Hebrews) by the experience of his owne feares, and doubts: otherwise, he might have beene confident, (having Gods promise for it) not onely for their deliverance by him, but for their obedience to him, and beliefe of him, at least for the Elders of Israel, Chap.3.18.

V. 2. a rod] The question is, What is this in thine hand? in Hebrew Mazè: the answer, is a rod, Heb. matte: where is noted by some Hebrew Criticks a Paranomasie, or allusion to the similitude of the words, in symphonie, or likeneſſe of sound: the like is observed in Noahs blessing of Japhet, Gen.9 27. and Jacobs blessing of Dan, Gen. 49. 16. And as in Hebrew, so in Greek, Rom.1.29.31.

V. 3. it became a serpent] (So Exod.7.9,10.) To change one creature into another, (not in appearance onely, but indeed,) requires a divine Power, and is a divine proof of any thing, to which is set such a miraculous seale: and therefore the devils argument was good, (though his meaning were naught) when he would conclude, our Saviour to be the Sonne of God, by changing stones into bread, Matth.4.3. The greater the change is, the more evidence of a divine Power appearing in it. See the Annot. on Chap.7. vers.10.

V. 4. and it became a rod] The rod, and serpent, might signifie the different condition of the Israelites, and Egyptians: a rod to correct those as children; a serpent to sting, and kill these as enemies: In this change, Moses his faith overcometh his feare: and by faith the greatest evils change their natures, and become not serpents to kill, but rods, or staves (as Psal.23. 4.) to comfort, and support. Or the rod and serpent may note the different condition of the Israelites onely, as first, under Josephs rod of government: secondly, under Egypts Scorpion of persecution, which was the rod converted to a serpent: thirdly, that serpent turned into a rod againe, might intimate their state and condition under the government of Moses.

take it by the taile] Some curiously note, that he was bidden to take the serpent by the Taile, not by the head: because that part was reserved to be bruised by Moses his Master, Gen.3.15.

became a rod] The serpent being the embleme, or figure of the devill, this power over the rod and serpent, by alternate change, is thought (by some) to typifie the prevailing of Christ over the devill, in the working of wonders, by changing the nature of the creatures, as well as otherwise.

V. 5. That they may beleeve] This miraculous power was not to be shewed, for ostentation, or vaine glory; but for confirmation of the faith of the Hebrews, touching Moses his calling and doctrine, and touching their deliverance from bondage by his mediation; divine and miraculous operations concurring with it.

V. 6. leprous as snow] (So Num. 12. 10.) That is, white as snow. By that Moses might be humbled; and the leprosie of his hand might be a preservative to his heart against the sinne of pride: and so he might the better beware of ascribing any of those miraculous operations to his owne handy worke, which were to be effected onely by the finger of God.

V. 7. turned againe] Herein the power of God appeares, in that, disease and soundnesse come and goe, at the turning of an hand, by his command: and therein it is very observable, that the same act produceth such contrary effects, and in the very same place; as to put the hand into a cleane and whole bosome, and to take it out leprous; and to put a leprous hand into it againe, and to bring it out whole, and to leave no leprosie behind; was many wayes miraculous: Whereby we must learne to submit our selves wholly to him, in what he commands, and to put our whole confidence in him, (for whatsoever he foretels, or promiseth unto us) as also, for the cure of diseases that come upon us, to addresse our selves to him by prayer, who with meanes, or without meanes, with small meanes, as well as with great; yea against meanes, is able to effect, what pleaseth him. See Matth. 8. 3. & 10. 8. & Luk. 5. 13. Matth. 8. 15. & 19. 2.

V. 8. voyce of the first signe] The signe is said to have a voyce, because it (as it were) speakes that to the eye, which words doe to the eare: and (on the contrary) sometimes that which is plainly and fully declared to the eare, is represented, as if it were acted, and exhibited to the eye, Gal. 3. 1.

V. 9. river] That is, Nilus: for though God speake this to Moses in the wildernesse, (as he did concerning the rod and serpent, and putting his hand into his bosome) yet this of turning the water of the river into bloud, was reserved for the land of Egypt; and not put in execution, untill Moses came thither.

shall be] The words (in the Hebrew phrase) are doubled, shall be and shall be, noting both earnestnesse in asseveration, and assurance of execution.

become bloud] They thirsted after the bloud of little infants, drowning them in the River; and their sinne is shewed them in the same colour, and punished in that wherein they had offended: Gods judgements are not onely just and equitable, but fit and sutable to the fault of the offenders, Judg. 1. 7.

V. 10. I am not eloquent] Heb. I am not a man of words. After so many signes, he yet makes excuses, that he may shunne the service: wherein humane frailtie bewrayes it selfe, which by such assuring evidence of saying and doing (as he had heard and seene) was not yet sufficiently confirmed. How weake is the faith of the strongest? how reluctant is humane reason to divine commands? if God doe not worke his owne will in us, and obey (by his grace in us) as well as command by his authoritie over us.

V. 12. I will be with thy mouth] Notwithstanding the former impediments, God could make him fluent and eloquent: howsoever he gave power to his speech, so that he was mightie in words, as well as in deeds. Act. 7. 22.

V. 16. in stead of a mouth] The gifts of God are diversly distributed: Moses had a spirit of government; Aaron (from the same Spirit) had a facultie of speech, (which Moses had not) one and the same Spirit, dividing to every one severally as he will, 2 Cor. 12. 11. And this diversitie is the maintainer, and upholder of unitie, where prudence and pietie have any sway in humane societie: for it ingageth men (according to their gifts) to mutuall beneficence: so Aaron must gratifie Moses by his utterance, and promptnesse of speech; and Moses must fortifie Aaron by the authoritie of his place, and efficacie of his power.

V. 16. In stead of God] The Hebrew word is Elohim, which is attributed to God, and to rulers also, as Exod. 22. 28. and therefore the meaning may be that, though Aaron were the chiefe Orator, (as Paul was, Acts 14. 12.) yet Moses was to be the chiefe Governour: or if he were called God, in a religious rather then in a civill notion; the meaning may be, that Moses shall instruct him in divine matters: for though Aaron were a Priest, Moses was so also, Psal. 99. 6. and somewhat more then Aaron, viz. not only a Commander in chiefe, but a familiar Favourite of God, more then Aaron was: Exod. 33. 11. and Numb. 12. 8. But especially Moses was to be as a God to Aaron, in telling him (from God) what he was to say to others in his Name. vers. 28. 30.

V. 18. Let me goe I pray thee] In this condescending so low, as to aske leave of his father in law to visit his brethren in Egypt, (after so high and divine acceptation) Moses sheweth an example of great modesty and humilitie: his familiaritie with God did not puffe him up to contempt of men, especially of such, as (by a subordinate relation) he was obliged to reverence: yet this mannerly respect to man, did not abate of his obedience to God, nor did he thinke his father in law would dissuade him from what he desired, or if he did, no doubt he was resolved to obey God, rather then man, See Acts 5. 29.

to see whether] He mentioneth nothing but a visit: it may be he was charged not to reveale his Commission from God, untill he came to the place, where he was to put it in practise: if so, it was his pietie to conceale it: if not so, his prudence, lest his father in law (by proposing difficulties, if not impossibilities, in the undertaking, and dangers in attempting) should endeavour to bring him back, to his former diffidence, and indisposition to the service, and so make him, if not wholly to desert it, yet more faintly, or lesse cheerfully, to goe on with it, by reason of doubts, and perils before him, and discontent left behind him, with his dissenting and disswading father-in-law.

whether they be] He pleadeth a reason of common charitie, and forbeareth the reasons of divinitie, to wit, the revelation from God: an argument of his prudence, modesty, and humilitie: for if he had not been prudent, he could not have kept in such miraculous secrets; and if he had not been modest, and humble, he would have made mention of them with jollity and glory. See Ester 5. 12.

V. 19. In Midian] This may be a second apparition of God to Moses, either to give him his charge for present addresse to the service, (which before he did not) or to urge him, (upon his too much deliberation or delay) to more expedition in his dutie.

which sought thy life] In the deliverance of the Israelites from Egyptian bondage, Moses was a Type of Christ, and therefore his deliverance and safetie, and our Saviours, both are set down in the like phrase. Matth. 2. 20.

V. 20. tooke his wife and, &c.] But finding incumbrance by their company, he sent them back: for they met him (with Jethro) in the wildernesse. Exod. 18. 5.

the rod of God] That rod which (by the miraculous power of God) was turned into a serpent, and (by the same power) returned from a serpent to a rod again.

V. 21. I will harden] By withdrawing or withholding grace from him, (as by withholding or withdrawing light, he causeth darknesse) and permitting Satan to worke upon him, and to excite and spurre on his corrupt nature, to all manner of contradiction and contumacie against God: and herein (viz. in respect of nature and grace) it was with him, as with a Greyhound held in by a slip or collar when an Hare is in sight, for (if that be let loose) he runneth violently at the Hare, (according to the disposition which is naturally in him) and not put into him by him that first held him in, and after let him loose; but is thereupon discovered by leaving him at libertie, to exercise his antipathie on that creature. The grace of God is like that restraining slip or collar, which if it be taken away, mans naughty nature breaks loose into all manner of excesse, to which he is naturally inclined, or Satanically tempted. If it be said that the not hindring sinne maketh a guilt of sinne, as Neh. 13. 15, 16, 17. and therefore that Florinus (though branded for an heretick by the ancients) was in the right, when he held, that God was the author of sinne, it will not follow: for though it be true in men, that they are bound to hinder it all they can: it is not so in God, for he is bound to none, and therefore is free to bestow or withhold his grace, as he pleaseth: and (when the devill and wicked men have done their worst) he knoweth how to make the best of any evill act, and to turne even a great evill into an occasion of great good, as the passion of Christ, to the preservation of Christians, Esa. 53. 3, 4, 5, 6, 7. Rom. 5. 9, 10. Eph. 5. 25, 26, 27.

V. 22. Israel is my sonne] By Israel is meant the posterite of Jacob, (who was also called Israel) Gen. 32. 28. and here is his off-spring named, not only Gods Son, (a title of favour) but his first-borne, a relation of honour: because he made the first choice of that people before any other, and as first-born, the people so called have so much both benevolence, and preeminence (above all other nations) that God will not suffer them to remain slaves: for as the first-born were consecrated to God, (as his peculiar portion) so were the children of Israel accepted for his, as a peculiar treasure, above all people, Ex. 19. 5. and of them was to come (according to the flesh) the first borne of every creature: so our Saviour is called, Col. 1. 15. because he was before any creature, (in respect of his eternall generation) and the first borne of the dead, vers. 18. of the same Chapter, because his resurrection in vertue though not in time was before all others.

V. 23. the first borne] See the Annotat. precedent.

V. 24. sought to kill him] Or, would have killed him: that is, made shew, or offered to kill him; the cause whereof (as some

4. 25, 26. — as that froward woman wrongfully said to Moses.
Dr. Sibbs Cant. Serm. Vol. 9. p. 402.

some conceive) was his distrust, manifested before in his aversion from the service, (whereto God called him) and so many excuses, as he made to shift it off, which distrust he carryed with him, on the way: and for that he was met withall, in a minatory manner, it may be as Balaam by the Angel, with a drawn sword, as Numb. 22. 31. But the more received reason of Moses deadly danger (at this time and in this place) is that he undertooke this Ambassie to the Egyptians, before he had performed, what belonged to a true Israelite, which was to circumcise his child: for having two, it appears, that one of them (at least) was yet uncircumcised; the omission of which ordinance, but especially the contempt of it, (when God required it) was a capitall crime, Gen. 17. 14. and though it seeme there to be threatned to the uncircumcised infant (who may be cut off in this life, as a punishment or chastisement to his parents) yet the greatest danger both of sinne, and punishment befalleth those, who should circumcise their children, and do not: and therefore here we read, that the father, rather then the child is threatned with death.

V. 25. Then Zipporah tooke] Being admonished of the danger, either by an angel, or by inspiration, either immediate to her self, or mediate by her husband: This act was extraordinary; for Moses (to whom it most appertained to see the Sacrament administred) was either wholly disabled, or very much indisposed (whether by sickness, or any other impediment, it doth not appeare) at that time to doe it himself.

a sharpe stone] Or knife, or a knife sharpened upon stones, or sharpened like the edge of a flint-stone, so Jos. 5. 2, 3. with such an instrument, she cut off the foreskin of her sonne.

cast it at his feet] If at the Angels feet, it was to pacifie him, and so to deliver her husband from danger? if at her husbands feet, it might be, either by way of angry upbraiding; or to shew him that she had exercised that severitie on her sonne for his sake: some understand by the feet, the childs feet; and some for casting at his feet, read touched his feet: and they meane, that Zipporah her self fell down at Moses his feet, to desire leave to depart, and to goe home againe: but the better translation is, cast it, &c. as before, both for words and sense.

V. 25. a bloudy husband] Moses having married a Midianitish woman, (not wonted to such a severe Sacrament, as some suppose) and she being a fond mother, as well as a shrewd wife; caused the delay in administration of circumcision; which was so dangerous to her husband: and indeed it was such an harsh welcome of little infants into the world, that it would never have beene received, if Divine Authoritie had not appeared, in the proposall of it: but yet there is cause to conceive, that Zipporah was no stranger to circumcision: for she was a Midianite, and therefore descended from Abraham, by Keturah; and the seed of Abraham (by whom soever) were circumcised, yet as Ishmael was circumcised, not at eight dayes old, but at the thirteenth yeare of his age, so some of his posteritie circumcised not their children in their infancie, but forbore to doe it untill they attained more yeares and growth, and strength: and to such a circumcision Zipporah might be accustomed, and yet might not bring her heart to consent to circumcise it so young as Gods Ordinance required, Gen. 17. 12. and so she might call Moses a bloudy husband, because her marriage with him engaged her child to be circumcised; especially at this time, when she was weake (being, as some take it but newly delivered) as well as her child. The word Chatan (rendred husband) signifieth a Spouse, or Bridegroome, a sonne in law, or kinsman: a Spouse or Bridegroome, in respect of the Bride; a sonne in law in relation to Parents, (when they are married) and a kinsman to his wives kindred; and by a Metaphor the circumcised child is called Chatan, or Spouse, because (by circumcision) the child is entred into covenant, and thereby, as it were, espoused to God. And some adde further that (in the use of circumcision) these words were solemnly pronounced, Thou art a Spouse of blouds unto me: therefore in the Originall the word is of the Plurall number, as in the next Note.

V. 26. Because of the circumcision] Heb. Circumcisions. Belike she remembers (with a fresh displeasure) the circumcision of her former sonne, and putteth both together in the Plurall Number.

So he let him go] That is, the Lord, or the Angel of the Lord, that threatned him, let him goe, with a threat, without any hurt. Some conceive it of Moses letting Zipporah goe backe to her Countrey, Exod. 18. 2.

V. 27. and kissed him] See Annot. on Gen. 29. 11.

V. 30. and did the signes] Or he did the signes, that is, not Aaron, but Moses: or if any wonder were done by the Ministery of Aaron, it was usually by the command, or appointment of Moses.

V. 31. They bowed their heads and worshipped] The joyfull tydings of their deliverance was entertained with humilitie, (whereof their lowly gesture was a signe: as Gen. 17. 3.) and this humilitie is seasonable not in times of affliction or calamitie onely; but when the Lord conferreth his favours in greatest measure. See Deut. 8. vers. 14.

CHAP. V.

Vers. 1. Moses and Aaron] With the Elders, as God appointed, Chap. 3. vers. 18. but as some thinke they went alone; because they alone are named here; and in the fourth verse, and because in stead of the Elders appointed, Chap. 3. vers. 18. God seemeth to have appointed Aaron for Moses his companion, Chap. 4. vers. 14.

told Pharaoh] They both spake the same thing, or one of them by consent of both: as Peter and John, Act. 4. 19.

hold a feast] Chap. 10. 9. Moses is directed to desire leave to offer sacrifice unto the Lord; it is so also, vers. 3. of this Chap. yet no repugnance: for part of sacrifices served for a feast, and both belonged to the same persons, and in both the honour belonged to God, 1 King. 8. vers. 63, 64, 65.

V. 2. Who is the Lord] Job 21. 15.

V. 3. lest he fall] Though the wicked (through hardnesse of heart) contemn the Lord, the godly must, and will be afraid to offend him: and they must feare him, not onely with a loving reverence, as a father; but with an awfull dread of his displeasure, as a powerfull Judge, who will powre out his plagues on them, who wilfully harden themselves against him. See 2 King. 17. 25. Ezra 7. 23. Zach. 14. 17. 2 Chron. 29. 7, 8. & chap. 30. 8. In this denunciation of danger to themselves, they imply some perill to Pharaoh, which afterward they set forth in expresse Comminations.

V. 4. Wherefore doe ye] It is strange that such a Tyrant dealt not with Moses and Aaron with more severitie, then rough and reproachfull words: since (in the wicked) the tongue of slander, and the heart of murder, meete together, against Gods people: See Jer. 38. 4. But the same power, that wrought wonders, bounded his malignitie within this compasse.

get you to your burdens] Chap. 3. 16. Moses is commanded to gather together the Elders of Israel, it is like these came with him, and Aaron; and it may be, many of the ordinary workemen left their worke to hearken after the successe of their Mediation, and to them, not to Moses, and Aaron (who had not put their hands to the work) he said, get you to your burdens.

V. 5. are many] Hence it is probable, that the bloudy Decree of drowning, or killing the Male children, did not prevaile at all, or but for a while.

V. 6. Officers] These Officers were Hebrews, vers. 14. and 19. set over the workmen, but under the Egyptian task-masters, who had power over them both.

V. 7. no more straw] The use of the straw was, either to binde the clay together, lest it should be too brittle; or to cover it that it might not be chopt with heat, or winde; or to harden it, (by burning in the furnace) or at least, to kindle the fires of other fewell: this was brought to their hands till now, by those on whom the taske of brick, (whether by tale or heap) was not imposed; now the same men must so divide the service between them, as to do both, and yet no abatement of their labour in making, or burning brick, will be allowed.

as heretofore] Heb. as yesterday, or the day before yesterday: So in the next vers. and vers. 14.

V. 9. more worke upon them] The more that Tyrants are intreated, the more they tyrannize, taking occasion by the request, (as sinne by the Commandement) to rage the more. See Rom. 7. 12, 13.

vaine words] Of Moses and Aaron: wilfull wicked ones contemne the word both of God, and the worthiest men, if it sound not according to their corrupt and distempered passions.

V. 12. scattered] Part of them tempered the clay, part formed the bricks, part of them yeeled, or burnt them, and part of them went abroad to gather straw.

V. 19. dayly task] Heb. Matter of a day: or in his day.

V. 20. they met Moses] As they came from Pharaoh, the Hebrew Officers of the people met them, to know what answer the King had returned to them.

V. 21. ye have made our savour] Ignorant and passionate people (by mistaking occasions for causes) charge the injuries of their greatest enemies upon their best friends.

to be abhorred] Heb. to stinke. The like phrase is used by Jacob, concerning (his two sonnes) Simeon and Levi, Gen. 34. 30.

V. 22. evill intreated] By giving an occasion of more affliction to thy people, against whom the Tyrants rage is not mitigated at all, but more aggravated since I mediated for them then before: In which pleading with God, Moses sheweth himselfe, (though with some mixture of displeasure) rather zealous for God, then contumacious against him, and this rather by way of inquisition, then of peremptory resolution.

V. 23. hast not delivered] God though he promise deliverance, leaveth a libertie to himselfe both for the time, and manner ner of performance, and must not be thought to deny it when he doth but deferre it.

hast not delivered] Heb. in delivering thou hast not delivered. That is, thou hast not at all delivered them.

CHAP. VI.

Vers. 1. THE LORD said] It may be by inward inspiration; for here is no mention of any outward apparition.

with a strong hand] My hand shall be so strong, and heavie upon him, that he shall not onely be content to dismisse you, as Exod. 3 20. but ready also, (with all his power) to expell you, rather then to keepe you captives any longer.

V. 3. by the Name of God Almightie] Heb. Elshaddai. By that name he manifested himselfe, first to Abraham, Gen. 17. 1. and afterwards to Isaac and Jacob.

but by my Name JEHOVAH] This name is derived from Haja, which signifieth, is, or hath beene. The former name signifieth (but in part) the nature of God, especially his Almighty power; but the name Jehovah importeth all his infinite perfections; especially first his being of himselfe, before the World was made, Isa. 44. 6. Secondly, his giving being to the creatures, Act. 17. 25. And thirdly, his making good his promises, by full, and answerable effects. The Jewes out of a superstitious respect to that name, (where they meet with it) forbeare to pronounce it, and used the name Adonai, in stead of it.

was I not knowne] It seemes to have beene known to Abraham, Gen. 22. 14. to Isaac, chap. 26. 24. and to Jacob, chap. 27. 20. The first mention of it we find, is in Gen. 2. 4. when the Creation of the world was perfected, and not before: but though the Ancients (before Moses his time) knew him by his Name Jehovah, and according to all the importance of it fore-mentioned, yet was not God so fully known by that name unto them, (especially as it importeth performance of promise) as he was to their posteritie, in Moses his time, by the actuall and admirable accomplishment of his promise, in their deliverance from Egypt, and conduct to Canaan. Their Ancestors had but a dimme and darke apprehension of that, which they are promised to have in full view and experimentally to know, in respect whereof, the precedent knowledge was but as the light of the starres, when the Sunne appeareth. See Gen. 22. 12. So that the words are not to be taken as a precise negation, but by way of comparison, as Matt. 9. 13.

V. 5. heard their groaning] See the second Annotation on Exod. 2. 23.

V. 6. great Judgements] That is, with plagues, as a just and judiciall revenge for their great contempts of me, and tyrannies over you.

V. 8. into the land concerning which] Gen. 28. 13.

I sware] Heb. lift up my hand. Gen. 14. 22. Ezek. 20. 15.

V. 9. hearkened not] The extremitie of their miserie made them first hopelesse, and then mindlesse of remedie, or redemption from it; and altogether incredulous, (for a time) as thinking the tidings too good, to be true.

anguish of spirit] Heb. straitnesse, or shortnesse of spirit, which made them, both indisposed to beleeve, and to apply themselves, to the meanes of their deliverance: immoderate passions are a great prejudice, not onely to Gods truth, but to mans welfare.

V. 12. of uncircumcised lips] Circumcision was the seale of Gods Covenant with his people, and so an honourable badge; though on a dishonourable part: and it noted the cutting off of the corruption of nature, especially in naturall generation: but the circumcision of the lips, (which in a literall sense would be a great affliction, and deformitie,) in a figurative meaning importeth, that which is commendable, and free from fault: so were not Moses lips. See Annot. chap. 4. 10.

V. 14. These be the heads of] Moses maketh (here) a digression from his maine Story, to note the descent of the promises from Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, to the present people; but especially to observe the line of Levi, of whom himself, the first Captaine of the people, and his brother Aaron the first high Priest, were descended; whose Priesthood was derived by succession to his posteritie; and this might be done the rather for an antidote against the fabulous reports of heathen Writers, (as of Justine, and Tacitus) who tell untruths of the Originall both of Moses, and of the people of the Jews: which (though they were many ages after) were apprehended as present, by the Spirit, which assisted Moses in the penning of this storie. For the like reason it is piously conceived that the Apostles made the decree against the eating of bloud, Act. 15. 29. to secure the credite of the Christians against the calumnie of the heathens, who charged them with bloudy banquets, as is evident by Justine Martyr in Dial. cum Tryph. Tert. Apolog. and others.

the sonnes of Reuben] Gen. 46. 9. 1 Chron. 5. 3. Reuben, Simeon, and Levi, may be especially mentioned, rather then the heads of the other Tribes, lest they should be thought, to be rejected by reason of Jacobs severe commination against them, Gen 49.

V. 15. and the sonnes of Simeon] 1 Chron. 4. 24.

V. 16. sonnes of Kohath] Numb. 26. 57. 1 Chron. 6. 1. and 23. 6.

V. 20. his fathers sister] Chap. 2. vers. 1. The Vulgar Latine renders the Originall word, by cousin germane, that is, the unkles daughter, but not rightly, for it is no where in Scripture used in that sense. See Annot. Chap. 2. v. 1.

V. 21. Korah] Moses and he were brothers children, whose rebellion was punished, Num. 16. 1.

V. 23. Aminadab] Who was a Prince of the Tribe of Judah, Num. 2. 3. & chap. 10. 14. Ruth 4. 19 22.

V. 23. Naasshon] In the Israelites returne from Egypt, he is brought in as a Prince of the Tribe of Judah, Num. 1. 7. whose sister Aaron married, though himselfe of the Tribe of Levi: for the law of restraint of marriages (within the severall Tribes) was not yet made; and when it was, it seemes it did not so restraine the Levites, who had no distinct portion, as the other Tribes had; and it appeares that the Tribe of Judah, and of Levi matched often: because (as some conceive,) Christ was typified in this Tribe, and so was to be a Priest, as well as a King: yet Christ was not to be a Priest according to the order of Aaron, but of Melchisedec: See Heb. 7. of the law of marriage within the Tribes, see Num. 36. In this genealogie the modestie of Moses is manifest, since in the setting of it out, he honours his brother Aaron more then himselfe, naming him before himselfe, and bringing in himselfe as an accessarie, and assistant to him, vers. 26. though he were a sonne of the same Family, and his brother, both by the fathers and mothers sides, and in more honour and favour with God, then Aaron was.

V. 26. that Aaron and Moses] Forementioned in the precedent story, and now Ambassadours to Pharaoh: so also vers. 27. but there it is Moses and Aaron: and indeed, Moses was Aarons superiour, Chap. 4. 16. yet he carrieth the matter of preeminence with so much moderation, that sometimes he seemeth to be, if not subordinate, yet second to Aaron.

armies] For their Families or Tribes were so great, and so composed in order, that they might be compared to Armies set in array, 1 Sam. 4. 2. marching in Ranke, and File, in a Militarie manner.

V. 29. the LORD spake unto] So the Chapter began and Gods speech to Moses broken off, by this genealogie, he returneth to the story he had begun.

V. 30. before the LORD] That is, to the Lord, as present with him, and before his face.

V. 30. how shall Pharaoh] Moses reflecteth too much upon his owne infirmitie, and unfitnesse to be Gods messenger to Pharaoh, and thinketh too little upon that, which God said he would performe: else confidence on Gods word and power, would have bred more boldnesse, and courage in him, in his Ambassage unto Pharaoh. It is good to take sufficient notice of our owne insufficiencie for any great service: yet so, as that we serve God (in what imployment soever) with beliefe of his promises, and obedience to his commands; and not to thinke so much on opposition to our proceedings, as on the predominance of his power, who must and will prevaile against all the might and contumacie of men.

CHAP. VII.

Vers. 1. A God to Pharaoh] The word is Elohim, which is ascribed sometimes to men in authoritie, as Chap. 22. 28. Here it is given to Moses as an Ambassadour from God, for God, and in his stead, to command Pharaoh, (though a King) and to punish him (as a Rebell) if he will not obey the words of Moses speaking in Gods Name, and God by his divine power working (with miraculous operations) the confirmation of his message, and the conviction of Pharaohs contumacie, in such sort that it might plainly appeare, God was able to deliver his people, though the Tyrant opposed to the utmost of his power: and in this respect Moses was to be respected by Pharaoh, not as an ordinary messenger from man, but as one coming with extraordinary Authoritie and power from God: so that in Moses, God would account himselfe obeyed, or contemned, as Luk. 10. 16.

shall be thy Prophet] Or shall speake for thee, before Pharaoh: thou shalt be a Prophet unto him, in revealing the secrets I impart unto thee; and he shall be a Prophet (to, or for thee) to Pharaoh, in speaking againe to Pharaoh, the Elders and people what I have already, or shall hereafter declare unto thee: (for that is a prophecie. See 1 Cor. 14.) and though Moses were of a better spirit, Aaron was of better speech. See Chap. 4. vers. 10. 14.

cap. 6. 3. — not known]
Non quod nomen illud fuisset patribus inauditum: sed quod ex illo effectu Deum nondum novissent. Effectus autem ille erat de danda terra quam promiserat, et multiplicando ; Iorum semine. —— Vt enim induceret in terram quam patres vestri tam diu expectarent.
b.
P. Martyr, 1 Sam. 29 f. 170.

V. 3. I will harden] Vers.13. Chap. 14.8. See Annot. in Exod.4.21.

V. 4. great judgements] So God had said before. Chap. 6. vers.6. but he repeateth it againe, for further confirmation of Moses his faith, and the increase of his courage. See Annot. on Chap.6.& 6.

V. 6. so did they] Exod.Chap.12.28.50. it is said before, that they did as the Lord commanded them, and yet he saith, so did they: which may seeme a Pleonasme, or superfluitie of speech, without use, or need; but it is rather an emphaticall duplication for care, to keep our selves closely to Gods commands.

V. 7. fourescore yeares old] Moses lived in affliction and banishment forty yeares, before he entered upon his office to deliver his oppressed Brethren all that while; and before Moses was borne, were the children of Israel afflicted by the King of Egypt, and his people: which may teach his servants in all ages, to waite upon God with faith and patience, because, though he forbeare their enemies for a time, he doth not forget his servants at all, nor will suffer the rod of the wicked alwaies to rest upon the lot of the righteous, Psal.125.3. And though Moses and Aaron were so old, yet as it was said of Moses, (albeit he lived to the age of an hundred and twenty yeares) his eye was not dimme, nor his naturall force abated, Deut. 34. vers. 7. so might it be with Aaron, though three yeares older at his death. Num. 33.39. and so both of them by the abilities of their bodies, and minds, and the reverence and respect due to such a venerable age; they were the more fit to undertake a service, which required all qualifications of honour, and energie of power, to make it effectuall. Besides, the noting of the ages of such eminent persons, maketh up the Chronologie or computation of time, whereby the accomplishment of the prophecie (Gen.15.13.) may be cleared.

V. 9. Take thy rod] The Rod which was turned into a serpent, and returned into a Rod againe, Chap. 4. vers.2,3,4. which is sometimes called Gods Rod, because he accompanied it with a miraculous power: sometimes Moses his rod, and sometimes Aarons; because they held it in their hands, when God wrought wonders with it. There was another rod called Aarons rod, Numb. 17.3.

V. 10. a serpent] So Exod.4.3. where the word is Nahash, as Gen.3.1. but in this place the word is Tanvin, which is used for the whole, Gen.1.21. here it is translated Dragon, by learned Hebricians, so also Mal.1.3. and vers.10.22. Belike, the change before Pharaoh was not into an ordinary serpent, (called Nahash) but into some greater creature, as a Dragon, or Crocodile.

V. 11. Sorcerers] God permitted much to the power of the Devils Imposture, that Pharaohs heart might be the more hardened, and so at last Gods conquest over them and him, might be the more glorious: and here the sinceritie of Scripture story is to be observed, which giveth the Devil his due, and utters the truth of his Agents prevailing force, as well as of his and their foile at the last: among these Inchanters, it seemeth, that the chiefe of these, were Jannes and Jambres, 2 Tim. 3 8.

V.12. they became serpents] The word here is the same which is verse 10. this change was either in appearance onely, (for neither the Devil, nor his Agents, can make any creature, or change their nature) or else, (by the helpe of the Devil) Serpents or Dragons might be brought into the place of the Rods, and the Rods removed them also out of sight.

swallowed up] That is, the Serpent, or Dragon, into which Moses his Rod was turned, swallowed up the Serpents, into which their rods were turned, or for which, they were changed, by the inchantment, and art of the Devil, not making, but bringing true Serpents in their places.

V. 13. And he hardened] See Annot.on Chap.4. vers.21.

V. 15. the rivers brinke] To wit, the River Nilus.

V. 17. in mine hand] The words are Gods words, yet the Rod is in Moses hand; it is in Gods hand by vigorous influence, and in Moses hand by outward ministration: as the sword of Gideon, and the sword of the Lord, Judg. 7.18. may be one and the same; Gideons in use, Gods in force, and the power of prevailing with it.

shall be turned into bloud] The Egyptians were bloud-thirsty men, bloudily minded against the Hebrews, and that they might have bloud enough, their waters are turned into bloud. Thus God requites the wicked in their kind, there was no need to turne the whole river into bloud, so farre as it runneth or reacheth: it was enough, that the streames running by Egypt, had the plague, which (when it passed the borders thereof) might be cleare as it was before.

V. 18. stinke] By the ill sent of the dead fish in it.

V. 19. all their pooles of water] We must not thinke that Moses went particularly to every poole, to stretch his Rod over it, but that having stretched his Rod towards the River, he afterwards did the like over some ponds or pooles, or gathering of water, in the name of all of the like kind: or he might (stretching out the Rod) make mention, how farre the Curse should reach; and it is like, it was rather upon the fresh waters, that were potable, then upon the salt; other liquors seeme to be free from this plague, especially milke; for that is not properly comprehended under the name of water.

V. 21. and the fish died] Which was an evidence, that it was a true Miracle, and that Miracle a plague to them, by whom fish was used for necessarie diet, as Num.11.5. And to some it served, as to many no doubt it did, for dainties; and that plague upon fishes may confute the superstitious conceit of Papists concerning fishes, as if they were holier then other meats, because they came not under the curse, as other creatures, by the Bloud.

throughout all the land] Of Egypt and of Goshen also, (it is like) so faire as it might afflict the Egyptians, and not the Israelites.

V. 22. the Magicians did so] Exod. 7.12. & Chap.8.7. When all the waters were turned into bloud, how could they doe so? unlesse they first returned them from bloud to water againe: Answ. It might be in Goshen, or if that Province were free from this, as it was from the other plagues, Chap.8.22. & 9.26. & 10.23. it might be, that all the Rivers and Pooles were not turned into bloud, (at once) but that some of them being turned into bloud, the Magicians practised their Inchantments on others: or they might digge new Wells, vers.24. which had no commerce with these blood waters; or (because this plague continued but seven dayes, verse 25.) the Magicians might play their prankes when these dayes were expired: and then might make their false appearances of bloud by their magicall Impostures.

V. 24. digged] But (it is like) they lost their labour, if it were within the compasse of seven dayes, after mentioned: for they were like to find (in stead of pure water) stinking bloud, which would rather torture their tast, then quench their thirst: this plague (it seemeth) was shuted to seven dayes continuance.

seven dayes] This plague is expressely said to continue seven dayes, and it may be that it was the whole time, but the Text doth not set downe the period of it.

CHAP. VIII.

Vers.3. Frogs in thy bed chamber] Notwithstanding Moses and Aaron were harshly entertained upon their first message, Chap. 5. 4. and the tyrant were enraged, and the miserable condition of the people aggravated, and Pharaoh by the enchantments of his Magicians more hardened then before: yet Moses and Aaron resolutely pursue their commission, and command from God, and presse into his presence, and persist in their commination: an evidence of their fidelitie and courage in Gods cause, and a worthy example for all Gods messengers to follow in the like case, See Jerem. 1. 17,18,19.

kneading troughs] Or, Dough. This plague appeareth to be more grievous then the former; for that was only upon waters, this every where; the former was but upon liquor, nor upon all neither; this upon all their victuals; that afflicted them, but when they were thirsty; this at all times; that being often out of sight, might be sometimes out of minde; this was a continuall offence to many of their senses; to their eyes, the number and figure of the frogs were a most horrid spectacle; to their eares their croaking was odious, and their crawling upon them, and among their meats, most abominable: lastly, the bloody waters came not up to their chambers, beds, or mouthes; but these frogs with unceassant importunitie haunted them in every place, and invaded them on every side, on every part. Hence it was, that this plague humbled the tyrant so farre, as to desire to be prayed for, vers. 8. which the former did not.

V. 4. and the frogs shall come up both upon thee] (Notwithstanding all locks and bolts) the frogs cannot be kept out of the Kings bed-chamber, and for all his guard, they will come up upon his Royall person, and crawle upon his bosome, and croak in his eares when he is in bed: How despicable shall the dignitie even of Kings become, if the King of Kings be pleased to cast contempt upon them! See Psal. 83. 10. and how favourable is God unto man, by his ordinarie, providence, in making such creatures loth to come, where man hath to doe, who are so loathsome to him, that he cannot indure to be touched by them!

V. 5. the Lord spake unto Moses] By secret inspiration, because it was in the presence of the King, and so not convenient to speake of him, and not to him, in his hearing.

V. 6. over the waters] That is, over against them, or towards them, from Pharaohs Court, where it is like that Aaron was at that time.

covered the land] Goshen, where Gods people dwelt was excepted as from the plague of flies, vers. 22. unlesse the Egyptians that were among them, were infested with them, which might be without annoyance to the Israelites.

V. 7. The Magicians did so] That is, they stretched out their hands over or towards the waters, and either by false appearances, deceiving the sight, made seeming frogs; or the devill brought true frogs to the place, where the contestation was betwixt Moses and Aaron on the one side, and Pharaohs Magicians on the other: though it is like the devill brought but a few, in comparison of the number that were brought against them.

V. 8. intreat the Lord] Vers. 28. Chap. 9. 28. Chap. 12. 32. Psal. 78. 34. He that peremptorily refused to be intreated in the Lords name, to let the people goe, asking by way of proud contempt, who is the Lord? Exod. 5. 2. now feeling his hand lye heavy upon him, doth not disdaine to desire his mercy: Such power hath God Almightie over Kings, though they be mighty in power, and haughtie in spirit, that what they will not doe for love, or reverence; he can make them doe for feare. See Annot. on vers. 3.

V. 9. Glory over me] Or have this honour over me. For the meaning of the words see the next Annotation.

when shall I intreat for thee] That may be, I will give thee this honour to appoint, or prescribe a time when I shall pray and prevaile for thee: and if my prayer take not effect, doe thou glory over me, and say I am no better then one of thy Magicians, who can rather bring a plague upon thee, then remove it.

V. 10. To morrow] Why not presently? the plague being so grievous, he might thinke, either that by that time they might be withdrawn some other way, and so they should not need to be beholding to God or Moses for that favour: or he might thinke, that though the frogs might come on a sudden, it was not so easie a matter to remove them again, and that therefore Moses must have some time to mediate with God for that mercy, and to make it take a full effect.

V. 12. Moses cryed] Though he were sure of the miracle, vers. 10. he did not forbeare the meanes to obtaine it, viz. prayer unto God: which is so prevalent with God, that it is next to Almightie, in efficacie and power, See Chap. 32. 10.

V. 14. the land stank] The plague was not wholly removed at once, that it might be knowne to be (not a counterfeit, but) a true miracle, for their clearer conviction: and the frogges being gathered on heapes, that their stink might be offensive to the Egyptians, as their sinnes were to God; afterward it is like, they were partly cast into the River, and partly buried in graves, or pits, digged for them: though it be not so expressed in the Scripture.

V. 15. that there was a respite] This respite was but Gods Pause, for Pharaoh to make a good use of the precedent plague, and when Gods hand was taken off him (by withdrawment of his Judgement) he should by repentance have made himselfe capable of mercy. But this is the manner of such as are doomed to destruction, to take more heart to goe on in sinne, when they should take most heed, that by sinning againe, they provoke not God to punish them againe.

V. 17. became lice] The word Cnim in the Hebrew is variously rendred: some take it for gnats; (but they are rather comprehended in the plague of flies afterwards) some for fleas: but they were not like to be plague enough, because they were more movable, and lesse loathsome then other vermine: the most and best Interpreters render the word lice; yet it may be, as they came in an extraordinary manner, so they were of an extraordinary kind; such haply as the like was neither before, nor since, as is noted of the locusts, Chap. 10. vers. 14. By such little creatures, armed with a power from God, the greatest Tyrants may be plagued, yea devoured, as were Herod by wormes, Act. 12. 23. and Galerius and Maximinus. Bucolz. Jud. Chron. on the yeare 311. pag. 188. and on 313. pag. 190. and by lice Pherecydes was devoured, AElian. var. hist. l. 5. c. 18.

all the dust] That is, a great deale of it, as all Judea, Matth. 3. 5. for a great part of the people of Judea: or all the dust, that is, the dust all over the land, no place being free.

V. 18. the Magicians did so] That is, stretched out their hands with rods, as Aaron did vers. 17. and shewed their indeavour to doe the like, though in vaine.

but they could not] God confounding their wisdome and power in a thing most vile; whereby yet he honoured himselfe; since hence it appeareth, that there is nothing so small, that his power and providence descendeth not unto, nor wherein he cannot foile both the power and imposture of men and devils, who could neither make lice indeed, not make a shew of them.

so there were lice] In the Hebrew there is an Enallage of number, the Verbe being of the singular Number, and the Noune of the plurall, as Gen. 1. 14.

V. 19. This is the finger of God] (Luk. 11. 20.) They might have seen and acknowledged the whole hand of God before; now they confesse a finger of it, in this plague, which they yeild to be done by Gods Power, and not by Sorcerie; which they should have acknowledged of the rest of the miracles: but their master the devill taught them, both to counterfeit Truth, and to conceale it; yea (and which is more) to persevere in resistance of it.

V. 20. for he cometh forth to the water] What ever were the occasion of Pharaohs going to the water in the morning, whether for a pleasant prospect, or out of a superstitious respect to the River Nilus, it is uncertaine: but sure it was the fittest place for Moses (now no Courtier, as before he had been) to meete with him, and early in the morning, he was most like to make use of what he said unto him.

V. 21. swarmes of flies] Or, a mixture of noysome beasts. The word (in the Hebrew) which some read Harob, some Haroc: (by reason of the similitude of the Hebrew letters Beth, and Caph) is by learned Hebricians translated by the word mixtian, or a mixed swarme, which (according to the sense, rather then the literall construction of the words) is in some Translations expresst by [all kinds of flies] and it is certaine, they were not of one sort, Psal. 78. 45. but a compounded plague, consisting of many kinds of the lesser sort of flying creatures, as of ordinary flies, gnats, bees, and hornets; which by the importunitie of their pressing upon them) might give them no rest; and some of them (with their stings) might wound and kill them, as Psal. 78. 45. and as Josephus noteth, Antiq. lib. 2. c. 5.

V. 23. A division] Heb. a redemption. That is, a division, for redemption, or deliverance of his owne people, from participation of the plagues, heaped on the Egyptians: wherein God giveth cleare evidence of his Justice on the one sort, and his Mercy on the other; so that here we have a type of the finall separation of the Elect, and Reprobate; and of the salvation of the one, and the damnation of the other.

to morrow] It makes for more assurance of the miracle, because they that heare the Propheeie of it, (for so short a time) are like to see the failing, or performance of it thereafter, as in event it falleth out.

V. 24. And there came] We read not of this plague, that any use was made of the Rod to bring it; and it is like it was not used, that it might appeare, the power of these plagues was not in the Rod, but in the hand of God.

corrupted] Or, destroyed.

V. 25. in the land] (To wit) the land of Egypt, where hitherto, it seemes, they were restrained, at least from publique worship.

V. 26. the abomination of the Egyptians] Moses refusing the motion of Pharaoh for performance of the sacrifice in Egypt, maketh his deniall (by a Dilemma) thus: If we sacrifice here, we must sacrifice either after the manner of the Egyptians, or of the Israelites: If after their manner, that would be an abomination to the Lord our God: If after our owne manner, that will be an abomination unto them, and they will stone us; for they will not indure to see us kill those creatures, (as by sacrifice we must) which themselves adore as Deities: among whom, the prineipall was an Oxe (with a white marke on his side) called Apis, whereof see Plin. Nat. hist. l. 8. c. 46. See also the Annotat. on Chap. 43. vers. 32. & on Chap. 46. vers. 34.

V. 27. As he hath commanded us] Chap. 3. 18.

V. 29. deceitfully any more] Hitherto he had played the hypocrite, whose manner is, (in distresse) to speake faire, and pretend humilitie; but no sooner is the plague taken off, but hypocrites returne to their wickednesse againe. See Psal. 78. 34. 36, 37.

V. 32. hardened his heart] Zach. 7. 11, 12. See the Annotat. on Chap. 4. vers. 21.

CHAP. IX.

Vers. 1. Goe unto Pharaoh] He saith not here, (as Chap. 8. vers. 20.) goe to Pharaoh going forth to the water, and stand before him in his way thither; but goe to Pharaoh where he is, though at his Court, where he keepeth greatest state, and maketh ostentation of greatest pride, and where he hath his parasites about him, to puffe him up in scorn and contempt, and to incense him to indignation against Gods Messengers and people; there Gods Ambassadours must be bold to tell God's Message to the greatest Tyrant; yea though they should be served with a prohibition for such a place, as Amos 7. 13.

V. 3. in the field] This was an open plague without doores, and principally upon the cattel, and those onely that were not in some house: and if men were out of doores, it is like they were partakers of the same plague with the beasts of the field, as is threatned of the plague of haile, vers. 19.

oxen and sheepe] By Oxen is meant also Kine and Bulls: such cattell the Egyptians had, though not for food of their flesh, yet for nourishment by their milke, for cloathing with their wooll of sheepe; and some, as Oxen and Horses, they made use of for their worke: and of all kinds they made commoditie by trafique with other Nations, though with divers of them they committed brutish Idolatrie.

a grievous murraine] The word here translated murraine, is Chap 5. vers. 3. tearmed pestilence, and it is one and the same disease, though when it is applied to cattel, it be usually rendred by murraine; when to men, as Chap. 5. vers. 3. it is commonly called the pestilence.

V. 5. to morrow] See the Annot. on Chap. 8. vers. 23.

V. 6. all the cattell] The greatest part of sorts of cattell: for some were reserved for another plague, and some preserved from it, by a favourable premonition, for their removall from the danger, vers. 19. 25.

V. 7. Pharaoh sent] Into the land of Goshen, to see whether Gods people there, had a priviledge from this plague, which the Egyptians had not; he did not send upon the former plagues: for in some of them the wayes were scarce passable, or with much danger, as we see, vers. 3. & 19. and when they were more safe, it may be, the triall came not into his thought: and he might send now the rather, to make up the losse of the Egyptian cattell, out of the Heards of the Israelites.

V. 8. let Moses] Though Aaron tooke up his handfull of ashes, as well as Moses; yet Moses must sprinkle both, that the power of these operations might not be ascribed to the hand of Aaron, (which held the miraculous Rod) or if they both sprinkled the ashes, Moses might the rather be named, as Gods chief Minister, for the wonderfull deliverance of his people.

V. 9. blaines] Hitherto (for all their plagues) they might sleep: in a whole skinne, although so many, so great plagues, might have kept them both waking, and weeping: but now the sinne of their soules brake out in the sores of their bodies, and on the beasts for their sakes, where the mischiefe is not more miraculous, then the meanes used to produce it, v. 8. which was by casting ashes of the Furnace up toward Heaven; by these was sent up a complaint to God, against the oppression of the Israelites, in the furnace of the Brick-kills (See Deut. 4. 20.) which came downe with a vengeance upon man and beast. The Originall word not used elsewhere in the Scripture, signifieth scalding, or boyling blaines, or blisters: though the ashes cast up, were not hot; but such as Moses and Aaron might hold in their hands.

V. 11. upon the Magicians] Though they were convinced, and confessed themselves overcome by God, in the plague of Lice, Chap. 8. vers. 19. yet they still persisted to oppose the Power of God, and the Ministery of Moses; and therefore they were worthily plagued with boyles, for the corruption and contumacie of their minds against the Almighty. So God getteth him honour of them to their shame, being so branded, as that both their impietie and impotencie, (though they tooke much upon them) was most apparent.

V. 12. as the Lord commanded] Chap. 4. 21.

V. 14. all my plagues upon thy heart] Though my hand hath beene heavie upon thee already, I have plagued thee but sparingly to that I will doe, for I have in store for thee more and worse then yet thou hast felt; and I will make thy heart sick in smiting thee, Mich. 6. 13. and thine owne conscience shall condemne thee of ungratitude and malice.

V. 15. Pestilence] By this is not meant that known deadly contagion, commonly so called: but any, or all the plagues which are after mentioned, and were inflicted; and especially it may be meant of the slaying of the first borne, as the cutting off may be meant of his, and his peoples drowning in the Sea.

V. 16. for this cause] So also, Rom. 9. 17.

have I raised thee up] Heb. made thee to stand. That is, I have made thee a man, preferred thee to be a King, supported thee by my Power, sustained thee by my beneficence, permitted thy pride, indured thy contempt; that the world may see my justice, my punishment of thee, and my power in my conquest over thee, Chap. 14. 17. Psal. 76. 10. Pro. 16. 14.

my Name may be declared] That is, that my contestation against thy contumacie, may be knowne, and spoken of to the praise of my patience toward thee, and of my miraculous operations upon thee and thine.

V. 19. gather thy cattell] See Annot. in vers. 6. A Judgement tempering together severity and mercy.

V. 21. regarded not] Heb. set not his heart unto.

V. 23. stretched out his rod] With how much ease, and in how short a time doth God great wonders?

V. 24. and fire mingled] Psal. 78. 47, 48. Haile and Fire are contrary: yet both concurre in Gods quarrell to plague his enemies.

none like] This confuteth the observation of some, who say, there is never any Haile, or Raine in Egypt. The truth is, it is more rare there, then in other lands; but not so, that the observation should be peremptorily and universally negative; yet it might well be said, there was none like it: for first, none so generall over a whole land at once: Secondly, none so tempered with fire, vers. 23. & Psal. 105. vers. 32. Thirdly, none so punctually prophecied, and accordingly accomplished, vers. 18. Fourthly, none so destructive to man and beast, and trees, vers. 25. and Psal. 78. vers. 26. 47, 48, & 105. vers. 33.

V. 26. Goshen no haile] That may be meant of that part which appertained to the Israelites: for the Egyptians that were among them, unlesse they were better then their Countreymen elsewhere, were no more favoured then they.

V. 27. I have sinned] Exod. 10. 16. The wicked sometimes confesse their sinnes to Gods glory, in their acknowledgement of his justice: but they doe not truly repent, and reforme, that they may be received to mercy.

V. 28. it is enough] That is, I will not put God to bring any more plagues upon me; those I have already seene and felt, shall suffice for your dismission, I will now let you goe, and ye shall stay no longer.

mightie thunderings] Heb. voices of God. Psal. 29. vers. 3, 4, 5. God presents miracles to his eares, as well as to his eyes: yet (neither way) will his obdurate heart be softened.

V. 29. the earth is the Lords] Psal. 24. 1. All the Inhabitants of the earth (Kings not excepted) must acknowledge God for their Land-Lord, and (under that title) they owe him suite and service.

V. 30. I know that] Moses though he knew (by experience of their stubbornnes, and by revelation from God) that Pharaoh, and his people would still be stubborne, yet he goeth on to worke wonders, both in bringing plagues upon the wicked; and praying God to remove them: since God is glorified by both, though they were reformed by neither.

V. 31. and the barlie were smitten] As Egypt differed from other Countreyes, being watered not with raine, but with the river Nilus: so it is like there was a difference of the husbandrie of that Land, in sowing the Barlie with the Wheat, which is not the manner of other Countries.

V. 32. not growne up] Heb. hidden, or darke.

V. 35. was hardened] 2 Chron. 28. 22. & 36. 13.

by Moses] Heb. by the hand of Moses.

CHAP. X.

Vers. 1. For I have hardened] Vers. 20. 27. & Chap. 4. 21. & 11. 10. Deut. 2. 30. The wicked must be admonished, though there be no hope they will be amended, Isa. 6. 9, 10. Ezek. 2. vers. 3, 4, 5. For if they turne not, God will whet his sword, Psal. 7. 12. and be glorified in his justice upon them, who made no account of his mercy.

V. 2. eares of thy sonne] Chap. 13. 8. The miracles were so great that they should be spoken of for ever: where also we see the dutie of parents towards their children, which is to teach, and instruct them in the Word and Workes of the Lord, Deut. 6. vers. 6, 7. Psal. 71. vers. 15. 18. Joel 1. 3. Ephes. 6. 4.

V. 3. humble thy selfe] The end of affliction is to humble our selves, with true repentance, under the hand of God: and so it is a mercy to be afflicted; but if it doe not take effect, it is sometimes withdrawne in judgement, as Isa. 1. 5. and so it was in Pharaoh and his peoples case, from whom one plague was removed, that another might succeed it.

V. 4. locusts] The Hebrew word Arbe signifieth both a Locust, and a multitude of Locusts: for the word Haba, whence it is derived, signifieth to be many; and their multitude is significantly set downe in the next verse.

V. 5. the face] Heb. the eye. Not able to see the earth, (in many places) they shall swarm, in such numbers, that they shall cover the ground from mans sight, though they most abound where most abundance of greene fruit, or food is to be devoured. See Plin. lib. 11. c. 29.

and they shall eate] Devouring vermine are Gods scourge on man, for mans contumacie and contempt of God and his Word, Joel 1. 4.

the residue] From the plague of Haile, the Wheat and the Rye were preserved, because they were not then growne up, Chap. 9. vers. 32. Heb. They were hidden or darke, out of sight, and out of hurt: whereby it appeares there was an intermission betwixt this and the precedent plague, whereby the contumacie of Pharaoh was increased, and occasion given for more miracles.

every tree] That is, the fruit of every tree, though these being such as were never seen before, vers. 6. they might be such, as might eate into the wood, as well as devoured the fruite: for that is reported of some Locusts, Plin. Nat. Hist. lib. 11. c. 29. and these were worse, not onely then any that were before, but then any that come after, vers. 14.

V. 6. neither thy fathers fathers have seene] That is, they have not seene such for number, nor any in effect so hurtfull as these: but they and their fathers had seene Locusts before, for Egypt had her part of such kind of creatures, as well as other Countries, and more then some others.

V. 7. a snare unto us] Or an offence, as some read: or an occasion of all these evils: so are the godly charged, as Elias by Ahab: the sinne and the blame should goe together, but the wicked procure judgement on themselves, and impute their plagues to the godly, who would reclaime them, and secure them, Chap.23.33. Josh.23.13. 1 Sam.18.21.

V. 8. who are they] Heb. who and who, &c.

V. 9. with our young] Young and old (being comprehended in the Covenant) were to have their parts, both in the deliverance from servitude, and in the service of their deliverer.

our flocks and our herds] Both for sacrifice to God, and sustenance for our selves.

V. 10. Let the LORD be so with] The words of Pharaoh savour of much distemper, and little sense: the passion of anger is said to be a short furie: he was long angry, and so did (a great while) like a furious mad-man: and as he did it, so he sometimes spake, he knew not what: and what he meant in this speech is hard to say: it may be he wished that God had no more good will to them, then himselfe had, that as he was unwilling to let them goe, so God would be unwilling to goe with them: or it may be, he might (by way of derision) taunt them for their trust in God, for their deliverance, as if he would doe no more for them, then himselfe would doe: and he would not let them goe with their little ones (but with their men onely at the most, vers.11.) and therefore that God either would not or could not, worke their full deliverance out of his hands. This was either his hope, or the desire of his heart.

for evill is before you] That is, though you make a pretence of sacrifice, you have some evill plot, or purpose to effect; or some evill is before you to way-lay you, and light upon you: at least he thought they meant wholly to quit themselves from his service, as Chap. 1. 10. and therefore he would have kept their little ones as pledges for their returne: and he threatens them, if they persist in such a purpose, to prevent the performance of it, by some surprisall of their persons.

V. 11. Not so] That is, as you demand, for the departure of so many.

V. 13. over the land] Neither his Rod, nor his Armie could reach over all the Land: the meaning is, (as at other times) that he stretched his Rod over some part, in the name of the whole.

the East wind brought the Locusts] Gen. 8. 1. Num. 11. 31. Psal. 78. 46. & 105.34,35.

V. 14. neither after them shall] This Moses speaketh by the Spirit of prophecie, which as it shewed him a long retrospect to the beginning of the world; so did it shew him a prospect as long forward to future times. See the like prediction, Chap. 11. vers.6.

V. 15. covered] See Annot. on vers.5.

darkened] Either by such covering of the earth, as hath been spoken of, Annot. on vers.5. Or by flying so many together, as (like a cloud) doe darken the Ayre: so it was with swarmes of Locusts in Poland and Silesia, Anno 1575. which for a mile and an halfe obscured the light of the Sunne, Anno 1475. Bucolz Chron. p. 425. The like happened also, Anno 1542. p. 546. Ibid.

did eate] Psal.78.46. & 105.34,35.

V. 16. I have sinned] Chap.9.27. 1 Sam.26.21.

and against you] (1 Sam.15.24. Num. 21.7.) Against you all, whom I have oppressed with grievous servitude; and against you Moses and Aaron in particular, whose persons and miraculous operations, and just requests I have hitherto contemned.

V. 17. forgive,----my sinne onely this once] He taketh notice of his sinne as the cause of his punishment; and desires the removall of the cause, onely that he may be free from the effect: and he stints his petition to this sinne onely, either out of some hopefull opinion he had of himselfe that he should no more provoke God to plague him as he had done; or he seemeth modest in his request, that he might more easily obtaine it, thereby as it were, threatning himselfe, that if he transgressed so againe, he would desire to be pardoned no more.

this death onely] That is, this deadly plague, 2 Cor.11.23. for being such Locusts, as the like never were before, nor should be afterward, they might be a deadly annoyance unto them, as wel as devourers of the fruit of the earth; and so that may well be true, which is said (in the booke of Wisdome, c.16. v. 19.) for them the bitings of the grashoppers and flies killed, neither was there found any remedy for their life: indeed it was easie for God, to make them as pernicious to the persons of men, as to the fruits of the earth; and the devouring of them onely might be called a death, because it was like to produce a famine; and famine is (many times) followed with the pestilence, both which are deadly plagues.

V. 18. And intreated the Lord] The charitie of the godly must exceed the malignitie of the wicked, and they pray for them, though they deserve rather cursings, then blessings, Matth. 5. 44.

V. 19. west wind] Heb. a wind of the Sea. Because the Mediterraneum sea is Westward, in respect of Canaan, and of Egypt: hence it is, that the Hebrews signifie the West by the Sea.

cast them] Hebr. fastned.

Red sea] Acts 7.36. Hebr.11.29. In the Heb. it is the sea of Bulrushes: the Greek and Latine usually render it the Red sea, so called as some think, because the water is red. Adrich. Delph. Theat. pag. 123. Some, because it seemeth red, by reason of the red sand, or gravell; so the Geneva: or from a red mountains neere unto it: but it is rather thought, (by the most Judicious) that it is so called from a King who had his Dominion neere unto it, whose name was Erythras, (Erythros in Greeke signifying red) which may be Edom, that is Esau, the red sonne of Isaac: See 2. Annot. in Gen. c. 25. v. 30. and Fulleri Miscellan. lib. 4. cap. 20. & Sixt. Amam. Antibuc. dissertat. de Nom. Jehovah, p. 531.

V. 21. even darknesse that may be felt] The words are figurative, importing extraordinary black darkenesse, as rivers of teares, Psal. 119. v. 136. extraordinary sorrow: yet God might so thicken the aire, that they might take notice of it, not onely by the eye, but by the hand, when they could rather feele, then see what was next unto them: so that (for three dayes space) they stirred not from their places: This darkenesse might be caused by a withdrawment of the light of the celestiall bodies, or by drawing a thicke curtaine of very blacke clouds betwixt mens eyes and them; or by thicke foggy vapours, which were so grosse that (like tangible bodies) they might in a manner be felt: such hyperbolicall expressions are usuall not only in humane authors, but also in the holy Scriptures. See Deut. 1. 28.

V. 23. neither rose any] They were not only (for three dayes space) deprived of the naturall lights & lampes of heaven; but of artificiall also; the vapours might be so thicke and moyst as to put out their candles and any other light that was kindled by them: so they were as blind men, that could not see at all; and as lame men, that could not move from their places; and so they sate still, as under the arrest of this darkenesse, because they could not see what to doe, whither to goe.

Israel had light] Esa. 60. 2. Whereby they had opportunitie to have stolne away; these three dayes of darkenesse to the Egyptians, and of light to the Israelites, would have served for their three dayes Journey, in the wilderneſse, Chap. 3. 18. & 5. 3. & 8. 27. in which time they might have removed themselves and their goods: but God had yet more miracles to worke for his owne glory, and their safetie; and he would not have them goe out like fugitives at all; but rather to march out of Egypt, as by way of honourable and triumphant victory over their enemies.

V. 24. and your herds be stayed] As a pawne of their return, and a forfeiture if they returned not.

Pharaoh called] After the three dayes darkenesse was expired, and light returned.

only let your flocks] As a gage or pawne of their returne, or as a recompence and supply for the losses of their cattell by the plagues of haile and murrain. Chap.9.v.6.25.

V. 25. Thou must give us also] Thou must not only give us leave to goe, but permit us to have our cattell also, that we may have wherewith to sacrifice to God.

V. 26. Not an hoofe be left] The Ministers of God ought not to yeeld one jot to the wicked (as touching their charge) though they would not have him obeyed at all; his word and will must be performed to a tittle.

with what] That is, with what beasts, or how many in particular; the laws of sacrifices were punctually set down after their deliverance out of Egypt: yet from Cain and Abels oblations, Gen. 4. the continuall practise of the Patriarchs, and the distinction of beasts, cleane and uncleane, was some direction for this dutie.

V. 28. thou shalt die] Though before he confessed Moses just, yet (against his own conscience) he threatneth to put him to death: an impudent stubbornnesse, after so many miraculous terrors, by the ministery of Moses; that he should threaten him with death, whose prayers he had so often begged for his deliverance: all wickednesse is folly, but such as this, is no lesse then madnesse, and a wonder of the devils working by divine permission: yet did not this discourage Moses from his dutie, Heb. 11. 27.

V. 29. thou hast spoken well] He approveth not Pharaohs speech in Pharaohs sense, but rather taunts him, turning his words to another intent then he thought of, whereof see v. 29.

thy face no more] These words are set down here, (by Anticipation) for they were not spoken untill after Moses his last message, Chap. 11. v. 4. 8. Or else they may be a propheſie of Pharaohs perdition in the sea, that (after their parting) he should be drowned, no more to be seen by him or any else.

CHAP. XI.

Vers.1. The Lord said] This was spoken to Moses by inspiration, (before he departed from the presence of Pharoah) having denounced the death of the first-born, after which which time (as he said, Chap. 10. v. last) he made his appearance no more before him.

thrust you out] He shall send you away without any condition, with hast and violence, as afraid to keepe you captives any longer: and without all hope to overcome the power, which hath so miraculously managed your cause against him.

neighbour] Though at first the Israelites (planted in Goshen) had not much to do with the Egyptians, from whom they were (for the most part) separated in their manners, and in their habitations, (for which a part of the Province of Goshen was sufficient) yet afterwards they multiplyed so much, that they spread all over that Countrey: and besides had many mixed habitations in other parts of Egypt, whence it was, that their doores were distinguished by the sprinkling of blood, as in the next Chapter.

very great] 2 Sam.7.9.Esth.9.4. That is, much honored, much feared, in regard of the manifold miracles wrought by his ministery, both in bringing punishments upon, and withdrawing punishments from the people of Egypt: whereby he might be the more like to obtaine jewels, or whatsoever else he should aske of the Egyptians for himselfe or the people.

V. 4. about midnight] To wit of the night, which followed the fourteenth day of the moneth Nisan, in the morning of that fourteenth day, Moses gave out the commination of the first born, before he finally departed from the presence of Pharaoh, v.8. at the evening of that fourteenth day the Passeover was first celebrated, and the night after that evening, was the slaughter of the first born.

V. 5. from the first born] Exod. 4.23. & 12.29.

that is behind the mill] Judg.16.21. Esa.47.2. Matth. 24.41. Heb. behind two mills, or after two millstones. The meanest servants (many times) were put to grind at the mill: wherefore mils were often in prison houses, where prisoners and captives were kept in worke, to turne the mill, which was sometimes so made, that they that wrought were placed on the backe part thereof, betwixt the mill it self, and the wall of the roome, wherein it was placed: so they were behind the mill, and sometimes they drave it before them, thrusting and turning it about with the maine strength of their bodies; which though it went round, yet still they came behind it, since they forced it about, by driving it before them, rather then by drawing it after them.

V. 6. great cry] Chap. 12. 30.

V. 7. a dog move his tongue] Josh.10.21. Job 5. 23. Hosea 2. 18. A proverbiall speech, signifying that their condition shall be very quiet, without any disturbance of man or beast: whereas the Egyptians were in tumults, and made out-cryes for their losses of their first born.

V. 8. shall come down] Moses had hitherto been a suiter at Pharaohs Court for the freedome of the Hebrews; but after a while the condition of the King and kingdome shall be so farre changed, that Pharaoh shall (by his servants) sollicite them to be gone, Chap. 11. v. 1. and the Egyptians shall be faine to buy their libertie, with great liberalitie giving them their most precious things at their departure.

in great anger] Though Moses were a man of a very meeke and patient spirit, (Numb.12.3.) yet in the cause of God, seeing Pharaoh so rebellious against him, so outragious against his people, so false in his promises to both; his zeale raised his indignation to a great height of detestation of him, and his doing. So also Exod.32. 19. Numb. 16. 15. Thus may we be angry without sinne, and (in such a cause) we cannot without sinne forbeare anger.

V. 9. that my wonders] God hardeneth the hearts of the reprobates, that his glory thereby might be the more set forth, Rom. 9. 17.

V. 10. not let] No words, though after so many wonderfull deeds, would worke upon this stubborn tyrant, to let Gods people goe: God permitting him to the course of his corrupt nature, and the misguidance of the devill, and knowing out of the evill of both, to set forth his own glory, in bringing forth his people with a mightie hand.

CHAP. XII.

Vers.1. And the Lord spake] That which here followeth, (touching the institution of the Passeover, and sprinkling of the bloud of the Paschall Lambe) was spoken by God to Moses, and by Moses to the people, before the slaughter of the first-borne; (as is plaine by the 12.22. & 23. verses of this Chapter) but it is here placed after it, that the plagues (which passed upon them before their departure) being brought in together, the departure it selfe, and the ensuing passages might proceed in their order.

V. 2. This moneth] Called in the Hebrew, Abib, Exod.13. 4. in the Chaldee Tongue Nisan, Esth. 3. 7. containing usually, part of March, and part of Aprill. See Annotation on Gen. Chap.7.11.

first moneth] That is, the first according to the order observed in Ecclesiasticall matters, as for politicall affaires they reckoned from September (called by the Chaldeans Tisri) because (as it is thought) the World began with that moneth: and it is thought to begin with it, for that there were ripe fruits at that time: though many of the Ancients conceive it began with the Spring: and according to this latter computation, was the Jubile reckoned, Levit.23.8,9,10. because of the Secular accompt of contracts, and releases then to be determined; this yeare called the Civill yeare, ended at the Feast of the ingathering of fruits, which was after their harvest, whereof see Exod. 23.16.

according to the house] Thereafter as the fathers of the household had great or small families.

In the tenth day] The Lambe must be severed on the tenth day, (on which day the Israelites made their entrance upon the borders of Canaan, Josh.4.19.) from the flocks, and sacrificed the fourteenth day, vers.6. this was for more serious and sacred preparation for the Sacrament; and to signifie our Saviour Christ, as separate from sinners, Heb. 7. 26. Some thinke this was peculiar to the first Passeover, and that it was therefore peculiar, because the Lambe might be in readinesse, and not to seeke when he was to be sacrificed, for which they would have little leasure, neere their departure: but that reason seemes not sufficient to appropriate this preparation to the first Passeover: because, first, this separation was typicall, as hath beene noted out of Heb. 7. 26. Secondly, if it were occasionall, so was the unleavened bread, vers.34. yet it was established by a perpetuall Ordinance, and that upon an heavie penaltie, vers. 17, 18, 19.

a lambe] Or kid. (The Hebrew word Seh, signifieth either of them:) (for such as had no meanes to bring a Lambe, a Kid was allowed, using the same Rites) By the Lambe or Kid, was signified Christ, Joh. 1. 29. who was innocent and harmelesse like a Lambe, Heb. 7.26. and because the Lambe of the Passeover was a figure of Christ, he is by a figurative speech called Our Passeover, 1 Cor. 5.7.

for an house] If the house or familie were sufficient for the eating of a Lambe, he who was the chiefe man in the family, (if an Hebrew) was to kill it, and if they were too few, or onely women in the house, they were to joyne themselves to those, who were more, and better fitted for such a service.

V. 4. of the soules] See Annot. on Gen. 12. 5.

according to his eating] He shall take so many as are sufficient to eate the Lambe: which Josephus reckoneth to the number of tenne men, besides women, and children: (Josephus of the warres of the Jewes, lib.7.cap.17.) But if a man had a great familie (as Abraham had three hundred and eighteene trained servants that did beare Armes, Gen.14.14.) one Lambe would be too little: and therefore as when the company was too few, more persons were to be added, that they might be enow for the Lambe: so if one Lambe were not enough, more must be added, that there may be Lambes enow for the company.

V. 5. without blemish] Some read without spot: but that is ambiguous, for thereby may be meant, either a spot of another colour, which may be an ornament, as in the Lambes of Jacob, Gen.30.35. or a marke of deformitie, or defect; the former is not forbidden in the Lambe or Kid to be sacrificed, but the latter: This Lambe or Kid, was a Type of Christ, who was without spot or blemish of sinne, so ~~Saint~~ Peter sets him forth, 1 Pet.1.19.

a male] The word Seh in Hebrew, signifieth a Lambe or Kid, whether male or female, for it is of the Common gender, and is taken (in the generall) for the lesser sort of cattell: and it may signifie a young kid as well as a lambe, as Deu.14.4. but though the law leave it to the choice of either, use and custome made it most frequent, to furnish the Paschall supper, rather with a lambe then with a kid; and accordingly did our Saviour celebrate the Passeover. The lambe is taken of the stronger sex, and more worthy gender, because Christ (signified by it) was to be of a masculine vigour, as well as of a lambe-like meeknesse.

of the first yeare] Heb. sonne of a yeare. That is, not above a yeare old, though it might be offered younger, at any time, when it was eight dayes old. Levit.22.27.

V. 6. whole assembly] That is, every assembly, in every family, or the master of the house for the family shall kill it, and with the family eat it: and this it is like, was the manner, not only of the first Passeover, but of the rest: because it was a service, not of the sanctuary, but of private families, where the master of it was (to the present purpose) a Priest, as before the Levitticall Priesthood was ordained, which served for publique ministrations, not for the service of private families in this way: and though in the second of Chron.30.15. it seemes

the Priests were to kill the Passeover, (i. the Paschall Lambe the most proper service of the Passeover) that is to be understood rather of the Bullock sacrificed at this feast, 2 Chron. 35. 7. then of the Paschall Lambe in private families: and this Bullock was rather a part of the solemnitie of the feast of unleavened bread, which lasted seven dayes together, then precisely of the Paschall Supper, which was made only with a Lamb, by the first both institution and observation also, where the chief of the family was to doe that, which the Priest did in the publique observance of the sanctuary, vers. 21.

in the evening] Heb. betwixt the two evenings. In our Saviours time (and before) the day was divided into twelve houres, Joh. 11. 9. but a long time before that, the Jews made speciall choice of three times for the practise of devotion, Psal. 55.17. Morning, Noone, and Evening, each of which had its measure: the morning was all that part of the day from Sun-rising to noone: the noone was the middle part of the day, taking up about two houres, before the Sunne ascended to the Meridian point, that is, before twelve of the clocke, and two houres after: and the evening was from the beginning of the declining of the Sunne to its setting: before this setting of the Sunne, (and so long before as it might serve for doing what belonged to the sacrifice by day light) was the Lambe killed, and the time that followed till night, was a second part of the evening, called a second evening, and so as betwixt two evenings, was the Passeover or Paschall Lambe slaine. Some make a fourefold division of the day artificiall, from Sunne to Sunne, the first from Sun-rising to nine of the clock in the fore-noone, as Acts 2. 15. by many is expounded: the second from nine to twelve containing three houres more: the third from twelve to three, which made up the ninth houre: and the fourth from that to Sunne setting, which consisting of three houres more, made the twelfth houre: so the day betwixt Sun-rising and Sun-setting is sometimes divided into twelve parts, Joh. 11. 9. sometimes into three, sometimes into foure; and according to this last division there may be two evenings, that is, two parts of the afternoone, or evening, as well as two mornings, that is, two parts of the morning or forenoone, and in that part of the day (which consisted of the third division) ended at three of the clock, and which was called an evening (becuse all that time the Sunne was declining towards his setting) and at the end of it, and towards the beginning of the other last part of the day, (which was reckoned for the second evening, and which was as a Participle of both evenings, or a borderer betwixt both) was this Lambe to be killed: and as the type, so was the antitype our Saviour sacrificed upon the crosse about the same time, Matth. 27.46.50.

V. 7. strike it on the two side posts] This is also thought by divers learned Commentators, to be peculiar to the first Passeover, and upon better ground then the former generally acknowledged: and this was done for distinction of the dwellings of the Hebrews from the Egyptians: not for instruction or direction to the Angel, who knew how to distinguish their houses in the darkest night, without any sign at all, but to direct the faith of the Israelites to the death of their great Redeemer, and their deliverance from a greater Tyranny then that of Pharaoh, by his blood; and withall to leave a Memorandum to the surviving Egyptians of this wonder. Some thinke this ceremony was particular to the first Passeover, others that it was to continue in the land of Canaan, and the sprinkling of the blood of the lambe might continue as of the ramme, Exod. 29. 16. to note the like in the Lambe of God, whose blood must be shed, 1 Pet. 1.2. (for without blood-shedding there is no remission, Hebr. 9.22.) and sprinkled by faith upon our hearts, Hebr. 9.14. It is not the blood in his veines, by concomitancie, (as the Papists teach) will serve the turne, but the blood let out of them, blood not taken out after the manner of meat, but of washing, as in the one Sacrament of drinking as in the other, which must doe us good.

whercin they eate it] They then who were called out of another family, to make up a competent number for the eating of the lambe, (as vers. 4.) were there to tarry that night; for no household had securitie from slaughter, but that wherein the lambe or kid was eaten.

V. 8. rost with fire] As some conceive, because it would be sooner rosted then boyled, and they were to dresse it that way which had most expedition, because they were in hast: but the reason rather may be, for conformitie to our Saviours sufferings, (whereof it was a type) and our Saviours sufferings were answerable to this; for fire is most sharpe and piercing, the most active of all the elements, under which all other things are most passive; and though his passion was most bitter to him, it is most sweet to us, as rost meat is sweeter then that which is either rawe or sodden, which is forbidden in the Paschall Lambe, vers. 9.

unleavened bread*] The Lambe was to be eaten in hast, Deut. 16. 3. and vers. 34. of this Chapter, and unleavened bread is made ready soonest; but withall, leaven having an operation to sower, and puffe up (and so being used to signifie sinne, as the sinne of hypocrisie. Luk. 12.1. and of malice, and other wickednesse, 1 Cor. 5.8.) unleavened bread was fittest to be a part of the Paschall Supper: wherein was prefigured, or fore-shewed, the integritie, and puritie of Christ. Besides the feast of unleavened bread was to beginne on the fifteenth day, Num. 28.16, 17. and to last till the twenty one day. * Exod. 34.25. Num. 9. 11. Exod. 23.18. Deut. 16.4. Exod. 12.18. & Chap. 13.7.

Bitter herbes] Num. 9.11. We cannot be partakers of such sweet meate, without sowre or bitter sauce; that is, our hearty repentance, in bitter teares, Matt. 26.75. And it was to the Israelites a remembrance of their affliction in Egypt, Deut. 16. 3. and a monitorie of mortification of their corruptions, as it were a bitter crucifying of the flesh, with the affections and lusts, Gal. 5.24.

Eat not of it raw] There needed no prohibition against the eating of raw flesh, in a literall sense; therefore it is not improbable (which some here note) that since the Paschall Lambe was a type of Christ, Joh. 19.36. the Popish doctrine of eating Christs flesh raw in the Sacrament, in a carnall sense, is here precondemned: and it is not more repugnant to the type, then to religion, and reason: to religion, in destroying the nature of a Sacrament, by confounding the signe with the thing signified; and against reason, requiring carnall nourishment to a spirituall substance, to which the flesh profiteth nothing, Joh. 6 63. yea against sense, for they would have the receivers beleeve, that they receive the very flesh and bloud of Christ, when they see, and touch, and taste nothing but bread; and that when their senses tell them it is bread and wine they receive, they most senslesly deny them all.

head with his legges] All of the Lambe (that was mans meat) must be roasted whole, even the inwards when they were washed, and so all eaten; so Christ is not to be divided, 1 Cor. 1.13. yea even his coat was seameles, Joh. 19.23. to give caution against schisme and separation.

V. 10. * untill the morning] It must not be kept, but imployed onely for that use, for which it was ordained: and so it was not to be superstitiously reserved (as the Papists use the consecrated wafer) nor profanely to be used, Exod. 29. 34. which might have fallen out in Egypt, if being to be gone in hast, they had left any part of it in their houses behind them, * Chap. 34. 25. & 23.18. & 29.34. Levit. 7.15. Deut. 16.4.

V. 11. staffe in your hand] As ready to depart thence: it is very probable, and generally received, that the Passeover was eaten standing: for that was a gesture of readinesse, for present passage: and this gesture is conceived to be peculiar to the first Passeover, because that onely was eaten in hast; and for that our Saviour celebrated the Passeover with another gesture, Luk. 22.14,15.

the Lords Passeover] The Lambe is called the Lords Passeover, by a figurative speech; (which speech is observable in both the Sacraments of both Testaments) for it was not the Passeover it selfe, but the materiall part of it. It was called the Passeover, because where the Angel of the Lord saw the bloud sprinkled upon the side posts of the dores, he passed over that house in mercy, and slew none in it, vers. 13. and passed on with speedy judgement, to destroy the first-borne of the Egyptians.

V. 12. gods of Egypt] The Egyptians were great Idolaters, and they had a multitude of Idols, which they tooke for gods: these gods were either destroyed, or (which is in effect as much) discovered in their defect of a Deitie, by laying open their impotencie, to preserve those who did service to them, and trusted in them, as if they had beene Gods: among these, the chiefest of them were Kine, and other cattell of that kind, which were destroyed with the murraine, and with the haile, Chap. 9.3.25. and it may be their great Idoll Apis had some especiall judgement executed upon it, as upon Dagon the Idoll of the Philistines, 1 Sam. 5.3.

V. 13. when I see the bloud] God knew well enough, whom to save, without seeing that signe; but this is spoken after the manner of men, and to men whose weakenesse of faith, and strength of feare, stood in need of such a signe, and saying, for their assurance of safetie. See Annot. on vers. 7.

V. 14. for a memoriall] Of the benefit received by your deliverance. Dayes dedicated to God, or instituted by him, (for holy memorialls of his mercy) must not be spent in idlenesse, or wantonnesse, but in serious consideration of the benefit received; and heartie, holy and humble gratulation, and thankesgiving for it.

for ever] Vers. 24. That is, untill Christs coming, for then Ceremonies had an end: the word (for ever, for it is but one word in the Hebrew) is used not onely for time without end, but for a long time, as Pro. 29.14. Dan. 3.9. as till the yeare of Jubile, which was every fiftieth yeare, Exod. 20.6. Levit. 25. 40. See Psal. 89.1.

V. 15. Seven dayes] This number is of much note and use in Scripture, and by some accounted a number of perfection; because because when God had perfected his worke of Creation, he rested, and ordained the seventh dayes rest for a memoriall of it. It is observed also by some, that the destruction of the Egyptians in the Red Sea, fell out seven dayes after the Israelites went out of Egypt: and this is alledged as another reason of the number of seven, observed in this sense. Of these seven, the first was the fifteenth day of the moneth at even, being the next day after the eating of the Passeover: the time whereof was, the latter end of the fourteenth day.

V. 15. shall be cut off] Not onely from communion in the Church, or sacred Societies, as an uncircumcised person, Gen. 17.14. but if any contempt, or contumacie appeared in the breach of the Ordinance, it was penall, yea capitall, and might cost the life of the offender, as Exod.31.14.

V. 16. every man] Heb. every soule. By a very usuall figure, where a part (especially the better part, as the soule is) is put for the whole person.

that onely may be done] The first and last of these seven dayes of the Feast of unleavened bread, were to be observed in the manner of Sabbaths: yet with this difference, that on these dayes meat might be dressed, on the Sabbath not, Chap.15. vers.5.23.

V. 17. armies] Vers.41.51.

V. 18. In the first moneth] Levit.23.5. Num.23.5.

V. 19. cut off] It is no light matter, nor little danger to disobey God, though but in a thing (in it selfe) of no great weight. It is a good rule then, (in all Gods commands) to consider, not so much what it is, as who it is, that biddeth or forbiddeth any thing. See Annotation on vers. 15. and on Gen. 17.14.

stranger] The Hebrew [Ger,] (from which our English word stranger may be derived) signifieth not onely a foreiner, but such a one as is a Proselyte, or Convert in Religion; and so it is to be understood in this place: and he was not to partake of the Passeover, nor to observe this Feast. Except as Annotation vers. 43.

V. 21. Elders of Israel] Who were to slay the Paschall Lambe in private families. See Annot. on vers.3.& vers.6.

V. 22. lintell] Or, transome, or upper doore post. This (as some conceive) was proper and peculiar to the first Passeover: (though some thinke otherwise) when their habitations were among the Egyptians: for before the Israelites came into Egypt, the land of Goshen was not without Inhabitants of that Nation: and when they came at the first, there was roome enough for the strangers, and old Inhabitants, and afterward their multiplication made a great mixture, not only in Goshen, but in other parts of Egypt also; especially, after the Israelites were made as common drudges to the whole Nation of the Egyptians.

none of you shall goe out] The danger of death was in the houses, and the [illegible] would shew his favour to the Israelites, where he execut[illegible]dgement upon the Egyptians: It might have beene danger[illegible]us for them, to have stirred out, having this command [illegible]kee[illegible] within doores, a command haply like that of the Lord, [illegible] Prophet Esay, Come my people, enter thou into thy [illegible]amber[illegible], and shut thy doores, hide thy selfe as it were for a little moment, until the indignation be overpast, Isa.26.20.

until the morning] This sheweth they went not out of Egypt in the night (as some have conceived.)

V. 23. the destroyer] That is, the Angel of God, sent to kill the first-borne, of whom some doubt, whether he were a good, or a bad Angel; more like a good one, because ordained of God for safetie to his servants, and most fit to execute vengeance on his enemies, Chap.14.19.24,25. and 23. from vers. 20.to 23. And most usually the wicked are destroyed by good Angels; and the godly chastised (as in Jobs case) by the bad, and they are delivered and succoured, by the good: nor is he to be accounted a bad Angel, because (if the Israelites had not marked their doores) he would have destroyed them: for if they had disobeyed so easie a command, for their owne safetie, they had deserved to have beene destroyed: and God himselfe threatens to destroy Jeremie, if he should disobey him, in setting himselfe against a rebellious people, Jer.1.vers. 17. But, though this might be a good Angel, (who executed a double Commission of mercy and justice, the one on the Israelites, the other on the Egyptians) yet they might be plagued with evill Angels, and so it is said they were, Psal.78.49. albeit some translate those words, (according to the Hebrew) messengers of evils, and meane by those messengers, Moses, and Aaron, foretelling the plagues of Egypt, in the 7, 8, and 9. Chapters of this Booke.

V. 24. For ever] See Annot. on vers. 14.

V. 25. The land] That is, the land of Canaan.

V. 26. what meane you] Chap.13. v.48.9.14. Psal. 78. 6. Josh.4.6. Deut. 32.7. The meaning of true religious services is to be known unto children: true religion is the exercise of minds illuminated with faith, and knowledge, and not of an ignorant or blind devotion, (as among the Papists) who have a masse of mysticall ceremonies, whereof neither children nor ancient men, no nor many of their priests, doe know the reason: and indeed, for many of them no reason is pretended, but such as is ridiculous.

V. 27. bowed the head] Exod.4.11. 2 Chron.29.30. They gave God thanks for so great a benefit, and expressed their thankfulnesse with an outward gesture, and that gesture was as well the bowing of the head, as the bending of the knee.

V. 29. at midnight] Chap. 11. 4. Not in an exact Mathematicall measure but about midnight: When the wicked are most secure, their destruction is most neere. 1 Thess.5.3.

first born] Not only of men, but of beasts; and among men, it is not meant only of children of both sexes, but of parents also, and those both men and women, who were born before them, and of the first born of their fathers families; and if they had children, their first born of them were slaine also, so that in one house the father of the family might be a first born, and his wife, and if he had divers wives, he might have a first born by each of them, and some of them might have first borne grand children. Some would have it, that in one house there was but one who was killed, as the first born, and in many families it is like, there was no first born, and because the first born (among the people of God) were the priests of the families, if they were heads of families, and women were not priests, as the first born, for when the first born were sanctified unto God, they were of the males, not of the females, Exod. 13. 12. See Annot. on Chap. 13. v. 2. And there might be some exception from this rule, as Pharaoh, (if he were a first born) and some others, of families, whom God might reprieve for a future destruction: but his first-born was slain, as is expressed in this verse, who (it may be) was partner with his father in the government of Egypt, and the oppression of Israel.

dungeon] Heb. the house of the well or pit. Because it was made round, like as wels or pits, are digged: or because such as were put there were exercised in drawing and carrying of water.

V. 30. great cry] Chap. 11. 6. It was meet it should be a great cry, and that they should have great cause for it, and they had the greater cause the more that were slaine: Here their cruelties recoyles upon them with calamitie; for they made Gods people cry, by reason of their bondage, Exod. 2. 23. and when they were intreated to shew favour, they increased the rigour; now it is their turne to cry, and God hardens his heart against them, as they against his people. See Prov.21.13. Jam.2.13.

not a house] Of those houses, wherein were any first born, either of men, or of beasts, according to the former observation, vers. 29. it was very strange, if any family had not some dead in it, and many (as hath been observed on that verse) might have many dead.

V. 32. blesse me] Chap. 8. 28. Pray for me, that I may be blessed at least, not cursed as I have been.

V. 33. out of the land] Chap.11.1. There is neither truth, nor certaintie in the wicked, their consciences swayed by their passions, their passions varyed with their states, their states changeable at Gods choice, and pleasure: thence they that (by force) would keepe Gods people captives, would now make them fugitives, to run away in hast: this is that fulfilled which God foretold of their departure, Chap.11. 1. and the remainder of their wrath restrained, as the Psalmist hath it, Psal.70.10.

dead men] That is, in assured danger of death, as was said to Abimelech. Gen.20.3.

V. 34. kneading troughes] Or, dough. See v. 39.

V. 35. and they borrowed] Chap. 3. 22. & 11. 2. It is not like that this borrowing, whereof they were foretold, and was agreed on to be before, (See Annot. on Chap. 3. v. 22.) was put off untill the day of the Hebrews departure out of Egypt, though then (for a farewell) they might have a great proportion of the goods of the Egyptians brought unto them; but that formerly, (as the Egyptians by the precedent judgements were inclined, and opportunitie served) they made use of the advantage to borrow, and lay up in store, for this time, which was farre too short (if they had put it off till this time now) to furnish them sufficiently for their occasions.

V. 36. favour*] It is in Gods power to give his people favour in the eyes of enemies: therefore, when we are to seeke, or sue to any by petition, or otherwise, it is good first to present our request unto God, to make us gracious in the eyes of men. See Nehem. 2. 4, 5. * Gen. 33.4. Prov. 16. 7. Exod. 3. 21. & 11. 3.

spoiled the Egyptians] It is just with God that his people spoile those, who spoiled them; Ezek.39.10. and just with men, (having Gods expresse warrant for it) as the Israelites had in this case.

V. 37. from Rameses] Whereof see Annot. on Gen. 47. 11. to Succoth; the Hebrews journeying out of Egypt towards Canaan, had (as they are noted by such as carefully compute them) fourtie two stations in the Desert: whereof Rameses was the first, Succoth the second, which was betwixt Egypt and and the Red Sea: where we must understand, that that part was sometimes reckoned to Egypt; but being untilled, usually the manured part onely, was called Egypt, and this part was called Succoth, of the Boothes or Tabernacles of the Hebrewes, first pitched in that place, Num. 33.5. The word Succoth, is derived from a root, signifying to hide, to cover, and to defend, which is the proper use of those moveable mansions, as well as of those which are fixed or settled.

sixe hundred thousand on foot] That is, such as (not under twenty yeares of age) were able men to march in Militarie manner, without need of support of Horses, or Carts to carry them: besides women, children, decrepit old men, which (with the wicked multitude who were partly Egyptians) are conceived to amount to the number of about halfe so many, to wit, three hundred thousand persons.

V. 38. a mixed multitude] Heb. a great mixture. Num. 11. 4. Which were strangers, and not borne of the Israelites, being partly Egyptians, and partly servants of other Countries, who moved with the miracles removed out of Egypt with them. See Zach. 8.23.

V. 41. at the end of foure hundred and thirty yeares] (Gen. 15. 18. Act. 7.6. Gal. 3.17.) From Gods promise of the Land of Canaan, made to Abraham, Gen. 12. 7. and his first passage into Egypt, vers. 10. to this miraculous deliverance, were 430. yeares, Gal. 3.17. whereof (for a great part) he and his were strangers, and sojourners, partly in Egypt, partly in Canaan: sixtie yeares were spent in tolerable servitude, after that, eighty yeares more, under intolerable tyranny. See the Annot. on Gen. 15. v. 13.

the selfe same day] Vers. 51. Ezek 24.2. God is most just and exact, in performing of his promises, though very ancient and farre off, he keepeth touch even to a day: which may make us confident in the call of the Jewes, the fall of Antichrist, and other predictions yet to be fulfilled.

V. 42. a night to be much observed] Heb. a night of observations. Though the destruction of the Egyptians, and the preservation of the Israelites, were in the night, the solemne memoriall of that memorable justice and mercy, was to be observed in the day, and much observed, because it was extraordinary great: for men must endevour to be proportionably mindfull, and gratefull for great favours: so that not onely ungratitude, but too little gratefulnesse, is a great fault, 2 Chron. 32. vers. 25.

V. 43. no stranger] Vers. 19. Except he be circumcised, and professe onely your Religion, vers. 48, 49.

V. 44. that is bought shall be circumcised] He is bound so to be as the child of the native Hebrew; but a stranger who converseth with the Israelites, as a Merchant, or otherwise, as a mercenary labourer, hired by the day, or for a certaine time, was neither bound to be circumcised; nor uncircumcised, permitted to eate of the Passeover: and so it is in the Evangelicall Sacraments, for none may eate of the Lords Supper who is not a member of the Church by Baptisme.

V. 46. In one house] Numbers 9.12.

breake a bone thereof] Joh. 19. 36. As men doe, that feed deliberately, having leasure not onely to eate the flesh, but to breake the bones, that they may eate the marrow in them: this was forbidden, because of the hast they were to make in their departure: and (as according to the letter it was ordained touching the Paschall Lambe) so it is in that type or figure prophecied of the Lambe of God, and accordingly fulfilled at his passion, and so applied by the Evangelist John, 19. Chap. 36. vers. for that was not done unto him, which was done unto the two theeves, which were crucified with him, who by such violence were put to death: but he voluntarily laid downe his life, and in the same manner, was able to take it up againe, Joh. 10.18. and did so.

V. 47. keepe it] Heb. doe it.

V. 49. One law] See the like, Num. 15.15.29. As God is one Lord, so of that Lord there is one faith in him, one worship, one baptisme to him, Ephes. 4.5. It is said of the gods of the heathens, that they were good fellows, and that they were content with a shew of worship, because none at all is due unto them, for they are no Gods which are made with hands, Act. 29.16. no more or better Gods are they, which are made with braines; that is, with vaine fancies and imaginations of men: but he that is God indeed, will allow of no rivalship in service: for he requireth (as his due) the devotion of all the heart, with all the soule, and with all the mind, Matth. 22.37. and therefore he is a jealous God, Exod. 20.5. and if men take any part of that from him, which (when it is whole and entire) is much too little for so great a God, his jealousie will be raised up to wrathfull revenge, Exod. 20.5. Neh. 1.2. Toleration of divers Religions then, is impious and dangerous: Impious, (especially as some late Libertines have taught) if the most Paganish, Jewish, Turkish, and Antichristian consciences and waies should be permitted: for so most horrid blasphemies against God, and his Sonne Christ Jesus should be suffered: and Dangerous, because thereby the indignation of the Almighty may be much provoked, many soules may be seduced to damnable errors, and the Church and State rent into destructive factions. Contrarie to Luk. 14.23. Revel. 2.20. 1 Cor. 1.10. Mar. 3.24,25. Luk. 11.17. Phil. 1.27,28. Jude 1. and many other places of the Scripture, which taken together do clearly evict a negative conclusion against toleration of severall Religions, where there is power in the Church and State to suppresse all, but that which is true and consonant to the Scriptures.

CHAP. XIII.

Vers. 2. * Sanctifie unto me] That is, set them apart for my use, that they may offer up themselves a living sacrifice, holy and acceptable in my sight, Rom. 12.1. * Exod. 12.13.15. & 22.29. & 34.19. Levit. 27.16. Num. 3.13. & 8.16. Luk. 2.23.

* all the first borne] The first borne of cleane creatures were to be sacrificed, Num. 18.17. of the uncleane, to be redeemed; and a price must be given to the Priests for their redemption; both of them, by way of gratefull memoriall of Gods mercy, in sparing the first borne of Israel, when he slew the first borne of Egypt, vers. 15. The first borne of men were to be set apart, for especiall service to God; and they were reckoned for the first borne, though a daughter had beene borne before: in stead of which first borne, the Lord afterward tooke the Levites to his service, Num. 8.15,16. Under this title of dedication and appropriation of God, an especiall holinesse was required of them: and in regard of that holinesse, all that are sanctified, are called the first borne, Heb. 12.23. * Gen. 4.4. Col. 1.15. 1 Cor. 5.20.

is mine] So are all things, by right of creation, and preservation: but the first borne are his by peculiar right, and to be offered to him for sacrifice, or for redemption; in remembrance of Gods mercy, as in the precedent Note. Of this generall and particular right of God see Annot. 5. on Chap. 19. v. 5.

V. 3. Remember] Chap. 23. 15. See Annot. on Chap. 12. 42.

V. 4. Abib] When corne begar[illegible] trey. See Annot. on Chap. 12. vers[illegible]

V. 9. upon thine hand] Thou s[illegible] brance thereof, as thou wouldest [illegible] hand, (as a seale-ring on thy finger) or [illegible] Jewes (as in conformitie to this Law) had the Law of the Decalogue written in pieces of parchment, which they wore upon their armes, forheads, fringes or borders of their garments; these are the Phylacteries, which our Saviour mentioneth when he taxeth the hypocrisie of their degenerate posteritie, Matth. 23. 5.

the LORDS Law in thy mouth] Josh. 1.8.

V. 11. of the Canaanites] Under which name other people called (elsewhere by severall titles) are contained: who might all be called Canaanites, as descending from Canaan, Gen. 10. 6. though some sort (among them) more eminent then the rest, were called chiefly by that name.

V. 12. smite all the first borne] Chap. 12.29.

the LORDS] This is spoken not of all, but of such beasts as were fit for food and sacrifice; as sheepe, goats, and beeves.

V. 13. of an asse] That is, of a she Asse, who is the damme and bringeth forth a foale: this is also to be understood of an Horse, and of other beasts that were unclean, which were not offered in sacrifice. For Asses both in Egypt, and in Canaan were in more ordinary use, then Horses, both for bearing of burdens, and for riding. See Jud. 10.4. and 12. 14. and were not onely strong, but swift also, above those of other Countries.

shalt thou redeeme] When and at what rate, see Numb. 18. 16.

break his neck] For if it were not redeemed, it rested as in Gods right and proprietie, and so man was not to make use of it, as his owne: and by his breaking, or cutting off the neck, for the word is used for cutting off, Deut. 21.4. Esa. 66. 3. the

ungratitude and hardnesse of the heart of the owner was to be noted, and hated, who would not give a Lambe or Kid, a creature of lesse price and use, for the life of an Asse that might live and doe service.

shalt thou redeeme] By offering a clean beast (for sacrifice) in his stead: for otherwise, (as in Gods right, and their owne desert) they might have beene offered up in sacrifice themselves: but they were to be redeemed, as Isaac was, by offering up a Ram, Gen. 22. vers. 12, 13. or by a payment of money, to wit, five shekels, Num. 18. 16.

V. 14. in time to come] Heb. to morrow. Because that is next to come.

* what is this] * Deut. 6. 10. Josh. 4. vers. 6. 21. See Annotat. on Chap. 12. vers. 26.

V. 16. frontlets] Little plates, or pieces of parchment worn upon the forehead, called Phylacteries, according to the Greek, Matth. 23. 56. from a word signifying to keepe, or preserve, that is, in memorie: for though they could not see betwixt their owne eyes, they might see in each others foreheads, that which should remember them of Gods deliverance of them: their right use was memorative, which (afterwards) was turned into superstitious preservatives against the power of sinne.

V. 17. for God said, Lest] God led them about, to traine them, before he put them to warre with their enemies: for warre is a terrifying evill, which if they should soon meet with, would dispose them to thinke it better to goe back into Egypt, then to make their way through the weapons of such enemies as had slaine some of their brethren before. (See 1 Chron. 7. 21.) Yet refusing this way, the way that was chosen for them, they were to fight with the Amalekites, and did so, Chap. 17. but that was not untill the fourtieth day of their journey out of Egypt, when it was too farre off to returne into Egypt, and that was but one fight, and in that God gave them a glorious victorie: but in the way by the countrey of the Philistines, they must have begun with warre, and (having begun) must have beene still provoked to goe on with it, since they were a wilfull and a warlike Nation. Herein God sheweth, that he graciously condescendeth to humane weakenesse. See Gen. 19. 20, 21. Deut. 20. 8. 1 Cor. 10. 13. And this doth God, (as observing the rule of his ordinary providence) for otherwise, he could easily have made the Philistines to favour them, as he did the Egyptians: or could have made his peoples courage more vigorous then their enemies, by victories over them.

V. 18. harnessed] Or, by five in a ranke. Josh. 1. 14. It is not like they had much armour, besides their staves, unlesse when the armed Egyptians (pursuing them were drowned) they recovered any of their armes for a spoile, when they saw them lye dead upon the shore, Chap. 14. 30. And yet they might be allowed some armes for defence of that part of the country where they dwelled from the incursions of enemies; and might borrow armes, as well as other things of the Egyptians. The word Chamushim here used, hath the signification of five in it, and so it is taken for five in ranks, or for girding up their loynes, at the fift rib: the meaning is, that they went not out of Egypt (in a tumultuary manner) like fearefull fugitives, but trussed up, or girded up, and going on in an orderly manner, like a well ranked armie, so that none gave impediment to another.

V. 19. Moses tooke the bones] So Joseph ordered at his death, and (for more assurance) required a solemn oath, Gen. 50. 24, 25. The will of the dead in lawfull things, is faithfully to be fulfilled by their surviving friends. See Annot. on Gen. 50. 25. With his bone, it is like the bones of the other Patriarchs were carryed, as appeareth by the speech of Stephen Act. 7. 16. at least this is evident thereby, that their bones also were brought into Canaan, though when, and by whom it be not certaine.

God will surely visit] Gen. 50. 25. Josh. 24. 32. See Annot. on Gen. 50. 24.

V. 20. Succoth] Exod. 12. 37.

V. 21. The Lord went] Chap. 14. Numb. 14. 14. Deut. 1. 33. Psal. 78. 14. called the angel of the Lord, Chap. 14. 19. by which is understood Christ, Exod. 23. from the 20. verse to the 23. who was typified by this cloud, as the allusion of the Prophet Isaiah intimates, Chap. 4. v. 5, 6. and who was tempted by their disobedience, 1 Cor. 10. 9.

pillar of a cloud] Which was moved by him, with such variation as he thought fit, for the guiding of their journey, and for their stations; for it went before them when they were to march, and when to stay, it stood still; and when the tabernacle was built, it went backe and rested over it, where they were to rest; and though it were narrowed toward heaven like a pillar, it was broad downwards, and diffused like a cloud, whereby it might serve for a shelter of the people from the heat of the Sunne. See Psal. 105. 39.

V. 22. tooke not away] Nehem. 9. 19. The first mention of the cloud and fire, is at the third mansion, or pitching of the people: but that letteth not, but that they were guided by them before: for Josephs bones are not mentioned till then, and yet the people carryed them all the way, out of Egypt; and they (having need of such guides, by day and by night, both before and after, there is no doubt, but they continued all their journey in the wilderneſse.

fire by night] Though they did not usually journey in the night, yet sometimes it is like they did: See Nehem. 9. 19. and though it were but sometimes, God was alwayes ready for them, and watching over them, as Psal. 121. 4.

CHAP. XIIII.

Vers. 1. And the Lord spake] That which he had spake before is here brought in, and it is brought in here, to shew that Moses mistook not his way, when he brought them into these straits, and danger, but that therein he followed Gods direction, as they did his: the reason whereof, see in the notes following.

V. 2. turne] This turning was a returning: for they were before at Etham, whence now bending their course, (as here they are appointed) they coasted toward Memphis, (the chiefe Citie of Egypt Southward) whereas the land of Canaan (whither they were to goe) was Northward.

Migdol] This was a garrison Tower or Castle of the Philistines: so that turning this way, they might be thought to have lost their way and to be intangled in the wilderneſse, and that with such disadvantage (having that on one side, mountains on the other, the sea before them) Pharaoh, and the Egyptians might be drawn out, to pursue them, with hope to prevaile against them: that so the faith of the Israelites might be tryed, Gods power and providence the more declared, and the enemies more confounded, in their own destruction, and Gods strange deliverance of his people.

V. 4. be honoured] Chap. 4. 17, 18. By punishing his obstinate rebellion. See the Annot. on Exod. 9. 16.

V. 5. fled] Whereas they pretended to goe but three dayes journey into the wilderneſse, to sacrifice to the Lord their God, Chap. 3. v. 18. Chap. 5. v. 3. it was told to Pharaoh that they were runaway, and purposed now to return no more. But they went not out like runaways, but with a confident boldnesse, and in an orderly march. See note on v. 8.

V. 5. why have we] The wicked are apt to repent of their well-doing, as the godly of their ill. See the Annot. on Chap. 12. v. 33.

V. 7. charets] Of old they used charets with sithes at their sides, to mow down men in their way; there were other charets, out of which they fought, as now out of ships men use to do: but where had he horses? all the cattell of Egypt being killed, Chap. 9. v. 6. Answ. That is to be understood, (as the plague of haile) only of those that were in the field. See Chap. 9. v. 19. 25.

Captains] called in Hebrew Salasim, or Schalaschim, which signifieth thirds, either because they were the third sort of men, next to the King, or set up over the third part of the armie, or that one of them was strong enough for three men.

V. 8. The Lord hardened] See Annot. on Exod. 4. v. 21.

an high hand] So also Numb. 33. 3. The hand of God (overmatching the might of Pharaoh) so that in the power and protection thereof, the people did not fearfully flie, but confidently marcht in a Military posture: and if the high hand be referred to them, it importeth a stoutnesse of stomach, as when men are audacious in sinne, they are said to act it with an high hand. So Numb. 15. 30. according to the Hebrew.

V. 9. * but the Egyptians] This sheweth the condition both of the wicked, and the godly: for the wicked though their malice be intermitted, it is not suppressed; and the godly, who (though they have their pawses from persecution) have not their quietus est from all pursuit, while they are on this side Canaan.

V. 10. cryed out] Joth. 27. 7.

V. 12. Is not this the word] They would seeme Prophets, in foretelling the evill; that Moses might beare the blame, if they miscarried in their way, as if he (with ignorance and confidence) had drawn them into danger against their premonition. It is very incident to querulous natures, to thinke themselves wiser then their governours, and it is very necessary that such be as low in humilitie, as they are high in authoritie, that they may patiently beare the impatient and passionate reproaches of inferiours.

V. 13. for the Egyptians] Or, whereas you have seene the Egyptians to day, &c.

no more] That is, no more alive: for (when they were dead) the water wrought up their dead bodies, and they were seene by the Israelites on the shore. Vers. 30.

V. 14. * hold your peace] By that phrase in Scripture may be meant, not only a cessation from words, but from actions, as Psal. 83. 1. Esa. 42. 14. and here they are bidden, not so to keep silence, as not to call upon God for safetie from destruction; but quietly to compose themselves, in expectation of Gods execution of his wrath upon their enemies, as if he should say, only put your trust in God, without doubting, or murmuring: for God deferreth his chiefest ayd, untill mans greatest need; when the danger is greatest, the helpe of God is readiest, as at this time: for the Israelites had on either side them huge rocks and mountains, before them the sea, behind them most cruell enemies, so that there was no way left to escape in mans judgement. See 2 Chron. 20. 17. and now they were bidden patiently to expect the salvation of the Lord.

* Psal. 50. 3. & Psal. 83. 1. & Isaiah 42. 14.

V. 15. wherefore cryest thou] Esa. 64. 24. We read of no words that he said: his crying was therefore, like to be strong ejaculations and groanings of his spirit, Rom. 8. 26. which he uttered with some perturbation of minde, (mixt with anger and feare) upon the peoples clamour against him. Yet his passion at them, did not overcome his confidence in God, nor that make him withdraw his devotion from him, or withhold his supplications for their safetie. By this question, God doth not finde fault with his devotion, but rather hasten him to the action; wherewith he meant to joyne his own miraculous power, for their preservation, and their enemies destruction, that is the stretching of the rod, as in the next verse.

V. 16. over the sea] That is, towards the sea, as before, over the river and over the land.

midst of the sea] Not precisely in the midst, as the center is in the circumference, but so that the sea should be on each side them.

V. 17. I will harden] See Annot. on Exod. 4. 21.

get me honour] See Annot. on Chap. 9. v. 16.

V. 19. The Angel of God] That is, the Lord himselfe, Chap. 13. 21. to wit, the second Person in Trinitie, the Angel of the covenant, Exod. 23. 20. 22.

removed] That is, removed the pillar, which was a signe of his especiall presence, which till now, went before them; but now was behind them, that it might be between them, and their enemies.

V. 20. darknesse to them but] The cloud sheweth light to the Israelites, but to the Egyptians it was darknesse, so that their two hosts could not joyne together: it usually went before the campe, now it came behind, and betwixt the Armies of the Hebrews and Egyptians, shewing light to the one, and being black and darke to the other.

divided] So farre asunder, that there was way enough for so many hundred thousand to passe through in one night, which required a great breadth: some thinke every tribe had his proper path. So Epiphan. hæres. 46.

V. 22. * upon dry ground] From so great feare, as before made them cry out unto the Lord, v. 10. they are come now to so much faith, as made them boldly to passe through high walls of water, Heb. 11. 29. This passage is applyed (by the Apostle) as a representation of Baptisme, 1 Cor. 10. 2. to which it may be likened in divers respects: as first, that Baptisme by water is a meanes of safetie to Christians, so was this unto the Israelites. Secondly, that their going in the chanell, (the waters on each hand) was as a being in the grave, and we are said to be buried with Christ by Baptisme. Rom. 6. 4. Thirdly, their coming safe to the shore, was as a resurrection after burial: so for such as are baptized, by immersion, or dipping in the water by Baptisme, the arising out of it, hath the same resemblance, though that manner of Baptizing be not necessary, as some would inforce, from the signification of the word: for the contrary appeareth, Mark. 7. 4. Fourthly, some Expositers upon 1 Cor. 10. 2. say (though but by conjecture) that as they passed through the sea, some drops of the raised waters, were sprinkled upon them, and some also from the cloud, that was above them: but if that were not so, the cloud preserving them from the scorching heat, signified security from the burning indignation of Almightie God: from which Baptisme if inward, as well as outward, is an especiall protection, Mark. 16. 16. and it is to be noted, then when Christ was Baptized, the Proclamation of his well-pleasing acceptance was made from heaven. Matth. 3. last, wherein is the safetie of all the faithfull, who put their affiance in him. Lastly, the universalitie of Baptisme to both sexes, all ages and sorts of persons, is represented by this passage through the Sea, in that (as the Apostle saith) they were all baptized in the cloud and in the sea, for both sexes, women as well as men, children as well as those that were of ripe yeares, Gentile Proselytes (a mixed multitude, Exod. 12. 38.) as well as Jews, were under the cloud, and passed through the sea.

* Psal. 78. 13.

V. 24. in the morning watch] The night was kept with divers watches: sometimes more; sometimes fewer, but usually, one watch was from evening to midnight, another from thence to cockcrowing, and the third from that to the dawning of the day: this is thought to be about the three last houres of the night.

God looked] This looking was not a bare beholding, but such a one as troubled the Egyptians: and it was some evidence of divine power, and indignation, whereby he might be known, as a man by his looks, and whereby he appeared terrible unto them, as Psal. 77. 18.

V. 25. that they drave them] Or, made them to goe heavily.

V. 26. over the sea] Or, toward the sea.

V. 27. returned to his strength] For division is a weakening of any thing; and now the sea was bound, and had no strength to wave, and swell and flow, as before it had: but God let it loose againe, and it was vigorous and violent as before.

overthrew the Egyptians] The Lord (by the water) saved his people, and by the water drowned his enemies. The same thing shall worke contrary effects, thereafter as God shall please to imploy it; and be the operation never so naturall, God can suspend it, or move it, which way he thinks good, either for good or for hurt. See Dan. 3. 27.

V. 30. saw the Egyptians] See Vers. 13.

V. 31. great worke] Heb. hand.

and his servant Moses] That is, the doctrine, which he taught them, and the message which he told them, (in the name of the Lord) they beleeved, as if the Lord himselfe had spoken to them. See Chap. 19. 9.

CHAP. XV.

Vers. 1. Then sang] Or, shall, or will sing. (According to the Grammaticall construction) which may implie, that as Moses sang then, when the Israelites were delivered, and the Egyptians destroyed; so the memoriall of this mercy and judgement should be kept up for the celebration of the glory of God in future times. Here is the first mention we finde of singing in the Scriptures, yet it is not like there was no singing in the world before this time, nor that the Patriarchs of precedent Ages praised not God in singing unto him; for many things were done which are not recorded in the Scriptures: as (no doubt) the Fathers before the flood kept a weekly Sabbath, for it was ordained at the beginning of the world, upon such grounds, as concerned them as much as any of their Successours: yet we read not of the practise of the Sabbaths observation, untill the 16. of Exod. N.

Moses and the children] The song composed by Moses, and garnished with many patheticall, and rhetoricall expressions might be sociably sung by himselfe, and the people; who (if they had not a competent number of copies of it, to read it) might have it repeated by parts unto them, so they might sing it altogether, (as the manner is in many Churches of the Christians:) or he himselfe might sing it for himselfe, and them; as the prayers of a publique Minister in the publique execution of his Office, are the prayers of the people, (though he onely speake) while he doth it for them, as well as for himselfe, and with their consent.

this song unto the Lord] Wherein they give him the whole glory of his owne victory, magnifying his justice upon Pharaoh, and the Egyptians; and his mercy on his own people.

V. 2. my God] The Originall word signifieth a strong and powerfull God, and very fitly is he here noted by that name, where his powerfull prevailing over the proud and mighty Tyrant, is illustriously set forth.

an habitation] A Tabernacle to entertaine his presence with worship due unto him.

V. 3. a man of warre] The word Ish, here used for man, is sometimes used to signifie some eminence; as a man of words is put for an eloquent man; a man of arme for a mighty man, Job 22. 8. So a man of warre, 1 Sam. 17. 33. for a famous warriour: and he is so a man of warre, as to be a master of warre, sweying the successe of it to which side he pleaseth; as in the battell betwixt the Israelites, and the Amalekites, Exod. 17. 11.

the LORD] Jehovah is his name. See Annot. on Chap. 3. vers. 14, 15.

V. 4. red sea] In Hebrew it is called Suph, that is, the sedgie Sea: ordinarily, it is translated the red sea, and by the Greek, the sea Erythræum, from a King called Erythrus, buried by the shore of that Sea.

V. 5. as a stone] Or, as lead. Vers. 10. The weight of their sinne, and of Gods wrath sunke their dead bodies downe into the Sea, with more then ordinary pressure; as their presumption was extraordinary high, and daring: the wicked are designed to deepe destruction, whereby they violently descend (as a stone) cast into the water, which is too weake to beare the weight of it, Jer. 51. 63, 64. Revel. 18. 21.

V. 7. against thee] Such is the league, betwixt God and his people, that what is done against them, he accounteth as done against himselfe, Act. 9. 4.

* as stubble] That is, not for the particular manner of the destruction; (for stubble is consumed with heat of fire, these were overwhelmed in the water) but for the speedinesse, certainty, and unrecoverablenesse of their overthrow: as the Prophet Isaiah threatneth, Esa. 5. 24. * Isa. 47. 14.

V. 8. with

V. 8. with the blast of thy nostrils] Nostrils, and other parts of man, are ascribed to God, for the capacitie of man; and by this we are to note the vigour of the Almightie Spirit, who can (with as much ease, as a man letteth his breath passe through his nostrils) overthrow the mightiest power of the wicked. See Job 4.9. 2 Thess.2.8. And if we take the words in a more particular sense, the Wind may be called the breath of his Nostrils, for that onely cometh from him: and as a wind divided the waves of the Sea, & made them to stand like wals on each side for a passage to his people, Chap.14.21. So a wind might blow down those water wals upon the Egyptians, to overwhelm them.

congealed] That is, hardned, either because the waters stood like confirmed walls, or the muddie part (under their feete that walked through it) was thickned, and confirmed like a solid floore.

heart of the sea] Or, depth of the sea. Jonah 2.3.

V. 11. amongst the Gods] Or, mightie ones. So the Scripture sometimes calleth the mightie men of the world, especially Judges and Magistrates, as Exod.22.28.

glorious in holinesse] Holinesse is the glory of the Creator, therefore the Seraphims glorifie him, in trebling the acclamation of holinesse, Isa.6.3. And where we are taught to pray for the glorifying of his Name, we must say, hallowed be thy Name; that is, let it be declared, and beleeved to be holy: and the Apostle linketh holinesse and honour together, 1 Thess.4.4. The more unreasonable then is their irreligion, who make holinesse the marke of their malignant contumelies, and doe what they can to turne the greatest glory into shame.

fearefull in praises] Who ought for his great and dreadfull execution of judgement to be praised, and when we praise him we may feare, because we cannot sufficiently praise him: yea so farre should we be from presuming on God for any of his acts and attributes, that all of them, even his mercy should affect us with an awfull feare, and religious reverence; for this, see Psal.2.11. Isa.6.5. Jer.33.9. Psal.130.4.

V. 12. earth swallowed them] The Earth is (sometimes) taken for the Globe which is made up of earth and sea, as distinguished from the heaven, the upper part of the world, and so by a Synecdoche, the earth may be said to swallow them, though the sea drowned them; or they may be said to be swallowed up in the earth, because the ground which was solid to the Israelites, was soft to them, and they sunke into it, like a stone or lead into mire, vers.5.10. See Annot. on vers.5. And it may be when they were found dead on the shore, Chap.14. vers.30. they were buried in a pit to prevent the corruption of the ayre.

V. 13. holy habitation] That is, the promised Land, the Land of Canaan, inhabited by the holy Patriarchs, especially the citie of Jerusalem, and there the Temple principally where God intended it should be built, in which he promised to dwell, that is, to afford his speciall presence, Psal.135.21. 1 King.9.3.

V. 15. the mightie men] See this prophecie accomplished, Numb.22.3.

V. 16. passe over] Not over the Red Sea, for they had passed that already; but into Canaan, as the next verse sheweth.

V. 17. mountaine of thine inheritance] Deut.3.25. Mount Sion, where Moses (by the spirit of prophecie) foresaw the Temple should be built; and there God promised his abode, as in the place of a perpetuall inheritance and habitation. See 1 King.9.3. This was about foure hundred and eighty yeares after the peoples departure out of Egypt.

hast made thee] After the manner (usuall in prophecies) viz. which is to expresse future things by the Preter Tense, he saith, thou hast made thee, for thou shalt make: such an expression importeth certainty and assurance. See Revel.18.2. 10.21.

V. 18. for ever and ever] The word holam, here used, when it cometh single, signifieth (many times) a long time not limited in words, though limited in decree and providence to a certaine period; when with the word gnaed, which signifieth beyond, as here, it signifieth an absolute and everlasting eternitie.

V. 20. Miriam] So the sister of Moses and Aaron is called, both in the Hebrew, and Chaldean tongue; the Vulgar Latine turneth it Maria, and so with reference to the Virgine Mary: the Etymologie of some Hebrewes will please the Romanists, who say, Mar, signifieth Lady, and Iam, the Sea: but the right derivation of it is from Marar, which signifieth bitter; because about the time of her birth, the bitter afflictions of the Israelites began to breake forth.

V. 20. *Miriam the * prophetesse*] By whom the Lord spake: They who vilifie the female sex, especially with reference to Religion, may here observe in point of holy prophecie, that male and female are all one in God as in Christ, Gal.3.28. 2 Cor.6.18. * Judg.4.4. 2 King.22.14. Luk.2.36. Act.21.9.

the sister of Aaron] And of Moses, yet she is called Aarons sister, rather then the sister of Moses, because she was Aarons sister before she was his sister, being elder then either of them; and because Moses was long absent from her, (when Aaron continued with her) and so she was longer, and more generally knowne, by the name of Aarons sister, then the sister of Moses: these three were the principall conducters of the people out of Egypt into Canaan, Mic.6.4.

timbrell] Psal.68.25. 2 Sam.6.5. That is, a little Drum, Tabor, or Tabret; the Hebrew word Toph, cometh from a word signifying to strike; some of them had little bells hanging within them, which when the skin of the Tabret was stroken, returned a musicall sound.

and with dances] Or, flutes. Signifying their great joy: which custome the Jewes observed in great solemnities. Jud. 11.34. But it ought not to be a cloake to cover our wanton dances: for this dancing was a religious and outward expressing of their inward rejoycing, and glorifying in God: besides, it was not a mixt dancing of men and women, but the women danced by themselves, as the manner was, Judg.21.21.

V. 21. Miriam answered] As some thinke, alternately, or by turnes with the men; or that the women repeated those words, Sing ye to the LORD, &c. as the close or burden of the song, as in the 136. Psalme. for his mercy endureth for ever, which cometh in at the end of every verse; and the burden of this song might be the words of the first verse, repeated by Miriam in this verse, or (being a Propheteesse) she might sing another song like unto it.

V. 22. of Shur] A part of the great wildernesse, having the particular name of Shur, the same is called Eth, Num.33.7. and Etham, and is said to be a desart tract of ground bordering on both parts of the Red Sea, in respect of which extent, Shur might be a part of narrower or shorter compasse.

Marah] Or, bitternesse. What name soever the place had before; for the bitternesse of it, now Moses gave it this name, answerable to the nature of it; that they might not be too much puffed up with their prevailing over the Egyptians, God mingleth his favours with afflictions; after their joyfull melodie of songs and instruments of musicke, they are exercised, first, with thirst; and then their thirst is tortured with bitter water.

V. 24. * murmured against Moses] Magistrates are not to be envied for the honour of their places; but to be pitied rather, for the burden of their cares, and feares, and dangers; and the many clamours, which multitudes of people are ready to raise against them, when any thing goeth not well with them.
* Chap.16.2. & 17.3.

V. 25. And he cried] See Annot. on Chap.17.4.

a tree] Which might have a naturall sweetnesse in it, as that wood which the Greeks call Glycyrize, (we Liquorish) that is, sweet-root, which might be sweet enough, to give a good relish to a particular draught; but that the casting of it into the maine water, it turned it wholly into a more pleasing temper, was not naturall, but miraculous, which God could have done without any externall signe; but for mans dulnesse, and to make a deeper impression upon his apprehension; he put forth his power, by sensible instruments (in themselves) altogether impotent to produce such great effects, in any hand but his owne.

he proved them] Deut.8.2. 16. He, that is, God, or Moses in Gods Name. See Annot. on Chap.16.vers.4.

a statute and ordinance] What this was is not set downe, but it appeares, that God gave them some Ordinances, before the solemne publication of his Law at Sinai; or the Statute summarily may be that in the next verse.

V. 26. keepe all his Statutes] Deut.28.1.

none of these diseases] Deut.7.15. Sincere and sound obedience is wholesome, both food and physicke, as well for the body, as the soule: for it either prevents diseases, or removes them; so godlinesse hath not onely the promise of this life, but the performance of good things in this life, besides the promise and assurance of that to come, 1 Tim.4.8. Pro.4.22. Psal. 103.3.

that healeth thee] As the Lord can heale the waters, and make them of bitter, to become sweet: so he can heale their persons, by keeping them from diseases, and recovering them out of them, and this, both for the disease of the soule, Psal. 41.4. and of the body, Matth.9.26.

V. 27. And they came] Num.33.9.

palme trees] Or, date trees. Which shoot up into a great height, and bring forth a sweet fruit: of this tree they have anciently taken Ensignes of victory, and to that the Spirit alludeth, Revel.7.9. These twelve Wells, and seventie Palme trees, some compare, first, to the twelve Patriarchs, and seventy persons that went into Egypt: and then to the twelve Apostles, and seventie disciples, but that is no interpretation, or instruction of the Text, but a meere allusion onely.

CHAP. XVI.

Vers.1. WIlderneſſe of] Not immediately from Elim, (the next place before mentioned) for here was the eighth station, and the seventh is omitted, because there is no memorable matter observed of it.

Sin] Sin is the common name of the whole space of the desart, from Elim to Mount Sinai; yet here it is particularly taken for that part of it, where the Israelites had their eighth mansion, or pitching of their Tents: and it was called Sin, (as some conceive) from a Citie of Egypt of that name, Ezek. 30. 16. The desart of Sin, Num. 20. 1. is not this desart, but another called sometimes Cades, towards which, this part of the wilder- nesse coasted.

fifteenth] In respect of the second moneth, it was the fifteenth day, but the thirtieth from their departure out of Egypt.

V. 2. the whole Congregation] Gen. 19. 4. Exod. 17. 23. The greater part are commonly the worse; and therefore the consent of a multitude is no good Argument of a good cause; we must goe by rule then, and not by example; or if by example, rather by the example of the best, then of the most; and then also our imitation must be with the limitation of the Apostle, 1 Cor. 11. 1.

murmured] Having now spent their provision of unleavened dough, which they brought out of Egypt. See Annot. on Exod. 15. 24.

V. 3. we had died] Famine is an affliction more bitter then death: for it is a dying by degrees, a lingering torment; in respect whereof, a speedy death from the hand of God, is desired as a favour: yet their impatience was above their pressure, and God did but make them fast, to give himselfe occasion to furnish them with a miraculous feast.

flesh pots] How carnally minded were these murmurers, who had rather be Pharaohs slaves, for victuals, then Gods freemen, notwithstanding his power as well to feed them, as to free them? and how falsly doe they commend their precedent, to aggravate their present condition? for it is not like, that there was either so much liberalitie exercised towards them, or so much libertie given unto them; as to have so full a diet as they spake of; or so much leasure to sit by the flesh pots, as they say.

to kill this whole] By famine, because their former store was much-what spent, and no supply appeared for the future: the charge is very heinous, and injurious; but it is usuall for men in anger, to make little scruple of the greatest slander.

V. 4. raine bread from * heaven] That is, a graine made by God immediately in the Ayre, whereof (being punned) they might make cakes, Num. 11. 8. their murmurings deserved to be punished in hell, yet God is pleased to satisfie them with food from heaven: so should we endevour to overcome others evill with good, Rom. 12. 20, 21.

* Psal. 78. 24, 25. & 105. 40.

a certaine rate] Heb. the portion of a day in his day: as their daily bread, that they might day by day, exercise their faith in his providence for their provision, as Matth. 6. 11.

* prove them] Chap. 15. vers. 25. Deut. 8. 2. That is, trie them, or make them known, not to himselfe, who knew them well enough before, (without any experimentall triall of them) but to themselves and others; whether afflictions, or favours, will worke them to obedience; and to discover their contumacie, if neither of these wayes prevaile with them.

* Chap. vers. 25. and Deut. 8. 2.

V. 5. twice so much] On the sixth day their allowance was doubled, that the seventh day (being the Sabbath) might be the better hallowed: by their ceasing from their labor of gathering, grinding, or dressing of it (so farre as the day before it might be prepared) leaving them a libertie, for more active and uninterrupted devotion on that day, ordained for rest; but not for rest onely, (for such a Sabbath the cattell might and did keepe) but for rest with reference to Religion, and for furtherance and fitting of the soule for sacred communion with God in the duties of devotion.

V. 6. at even] At even they had Quailes, and in the morning Manna, vers. 13. By this miraculous supply, it will be manifest (as Moses and Aaron might well say unto them) we have not deluded you, in drawing you out of Egypt; but that God hath delivered you, and will sustaine you without ordinary meanes, where ordinary faileth.

V. 7. * murmurings against the LORD] Vers. 2. They are said to murmure against the Lord, Moses and Aaron here, as they are said to beleeve the Lord and his servant Moses, Cha. 14. v31. because the Lord spake by Moses and Aaron, and they murmured against the Lord, by their murmurings against Moses and Aaron, because they guided the people, as God guided them by the pillar of a cloud and of fire, Exod. 13. 21, 22. So he that contemneth Gods Ministers, and the Magistrate is Gods Minister, Rom. 13. 4. (Moses as well as Aaron) contemneth God himselfe. * 1 Sam. 8. 7. Num. 16. 11.

V. 8. not against us, but] That is, not onely, or not so much against us, as against the Lord: or rather against the Lord, then against us; for the reason of the precedent Annotation: the like phrase and sense hath the Prophet, Hos. 6. 6.

Heareth your murmurings] Vers. 9. 12.

V. 9. before the LORD] That is, before the miraculous cloud, which was the signe of Gods especiall presence: for as yet the Tabernacle was not set up: before which time (notwithstanding) some conceive, there was a publique place of solemne worship: but when and where it was erected, or by what Authoritie, or by whom, and how it was employed, is not delivered in the Scripture.

V. 10. glory of the LORD] God put an extraordinary glory upon the cloud, which might affect the people with more feare and reverence of his presence. See Ezek. 20. 8. Matth. 17. 6. Rev. 1. 16. 17.

V. 11. spake unto Moses] Who haply made a nearer approach to the cloud, then Aaron and the people did.

V. 12. At even ye shall eate flesh] The Lord complaineth of their murmurings, and presently promises supply of food; but that was not as a reward of their wickednesse, but for ratification of his promise, and to convince them of infidelitie, and mistrust of him; as if he either could not, or would not make due provision for them.

and in the morning] The bread and the flesh came not both at one time; but the one at evening, the other in the morning; as they came, so they might be eaten severally; (as some conceive,) the Quailes without bread, and the bread without Quailes: for as the provision came in an extraordinarie manner, so it might have an extraordinary temper, or qualification, to be both wholesome and pleasant of it selfe, without any thing else, to relish or season it: or though they came in at severall parts of the day, they might be joyntly used in their daily refections.

V. 13. at even the * quailes] They flew in the day over the Sea, and by night came to their journeys end, (the Campe of the Israelites) being furthered in their flight by the wings of the wind, Psal. 78. 26, 27.

* Numb. 11. 31.

in the morning the dew] It came downe, as some conceive, like an Ayrie dew, and when it was come downe it was thickned and hardned into a small round graine, vers. 14. but Num. 11. vers. 9. it seemeth that the dew and Manna were two distinct things, both when they were together, (for when the dew fell the Manna fell upon it, Num. 11. 9.) and when they were parted, as in the 14. verse of this Chapter.

V. 14. the dew that lay] Num. 11. 7. Psal. 78. 24.

V. 15. it is Man, or Manna] Or, what is this? or it is a portion: the word Manna is one of those words which are received without change, in severall Languages; as Amen, Selah, Hallelujah: some thinke that the word Man, (according to the Egyptian Tongue) is put for Mah, in the Hebrew, signifying who, and sometimes what; others take the word to be a Chaldee or Arabick word, of the same signification: but at this time that dialect was not knowne to the Israelites: and some rather thinke it is a Syriack word: but the most proper derivation of the word is from the Hebrew, Mannah, or Minnah, which is to prepare; so it is a prepared portion, prepared by God, so that they might presently eate of it, though they might grinde, or punne, or bake, or boile it also. The Manna of the Apothecaries, is a Syriack dew; but this differeth from this Manna of the Israelites, many wayes, especially in that the Syriack Manna will not melt with the Sunne, nor putrefie in the night; nor is it hard, nor fit for food, but for physicke onely: in all which particulars the Hebrew Manna is contrary. N.

they wist not what it was] Though they called it a prepared portion, they were not yet acquainted with the proper nature and use of it.

This is the bread] Joh. 6. 31. 1 Cor. 10. 3.

V. 16. Omer] An Omer, vers. 36. is said to be the tenth part of an Ephah: and an Ephah is about ten pottles; or as some say, seven gallons and an halfe, and neare the measure of our English bushel: some conceive the Omer to containe three pints and an halfe, some a pottle; some rate it by the proportion of fourtie three hens egges, and a fifth part: which way soever it be taken, it is enough for the strongest man, and the hottest ordinarie stomach: Wherein Gods bounty may be observed.

V. 18. he that gathered much] As in reaping, so in gathering of Manna, some are quicker and doe more then others, in the same time: thence the gathering being laid on an heape, (whether greater for each Tribe, or lesser for severall families) the distribution was so made, that an Omer was allowed to each person; and though any had gathered more, he was to have no more then that measure for himselfe, and they that gathered lesse, had their part made even with the rest: to this the Apostle alludeth, 2 Cor. 8. 15. In this portion of Manna, it is probable the sucking children had no part, their mothers milke was their portion.

V. 18. every man * according] To the eating of his family: that is, every Master of a family according to the proportion of his number or household. * Exod. 12. 4.

V. 19.

Cap. 16. 23. The Sabbath now first mentioned; but not now first Comanded; In Egypt they had neglected the Sabbath; Since their coming thence, they had Marched on it; Now a Rule is given for its constant Observation. Lightfoot, p. 63. Compare this with Exod. 31. 13. Both places seem to be an affirmation of the Institution of the Sabbath. They must not so much as gather Bread, or work upon the Tabernacle on that day. Therefore the Sabbath was Instituted from the beginning. and the divine Authority thereof is, on both these occasions, solemnly Asserted. —

Jan. 6. 1721/22 &c.

The Hebdomadal Revolution was from the beginning; ergo The Sabbath was from the beginning; being the Diamond in this Ring.

V. 19. Let no man leave] What if one could not eate an Omer? Answer. As the meat was miraculous, so might be the capacitie, and concoction of mens stomachs: or if (as the people were of different statures, and tempers) that which was competent for greatest men and hottest stomachs, were too much for such as were lesse growne, and lesse hungrie; then the overplus (at night) might be cast into the fire, as the remainders of the Paschall Lambe, Exod. 12. 10. and of the Priests portion of flesh and bread, Exod. 29. 34.

V. 20. bred wormes and stanke] This came not by the nature of Manna, which would have kept without corruption, on that day, as well as on the Sabbath: but by a miraculous power, causing it to putrifie, for the conversion or punishment of the incredulous; and to shew that distrust in Gods providence, or contempt of his Ordinance; are as offensive unto God, as it can be to a man, to eate corrupted meat, stinking or crawling with wormes.

V. 21. is melted] That is, went away as a dew, that it might not remaine either to corrupt on the earth, or by treading on to come into contempt.

V. 22. twice so much] Which proportion should serve for the Sabbath, and the day before.

told Moses] Not knowing as yet, why the proportion (on the sixth day) was doubled; but Moses presently telleth them the reason, in the next verse.

V. 23. To morrow is the rest] The solemne sanctification of the Sabbath, ordained by God at the beginning of the world. See Annot. on Gen. Chap. 2. v. 3. but it is like it was intermitted by the bondage of the Israelites in Egypt.

bake that you will] As they gathered the portion for the Sabbath, the day before, so they dressed it the day before: that which might be done on the eve of the Sabbath, must not be left to be done on the Sabbath day; that there might be no occasion to hinder holy duties required for the sanctification thereof.

V. 24. it did not stinke] That which they laid up on the sixth day, to serve for the seventh, did not corrupt, because it was done according to Gods command: Obedience is a sweet thing, it sweetens the persons and actions of men to God, Gen. 8. 21. Exod. 29. 18. 2 Cor. 2. 15. and the creatures to man, Pro. 15. vers. 16.

V. 25. not find it] They did not find it because it fell not on the Sabbath day, for God would not have them to have occasion to goe out to labour for it on the Sabbath: that they might be the more free to sanctifie the whole day, by such religious duties, as he required of them.

let no man come out of his place] This was not an absolute prohibition of all locall motion on the Sabbath day, (though some Jews in after Ages took it so; and therefore in what place and state soever the Sabbath tooke them, would not (upon any occasion) move or change, or divert from it till the day was done) for they might goe out of their Tents, to the place of publique worship (whether Tabernacle, Temple, or Synagogue) on the Sabbath day: for it was to be sanctified with a solemne Assemblie, Levit. 23. 3. and the people were to come out of their private Tents, to make up that Assembly at the Tabernacle (which stood without the Campe, Exod. 33. 7.) this might be the Sabbath dayes journey, Act. 1. 12. the prohibition then is concerning servile workes, and such motions as gave impediment to the due observation of the religious rest on the Sabbath; and in particular it forbad going out onthe Sabbath to gather Manna.

V. 31. like Coriander seed] Not in colour, but in forme and figure, for the colour of it was like the colour of Bdelium, Num. 11. 7. which is white as Crystall; the colour of Bdelium, some say, somewhat inclineth to yellow, so is not Coriander seede, for that (though it be not black) is of a darker colour inclining to browne.

and the taste of it] Unbaked or dressed was like unto sweet wafers, but when it was drest, it tasted like fresh oyle, Num. 11. 8. yet it may be, this Manna in Exodus, might differ in tast from that in Numbers; but both serve to confute the Apocryphall conceit of the Authour of the Book of Wisdome, Chap. 16. vers. 20. 21. viz. that Manna was that in tast, which every man delighted in: for in both places the tast is specified, and restrained: and if it were that which every one liked, how came it to be so disliked as it was? Num. 11. 6.

V. 33. a pot] Heb. 9. 4. Here is an anticipation in story. See the next Note.

V. 34. before the Testimony] That is, the Arke of the Covenant, afterwards set up, when the Israelites encamped at Mount Sinai, but here mentioned for conclusion of the story concerning Manna: and it was called the Testimony, because therein were the Tables of the Law, Deut. 10. 5. which was the Testimony, or Witnesse of the Covenant betwixt God and his people, and would testifie against them, if they transgressed against him; and in the same Arke, Aarons rod and the Pot of Manna, kept testimony, or evidence of Gods power and favour: yet some conceive, they had some Tent, Tabernacle, or place of publique worship, before that curious piece of worke (whose description is afterwards exactly delivered) was erected.

V. 35. fourtie yeares] Which were at an end on the morrow after they came into the Land of Canaan, and had eaten off the old corne of the land, Josh. 5. 12. that is, of the provision remaining of the former yeares store: where we see God will not supply men with miraculous meanes, when ordinary means is afforded unto them. This Manna, Psal. 78. v. 25. is called in the Hebrew, the food, or bread of the mighty, usually translated, Angels food: not that Angels eate any food at all, unlesse when they take an humane shape, as Gen. 18. vers. 8. for they are spirituall substances, without bodies: but as some conceive, because it had a vertue to nourish above ordinary food, and so (if sinne hindered not) would draw out a mans life, rather to angelicall, then an humane duration, or living: or it might be called the food of Angels, because it came from the habitation of Angels; or because it was made by the ministery of Angels; or for that, if the Angels were to be nourished as men are, they need not any more dainty diet: so it is commended in the name of Angels, as Eloquence is, 1 Cor. 13. 1. where a tongue is attributed to them, not by way of position, but of supposition: but it is without doubt that our Saviour maketh it a type of himselfe, Joh. 6. 33. and so doth the Apostle, 1 Cor. 10. 3.

V. 36. Ephah] See Annot. on vers. 16. of this Chapter.

CHAP. XVII.

Vers. 1. Pitched in Rephidim] Moses nameth not every place where the people of Israel encamped; but onely those places where some notable thing was done, or happened to them.

V. 2. did chide with Moses] Num. 20. 4.

tempt the LORD] By requiring a miraculous evidence of his presence among them, vers. 7. as if he had said, Why distrust you God? Why looke ye not for succour of him, without murmuring against us? this is to tempt him to wrath, to your owne ruine.

V. 3. for water] Heb. at the waters.

murmured] See Annot. on Chap. 16. vers. 24.

V. 4. cried unto the LORD] When the people murmure for meat or drinke, Moses betakes him to the Lord: for the belly hath no eares, and a rude multitude are as like to be provoked, as pacified with words: but the godly may alwaies have recourse unto God, and find acceptance with him; and he that can still the noise of the waves of the Sea, can still the tumult of the people, Psal. 65. 7.

to stone me] How madly do the common people (sometimes) mutinie against their most godly Governours? there is great cause, to pitie and pray for those who are set over a multitude: since it is difficult to please them, and to displease them, dangerous: but no cause to thinke the worse of them, because their rage is rash and irreligious.

V. 5. take with thee the Elders] Not all the people, who by their murmuring against God, and their furie against Moses, were unworthy to see the miracle; but the Elders who were not so wicked, and who were sufficient witnesses of what was done.

wherewith thou smotest the river] Ch. 7. v. 20. The river Nilus by the hand of Aaron: some meane by the river, the Red Sea, because (as some hold) it is rather narrow like a river, then broad like the Ocean: and it is true he used the Rod, and it is like the selfe same Rod to both; but the Sea is very rarely called a river.

V. 6. Behold, I will] Num. 20. 9. Psal. 78. 15. 41. 1 Cor. 10. 4. Wisd. 11. 4.

water out] This miracle was wrought twice, the first time the first yeare of the peoples journeying; and the second many yeares afterwards, to wit, in or about the beginning of their fourtieth yeare, and thirtie ninth mansion, or station, Num. 20. Some thinke the miracle is the same, because in the twentieth of Numbers, and the fifth verse, the people (in their murmuring expostulations) say, Wherefore have you made us to come out of Egypt? now by that time, they conceive, that all that generation (which came out of Egypt) were destroyed, for their murmurings: so that such as were alive (except Aaron, Moses, and Caleb) could not say, they were brought out of Egypt: but if we looke upon Numbers 14. vers. 29. it will appeare that many more might be then alive, since the Commination is there made against those, (who at their first numbring) were twentie yeares old and upward: besides which, there were very many under twenty, of whom divers might be alive, at this latter miraculous issuing of water out of the Rock, and the sonnes of those that were dead, might in their murmurings speake as in their names and persons: this water issuing out of the Rock, is spiritually applied to Christ by the Apostle, 1 Cor. 10. 4. whereunto adde, Joh. 4. 13, 14.

V. 7. Massah] That is, temptation.

Meribah]

Meribah] That is, chiding, or strife; there was another Meribah. Or, chiding and murmuring, Num. 20. 13.

is the Lord among us] Impatience under pressures, provokes God by distrust of his promise, reproach of his providence, and deniall of his presence: all this is implied in this passionate, and discontented demand, which (in effect) is a renunciation of all Religion at once, even to the deniall of the Deitie of God; for if he be not every where present, he is no where; no God: if there be not a divine omnipresence, there is not a divine Essence. Their words may (notwithstanding) be mollified with a more gentle construction: and they may be said to question his presence but in relation to his providence, in providing for them, their extreme thirst felt the want of this, and that might occasion the questioning or doubting of that: but excesse of passion, keeps no bounds of moderation in better men, then most of this mixed and tumultuating multitude. See Jonah 4. 9.

V. 8. Amelek] (Deut. 25. 17. Gen. 26. 12.) That is, the Amalekites who were the posteritie of Esau, by Duke Amalek, the grand child of Esau, Gen. 36. 16. and the heires of his hatred against the Israelites, the off-spring of his brother Jacob; with remembrance and emulation (as it is like) for the old Quartell of the birth-right, and blessing gotten by Jacob from Esau.

V. 9. unto Joshua, Choose us out] Moses was as a Prince unto the people, and Joshua (as a Lord Generall) managed the Military matters.

rod of God in my] Chap. 4. 20.

V. 11. * held up his hand] With the Rod in it; the lifting up of the hand, is rather a naturall, then an instituted gesture of prayer; and though outward gestures of themselves be not acceptable to God, yet gestures of devotion (such as are warrantable in the Word) he both alloweth of, and will accept of, when they are moved, and quickened by the fervencie of affection within: and this lifting up of the hands toward heaven shewed, that to God there, he directed his prayer, and from thence hoped for help, to prevaile against the enemie. See Psal. 121. 1.

* Psal. 24. 2. Esa. 1. 15. James 5. 16. Psal. 56. 9.

let down his hand] When his devotion fainted, his hands were enfeebled: where we see, how dangerous a thing it is to faint in prayer, and how powerfull prayer is, against the power of warlike enemies.

V. 12. and Hur] Who is thought to be the brother in law of Aaron and Moses, by the marriage of their sister Miriam; or if not so, an associate with Aaron, for the government of the people, in the absence of Moses.

so his hands were steady] It is like he held up first one hand with the Rod in it; and that wearie, he used the other; and when both were weary, and his whole body also, with long standing; a stone was set under him, and his hands held up on each side, and so having that ease and assistance, his devotion might hold out with more vigour; and the people seeing the miraculous Rod, still held up on the top of the hill, might take more courage in the battell below.

V. 14. * Write this for a memoriall in a booke] In the Chronicles or Annals of the time, that the wickednesse of Amalek, in assaulting Gods people, may be remembred for revenge, untill they be all rooted out: here is the first mention of writing of a booke, there might for all that be writing of Bookes before Moses his time, as of Enochs prophecie mentioned, Judg. 16. which some cite as a written Volume, yet the Apostle might have that he citeth in Enochs name, out of some other later Booke which now is not extant; or by the spirit of revelation, which discovereth things past, as well as to come, as the history of the Creation sheweth.

* Exod. 34. 27.

the remembrance of Amalek] Deut. 25. 19. 1 Sam. 15. Not that it should never be remembred, that there was such a man, or not such a people, (as appeareth by the precedent Note) but that their houses, castles, and other memorials of their greatnesse, and honour, shall be demolished, razed and ruined: and they either not remembred at all, or not without detestation and disgrace; which is worse then a meere oblivion, or silent forgetfulnesse.

V. 15. Jehovah-Nissi] That is, the Lord is my Banner, as he declareth, by holding up his Rod, in his hand professing thereby that he and the Israelites, (under his colours, and in armes for his cause) expected, and obtained good successe by the favour and power of the Lord of hosts. See Psal. 105.

V. 16. Because the LORD hath sworne] Heb. the hand upon the throne. By which may be meant, either that Amalek presumptuously endevoured to make an assault upon the Throne of God, in setting upon his people to ruine them; in whose deliverance and defence, he had engaged the glory of his Throne, and the power of his Scepter in a perpetuall warre against Amalek: or that Moses had taken a solemn oath (as it were laying his hand upon Gods Throne) for asseveration and assurance, that he and the people will have an unreconciliable warre with the posteritie of Amalek.

CHAP. XVIII.

Vers. 1. Priest of Midian] See Annot. on Chap. 2. 16.

V. 2. sent her back] It seemeth by this place he sent her backe (for a time) to her father, and it is like (at that time) when she was so impatient of the circumcision of her sonne, Chap. 4. vers. 25. that she might not (through feare or griefe, for his dangerous opposition to Pharaoh) either withdraw him from his dutie, or (by her discontent and murmuring) make him lesse chearfull in performance thereof.

V. 8. come upon them] Heb. found them.

V. 10. Blessed be the Lord] By this it appeareth, that Jethro worshipped the true God, and therefore Moses might (the rather) marry his daughter; and it is like that (by Moses) he was further instructed in the true Religion; yet his next words, v. 11. note either some misunderstanding, or a weake apprehension of the true God.

V. 11. * Now I know] Jethro was a descendant from Abraham; who was his great grand-father, by Midian (who was one of Abrahams sonnes by Keturah, Gen. 25. 2.) from whom his Progenitors received the Religion of Abraham, though the further from the father of the faithfull, the more they degenerated from the faith, and a true worship of God: and so were (by this time) tainted with Idolatry: but after Moses his marriage with his daughter, and living with him fourtie yeares, especially, upon the report of the prodigies, and miracles (which God had wrought for the deliverance of his people by the ministerie of Moses) Jethro his knowledge of the true God was much increased: so that now he knew God more clearly, and fully then before: whereupon he forsooke his former false gods, and betook him to the service of the onely true God, wherein it seemeth his posteritie persevered, Jer. 35. who descended from him, 1 Chron. 2. 55. as did the Kenites, Jugd. 1. 16.

V. 24. so Moses hearkened] He did not thinke himselfe too good, to be advised by a man farre inferiour to himselfe, both in pietie, prudence, and acceptation with God: But why did not so wise a man as Moses, thinke of such a course himselfe? or why did not God himselfe give him that advice? Answer. It may be Moses expected Gods direction for some course in such affaires, and that he would have him take it from Jethro for the exercise of his humilitie, (as though he miraculously called

CHAP. XIX.

Vers.1. IN the third moneth] Or, in the third new Moon. (viz. in the moneth Sivan, Est. 8.9. containing part of May and part of June) This was the twelfth station or encamping place of the Israelites in the wildernesse, and here (to wit at Sinai) they stayed almost a whole yeare, and hither they came about the fortie fifth day from their coming forth of Egypt, and five dayes after (which was the fiftieth) was the giving of the Law, whereof one or two dayes of entercourse (betwixt God and Moses) might passe, and then he might receive from God the command of three dayes preparation, v. 11. before the receiving of the Law.

the same day] Not the third day, as it was the third moneth: but the same day that the moneth beginneth, that is, in the first day of the new Moone: for the Hebrewes accompt their moneths by the course of the Moon, and the first day of the new Moon, is the first day of their moneth.

V. 3. And Moses] Act. 7.38.

and the Lord called] That is, for the Lord had called.

house of Jacob and] God called Jacob Israel, therefore the house of Jacob, and the children of Israel signifie only Gods people. See Annot. on Gen.32.28.

V. 4. you have seene] Moses appealeth to their testimony, who were eye-witnesses of Gods wonders in Egypt: an argument of certaintie, and assurance of any truth, when they are called to testifie, who were present, and had the best evidence of sense that may be, which is that of the eyes, to confirme their acknowledgement of it.

* on Eagles wings] Esa.63.9. As the Eagle charily carryeth her young ones on her wings, Deut. 32.11. not in her tallons, for feare of hurting them, and lifting them up on high, above the reach of all that are adverse to her, or to her brood: so the Lord was choice and chary of his people, and carryed them safe above the power of their persecutors.

* Deut. 32.11,12. Esa.63.9.

V. 5. indeed] Heb. obeying ye obey. That is, carefully, constantly, and throughly, in thought, word and deed: for thoughts or promises of obedience, will not serve: for as God is good indeed, so his people must be obedient indeed.

keepe my Covenant] Deut. 29.9. A covenant is an agreement betwixt two at the least, and requireth mutuall conditions betwixt the Covenant-makers: In this Covenant, the parties are God, and his people; the condition (on Gods part) is to give them deliverance, and inheritance: the condition (on their part) is confidence in him, and obedience to him.

* peculiar treasure] Gods people being his peculiar treasure, we must hence learne to value persons, rather by their relations to God, then secular riches; and thinke them very silly, who despise and vilifie those (as meane and worthlesse) on whom God setteth the highest price: and being his peculiar treasure, they should not serve any, but in subordination to him.

* for all the earth is mine] Or, though all the earth be mine Or, The meaning may be thus: it is in my power, to make election of you for my peculiar people, for all the earth is mine: mine to choose, or refuse as pleaseth my selfe, and all that is on the earth, even the cattell on a thousand hils, Psal. 50.10. yea and all the world is Gods by his right of creation, and of perpetuall preservation. Yet his Church is his by peculiar appropriation to himselfe: as among this people he had his peculiar portion: For first, he had the Israelites for his Nation: secondly, the Levites for his service: thirdly, the first born of cleane creatures for sacrifice: fourthly, the sabbath for time: fifthly, the Tabernacle and Temple for place: sixthly, the tythes for revenue: so to alienate any of these, without his consent, is sacriledge.

an holy nation] For the nearer you are unto me, the holier you must be: for I will be sanctified in them that come nigh me, Levit.10.3. This is a doctrine for the Church at all times: for holinesse becometh Gods house for ever, Psal.93.5.

V. 13. up to the mount] That is, from their tents, they shall drawe neare to the bottome of the hill, vers. 17. but without the bound or border set about it, vers.12.

beast or man] The beast is threatened or doomed to danger, to keepe man at further distance from danger: so there is mercy in the commination, as it may be a premonition, though severitie in the execution, by stoning the offender neare hand, and by darting at such as were further off.

trumpet] In Hebrew the word is Jobel, so also, Levit. 25.11. but in Leviticus it signifieth the yeare which giveth libertie, because it was proclaimed with the sound of the Trumpet; this Trumpet might be sounded by an Angel, or such a sound made immediately in the ayre by God himself.

soundeth long] Some straines in this sound, were thick and fast, like a quick pulse; some more deliberately drawne out, wherewith the warning of the peoples approach was made.

V. 14. sanctified the people] The Lord indeed is he who sanctifieth the people; but Moses is here said to sanctifie them, by shewing them, and prescribing them, how to prepare themselves in a pure and holy manner to meet their God.

V. 15. come not at your wives] But give your selves to prayer, and abstinence, that you may at this time attend onely upon the Lord, 1 Cor.7.5. The use of the marriage bed was never noted among the legall pollutions: and indeed (being instituted in the state of innocencie, Gen. 2. and honourable in all, and the bed undefiled, Heb.13.4.) this forbearance was not prescribed, as from a thing profane, or uncleane in it selfe: but that the mind might be more fully, and sincerely set upon the holy covenant, to be made with God; and hence the godly that they may be alwaies estranged from things unlawfull, must sometimes abstaine from things lawfull. The Papists who apply this, to be the Priests disavowing of marriage, make an inference as absurd, as if because the people must sometimes at solemne Fasts abstaine from meats, therefore the Clergie must eat no meat at all.

V. 16. thunders] Deut.4.11. 1 Sam.12.18.

V. 18. * trembled exceedingly] God used these fearefull signes to shew that his Law should be had in very great reverence, and his Majestie the more feared and adored: and if the beginning; or preface before the giving of the Law, were so terrible: how terrible will be end of the Law breaking?

* Heb. 12.21. Psal.68.7,8.

V. 19. * by a voyce] He gave answer to Moses by plaine words, and so loud, that the people might heare God speaking unto him. See vers.20. See Deut.5.24.

* Heb.12.19. 1 King.19.12,13.

V. 20. came downe] He came downe from heaven before, and shewed his glory over Mount Sinai, but now he draweth lower and nearer the people, viz. to the top of the hill, where he speaketh with Moses placed a little below it.

V. 21. to gaze] 1 Sam. 6.19. Curious prying into the secrets of God, is dangerous to man.

V. 22. let the Priests] The Priesthood of Aaron, was not yet ordained, therefore the Priests here meant, are such as (under the Law of nature) executed the Priesthood, that is, the first borne, or fathers of Families.

lest the LORD] Levit.10.2,3. A profane Priest is so farre from being a gracious mediatour, betwixt God and the people, (as he should be) that he is more like to derive wrath upon himselfe, then procure favour for them.

V. 24.

V. 24. not the Priests and people] Neither dignitie, nor multitude, can allow men to passe the bounds that Gods word prescribeth.

CHAP. XX.

Vers. 1. ALL these words] The Commandements are to be received (all of them) with an equall regard, as having all of them the same Authour: who if he be contemned in any one, is obeyed in none of them, Jam. 2.10. There is so much written of the Ten Commandements in Catechismes, and other Treatises (of common use) that it will not be needfull to make any long exposition upon them.

V. 2. I am the Lord] Deut.5.6. Psal.81.10.

Land of Egypt] Hos. 13. 4.

bondage] Heb. servants.

V. 3. None other gods] There be many gods by name, 1 Cor. 8. 5. though not by nature: Gal. 4. 8. for flatterers make great men gods, as the people did Herod, Act. 12. 22. and simple people (upon any extraordinary evidence of divine power) bestow a deitie on him they see, in stead of him they see not: as the barbarous people did upon Paul, Acts 28. 6. and the superstitious account them gods which are made with hands, Act. 19.28. and some take upon them the office of God as Antichrist, 2 Thess. 2. 4. and to some their belly is their god, Phil. 3.19. yea and the devill himselfe, 2 Cor.4.4. And whatsoever it is, that men love, or feare, or delight in, or trust in, or would doe more for, (as voluptuaries for their pleasures, 2 Tim. 3.4.) or but as much, as for the true God, is a false god unto them: but indeed there is but one true God, 1 Cor.8.6. Eph.4.6. even that God, who (with a mightie hand) had brought the Israelites out of the bondage of Egypt: for, for others, (though they be so called) indeed they are no gods, 2 King.19.18.

V. 3. before me] Deut. 5. 7. Or, with me. or, besides me. But the words before me, imply that Idolatrie cannot be so secretly committed, but that it is before his face, Psal 44.20,21. And Idolatrie against God, being as Adultery against an husband, Jam.4.4. what an impudence is it to commit it in his presence?

V. 4. any graven image] Especially of God, Deut.4. 16.

likenesse] Num. 33.52. Deut.4.18.

heaven above] Whether of Angels, Sunne, Moone, or Starres, or fowles of heaven; or of men, or beasts on earth; or of fishes in the sea: this enumeration is made so full, to seclude all kinds of idolatrous representations of God by the creatures: for, that there should be no Image made of him, is plaine (by the expresse caution) given by the Lord himselfe: Take heed to your selves: for ye saw no manner of image, in the day that the Lord spake unto you in Horeb, Deut.4 15.

V. 5. Thou shalt not bow] Nor serve, nor sacrifice, nor doe any service to them. By this kind of gesture, all kind of lawfull service and worship of the true God is commanded in the Scripture. And in the same phrase, all honouring of Idols, 1 King. 19.18. 2 King.17.35. and all religious worship of the creatures, whether absolutely, or relatively; mediately, or ultimately, is condemned.

* jealous God] God and his people, are as a man and his wife, Hos.2. 16. 19. and if they commit adultery against him by idolatrie, (for that is spirituall adulterie, as is said in the Note on the third vers) he will be inraged at the matter, as a jealous husband at his lascivious wife, and injurious Rivall, Pro. 6. 34, 35. and this should make his people chastly precise, and scrupulous against all occasions and appearances of Idolatry, by which his jealousie may be provoked.

* Nah.1.2. Isa.48.11.

* upon the children] This doth not contradict that of the Prophet Ezekiel, The sonne shall not die for the iniquitie of his father, Ezek.18.17. nor of the Apostle, Every one shall beare his own burden, Gal.5.6. The meaning of which words are, that no sonne shall be damned for the sinne of his father; nor one man for the sinne of another, unlesse by commission, or approbation, or some other way, he make it his own. But for temporall punishments, there is none but (by occasion of others sins) may have their portion in them: the sinne of David occasioned the slaughter of seventie thousand, 2 Sam.24.15. yet they (though in his conceit innocent sheepe, ver. 17.) were guilty of sinne, and worthy of death as well as he; and yet from him might come the occasion of their death; as one may catch the Plague of another, and yet die not by his disease from whom he tooke the infection, but his owne. But this is spoken chiefly of those who continue in the sinne of their Parents: and though divers die, (in their minoritie) God foreseeth how bad they would be if they lived, Psal.58.3. And sometimes the Parents derive vengeance on their heads by imprecations upon them, as the wicked Jews wished Christs blood, (that is, the guilt of his bloud) might be on themselves, and on their children, Mat.27.25. And sometimes the good children of wicked Parents, are temporally punished, 1 King. chap.14. vers.12,13. because in them, and by such means, are their Parents punished; for that in them they would live and flourish, when themselves are dead.

* Isa.65.69. & chap. 14.vers.20,21. 1 King. 21. 29. Job 5. 4: & chap.21.19. Num.4.33. 1 Sam. 15: 3. Matth. 23: 34, 35. 2 Sam.12.11. & chap. 21.5.14.

third and fourth generation] Jer. 2.9. Exod. 34. 7. The third and fourth generation are named, because (many times) the Parents live to see their owne iniquitie practised and punished in their childrens children.

hate me] Deut.7.10. The loving of Idols, is the hating of God, James 4.4.

V. 6. to thousands] Deut 7.9. As the visiting is of persons to the third and fourth generation, so the mercy is extended or reacheth to thousand generations: so aboundant is God in his benificence; which ought to move men to obey him of love, like sonnes; rather then of feare, like slaves.

V. 7. Thou shalt not take] Levit.29.12. Deut 5. 11. Matth. 5. 33.

in vaine] Needlesly, or without just and weightie occasions; or rashly, without heed and reverence; or falsly, without truth.

not hold him guiltlesse] In which words is a Meiosis, or phrase of diminution, (wherein more is meant, then is expressed, as Mic.6.11.) the meaning is, though men make it no great fault, it may be none at all, to take Gods name in vaine, nor take any course to punish that sinne, God will not hold him guiltlesse that doth so; but will deal with him as with a guilty person, as guilty of an high contempt of his glory, which he will not suffer to passe unpunished. See Levit. 20. vers. 4, 5. 1 Sam. 5.6. 9. & chap. 6.19.

V. 8. remember] Both for the time past, the institution of the Sabbath in memoriall of the creation of the world; and for the time to come, remember so to forecast thine affaires, that none impediment may interpose, to hinder thy holy observation of the Sabbath.

V. 9. sixe dayes] Chap.23.12. Ezek.20.12. Luk.13.14.

V. 10. not doe any worke] Of thy ordinary calling, nor of thy carnall recreations: that thou mayest have time sufficient, and thine affection free both for publike, and private exercise: and mayest be in good temper, for the practise of pietie, and charitie appertaining to the dutie of the day. Ezek.46.1.

servant] Deut. 29. 11. God hath written a release of the servants secular labour, that on that day he might be permitted to be his masters fellow-servant unto God, in the solemne observation of the Sabbath.

V. 11. blessed] The Sabbath is a day of blessing to man, as well as of glory to God; if he make a conscience to keepe it as he ought to doe: and there will be no losse unto him, though (for a whole yeare) he should forbeare his work, and profit, in obedience to God, Levit.25.20.21.

the Sabbath day] It is not said the seventh day from the Creation; but the Sabbath day, that is, the day of religious rest: for though God rested on that day, his legall Ordinance here doth not precisely prescribe the observation of that seventh day, but one day in seven: as although the first administration of the Sacrament of the last Supper, were in unleavened bread; yet the institution of it, is for the use of bread, not of that which is unleavened.

V. 12. Honour thy father, &c.] Deut. 27. 16. Levit. 19. 3. Under these two termes, all Governours, Naturall, Civill, and Ecclesiastical, are comprehended, with the mutuall duties betwixt Superiours, Inferiours, and equals, belonging to them, according to their severall relations.

that thy dayes may be long in the land] Deut.5.16. That is, to the Jews the land of Canaan; to others, the land of their possession; which implieth a promise of long life, to such as are obedient to their Governors: and it may be an encouragement to inferiours, (especially to children) to behave themselves submissively to their Superiours, in that an obedient child shall by Gods promise (laid hold on by the parents prayers) prolong his dayes: therefore are parents requests for their children called usually by the name of blessings.

V. 13. Thou shalt not kill] Matth.5.21. Thou shalt neither by thine hand effect, nor by thy tongue procure, nor in thine heart desire, the death of thy brother: but thou shalt love, and preserve his life, using all good meanes, conducing to that purpose.

V. 14. not commit adulterie] Ezek. 22.11. 1 Thes. 4. 3, 4. Whereby all unchast thoughts, affections, words, and behaviour is forbidden: and all puritie in heart, word, and deed required.

V. 15. not steale] 1 Thes. 4. 16. Ephes. 4. 28. Neither by fraud, nor force wrong any one in his estate: but save his goods and doe him good with thine owne, if he have need.

V. 16. beare false witnesse] Deut.19.16. Thou shalt neither by speech nor silence, neither by raising or receiving a false report, be injurious to the credit or good name of thy Neighbour: but shalt carefully preserve it, and cleare it from reproach,

CHAP. XXI.

Vers. 1. Judgements] That is, judiciall Ordinances made for the just and peaceable government of the people, as the Ceremoniall serve chiefly for the ordering of their behaviour (especially) in duties of devotion towards God.

V. 2. If thou buy an Hebrew] When he selleth himselfe, or his sonne, or daughter, in case of necessitie, Levit.22.39. Or, when for Felonie, or Theft he is sold, because he is not able to make restitution, Exod.22.3. 2 King.4.v.1. Matth.18.25. And the same course, it is like, was to be taken with captives in War.

in the seventh] After his sixe yeares service, the seventh yeare was, as some take it, a standard certaine and unvaried, and the same to all; to wit, the Sabbaticall yeare, Levit.23.2. Deut.15.1,2. So that whensoever a man began his service, it was at an end the seventh yeare, though he had served but one yeare before the seventh came about; nay, if but a moneth, or a day before, it seemeth sufficient; for in the seventh yeare releases were to be made of debts, and a little service would serve, when what remained was to be remitted: But then the law of sixe yeares service, vers. 2. of this Chapter, and Deut. 15.12. is to little purpose, unlesse the service beginne so soone as the seventh yeare expired. To avoyd this inconvenience, some say, and (it is probable) that the sixe yeares service was not broken off but by the yeare of Jubile, Levit.25.v.40.

V. 3. By himselfe] Heb. with his body. Alone, or in his single person, and not with a wife and children.

then his wife] As he came, so he shall goe, whether in a single or maried estate; and it is like he had the priviledge of a father to goe forth with his children, he brought with him, as well as of an husband, to go forth with his wife.

V. 4. Masters] Till her time of servitude was expired, (which might be the seventh yeare) or the fiftieth: this was not to be understood of an heathen woman: for of such they were to buy their bond-servants, Levit.25.44. and not of the Hebrews, vers.42.

the Masters] The wife shall remaine servant to her master, that gave her to her husband for a wife: and the birth following the belly, the children (borne in her service) shall remain (as the masters) with the mother. But how could this separation of man and wife be allowed, since their cohabitation is so expresly prescribed, Gen.2.24? Answer: first, the husband was not compelled to part with his wife, for he might have continued his service and society with her if he would: secondly, this parting might be but for a season, and by mutuall consent; and wherein it may seeme to swerve from the ordinary Rule, there might be a dispensation, or toleration of it for the hardnesse of mens hearts, Matth.19.8.

V. 6. Judges] For perpetuall servitude was a matter of too great moment, not to be made up by a private bargain; therefore the Judge, (the publique Magistrate) must heare the case, betwixt the master and the servant; and be sure, that the servant freely consented to such a servitude.

doore] That is, the doore where the Judges sate, as some conceive; and then (when they have heard the case, and given sentence in it) the servant shall be brought to the doore of his masters house; and that doore is here rather meant; for the word is deleth, which is used of any particular doore; not the word Schalhur, which signifieth the gate of a Citie, where Judges sate, to heare causes, and to doe justice.

bore his eare] Either as a punishment for contempt of libertie, (which he might have had, but would not) or to be a token of his strict, and punctuall obedience to his masters commands, not to goe over the threshold, or out of the doore, without his leave; at least not against his will: or to note his ready obedience to heare and observe what his master commands; so some apply Psal. 40.6. where the opening of the eare, (according to the Hebrew) may be rendered by boring of the eare: and so obedience is better then sacrifice, 1 Sam. 15.22.

for ever] That is, to the yeare of Jubile, which is every fiftieth yeare. See Annot. on Exod. 12.14. And at that time all Hebrew servants were to be set free, notwithstanding any ingagement of servitude made before, Levit.25.40. Of the signification of the Originall word here rendered [for ever] see Annot. on Exod. 12.14.

V. 7. sell] As constrained: by povertie, or with intent to prefer her from a servant, to be a wife upon the promise of him, that taketh her; so to accept of her, either as a principall, or secondary wife: as (when polygamie was in practice) the first wife was usually chiefe, the other of an inferiour condition.

as the men-servants] That is, a woman shall not be dismissed with so little care as a man, who is strong and better able to preserve himselfe from injuries, and harmes: nor shall an Hebrew servant be put off, as a stranger borne of another Nation; especially of the Canaanites, (who were to be slaves to the Israelites:) and by this she must either be continued in the house, and entertained like a daughter, or a secondary wife; and if he part with her, after he hath taken her to his bed, he shall procure an husband for her, by offering a meete price, and convenient apparell to make her the more acceptable, and more gracefull in his sight.

V. 8. If she please not] Heb. if she be evill in the eyes of.

to a strange nation] Because this was a generall rule for all Hebrew servants; and the case here mentioned, reqnireth more then ordinary charitie. By a strange nation, some understand, one of another Tribe, though an Hebrew, &c.

V. 9. after the manner] That is, he shall give her dowrie convenient for a virgine of her condition.

V. 10. him] That is, for his sonne, or himselfe: for it may be taken of either.

V. 11. duty of marriage] By which somewhat is meant besides food and raiment, (for they are expressed) it may be that which is comprehended under due benevolence, 1 Cor.7.3.

these three] If he omit or refuse to performe any of the three forementioned particulars, vers. 10. then he shall let her goe free, without paying any price for her redemption.

V. 12. he that smiteth] Levit.24.17.

V. 13. lie not in waite] But by imprudence, or negligence, or any casuall mishap, hath killed another.

God deliver] Though a man be killed at unawares, yet it is Gods providence it should be so: and he may be said to deliver him into his hand that slew him; because the Lord (who hath the disposall of all mens lives, and before whom all are guilty of death) without mans purpose (by his divine disposall) Brought it to passe.

whither he shall flee] That is, to the cities of refuge in the land of Canaan, Deut.19.5. Or to the altar, whether in the desert, or any other place.

V. 14. * from mine Altar] The holinesse of the place ought not to defend the murderer, he shall finde no mercy at mine Altar, who without mercy sacrificed his brother to his deadly malice in a presumptuous manner.

* Deut.19.vers.11.13.19. 1 King.2.28.31.

V. 15. smiteth his father] The blow (though it be not deadly to the receiver) shall be deadly to the giver; for he shall die for it: because his deeper obligation to all affection, and offices of reverence and benevolence to his parents, aggravates the guilt of any undutifull or unkinde miscarriage toward them.

V. 16. stealeth a man] (Whether free, or a servant to another) shall be put to death: because usually they that did so, meant to sell them for slaves: and so they did great injurie to those whose in right they were; and brought great misery upon the partie sold; especially if he were free and ingenuous before; and this law is principally meant of stealing such a one.

found in his hand] If not yet sold, or used like a slave, it seemeth hard, that the man-stealer should die, therefore they conceive, that if after the fact it could be proved, that he had beene in the stealers hand, he should die for it; yet the phrase and manner of expression imports another sense, which is, that if the stollen man be not yet sold, and the theft apparent (as taken in the stealers hand) he shall die for it.

V. 17. * curseth] Or, revileth. Though the wicked words of the tongue breake neither skinne nor bone, they bewray such a malignitie of the heart, (when they proceed from children to their parents) that God doometh such transgressors to death, and that worthily; for they requite evill for good, returning imprecations for prayers, cursing for blessing; and this with breach of the strongest bonds of naturall obedience and affection, and the grossest degree of ungratitude that can be.

V. 20. puniſhed] Heb. avenged. As a murderer putting him to death.

V. 21. not be puniſhed] i. By the Civill Magiſtrate. Though (before God) he may be a murderer, yet becauſe of the vile and contemptible condition of ſervants; eſpecially of ſuch nations, as by Gods decree were to be deſtroyed, Deut. 7. 2. the maſter was exempt for giving an account of his act; at leaſt from receiving of puniſhment, for any miſcariage in that cauſe.

for he is his money] Becauſe he gave his money for him; as David calleth the water of the well of Bethlehem, their bloud, who adventured the ſhedding of their bloud, and the loſſe of their lives to fetch it for him, 2 Sam. 23. 17. And ſo the poore mans mill-ſtone is called his life; becauſe he gets his living by it, Deut. 24. 6.

V. 22. miſchiefe follow] That is, either by death, or maime of the mother, or childe.

V. 24. * eye for eye, &c.] The execution of this law belonged not to private perſons, but onely to the Magiſtrate; which yet was not alwaies to be obſerved with rigour; but theſe particulars are ſet downe to ſhew, that the puniſhment muſt be limited to a due proportion: as that an eye ſhould not be required, in recompence of wrong in a tooth: or any member of more, for that which is of leſſer uſe or worth: and this muſt be taken not by an Arithmeticall, but by a Geometricall correſpondence; for if he that had but one eye, had put out one of the eyes of him that had two, if the recompence were numericall one for one, it were not equall; for then one man might loſe a ſenſe, the other but an eye, which is but the organ of ſeeing, without which he might ſee while the other remaineth; therefore the retaliation more agreeable to juſtice (in ſuch a caſe) was not an eye for an eye, but two for one, that is, blindneſſe for blindneſſe.

* Levit. 24. 20. Deut. 19. 21. Matth. 5. 38.

V. 28. the oxe] By this, if a beaſt muſt be puniſhed, (and it is a law touching other beaſts, as well as for an oxe) much more ſhould the murderer: ſince, though the law of the beaſt is not given to the beaſts, but to man; for to man it is ſaid, Thou ſhalt not kill: and if he doe, it muſt be done unto himſelfe, as he did to another, Gen. 9. 6. yet the oxe was to die, for admonition to man, to have murder in the more deteſtation; and to make every one to looke better to their beaſts, that they become not the cauſes of death unto man.

V. 29. ſhall be put to death] For a man not to hinder evill when he ought, and might, is to become guilty, as if himſelfe had done the fact.

V. 30. * ſumme of money] Taxed upon him by the next of kinne to the party ſlaine, or by the judge, verſ. 22.

* Num. 35. 31.

V. 32. thirty ſhekels of ſilver] Our Saviours taking upon him the forme of a ſervant, Phil. 2. 7. and his ſelling (by Judas) for thirty pieces of ſilver, is conceived, by ſome both ancient and latter Divines, to be prefigured by this law.

V. 33. doe not cover it] This is to be underſtood of pits in or neere ſome way of ordinary paſſage, for in the field, pits were to be kept open for cattell to drink at any time.

V. 34. make it good] By this law not onely commiſſion of evill is puniſhable, but the omiſſion of care to prevent evill.

V. 36. Oxe for oxe] Not an oxe for a calfe, or a ſheepe; but according to the proportion of the damage, and ſo the former verſe is to be expounded.

CHAP. XXII.

Verſ. 1. Sheepe] The Hebrew word is Seh, which comprehendeth leſſer ſort of cattle, as ſheepe, and goats, by way of diſtinction from the greater ſort; Oxen, Camels, &c. For though ſome kinde of cattle be onely mentioned, others are meant.

kill it or ſell it] This aggravates the theft. See Annotat. on verſe 4.

five oxen for one] Five with that which was ſtolne, and but four ſheep. becauſe the labour of the ox was to be valued, which while he was kept away, was a loſſe to the owner, perhaps greater then the price of the ſheep. See Prov. 14. 4. And the ſame proportion might be held betwixt other great and little cattle, as betwixt the horſe and the goate.

V. 3. If the Sunne be riſen] If he be ſtricken to death in the darke, the want of ſufficient light, to judge who or what he was, and the want of meanes to bring him to juſt puniſhment, (for he could not be purſued in the darke) was ſome excuſe: but if the Sunne were up, to give ſufficient light, both to judge of the partie, and to bring him to judgement, then to kill him was murder; unleſſe in the juſt and neceſſary defence of the wronged party.

V. 4. double] Before it was fivefold for an ox, foure for a ſheep; here but double: the reaſon is, becauſe if it be found preſently with the thiefe, the propertie not altered, the owner ſuſtained leſſe damage and trouble, and the thiefe ſhewed himſelfe not to be ſo artificiall in his falſhood, nor ſo ſettled in it, as he that carrieth the ſtoln goods away, and either killeth, or ſelleth, or keepeth them a longer time from him that hath right unto them: but it is ſaid, Pro. 6. 31. That a thiefe if he be found he ſhall reſtore ſeven fold: this may be meant of a thiefe breaking into an houſe in the night, who if he were taken in the act, and ſmitten to death, no bloud was to be ſhed for him, ver. 2. and having forfeited his life, he might pay the dearer for his ranſome, then the rate of ordinary reſtitution; and ſo he might pay not onely ſevenfold, but all the ſubſtance of his houſe, as it is in the ſame 31. verſe: or there might be a larger reſtitution in Solomons time, becauſe there was more plenty, 1 King. 10. 27. Or by ſevenfold, may be meant manifold, as Gen. 4. 15. Pſal. 79. 12. Iſa. 30. 26.

V. 7. double] For money or ſtuffe; where the reſtitution for cattle was foure or five fold; the reaſon whereof may be, becauſe it was eaſier for the poſſeſſor to keepe what was ſo in his cuſtodie, then his cattle in the field; for there he could not keepe them under locke and key, as he might doe the goods and money in his houſe.

V. 8. to ſee whether] The Judge muſt (by his prudence) indevour the diſcovery of the deceit, if there be any; and the clearing of the accuſed party, if he be innocent: and to this purpoſe, he muſt uſe the ordinary meanes, whereby the truth may appeare; as receiving of evidence from witneſſes, and the aſſurance of that evidence, by a ratification upon oath. See verſ. 11.

he have put his hand] That is, whether he have dealt falſly, either by denying he had it; or affirming he reſtored it; or pretending it was ſtolne from him; or by any other way of deceit, to defraud the owner of his right.

V. 9. he ſhall pay] That is, the partie who was put in truſt, if he be found in fault, as fraudulently fayling the truſt repoſed in him.

V. 11. an oath of the Lord] So called, 1 King. 2. 43. becauſe when men take it, they take the Lord to be witneſſe of the ſinceritie of their hearts, and veritie of their lippes; and implicitly invoke his vengeance upon themſelves, if they ſweare falſly.

no man ſeeing it] But the party himſelfe, there being no other proofe, or witneſſe; in ſuch a caſe an oath muſt be the end of ſtrife: as Heb. 6. 16.

put his hand] See Annot. on verſ. 8.

V. 12. if it be ſtollen] Gen. 31. 39.

he ſhall make reſtitution] If by any fault of his it were taken away.

V. 15. with it] As ſometimes the beaſt and his owner might be hired together: and if he were preſent, the hirer might have ſo much leſſe care, as he would have the more of the ſafetie of his owne.

it came for his hire] He that hired it ſhall be free, by paying for the hire.

V. 16. If a man entice] Deut. 22. 28.

V. 17. If her father refuſe] For the children ſhould not marry without the conſent of parents.

according to the dowrie of virgins] That is, according to her dowrie as a virgine, whom he hath defiled; to wit, according to her ſtate, and condition: that is, more to the daughter of a rich man, then of a poore. There ſeemes to be one ſet rate for all ſorts, Deut. 22. 29. But the caſe is not alike; for that in Deut. is when the maid was forced, or luſtfully abuſed, without intimation of marriage, to induce unto the act: and then the father was for his part of the wrong, in the abuſe of his daughter, to have of the offender fiftie ſhekels of ſilver, and he was to have her for his wife; and he might not put her away all the dayes of his life. But in this caſe (in Exod.) it is otherwiſe: for if her father refuſed to give her in marriage, he that abuſed her, was to pay ſo much, as might ſerve to marry her to another of a ſutable condition: and if he were not able to make good that proportion, he was to be ſold as in caſe of theft, verſ. 3. of this Chap.

V. 18. not ſuffer a witch] Witchcraft is here forbidden, Deut. 18. 10. and that upon paine of death, 1 Sam. 28. 9. By Witch is here meant any one that hath any dealings with the devil, by any compact or confederacie whatſoever: the word in the Originall, is of the Feminine Gender, becauſe the Devils craft moſt prevailes with womens weakeneſſe, in that kinde: but there are men Witches as well as women, Levit. 20. 27. and their ſinne as hainous, and their puniſhment as grievous: and it likewiſe ſignifieth one that changeth any thing before the ſight, (as Jugglers doe) but if it be by slight of hand, without diabolicall art; it is not here condemned. Some have thought Witches should not die, unlesse they had taken away the life of mankinde; but they are mistaken, both for the act of the Witch, and for the guilt: for first, the act of killing any one in such a way, as is called witchcraft, is not the act of the Witch, but of the Devill; and sometimes it is rather his act to faine it, then his act to do it; for such is his craft that where God hath given him a commission to doe hurt; or by his great knowledge (being a spirit and of long experience) he doth foresee in naturall causes (though concealed from others) some imminent evill, he stirreth up malice betwixt the Witch, and the party, and offereth himselfe (for his, or her satisfaction) to bring the evill upon him, wherein the Witch hath no part, but a wicked will; and in that the devil is more wicked then the Witch, and would doe what evill he can, though she would entreat him to the contrary: But why then must the Witch be put to death? Answ. Because of the league and confederacie with the devil, which is high treason against God; because he is Gods chiefest enemie, and therefore though no hurt insue this contract at all, the Witch deserves present, and certaine death for the contract it selfe.

CHAP. XXIII.

Vers.1. Not raise] Nor receive, as the Originall will also beare: the meaning is, thou shalt not indure the hearing of a false report; especially, if it be offered, to make thee either a false witnesse, or a corrupt judge: for as the receiver of stolne goods is partner with the the thiefe; so the willing hearer of a false report, is partner with the slanderer; and if a good name be better then great riches, Prov. 22.1. a slanderous tongue is worse then pilfering fingers.

V. 2. a multitude] The greater number is usually the worse, and though (in respect of men) it may be more safe for many, then for a few to offend: yet in respect of God there is more danger to an offending multitude then to a few; for he will rather beare with a few then many wicked ones, Gen. 6. 12. & Chap. 19.4. *or the mighty & powerfull. in the time appointed] That is, the time when (in Egypt and in the Land of Chanaan) the Barley harveſt afforded full and ripe eares, for an oblation to the Lord.

emptie] Coming to the Tabernacle, or Temple, (at the Feaſt of Eaſter, Pentecoſt, and of Tabernacles) none muſt come without an oblation; partly for ſacrifice to God, and partly for proviſion for the Levites: and thus it was a dutie laid downe by Law, yet for the particular oblation it was a free-will offering, Deut. 16. 10. wherein the offerer was free to make the proportion of his gift.

V. 16. the feaſt of harveſt] Which is Pentecoſt, or Whitſuntide; kept in remembrance, that the Law was given fiftie dayes after they departed from Egypt; but called the feaſt of harveſt, becauſe then was the Wheat harveſt, and the ripening of other fruits.

At this time was the feaſt of Tabernacles, Levit. 23. 34. keeping in minde the memoriall of their dwelling fourtie yeares under Boothes, Tents, or Tabernacles, in the wilderneſſe: the ſolemnitie of this feaſt held ſeven dayes, during which time, they were to reſt in Boothes. CHAP. XXIIII.

Verſ. 1. Come up] God had called Moſes up to him before, upon his coming down, he was to propoſe the words of his Covenant unto the people, and to take their Anſwer, and then (with Aaron, Nadab and Abihu) to come up to God againe.

ſeventie of the Elders] Some choice men of thoſe, whom Moſes choſe and made Rulers over thouſands, hundreds, fifties, and tennes, Exod. 18. verſ. 25. who might be the ſame, who afterward were endowed with Moſes his ſpirit to be aſſiſtants to him in government of the people, and they were to come to the Tabernacle, and there to be as witneſſes of what paſſed betwixt God and Moſes: the number was proportionable to the ſervice, and as ſome conceive, it was the rather choſen, with reference to the 70. ſouls which came with Jacob into Egypt.

V. 2. Moſes alone] He alone was to goe up to the top of the Mount, the reſt might aſcend a good way; but not ſo high as he, yet where were apparent ſignes of Gods preſence, verſ. 10. 17.

See Annot. on Numb. 3. 12.

V. 6. halfe of] The blood was divided betwixt the Altar, and the people, to note the mutuall ſtipulation of God to his people, and his people to him, who were atoned and made one by the blood of Chriſt.

See Heb. 9. 19.

V. 8. The blood] He ſprinkled with reference to Chriſt, which ſignified that the Covenant broken could not be ſatisfied without blood-ſhedding. See Heb. 9. 22. anciently Covenants were made with blood, to betoken conſtancie in the Covenants even to the ſhedding of blood and loſſe of life.

It seemeth by vers. 13, 14. that Joshua went up with Moses into the Mount; but how high, how long he staid there, whether he heard what God said to Moses, or whether he fasted fortie dayes as Moses did, Exod. 34. 28. Heb. 3. 6.

V. 9. after the patterne] God shewed Moses a modell, after which he was to make the Tabernacle. See 1 Chron. 28. 19.

V. 10. two cubits] That is, of the common cubits, being in length from the bending of the arme to the end of the longest finger: some measure the cubite to a foote, and an halfe, of our measure: and so the Arke was in length, a yard and nine inches; and three quarters of a yard in height and breadth.

V. 11. crowne of gold] Crowns are commonly round, but this was a square erected border according to the figure of the Arke. See Annot. on Chap. 30. 3.

V. 16. *in the Arke the Testimony] Wherein the two Tables of stone written with the finger of God, Exod. 31. 18. (called the Testimony, because by them was testified Gods will concerning their dutie) were placed, and nothing else for a long time, 1 King. 8. 9. 2 Chron. 5. 10. So that the golden Pot of Manna, & Aarons Rod that budded, were not then placed in the Arke, but elsewhere in the Tabernacle; but afterwards it seemes they were put with the Tables into the Arke, Heb. 9. 4. *2 King. 11. 12. 1 Cor. 2. 1.

V. 17. Of the Mercy-seate] This was the covering of the Arke, made of pure gold; and not distinct from the Arke, but placed close unto it; and God sitting as it were, upon the wings of the Cherubims, (which made the representation of a seat) on the Arke below it. This narrow seate was a figure of Christ: the Word signifieth a Covering, the meaning is, mans iniquitie being covered by Christs merits, God is mercifull unto him, Psal. 32. 1. and therefore it is called the Propitiatorie, and Christ a propitiation for mans sinnes, 1 Joh. 2. 2. because of the favour and mercy communicated to men, through his merit: and this was placed betwixt the Tables of the Law, and the Majestie of God appearing betweene the Cherubims, vers. 22. to note that Christ stands betweene God and the rigour of the Law, in our stead, and for our sakes, that God might looke upon the Law through him, as fulfilled by him for our sakes and on our behalfe.

V. 18. Cherubims] The word Cherub, as some Hebrews conceeive, is compounded of Che, that is, as it were, & Rabin, that is, a boy or a young man. Cherubims were figures of appearing angels, or glorious representations in humane shape, chiefly in the resemblance of beautifull youth, made with wings, to signifie the expedition which is used by Angels, in obeying the will of God; whereby the Papists would defend their Idolatrie against the second Commandement: they might as well take upon them, to roote out whole Nations by warre, against the sixth Commandement, and spoyle men of their goods, against the eighth; because God gave an especiall warrant to his people of Israel for them both against a generall rule; and when there is a generall rule, as that prohibition concerning Images, the exception must have especiall warrant by the same Authoritie that made the rule; but it is absurd from a speciall exception from a generall rule, to set up a generall contradiction to the rule, as the Papists do in this particular.

V. 30. Shew-bread] Heb. the bread of faces; that is, the bread shewed, presented, or set in view as before the face: the manner how, is set down, Levit. 24.5. they were in number twelve, according to the number of the Tribes of Israel; in measure each conteyned two homers; enough to serve two men for one day; and they were placed on a Table not in the holy of holies (where onely the High-priest came) but in the holy place; the place of the Priests, not of the people; and sixe and sixe in a row, were these cakes or loaves placed, answering each other. This bread was (every Sabbath) set new on the Table, and when the new came, the Priest did eate the old in the holy place. The setting of these loaves was a memoriall of Gods beneficence to his people, preparing (for them) a Table in the wildernesse, Psal. 23. 5. and to admonish them, that in taking their repast, they should have an especiall eye to God, in whose presence that provision was set, to whom they were to give thankes, and eate to his glory, 1 Cor. 10.31.

CHAP. XXVI.

Of the Sanctuarie or Tabernacle, a brief description.

THE Sanctuary (at this time the Tabernacle) was a moveable house, made of boards of Shittim wood, whereof see vers. 15. and hung about with curtaines, wrought with divers colours in a curious manner, and covered over with three coverings, one upon another, to keepe it from harme. It was thirty cubits long, ten cubits high, ten broad: the uppermost part whereof was made slope, and somewhat bending, each way (as the roofe of an house) to shoot off raine, that it might not rest upon it. It was divided into two parts, the one called the holy of holies at the upper end of it, taking up ten cubits, wherein what was placed, see Chap. 25. vers. 16. and in it what was laid up, see Chap. 25. vers. 16. Into this holy of holies onely the High-priest came, and that but once a yeare, Levit. 16. The other part was called the holy place, containing in it twenty cubits, Jer. 5. In this was the Altar of Incense, on which incense was burned: on the right side thereof was the Candlestick, mentioned vers. 31. and on the left the Table of shew-bread, whereof vers. 35. These two parts were divided by a vaile, and from the latter part of the Tabernacle, for fiftie cubits in length, there was a Court walled with boards, but without a covering above; in part of this Court, which was next unto the Tabernacle, was the Altar of the burnt-offering, and the brasen Sea, or Laver for the washings; and so far might none approach but the Priests, whose place was divided from the peoples by a partition wall of boards, which was three cubits high, and no more; that the people might see the Priest at his sacrifice; and into this part neither Gentiles, nor any uncleane person must approach. Josephus Antiq. l. 3. c. 5.

of cunning worke] Heb. the worke of a cunning workman, or embroiderer. Silke or linen being the ground, threads of blew purple, and scarlet, were curiously wrought upon it; to make it both various and glorious.

V. 3. five curtaines] So joyned as to make up one great one; the other five so joyned, as to make up another great one, and these two after by loops, buckles, or hooks, so coupled together, as to make the Tabernacle as one entire worke or structure.

V. 7. to be a covering] Not onely above, but round about; so they were as a case for the Tabernacle (which was fine and precious) to preserve it both above, and on all sides, from the injurie of weather; and it was made of Goats haire, woven into cloth: and there was a third covering dyed red, vers. 14. and a fourth above that, next unto the weather (of Badgers skins) which are stronger, and coursер then they: these curtaines were joyned together as the other, vers. 3.

V. 9. double the sixt curtaine] That is, five on the one side and five on the other, and the sixt should hang over the entrance of the Tabernacle, the curtaines being eleven in all, which number is made up of five and sixe, the sixt of the six and the eleventh of the whole was to be doubled, and so to hang on both sides the doore of the Tabernacle. These were larger then the former curtains of cunning worke, for they were thirtie cubits long, vers. 8. the other but twentie eight, vers. 2. because they were for a covering and safegard of the finer curtains.

V. 12. remnant] For these curtaines were two cubits longer then the curtaines of the Tabernacle, so that they were sider by a cubite on both sides, that they might the better cover the better covering which was under them, and save it from wearing or defiling.

V. 15. Shittim wood] Whereof there was store in the desart of Arabia.

V. 24. coupled] Like twins exactly answering one another: this is to be understood of the two corner boards in the backe part of the Tabernacle, whereof he made mention in the precedent verse, with farre more strength and firmnesse were to be double, above and below, and so closed together that the ring put in the corner might serve for the barres which met on both sides.

V. 26. barres] These barres covered with gold; and put into golden rings were to strengthen and hold the boards together that they might be firme and stedfast.

V. 28. midst of the boards] Not through the thicknesse of them, but through the rings, which were fastened to the middle of the outside, the middle in respect of the space above and below the barres.

V. 30. according to the fashion] Chap. 25.9. 40. Act. 7. 44. Heb. 8.5. See Annot. on Chap. 25. v. 9.

with cherubims] The portraiture of them wrought or woven into the worke. See the Note on Chap. 25.18.

V. 32. hookes] Some read heads of the pillars.

V. 33. most holy] Whereinto the high Priest only entred once a yeare; here was the Arke placed, and hence God gave Answers, therefore it was sometimes called the Oracle, in the 1 King. 6. 19. it was a Type of heaven, the throne of God; for here God manifested his especiall presence, and the high Priest entered into it by especiall prerogative; as Christ our high Priest into heaven; and but once a yeare, the better to preserve the reverence of the place; for which cause it was separated by a vaile from the rest of the Tabernacle.

V. 35. the Table without] That is, the Table of the shew-bread or twelve cakes or loaves (representing the twelve Tribes) shall be set on the outside of the vaile, not in the inside; (where the Arke was placed) that is, it must be set not in the most holy place, but in the holy place divided from it by a vaile.

V. 36. an hanging] This hanging or vaile was a partition betwixt the holy place of the Priests, and the place where the people were, it being not close to the ground, because at the entrance it was to let in some light.

CHAP. XXVII.

Vers. 1. A Ltar] This Altar was not the Altar which served for oblation of Incense morning and evening, but the Altar of burnt offerings, made three cubits high, and five cubits square, placed not in the Tabernacle, but in the Court, (which sometimes is comprehended in the name of the Tabernacle) to the midst of its height (which had some Shittim wood about it) it was covered with brasse, but within was, as some conceive, filled up half way with earth or rough unhewen stones; or which is more probable by the description in the text, it was hollow unto the midst where the brasen grate was, upon which the daily sacrifice of a Lambe morning and evening was offered, Exod. 29.39. and other oblations of severall kinds and occasions. It was first consecrated with holy oyle, Numb. 7. 1. and then other things set upon it were hallowed by it, Matth. 23. 19. This Altar differed from such as were made of earth, upon extraordinary occasions, Exod. 20.24. for this was to continue for the constant service of the Tabernacle, which must not be so base and mean as the other, because the Tabernacle was glorious.

V. 2. hornes] Made like hornes sharpe and crooked, partly for ornament, partly for use; and the use, as some conceive was, chiefly to bind the sacrifice to the Altar, Psal. 118. 27. which was to be offered upon the Altar.

with brasse] The woodden part of the Altar, was to be overlaid or covered with brasse to preserve it from fire, and yet it was strange, that the brasse very much heated did not burne the wood; and there was, as some conceive, an especiall providence in it, that it did not so, God as he sent it down upon the Altar overruling the operation of it at his pleasure, yet the Altar being so broad, the fire might be kept in a grate at due distance from the wood.

V. 3. fire pans] Which served to carry fire from the Altar of the burnt-offering, to kindle the incense, which burnt in chasing dishes upon the Altar.

V. 4. the grate] Made like net-worke, but with small holes like a sieve, was fastned by rings to the Altar, and let down by chaines to the midst of it; under it was the wood and fire put, over it the sacrifice was laid to be burned.

foure brasen rings] The Altar had rings and barres by it selfe, and so might this grate, that they might be removed and carried severally by themselves.

V. 8. as it was shewed] Hebr. as he shewed. Exod. 25 40.

V. 9. the Court of the Tabernacle] Which compassed the Tabernacle on all sides: which was an uneven square; for it was an hundred cubits, or fiftie yards long; and fiftie cubits, or twentie five yards broad; and five cubits, or two yards and an halfe high, which had for walles hangings of fine linen, borne up by pillars of brasse. In this Court, and about the midst from the Tabernacle to the outside of it, was placed the Altar, in the open ayre, that the flame and fume of the sacrifice might have free vent without hurt or offence. Of this Court fiftie cubits from the East end toward the Sanctuary, were for the sacrifices which were tendered by the people, in the part neerest to the entrance, and offered by the Priests towards the furthest part of the fiftie cubits, and about ten cubits distant from the Tabernacle: for so many cubits was it off the Altar on the East side, and so many from the walles, or hangings of the Court, on the West side, and twentie cubits on the North, and as many on the South side. In this spacious Court there was receipt for all Professours of Religion, whether sincere or hypocriticall, and so it was a type of the Church visible in the world.

V. 10. fillets] They were certaine hoopes or circles of silver plate, compassing the upper part of the pillar to beautifie it, and it may be also for use to fasten the hangings in some places to the pillars.

V. 13. East side East-ward] Or, full East.

fiftie cubits] Meaning curtaines of fiftie cubits.

V. 16. gate of the Court] Which was on the East side.

V. 18. fiftie] Hebr. fiftie by fiftie.

V. 19. pinnes] Or, stakes. Wherewith the hangings were fastened to the ground, that they might not be waved to and fro with the wind.

V. 20. oyle olive beaten] Levit. 24. 2. Such as cometh from the Olive, when it is first pressed, and beaten, and rather beaten with a pestell, or mallet, then crushed with the heavy weight of a presse, or mill-stones: because it should run cleare and free from dregs.

to burne] Hebr. to ascend up.

alwayes] Chap. 30. 8. Levit. 24. 3. See Annot. on Chap. 30. 8.

V. 21. of the Testimony] That is, of the Law (in the Arke) the Testimony of Gods will, and of his Covenant with his people.

from evening to morning] For all night and not by day were the lamps to burne: and though it be said alwayes, vers. 20. that is to be understood of the night season, as if it had been said every night: for they could not burne untill they were lighted, and they were not lighted untill evening, Chap. 30. 8. and from thence they were to burne untill the morning, Levit. 24. 3. This might be a Type or figure of that spirituall light which dispelleth the darkenesse and blindnesse of the minde, 2 Cor. 4. 6. 2 Pet. 1. 19.

CHAP. XXVIII.

Vers. 2. *Holy * garments*] Garments to be worn in holy ministrations in reference to Christ our high Priest, who is holy and undefiled, Heb. 7. 26. and his Robe, which Christians must put on, to make them accepted with his Father, is a most holy Robe.

* Isa. 52. 1. Revel. 19. 8.

for glory and for beauty] Whereby his Office may be known to be glorious, and excellent, as representing him, who was and is the brightnesse of the Divine glory, Heb. 1. 3. Joh. 1. 14. And the glory of his people Israel, Luk. 2. 32. The other Priests had garments also for beauty, vers. 40. but they were nothing so glorious, and beautifull as Aarons were: for though as Priests, they were Types of Christ, and so their calling was honourable, and their garments gracefull; yet the high Priest was therein higher, and therefore in his raiment much more glorious then they; and by this Livery of their Lord, and Master, they were appropriate to his service.

V. 3. wise in heart] Skilfull Artificers.

whom I have filled with the spirit of] The Israelites had now more need to be inspired by God with extraordinary knowledge, because (as some observe) they were employed in Egypt rather as drudges, then trained up in an ingenuous education in Arts and Sciences: and yet had they been brought up in the Study of them, (wherein there is no proficiency without his favourable Assistance; for all knowledge is from him, even that of the Husbandman, Isa. 28. 26.) to such extraordinary curious worke, there was need of more then ordinary direction, or instruction.

to consecrate him] That is, to separate him from the rest of the people, to Gods especiall service.

V. 4. an Ephod *] There were two sorts of Ephods, the one made of fine and pure linen, which was common to all Priests, * 1 Sam. 2. 18. & 22. 18. and to other persons upon extraordinary occasions: as David when he danced before the Arke, 2 Sam. 6. 14. The other was made of divers materials and colours, peculiar to the high Priest, which was a short coat without sleeves put upon his other garments, (to keep them close together) which use is intimated in the Hebrew word) these garments were all of them in number eight, reckoned in divers orders here, and Levit. 8. 7, 8.

V. 8. curious girdle] Or, embroidered.

V. 9. Onyx stones] White stones, like the white of a mans naile, whence it hath its name. Anselm. Boetius Hist. gem. l. 2. c. 90. Some of them are of divers colours, with white speckles in them.

V. 10. the other sixe] Of these two sixes it is like Levi was none: for the Levites presented themselves to God, in their daily ministration: and there were twelve besides Levi, because for one Joseph, were reckoned two, Manasseh and Ephraim.

according to their birth] Gen. 43. 33. As they were in age, so they should be graven in order; the eldest first, and the youngest last. V. 21.

V. 11. with the worke] Wisd. 18. 24.

in ouches of gold] That is, hollow places, in which the stones were set fast, as a Diamond in a Ring.

V. 12. shall beare their names] This was a resemblance of Christ our High-priest, representing his Church to God his Father.

upon his two shoulders] The Priest was to beare the people on his shoulders, by a patient bearing of their weakenesse, and waywardnesse, as well as to weare them on his breast, vers. 15. by pastorall affection.

for a memoriall] Not to the people, to remember the goodnesse of the Patriarchs, who were many of them more noted for great faults, then for vertues; much lesse may we thinke them to be as an helpe of memory to God; who neither can be ignorant, nor forgetfull of any thing: but chiefly this memoriall was to Aaron, to remember the people by intercession for them: and withall to signifie that their memory is presented to God, and preserved with God. See Annot. on Gen. 9. 15.

V. 15. * the breast-plate of judgement] It was so called, because the High-priest could not give sentence in judgement without that on his breast; or because when he consulted with God in cases of doubt for a divine judgement, in the case he was to weare it on his breast. See Annot. on vers. 30.

* Vers. 29. Levit. 8. 8. Num. 27. 21.

V. 17. a Sardius] Or, Rubie. Exod. 39. 10. A bloud-coloured precious Stone, and therefore called also a Rubie; but Sardius from Sardis, a Citie of Lydia, in Asia, where such stones are most plentifull; or where there are the rarest or best of that kinde: whereof see Plin. lib. 27. c. 8.

Topaz] A stone of a golden colour, as some say; others say, it is greene, Plin. lib. 37. chap. 8. and others partly of a grey, or skye-colour: but it seemeth to be a stone of high price; especially the Topaz of Ethiopia, Job 28. 19. the operations of it are many, and rare: as Fr. Rueus sets them downe in his second Booke of Gems, and Chap. 9.

Carbuncle] A precious stone shining like lightening; or a glowing coale of fire: the word Baraketh, is derived of the word Barecke to lighten, Plin. lib. 37. c. 7. col. 253. Rueus ibidem chap. 18. p. 249. And Anselm: Boetius de Gem. l. 2. c. 8.

V. 18. an Emeraud] A stone of most perfect greene colour, most pleasant to the eye-sight, and profitable both to preserve it, and to recover it when it is weakened; as Pliny saith, lib. 37. c. 5. See Rueus lib. 2. of Gem. c. 4. p. 237.

a Saphire] Is a precious stone of a light coloured purple, or of a blewish colour, like to that which is sometimes seene in the cleare skie. Ibid. ch. 2. p. 233.

a Diamond] Is a stone bright and white, like Crystall; but in a more excellent degree, very hard, Ezek. 3. 9. Zach. 7. 12. Jer.

Jer. 17. 1. though in those places the Hebrew word be not Jahalom, as here, but Shamir) so hard, that by blowes the hammer and anvile receive more hurt from it, then it from them, Plin.nat. hist.lib.37.c.10.

V. 19. a Ligure] Or, Lyncure. A kinde of Amber, Plin. 37.ch.3. a gumme hardened into a stone; which stone (in some places) is very precious and of excellent qualitie and operation: Rueus lib.2.c.18.26. Some call it a Turkois, or Torcois, a stone of a pale greene, inclining to sky colour, and of strange effects, Ibid.ch.18.p.256. Some take it for a Hyacinthus, or Jacinth, which is of a Purple or Violet colour.

an Agate] Or, Achate. A blackish stone, most usually with white streakes upon it; and many of them have much variety of colours, Rueus lib.2.c.16.p.255. Which though in some places it be common, is said to be of excellent vertue against many diseases: of this see Plin.lib.37.c.10.

an Amethyst] A precious stone, of a pale Violet colour, Rueus lib.2.ch.11.p.244. Of this see Plin.lib.37.ch.9.

V. 20. Berill] Is a shining precious stone, whereof there are divers sorts; but the best is of a sea-water greene colour, Plin. lib.37.c.5.

the Onyx stone] Of that there be many sorts; some say sixe, some tenne, some fourteene, some eighteene; it is hard to say which of them is here meant. Plin.lib. 37. c. 6. See Annot. on vers. 9.

Jasper] Of which also there are many sorts of severall colours, Rueus lib.2. of Gem. ch.1.p.231. See also Plin. lib. 37. v.8.9. Many of these stones are mentioned, Revel.21.19,20. and of them many make mystical significations; which wanting ground of Scripture, the building upon them, may prove no better then presumptuous fallacies. For though many things of the Ceremoniall Law served to shadow out heavenly things, Heb 8.5. yet it is not safe to presume, (especially in the explanation of mysteries) above that which is written; nor to be too punctuall in scruing up sensible things to spirituall conformities; as some both ancient and latter Authours have beene, especially of the Popish partie; nor too bold in bringing downe Religious matters to naturall allusions, as Josephus doth, Antiq. lib.3.c.8.

NB.

V. 21. according to the twelve] It is probable from hence, and from vers.10. that their names were set upon the twelve stones, according to the order of their births; and so Reuben had his name set upon the Sardius; Simeon upon the Topaz: and so Benjamin the youngest, upon the Jasper named last. See the second Annot. on vers.10.

V. 29. beare the names] Aaron shall not enter into the holy place, in his owne name only; but in the name of all the Tribes of Israel. See Annot. on vers.12.

breast-plate of judgement] See Annot. on vers.15.

upon his heart] This signified how neere the Elect lay to the heart of their High-priest Christ Jesus: that is, how heartily he loved them, who parted with his owne hearts bloud for their sakes: and it is an admonition of the Pastors affectionate respect to his flock; as we see in the Apostles example, 1 Thes. 2. 8.

for memoriall] See Annot.on vers.12.

V. 30. * Urim and Thummim] signifie light and perfection, according to their best derivation in the Hebrew Tongue; and they are put in the Plurall number, lights, and perfections; to note the plenty, as well as the excellencie of divine graces. This was meant, as some conceive, of the splendor and perfection of the precious stones, of the breast-plate: which were of most cleare and perfect beautie: but that is not all; for besides that, these words were ingraven, or written upon some of the precious materials of the High-priests ornaments; neither made, nor placed by the inspired Artificers, but (as some learned Writers rather thinke, by the comparison of Exod.39.10. Levit. 8.8.) made by God himselfe, and put by Moses into the Breast-plate. It was called the Breast-plate of judgement, vers. 15. and the judgement of Urim, Num. 27. 21. because the High-priest put it on when he consulted with God, and received from him cleare and determinate answers in cases of doubt; which were sometimes made by audible voyce; sometimes by secret inspiration; which when he had told it to the people, the stones and letters in the Breast-plate (as is probably conceived, for there is nothing certaine of it in the Scripture) might have an extraordinary brightnesse, appearing on them for assurance that the Priest had spoken with the Lord, and received resolution from him; as by the shining of Moses his face when he came from God, with the Tables of the Testimony in his hand, Exod.34.29,30. it was manifest that he had from God, what he brought unto the people: and whereas David being to consult with the Lord, called for the Ephod, 1 Sam.23.9. the reason was, for that the Breast-plate was fastened to the Ephod, vers.28. and the Ephod to the Breast-plate: so that if he had one, he had both, Exod. 39. 21. This oraculous consultation with the Breast-plate, that is, by the use of the Breast-plate, continued among the Jewes untill about, or somewhat above one hundred yeares before Christ, as some affirme; but it is generally, and more probably thought, that it lasted no longer then to the Captivitie of Babylon: (for which see Ezra 2.63.) and after that time we finde not, that the Jews had any use of that kinde of revelation.

* Leyit.8.8. Ezr.2.63. Neh.7.65.

V. 32. Habergeon] A coate of male, which is a defensive armour, made of Iron rings linked one within another, after the manner of net-worke.

V. 34. A golden Bell and a Pomegranate] Which were flat and embroidered, and so mixed with the Bels, that betweene two Pomegranates, there was placed one Bell; and between two Bels, one Pomegranate. Joseph. Antiq.l.3.c.8. The Bell was for sound; and the Priests lips were to preserve knowledge, for the instruction of others, Mal.2.7 and he must not be mute, Esa.65. 10. if he be, it is upon his utmost perill, vers.33. And it must be a golden Bell; for that it is the most precious & purest of metals; such must his doctrine be, Prov. 3.15. The Pomegranates being a sweet and savourie fruite, signifie his life, and conversation, the fruit of his profession, of good relish and acceptation to good people. Some referre the Bell to Christs Prophetick Office; and the Pomegranate, to the sweet savour of the Sacrifice of Christs Priestly Office; or of his Personall perfections: or the graces he giveth to his Church. See Cant. 4. 3. Chap.6,7,8.

V. 36. a plate of pure gold] As some Hebrew Doctors say, it was in breadth the measure of two fingers, in length, reaching from one eare to another: Josephus thinkes it was not a plaine plate, but a crowne of gold. Antiq.l.3.c.8. Which joyned to the Mitre, might (as some conceive) signifie, that Christ of whom the High-priest was a Type, was a true Melchisedec, that is, both a King and a Priest.

HOLINESSE TO THE LORD*] Holinesse appertaineth to the Lord, and he is most holy, and nothing unholy may appeare before him: therefore all, both Priests and people, must see to their service of him, that it be pure and holy, and such as may be pleasing to him, who is most perfectly holy, and who is honoured by the blessed Angels with multiplied acclamations of holinesse, Esa.6.3.

* Chap.39.30. Psal.93.5. 1 Cor.1.30. Heb.7.26.

V. 38. beare the iniquitie] Their offering could not be so perfect, but some fault would be therein; which sinne the High-priest, as a Type of Christ, did beare, and pacified God by making an atonement for them.

* Levit.10.17. Num.18.1. Esa.64.6.

shall hallow] That is, consecrate, or give up to God in their holy oblations.

alwaies] That is, as oft as he exerciseth his Priestly Office before the Lord.

accepted before the Lord] The reall holinesse of the Priest (answerable to the Ceremoniall; worne on his forehead) made him accepted for himselfe, and the people, when he ministred before the Lord.

V. 39. the coate] A white gowne sleeved, and reaching gown-like unto the feet, which made loose, was kept close to his body with a girdle, Levit. 8.7.

Mitre] A linen Mitre, a cover of the head; in what fashion it was made, is uncertaine; yet conceived, it was fine linen wreathed up, as the now Turkish Turbants are.

of needle-worke] What a girdle this was, see Exod.39.29.

for glory and for] See Annot. on vers.2.

V. 40. coats] Of linen; for woollen wearing was forbidden to the Priests, Ezek.44.17. These were Ephods, such as are mentioned, 1 Sam.22.18. which differed from that of the High-priests, for that was embroidered, as these were not.

V. 41. and consecrate them] Heb. fill their hands. That is, consecrate them, by giving them, or putting into their hands things to offer; and thereby admit them to their office, Exodus 29.9.

V. 42. to cover their nakednesse] Heb. flesh of their nakednesse. Exod.20.26.

from the loynes unto] Inclusively: that is, including and covering both the loynes and thighes, lest if he should stumble, and fall, his nakednesse should be seene to his shame.

V. 43. that they beare not] For not hiding their nakednesse.

CHAP. XXIX.

Vers. 1. Without blemish] Neither lame nor blind, or defective, or monstrous in any member, nor sicke, nor sore. See Mal. 1. 13,14.

V. 2. Unleavened bread] See Annot. on Exod. 12.8. Here be three sorts of unleavened bread, two of them are particularly named cakes and wafers; and by unleavened bread, in the first place is meant another sort, to wit, loafe-bread, mentioned v. 23. called there in the Hebrew Chicar Lehem, that is, a masse of bread or great bread. By bread, Christ might be signified, nified, as Joh. 6. 55. and by it his sinceritie, humilitie, and sweetnesse, as it was unleavened.

V. 3. bring them] Present them in the first part of the Court, to be brought neerer to the Tabernacle, to be offered afterward.

in the basket] Which words in the basket, must be circled with a Parenthesis, because the Bullock, and the two Rammes could not be carryed in a basket. See Annot. on Gen. 21. 14.

V. 4. wash them] There is none, either person or calling, free from pollution; yet those who are designed to serve God in especiall manner, must endeavour after especiall puritie: and when they fall short of what they should, and would be, they must looke up to Christ, and admire and adore his perfect holinesse, which needs no washing, and whose blood cleanseth the soule, as water the body washed in it.

water] Taken out of the brasen laver, placed between the Tabernacle and the Altar, Exod. 30. 18.

V. 5. garments] The linen breeches are not here mentioned, for those were privately put on, before these were to be put on openly at the doore of the Tabernacle.

V. 6. mitre] Levit. 8. 9. See Annot. on Chap. 28. 39.

the holy crowne] That was the golden plate forementioned, Chap. 28. 36. See Annot. on it, and Levit. 8. 9.

V. 7. * oyle] It heales, softens, and sweetens: and therefore betokens the graces of the holy Ghost, 1 Joh. 2. 27. which give soundnesse to the soule, softnesse to the heart, sweetnesse to the life and conversation, most agreeable to Priestly function. Of the making of this Holy oyntment, see Chap. 30. 23. This powring out of this anoynting oyle, seemes to be peculiar to the high Priest: for we finde not the like prescription, or application to any of the inferiour Priests; their hands were anoynted, but not their heads, as the high Priests was; nor was this done in succession, to the inferiour Priests; (though at first both Aaron and his sonnes were consecrated with oyntment; Exod. 30. 30. Chap. 40. 14. Levit. 8. 30.) but only to the high Priests, who were admitted into their Office with this precious oyntment.

* Chap. 30. 25.

V. 9. put the bonets] Hebr. binde.

a perpetuall statute] To be successively continued in the time of Aaron, untill Christ come in the flesh to effect what they foreshewed.

consecrate] Heb. fill the hand of. See Annot. on Chap. 28. 41.

V. 10. put their hands upon the head] As confessing their own guilt, and putting it upon the head of the sacrifice, offered first for their own sinnes, that they being accepted, might be the fitter to offer Sacrifices for the sinnes of the people: and it seemes the partie that brought a sacrifice, (though one of the people) was to lay his hand upon the head of his own oblation, Levit. 4. vers. 24. 29. which was done with confession of sinnes, Levit. 16. 21. and an implicite acknowledgement (at least) of the desert of death in themselves, though it were turned upon the beast: and thus was the sinne laid upon the sacrifice, as a Type of Christ, Esa. 56. 6, 7. And it was the manner, (when sinne was charged upon a guiltie person) that the Witnesses laid their hands upon him, as well to testifie their accusation of him, as to stone him, Deut. 17. 7. Now as the beast had no inherent guilt in him, but an imputed guilt laid upon him; so was it with Christ, Esa. 53. 6. Who was therefore typified, or figured by a Lambe without blemish, 1 Pet. 1. 19. 2 Cor. 5. 21. Joh. 1. 29.

V. 11. thou shalt kill] That is, Moses, (for he was of the Tribe of Levi) being Aarons brother) and though we read not of any solemne or particular consecration of him to the Priesthood, yet he is numbred among the Priests, Psal. 99. 6. and (as a Priest) did both consecrate Aaron for the high Priesthood, and offer sacrifice: yet the word Cohen, which here and elsewhere, most usually signifieth a Priest, or Sacrificer, is sometimes taken for a Prince or principall Officer. But though Moses exercised the Priests Office, in this consecration; yet when there was a standing Priesthood set up, it is like he left that service (if not altogether, yet for the most part) to those who were of the Priestly function.

V. 12. hornes] Of the brasen Altar, which was placed at the doore of the Tabernacle, Levit. 4. 7. not on the hornes of the golden Altar of sweet Incense, there also named; because hereby the brasen Altar was to be consecrated for future sacrifices: and because the Priests not yet competently consecrated they were as the people, at whose sin-offering the blood was sprinkled upon the hornes of the brasen Altar, Levit. 4. 25.

* Levit. 4. 7. & 18. 30. & Chap. 9. 9.

V. 13. the caule] It seemeth by the Anatomy, and the Jewish Writers to be the Midriffe.

* the fat that covereth] The burning of the fat, and inward parts, (which in all sacrifices were burned unto God) was to minde them of the mortification of their covered corruptions, signified by the fat, Psal. 119. 70. and by the charge of wickednesse on their inward parts, Psal. 5. 9. And it might also signifie the serving of God with the best, which is expresst by fatnesse, as Gen. 4. 4. Chap. 45. 18. Neh. 8. 10.

V. 14. * without the host] Every sacrifice for sinne was not thus offered, but that which was for the sinne of the high Priest, and of many together with him; nor wholly burnt flesh, and skin, and doing as here is expressed. It was so to be offered, to signifie an abomination due to the guilt of sinne, which fell upon our Saviour for us, when (with extreame detestation) he was led to execution, without the gate, that by taking the peoples unholinesse upon himselfe, he might convey his holinesse upon them, Heb. 13. 12.

* Levit. 4. 11.

V. 16. sprinkle it] Which represented the sprinkling of Christs blood, and mans reconciliation to God thereby, 1 Pet. 1. 2.

V. 18. a sweet savour] Vers. 25. Gen. 8. 21. Hebr. a savour of rest. Which causeth Gods wrath to rest, or cease, from all displeasure, and purpose of punishing his people. See Annot. on Gen. 8. 21. Besides this, there were other sorts of offerings, at the consecration of Aaron, and his sonnes; wherewith they were entred into their Office, that they might (having these sacrifices first offered for themselves) be the fitter, to offer the like for others, afterwards.

V. 19. the other ramme] The former ramme was called the burnt-offering, which was a sinne-offering, without which none other offering was accepted, this the peace-offering, made for the prosperitie of the Priesthood, both in respect of the Priests themselves, and the exercise of their Priestly function with reference unto the people. Such oblations were usually made, either for obtainment of some good thing desired, or for acknowledgement of some good already received.

hands upon the head] Vers. 10. & 15. See Annot. on vers. 10.

V. 20. Eare &c.] The eare was to be sanctified, for holy hearing, and against the hearing of any corrupt communication; and the hand for working, and the foot for walking; that his conversation may be holy, and his person sanctified from head to foot: the whole body needed not to be so bloodied: so in Baptisme, there is no necessitie of plunging the whole body in water, for the sprinkling of it, on the forehead, may suffice to signifie the mysticall meaning, intended by it, where by a sacramentall Synecdoche (though but a part be sprinkled) the whole is washed and cleansed. N.

V. 21. upon the Altar] The blood of the slaine creature received in some vessell, was set upon the Altar, whence it was taken for ordinary sprinklings.

of the anoynting oyle] The composition whereof is set down Chap. 30. 23.

sprinkle it] Either the oyle and blood severally, or mingled together.

and upon his garments] This by Gods command, was no pollution; and against Gods command, elegancy and curiositie is pollution, Exo. 20. 25. yet the sprinkling might be so ordered by God, that the drops might rather adorne, then disgrace the garment.

V. 22. a ramme of consecration] Not an holocaust to be burned whole, in sacrifice to God, as the ram, vers. 18. but for consecration of the Priests, in their holy function.

right shoulder] In other peace-offerings, (which were made for the people) that shoulder was a part of the Priests Fee, Levit. 7. 32. for his service; but here the oblation being made for the Priests themselves, they were to offer it up on their own behalf.

V. 23. before the LORD] That is, before the Altar of burnt-offerings, where God was served by sacrifice, and where he accepted the sacrifices offered unto him.

V. 24. wave them] That is, shake them to and fro, as some conceive, from East to West, from North to South; signifying Gods universall presence all the world over. The word sometimes signifieth sifting with a sieve, Esa. 30. 28. which may note either the shaking of affliction, Esa. 10. 32. Or purging by affliction, as by sifting and shaking, the chaffe is severed from the graine, Matth. 3. 12. Or, it may note the agitation and motion of the minde, which should not be idle, in the performance of Gods service; with this waving, or wavering the sacrifice, was also lifted up, v. 27. And thence it was called the heave-offering, as well as the wave-offering, vers. 28. Levit. 7. 34. To raise the hearts of Priests and people upwards towards God. But some take this waving, to be a casting of the portions, out of one hand into the other; and the heaving, to be a throwing of them upward.

V. 26. it shall be thy part] This is to be understood of other peace-offerings afterwards: for in this of the consecration of the Priests, both the shoulder, and the breast, as some hold, were to be offered up to God by fire as the fat, and v. 22. according to the first Annot. on that verse. Others take it, that the breast was reserved for Moses (who now did the Priests Office) because both breast and shoulder are allowed to the Priest, vers. 25, 26. of this Chapter, Levit. 7. 31, 32. and the breast only is specified, as his part in this verse.

V. 28. it is an heave-offering] That is, lifted up to God, (as his right) and assigned by him, for a portion to his Ministers.

statute for ever] See Annot. on Chap. 12. 14.

V. 29. his sonnes] The eldest sonne of the high Priest, (when his father is dead) shall be high Priest in his stead, and shall have his fathers high Priests garments put upon him, and be anointed as he was: this was done by one of the inferiour Priests; for there were no higher, the high Priests being dead; and none fitter to consecrate a Priest, then a Priest.

V. 30. That sonne] Hebr. He of his sonnes.

seven dayes when] That is, seven dayes before he come to doe service in the Tabernacle, all which time he is not to attend within, but at the doore of the Tabernacle day and night, Levit. 8. 35. That he may have the holinesse of the Sabbath for his compleat consecration, and the whole weeke taken up in this holy preparation, might minde the Priest of perpetuall holinesse, not only on the Sabbath, but all the dayes of the weeke, all the dayes of his life.

V. 31. the ramme of consecration] That is, the remainder after the oblation of the parts spoken of, vers. 22.

in the holy place] In the Court before the Tabernacle where was the Altar, whence fire was to be taken to seethe it withall: there it was to be boyled, and there also to be eaten, Levit. 8. 31.

V. 32. And Aaron and his sonnes] Levit. 8. 31. & 24. 9. & Matth. 12. 4.

V. 33. eate these things] Which were reserved of the sacrifice, as part of the flesh, and part of the bread left in the basket, vers. 32.

a stranger] That is, not onely he that is no Israelite; but no Israelite who is not of the seede of Aaron, although he be of the stock or linage of Levi, for here was no offerer but the Priest; in other peace-offerings, the offerers who were not Priests, were partners with the Priests in portions of their oblations.

because they are holy] Not the Levites in generall, but the Priests, because they be hallowed, or offered to God by especiall consecration to the Priesthood, as he that is a Levite and no more is not.

V. 34. burne the remainder] That which could not be eaten by them that day, was not to be kept unto the morning; but to be presently burnt: that it might not be applied to any other use then God had appointed it, neither by way of contempt, nor of superstition: yet this was not an universall ordinance; for in some cases what remained of the sacrifice might be eaten the next day, Levit. 7. 16. this therefore of burning the remainder, is especially meant of gratulatory oblations, such as was the Paschall Lambe, which was so used; for what remained uneaten, Exod. 12. 10.

V. 35. seven dayes] Every day for so many dayes together, were the hands of the Priests to be anointed, a bullock to be offered on the Altar, and the Altar to be cleansed, and anointed.

V. 36. cleanse the Altar] Chap. 30. vers. 28. & Chap. 40. 10.

V. 37. * whatsoever toucheth the Altar] That is, Priests sacrifices, oblations, vessels, fire and all things that had relation to the Altar: but not simply every thing: this was a Type of the most perfect and operative holinesse of Christ, Heb. 9. 14. who is also called an Altar, Heb. 13. 10. 15. Whereby also was ordained, that none that is not consecrated for the service of the Altar, should touch the Altar.

* Chap. 30. 29. Matth. 23. 19. Hag. 2. 13.

V. 38. Now this is that] That is, the principall use for which the Altar is erected, is for the daily sacrifice.

two lambes] Num. 28. 3.

day by day continually] This answereth to necessitie on our part, who alwaies need remission of sinnes; and efficacie on Christs part, who daily communicates the grace of reconciliation to the soules of his people.

V. 39. morning and at even] A pattern for double devotion every day.

V. 40. a tenth deale] That is, an Omer. See Annot. on Exod. 16. 16.

Hin of oyle] An Hin was a measure for moist things; as an Omer and Ephah for dry: and it contained about three quarts, and the fourth part here mentioned is a pint and an halfe. Some say, an Hin contained twelve Logges, and a Log contained the quantitie of sixe Egges of Palestine, which are bigger then ordinary; so that an Hin was as much as seventy two Egges put together.

V. 41. at even] Heb. betwixt two evenings. See Annot. on Exod. 12. vers. 6.

meat-offering] The drinke-offering, vers. 40. and the meat-offering in this vers. may admonish us of Gods bountie, as well as other oblations of his justice or mercy.

V. 42. * at the doore of] Where was the Altar of the burnt-offering, there God manifested his presence by the cloudy pillar which descended and stood at the doore of the Tabernacle when God talked with Moses, Exod. 33. 9. though he did most manifest his especiall presence in the most secret part of the Tabernacle, Exod. 30. 6. See Annot. on Exod. 35. 22.

* Exod. 33. 9. Chap. 40. 29. 36. Levit. 16. 2. & 9. 13. 24.

speake there unto thee] See Annot. on Chap. 30. vers. 6.

V. 43. by my glory] Because of my glorious presence, whereby the Altar shall be declared holy; especially when fire shall descend from heaven upon the sacrifices, to consume them, as Levit. 9. 24.

V. 44. sanctifie the Tabernacle] I will shew (by evident tokens of my presence) that I have made choice of them, for holy services to my selfe.

V. 45. * I will dwell among] God is every where, for he is excluded from no place, nor is he concluded in any place: yet is he present (in especiall manner) with grace and favour, among his sanctified servants: first they are said to be sanctified, vers. 44. and then they shall be dignified, and defended by his especiall presence, Deut. 23. 14. afforded among them.

* Levit. 26. 12. 2 Cor. 6. 16.

I will dwell] In my Tabernacle (which is my house, the place of mine especiall presence) pitched among their Tents.

their God] Theirs by especiall covenant, and the manifold evidences of his favour towards them above all others.

CHAP. XXX.

Vers. 1. To burne incense] Incense is made a type of prayers both in the Old Testament, as Psal. 141. 2. and in the New, as Revel. 8. vers. 3. for incense is put up with fire; and prayers must be fervent in heart; incense is sweet, so are prayers, especially when they are presented upon the golden Censer of our Saviour, Revel. 8. 3.

Shittim wood] See Annot. on Chap. 25. 5.

V. 2. the hornes] These were not for such an use as those of the greater Altar, to binde the sacrifice unto it, Psal. 118. 27. but for conformitie with it, and for ornament.

V. 3. * pure gold] God is worthy to be served with the best, both for kinde and degree; not onely with gold the best of metall, but with the purest and most precious of that kinde; that is, such as is pure without a counterfeit appearance, and pure without mixture of any other matter of meaner price. so for the holy oyle he requires pure Myrrhe, vers. 23. and pure Frankincense, vers. 34.

* Chap. 25. 11. Num. 4. 11. Rev. 8. 3.

the top] Heb. the roofe or covering: which was made grate-wise: or like a net, in such sort that the ashes of the Frankincense, or of other ingredients put into the perfume, might passe through the Altar to the ground.

a crowne of gold] That is, a golden plate or border compassing the Altar round about like battlements, as that about the Arke, Exod. 25. 11.

V. put it before the Vaile] (Which divided the sanctuary from the holy of holies) that is, in the Sanctuary, and not in the holiest of all; before the vaile, not within it; for into the holiest of all, the High-priest was to enter but once a yeare, Heb. 9. 7. but Incense was to be offered twice a day, morning and evening, vers. 7. and 2 Chron. 13. 11.

before the Mercy-seat] The Altar of Incense was not placed in the holy of holies where the Mercy-seat stood, for thither came onely the High-priest, and but once a yeare; but in the place next unto it, (called the holy place, and separated from it onely by a Vaile) into which inferiour Priests went daily to burne Incense, Luk. 1. 8, 9. yet was this Altar of Incense set so neare the Vaile, that it was also neare the Mercy-seat which was placed close to the Vaile on the other side.

Arke of the Testimonie] So it was called, because of the Law laid up in it, which was the Testimonie of Gods will, and the peoples duties; and of the Covenant made betwixt God and them at the giving of the Law.

where I will meet with thee] That is, before the Vaile on the out-side; that is, next to the Sanctuary, or holy place: whereby, and by Chap. 29. 42. it appeareth, that God did afford his presence, and reveale his will, not onely to the High-priests, in the holy of holies, (into which he was to enter but once a year) but else-where and at other times, as there was occasion.

V. 7. Aaron shall burne] Not as an High-priest; for this was the office of an inferiour Priest, Luk. 1. 9. to which Aaron might in humilitie descend; but the inferiour Priests might not presumptuously ascend to the execution of his peculiar office.

sweet Incense] Heb. incense of spices. By the Sacrifices, Christ is presented as a satisfier for mans sinnes; by Incense, he is figured as an Intercessour for sinners, by mediation presented to God on their behalfe.

dresseth] Heb. maketh well.

V. 8. at even] Heb. betweene two evens. Of which, see the exposition on Exod. 12. vers. 6. for they did not burne day-light, light, as Papists generally doe; and if they did burne alwaies, as it is said, Exod.27.20. it was because the Tabernacle wanted windowes to let in light: with this service of dressing and kindling lights, were two other daily services of the Priests, to wit, the offering of Incense, and of the daily sacrifice.

V. 9. no strange incense] Otherwise made, then according to the composition afterward prescribed, vers.34,35,36.

V. 10. once a yeare] The Altar of Incense was once a year, and that once the tenth day of the seventh moneth (viz. on the day of expiation, Numb. 29. 7. when the Priest went into the Sanctum Sanctorum,) to be solemnly hallowed, and purged, because of some error, or fault, at least ceremoniall, which might be committed in reference to it, and administration about it.

throughout your] That is, in the succession of future times, untill Christ the substance of these Ceremoniall shadowes doe appeare.

V. 12. Their number] Heb. them that are to be numbered.

give a ransome] Or, redemption: by way of acknowledgement that his life is forfeited to God by sinnes, which is in Gods power to take away at his pleasure; and that man holds it of meere courtesie from him. This is held by some to be a figure of the redemption of the soule by Christ, 1 Tit.2.6. And for want of this ransome at the summing or numbering of the people (in Davids time) it is thought by Josephus, Antiq. lib.7. cap.10. that he was cut short of his number threescore and ten thousand, 2 Sam. 24. forgetting the commandement of Moses, in this behalfe, which was to be payd partly as a tribute, whereby the Divine Soveraigntie is acknowledged; and partly for building of the Tabernacle; which tribute might either continue for the repaire and charge of the Tabernacle; or if intermitted, be renewed againe as occasion did require. See 2 Chron. 24.6.

for his soule] That is, for his life.

that there be no plague] That is, that by fayling of so easie price for so great cause upon Gods command he be not provoked to plague the people.

V.13. halfe a shekell] Neh.10. 32.The rate is the third part of a shekell, but here is required more, because the worke is extraordinary.

halfe a shekell of silver] That is, about fifteene pence, making the proportion according to our Coyne. See Annot. on Gen. 23.16. The shekell of gold was of the same weight; but of farre greater value, according to the preeminence of the one metall above the other. See after of the gerah, vers.13.

V. 13. after the shekell of the sanctuary] That is (as some take it) double to the common shekell; but it is more likely to be exactly so much, according to the Standard kept in the Sanctuary, a full shekell no lesse then the just weight of it. See Ezek.45.vers.10,11,12.

Gerah] What that is, is easily knowne by the shekell; for it is the twentieth part of it; that is, a three halfepence: so that the shekell is two shillings six pence.

offering to the Lord] For the maintenance of the Tabernacle, and his servants and services in it.

V. 14. from twenty yeares old] Because such were fit for imployment, both for warre and peace, and commonly able (out of their gettings) to pay that proportion: neither women nor children came into the reckoning, because they were sorted to their parents, if in their minoritie; and the women accounted with their husbands, if they were married.

V. 15. the rich] The rich and poore in this particular are both of one price, because in spirituall things they are equall; and therefore the ir fare was alike at the Paschall Supper; as under the Gospel, he that at home hath most varietie of dishes, hath but the same proportion of Bread and Wine with the poorest in the Supper of the Lord; for their soules are equall, and the price paid for their ransome equall; and therefore was one rate appointed to both, that the rich might be the lesse disposed to despise the poore; and that the number of the people might be kept in memory, by the summe of money contributed by them: this contribution was annuall, as some Iewish Histories shew; but others conceive, it was but occasionall, as there was cause to call the people unto it.

V. 16. for the service] Which (in regard of the fabrick, furniture of the Sanctuary, and the Priests and Levites maintenance who were to administer in it) was very costly.

memoriall unto] That the people may be admonished of the Lords favor, in the remembrance of them; and of his readinesse to use all beneficence to them, if they continue in obedience to him.

V. 18. Laver] This Laver of brasse was placed betwixt the Sanctuary, and the Altar of burnt-sacrifice; that the Priests might wash themselves with more privacie.

V. 19. shall wash] When they went into the Tent of the Congregation, and when they came neere unto the Altar, they washed, Exod. 40. 32. Signifying that he that cometh unto God, must be washed from all sinne and corruption, Esa.52.11. Heb.10.22. Psal.26.6. And in the same Laver, were the Priests to wash the parts of the sacrifice before they were burned, because they were Types of the most cleane and cleansing sacrifice Christ Jesus.

thereat] He saith not, therein; for they washed with the water which flowed out at the cocke or pipe of the Laver as at a Cisterne.

and feet] Hence some collect, that the Priests were barefoot, when they ministred in the Tabernacle, and because (being the place of Gods peculiar presence) it was holy ground. See Exod. 3. 5.

V. 20. that they die not] To disobey God, though but in outward ceremonies, deserveth death. See Exod.12.15. & v.33. of this Chap. & vers.38.

V. 21. a Statute for ever] See Annot. on Chap.12.14.

V. 23. principall spices] For the composition of the holy oyntment.

pure myrrhe] Hebr. myrrhe of libertie. That droppeth freely, that is the best which droppeth first most freely, for that is the purest and freest from dregs. Myrrhe is a sweet gumme, that issueth out of the Myrrhe tree, the fatter and moister part, and was used for the composition of this oyntment, highly praised and preferred before others, and none before it; thence is it so often mentioned (in the Song of Solomon) as a figure of the fragrant graces, and sweet and mutuall acceptance betwixt Christ and his Church.

Cinnamon] A sweet barke of a plant growing in Ethiopia, a low plant growing not above five cubits high, above the ground.

Calamus] A kinde of reed; used in powders and odours, it is very sweet, and giveth a very pleasant sent afarre off; it groweth in Arabia, India, and Syria, Plin. hist. lib. 20. cap. 22. See also Theophrast. hist. of plants, lib. 9. cap. 7. & Dioscorid. lib. 1. cap. 17.

V. 24. Cassia] Another kinde of Reed, or Cane, and very sweet also, as the former, called also a Canell, it is a shrub growing to the height of three cubits, and of three colours: for when it cometh up first, (for a foot from the root) it is white, then halfe a foot higher it waxeth red; but as it riseth further, it is blackish, and this part is held the best, and so the next to it is a degree lower; but the white is of no regard, and therefore they never cut the twigs or branches neere the root: the newest and freshest Cassia is best and of most delicate smell, Plin. hist. lib. 12. cap.19.

him] See Annot. on Chap.29.24.

V. 26. the Tabernacle] That is, all things which appertaine unto the Tabernacle. Thereby to set them apart for Gods service.

V. 29. *that they may * be most holy*] This expression in proprietie of speech belongeth to the holy of holies, and to the most holy things there placed; yet to keep off all from contempt of them, or profane usurpation upon them, they are all sometimes called most holy; because appropriated to the most holy service of the most holy God.

whatsoever toucheth] As some think, the word (whatsoever) is not to be taken really, but personally, for whosoever; and so the meaning is, that none but a consecrated person must touch the holy things of the Tabernacle: not that whosoever, or whatsoever touched them became thereby presently hallowed, for it was a capitall presumption in Uzzah to touch the Arke, and he dyed for it, 2 Sam.6.6. And the Prophet Haggai sheweth, that there may be a touching of unholy things by things holy, which yet may remaine as unholy as before, Haggai 2. 12. Therefore the proposition must be limited to the matter in hand; that is, to the service of the Sanctuary: and so whatsoever is brought thither as an oblation, if it touch any of the hallowed things of the Tabernacle, being brought to be applyed to the service of God, it becometh so appropriate thereto, that it cannot be imployed otherwise without profanation.

V. 31. unto me] In the Hebrew tongue the words [unto me] are oft-times redundant, that is, so used, that the sense is sufficient and perfect without them; as if it were said, it shall be holy; which may be meant with respect to the people, who were to account it an holy oyntment, so as neither in the making nor application of it to profane it. Or, it might be said to be holy unto God, because it was ordained by God, with especiall reference to his service in the Sanctuary.

V. 32. upon mans flesh] This holy oyntment was not to be applyed to any profane or civill use by any, but to be appropriate to the sonnes of Aaron; and (as some thinke) to the high Priestly onely, from Levit.21. 10. And though Kings were anoynted also, 1 Kings 19. 15, 16. yet it might be with other oyle and not with this; and albeit Zadok the High-priest anoynted Salomon, 1 King.1. 39. yet might he use oyntment of another kind from this of the High-priests; or if he used this, as it is probable he did; that was done by especiall appointment of God, as an exception from his generall rule; and the exception is, as some make it, that this holy oyntment was to be used only, when there was a King chosen of a new stocke or race, or upon some notable alteration in the succession; for which they quote, Psal. 89. 20. concerning Davids anointing, and 1 King. 1.39. concerning Salomons.

V. 33. any like unto it] The Lord requires pietie with proprietie, without counterfeiting or communitie. See Ezek.44.2.

upon a stranger] See Annot. on Chap.29.33.

V. 34. Stacte] The word in the Originall signifieth a drop, some take it for balme: Plinie saith, it is the pure drop, or sweat of the Myrtle tree, Plin. lib. 12. cap. 15. It is generally conceived to be a sweet gum hard enough to be beaten into powder; for so the making of the perfume required, vers. 36.

Onycha] As most agree, is a sweet kinde of shell, white, like unto a mans nayle, found in the Indian Lakes, where shell-fishes feed of Spikenard. Of this Onycha, see Diascorid. lib.2. cap. 8.

Galbanum] A Syrian gum, as Diascorid. saith, lib.3. cap.81. This Galbanum which is now in use with us, and frequent in Apothecaries shops, is a thing of no good or sweet sent, and like of that kinde, which as Plinie writeth, by the strength, rather then the sweetnesse of it, recovereth them that are cast down by the falling sickenesse, swoonings, or trances, Plin. lib. 14. cap. 5. It groweth much in the Mountain Amanus in Syria, lib. 12.25. This was of another kinde, or might be so tempered with the other ingredients, as to make a pleasing perfume of it.

pure] That is, without dregs, or any corrupt adherence of any other thing.

V. 35. holy] Prescribed by God, and to be applyed by the Priests to an holy use; it is for incense, and perfume to be sent up to God in the Sanctuary.

V. 36. where I will meet] See Annot. on vers.6.

V. 37. unto thee] That is, thou shalt so both esteeme it, and apply it.

holy for the LORD] Only dedicate to the use of the Lords Tabernacle.

V. 38. cut off] If he offend in contempt of the Lords holy Ordinance, his cutting off may be by Divine Judgement, a cutting off by a doubled death, both of the body, and soule; if repentance prevent not. See Annot. on vers. 20.

CHAP. XXXI.

Vers. 2. Called by name: Bezaleel] The Israelites in Egypt were not bred and brought up in any ingenuous Arts, but in base drudgery, like slaves; they were therefore much unfit to take in hand so curious a piece of worke as the Tabernacle, and the appurtenances to it. But that defect is recompenced with great advantage, by Divine inspiration, whereby Bezaleel and Aholiab were indowed with wisdome, to devise and act with dexteritie to make most curious works.

of Hur] This Hur it is like was the same who is mentioned, Chap.17. 14. & 24. 14. the sonne of Caleb, the sonne of Hezron, 1 Chron. 2. 18. There was another Caleb, the sonne of Jephunneh, who with Joshua, was one of the faithfull searchers and reporters of the Land of Canaan; and incouraged the people to attempt the Conquest of it; when the other Spies had discouraged them with report of terrible untruths, both concerning the Land it selfe, and the inhabitants, Numb. 14.6,7.

V. 3. Spirit of God] God speaks of himselfe, both in the first and third Person, and it is as if he had said, with my Spirit.

workmanship] Not only that knowledge which is Divine is from God, but that which is humane, even the skill of Husbandry also, Isa.28.26. And though Handy-crafts be acquired by naturall understanding, and voluntary industry; yet they may be infused by God, and improved by him to a miraculous proficiency; and therefore Gods blessing in such things is to be intreated before-hand, and thankfully acknowledged afterwards.

V. 6. * wise hearted] Such as had indowments in an inferiour degree to those of Bezaleel and Aholiab, (who were to these Master-workmen) to be their ministeriall Assistants.

* Chap.35.10. & Chap.36.1.

V. 7. furniture] Hebr. vessels.

V. 8. pure Candlesticks] Made of pure gold, beaten out of one peece, and curiously kept by the care of the Priests.

V. 10. and the cloaths] The sonnes of Cohath were to carry the holy Utensils, or furniture of the Tabernacle, when it was removed, but they might not touch them upon paine of death, untill Aaron and his sons had covered them with clothes made for that purpose, Numb.4.12.15.

Death

V. 13. Verily my Sabbaths] Or, notwithstanding; as the Geneva hath it: or, nevertheless, as others read. Though these works may appertaine to the solemnitie of my service, and I would not have them put off, yet I will not require such hast in them, as to suffer my Sabbaths to be violated for them.

for it is a signe] Because by the solemne observation of the Sabbath, as hallowed and sanctified by God for an holy and thankfull memoriall of the creation; they professed themselves Gods people in especiall manner, though the reason were generall, and concerned all men, as much as them, and God in calling them to an holy communion with him in the celebration of the Sabbath; (whereby as they glorifie him, so he sanctifieth them;) it will not follow, as some thence inferre, that the Sabbath is a mutable ceremony, because it is called a signe; for so is the Rain-bow, which yet shall last to the worlds end, as a signe or token of Gods Covenant, not to destroy the world as he did before; nor is it now abolished, because it was made with the Jewes in the Old Testament: for the reason reacheth also unto Christians, for he is the Lord that sanctifieth them, as well as the Jewes, and we are to remember his creation of the world and rest as much as they, which he urgeth, vers. 17. And if it be taken for a distinctive signe, so is the holy observation of the Sabbath unto Christians, whereby they are manifestly discerned from the prophane, who for the most part are careless of the Sabbath.

that doth sanctifie you] That is consecrate you unto my selfe, for my holy service and worship, and give you grace to hallow my Sabbaths, and to walke in holinesse of life, for example and imitation unto others.

V. 14. keepe the Sabbath] God repeateth this. God so presseth the observation of the Sabbath, in this Chapter and elsewhere (as Exod.20.8. Deut.5.12. Isa. 58. 13,14. Jer. 17. 21, 22. Ezek. 20. 12.) because the Sabbath is to the rest of the commandements, (as the border about Mount Sinai) to preserve them from violation; for whosoever maketh a conscience to keep the Sabbath, will make a conscience of the rest: and accordingly on the contrary, mens breaking out into manifold transgressions of the Law are called and complained of by the name of violation or profanation of the Sabbath, vers.14. which sometimes was punished with death by the Magistrate, Numb. 15. or (if the Magistrate neglect his dutie) by Divine Justice.

V. 16. perpetuall Covenant] For the worke of creation must be kept in minde by an holy memoriall, even to the worlds dissolution, and in every age, God must have an holy tribute of time for his solemn service, and that in the proportion of one to sixe: and this is of great use, not only for Gods glory, but for mans salvation.

V. 17. * in sixe dayes.] *Gen.31.and Chap.2.2.

rested] From creating any more kinds of creatures; but for individuall soules, he createth them still; and in works of preservation his providence still worketh, Joh. 5.17.

refreshed] Not that God was weary by his worke, though in a figurative sense he sometimes assumes a wearinesse unto himselfe, as Esa.43.24. but that we might be more apprehensive of his rest, for our imitation; the phrase is fitted to our condition, as many others of like kinde; and in the next verse, God is said to have a finger, whereas indeed, he is a spirit, and hath neither humane parts nor passions. See Annot. on Gen. 6.6. & Annot. 2. on the 18. verse of this Chapter.

V. 18. Testimony] The Tables of the Law, whereby he declared his will to his people. See Annot. on Exod. 16.34.

* tables of stone] * Deut. 9. 10. They were made in probabilitie like the cover of a Booke, to open and shut: and on the one side were engraven the foure Commandements, containing mans dutie to God (commonly called the first Table.) And in the other, the sixe Commandements of mans dutie to his neighbour, called also commonly the second Table: the Tables were of stone, betokening the hardnesse of mans heart, whither from the Originall, they were to be transcribed, to make impression in such hard matter, as would require a pen of iron, Job 19. 24. and withall to note the durablenesse of that Law, which was therein ingraven. And it is like also, the first Tables were Gods owne worke, both for matter and forme: for the stony Tables were of his making, and the words in them of his own engraving. Chap. 32. vers. 16. Deut. 4. vers. 13. & 9. 10. And when Moses in a pang of zealous indignation against the peoples Idolatry, had thrown them down and broken them, Chap. 32. vers. 19. hee was commanded after that to make up the breach, by hewing two Tables of stone like unto the first; yet the Lord himselfe was the Scribe: he made the Writing as at the first, and graved on the Tables the same words, Exod. 34. 1. Deut. 10. 1. But it seemeth, Exod. 34.27. that Moses wrote, for there the Lord saith unto him: Write thou these words: for after the tenour of these words, I have made a Covenant with thee, and with Israel. And in the next verse, the words are: And he was there with the LORD (forty dayes, and forty nights: he did neither eat bread, nor drinke water:) and he wrote upon the Tables the words of the Covenant, the ten Commandements. Answer. First, it is plaine (by sundry fore-cited places) that the Lord (and not Moses) wrote on the Tables, both those of the first and second making. Secondly, for this place (it being somewhat obscure) it is to be expounded by such as are cleare, even those fore-cited, and so taking that clause of Moses his fasting by way of parenthesis, the word [He] may be referred to the Lord, not to Moses. Thirdly, for Moses his writing, it is not to be limited to the ten Commandements, on the Tables of Stone; but to be extended to the whole Law, whereof he was to have a written Copy, for the better information both of the Priests and people, Deut. 4. 14. For those Tables of Stone, were laid up in the Arke, by Gods especiall appointment, Deut. 10. 2. And the Arke was in the Holy of Holies; where neither the inferiour Priests, nor the people might come: therefore it was necessary there should be written Copies for more generall instruction, and that it was so, is plaine by the 17. of Deuteronomy, where the King is commanded to write him a Copie of the Law in a Booke out of that which is before the Priests, and Levites. Deut. 17.18. The Priests and Levites then had a Copy, and that Copy was according to the writing by God commanded to Moses, Exod. 34.27.

finger of God] That is, by the power, or Spirit of God, as appeareth by Matth. 12.28. Luk. 11.20. compared: for (in a literall sense) God hath neither finger, nor hand, nor flesh, nor bloud, as we have: for he is a pure Spirit, without any parts or composition at all. But the Holy Ghost in such expressions ascribing unto God a finger and other parts; as also anger, and hate, and repentance, refreshing, and other humane affections, and passions; therein cometh downe to mans carnall capacity, for his better instruction; which otherwise would not be apprehensive enough of what he would have imparted to man; which (for this particular) is that this writing was made without any humaine ministery, and by an operation meerely divine.

Vers. 1. Delayed to come downe] Staying with God in the Mount fourty dayes, and fourty nights, Chap. 34. vers. 28.

unto Aaron] Or, against Aaron.

* Up, make us] Their speech is as absurd as impious; for how could they be Gods, that were of mans making? how comparable to that God, who (by the ministery of Moses) had miraculously brought them out of the house of bondage? if they had not lived too long among grosse Idolaters, and learned, and liked somewhat of their Idolatrous Discipline; they could never have beene so grosse in their understandings, so ungratefull to God and Moses; as to take this occasion to renounce them both; especially Moses remaining in that Mount, from whence they had heard the Law against Idolatry, as well as against other sinnes, so dreadfully set forth, Exod. 19.16. & Chap. 20. 18,19. But this sheweth mans proneneſse to Idolatry, and the great danger in conversing with Idolaters.

gods] Gods for God, for one being made, they desired no more; whereby they meant some visible representation of God to be carried before them: for it is too mad a conceit, to think that the figure of a Calfe was that God, which brought them out of the Land of Egypt; yet such a madnesse might be a part of Gods curse upon some of them, for such a sinne as we finde, Job 24.13. viz. rebelling against the light, whereby they might become vaine in their imaginations, having their fooliſh heart darkened, Rom. 1.22. and professing themselves to be wise, they might not onely become fooliſh (as the Apostle saith in the next verse) but meere mad men: for to such Idolaters as these belongeth that of the Prophet, they are mad upon their idols, Jer. 50. 38.

goe before us] They had the pillar of the cloud; but because Moses being in the Mount, it stood still, they would have a stirring God, that might presently lead them onward whither they would goe.

as for this Moses] After so many miracles wrought by the ministery of Moses, they spake of him thus, with contempt, whom (on this side Idolatry) they could not reverence too much.

what is become of] How necessary is it that such as have the charge of the people, should attend on their charge: when upon a little absence, the people take occasion to commit so great a sinne? yet he had warrant for his absence, though that were no warrant for so grosse a wickednesse.

V. 2. the golden earings] Aaron had some cause to hope that they did not so doate upon an Idol, as to buy it at so dear a price, as their precious jewels, to marre them for the making of it.

V. 3. * breake off the golden] If he thought so well of them, it was more of his charitie then of their goodnesse; for they gave many both eare and eye-witnesses, of their witlesse fancies, and wicked wils, to set up Idolatry what ever it cost them; wherein they shewed not onely their fondnesse to the Idol, but their ungratitude to God; for by his favour they were furnished with those jewels, Exod. 3.21,22. which now they turne to his great dishonour.

* Ezek. 16.17.

V. 4. molten calfe] The Egyptians were great Merchants of Idolatry, from whom the Israelites retailed in that ungodly trade; for they set up a calf, while the Egyptians worshipped Kine and Oxen. It is not unlike but there passed more words betwixt Aaron and the people, before it came to the making of this Idoll; and that they themselves made choyce of it, (though we finde it not exprest) els Aaron (doubtlesse) would rather have set before them a Cherub, or Cherubims, rather then a Calfe; though some Papists, as Franciscus Moncæus fondly saith, the figure of the Cherubims was after the figure of a Calfe.

these be thy Gods] It was but one, and so it is named, Neh. 9. 18. yet called Gods, (in the Plurall Number) as God himselfe is sometimes pleased, to be called (though he be but one) as Gen. 20.13. & 35.7. especially, Josh. 24.19. where it is said, he is an holy God: the words for God and holy, are both of the Plurall number.

which brought thee] By this it appeareth that some of them (at least) did meane to worship the true God in this false manner; though the grosser sort (like the blinde Egyptians) might haply commit downe-right Idolatry to this senseleſse Idoll.

V. 5. when Aaron saw] When Aaron saw their mindes were so madly set upon this Idol; he fearing their fury, went on according to their wilfull wickednesse; vers. 22. built an Altar, &c.

an Altar] If the Calfe betoken a God, it must have an Altar for sacrifice, and a set time for solemne service.

to morrow] Sooner it could not be, with warning to the people before-hand: this haste was from their furious zeale, els it is like, Aaron would have used delayes, that Moses might have come to prevent further mischiefe.

to the Lord] Or, for the Lord. The people used the word Elohim, when they called upon Aaron to make them Gods, vers. 1. (which is applied not onely to God, but to others besides him) but Aaron useth the Name Jehovah, (which is peculiar to the true God) it may be, to divert them from the worke of mans hands, to the maker of man, God himselfe.

V. 6. * sate down to eate] Making a feast as part of the peace-offerings, offered up to the brutish Idol by sottish Idolaters.

* 1 Cor. 10.7.

rose up to play] Making merry by singing, vers. 18. and by dancing, vers. 19.

V. 7. * Get thee downe] * Deut. 9.12.

thy people] Thine now, rather then mine, since they have so presumptuously and impiously sinned against me: yet they were Moses people, as their Successors were Queene Esthers people, Esther 7.4. by cognation with him, and subordination to him: so by this appropriation, he is put in minde to make haste to them, Deut. 9.12. and to doe his best to make them apprehensive of their high contempt of God; and penitent for it.

V. 8. turned aside quickly] For it was not long before this that they promised their obedience to all Gods commands; among which one was against worshipping of Images. See Exod. 19.8. & Chap. 24.7. whereby we see what necessitie we have to pray earnestly to God, to keepe us in his true obedience, and to send us good guides to that purpose.

V. 9. * I have seene] * Deut. 9.13.

V. 10. Let me alone] God sheweth that the prayers of the Godly stay his punishment; not by the prevailing of humane force above divine; but by condescending of divine grace to the desires of the godly.

* Gen. 32.26. Deut. 9.14.

* a great nation] That is, a multiplied off-spring shall descend from thy loines: for though God destroy a multitude of wicked persons, he can raise out of one surviving Saint a Nation and Church unto himselfe; yea of stones, children unto Abraham, Matth. 3.9.

* Deut. 9.14.

V. 11. * Moses besought] * Psal. 106.23.

why doth thy wrath] Moses knew cause enough why God should be wroth with them; but he useth the forme of a question, to put an emphasis upon his Petition; for so it is in effect, whatsoever be the forme: such patheticall enforcements are used sometimes by the godly, as Gen. 18. vers. 23,24,25. sometimes by the wicked, as Matth. 8. 29. compared with Luk. 8. 28.

the Lord] Heb. the face of the Lord.

V. 12. * Wherefore should] * Num. 14.13.

* repent] * Vers. 14. See Annot. on Gen. 6.6.

V. 13. * Remember Abraham] * That is, thy promise made to Abraham, Deut. 9.27.

V. 14. repented him] That is, without any change of his will, he sheweth a will to change his commination of ruine of the people, to a gracious acceptation of Moses his prayer; as men when they repent, make a change of their words, and actions: this sheweth how much a whole Nation may be beholding to one of Gods favourites; and how much they are bound to make much of such.

V. 15.

V. 15. on both their sides] The Tables (though of stone) were no bigger or heavier then Moses could carry in his hands, and the Commandements were graven (as some conceive) on the inside only, others thinke they were on both sides, so that each part (both being like a paire of Tables) had (as it is probable) their part of the Law written twice over, that is, the first Table had the foure first Commandements written on each side; and the second Table had the fixe last written twice over: once on the one side, and againe on the other (like that booke of woes, Ezek. 2. 10.) in as large and faire a Character to be read, as the space would beare.

V. 16. the writing of God] Gods interest in these Tables is often mentioned, to note how farre he was pleased to be employed, and ingaged in the Covenant with the people; which aggravates their sinne who brake the Covenant; especially, by such a wilfull and witlesse Idolatry as that of the golden Calfe, which is as if the wife of a most wise and glorious King, should prostitute herselfe to some base worthlesse fellow and despicable varlet.

V. 17. a noise of warre] By this it is evident, that Joshua was neither a party in this Idolatrous conspiracy, nor privie to the information that Moses had in the Mount; while this mischiefe was put in practise; he was absent from the people as Moses was; but not present with God in such neernesse as he, nor admitted within the cloud, where Moses had a more immediate communion with God.

V. 19. the calfe] That is, the Image of the Calfe, for the signe is often used for the thing signified. See Annot. on Gen. 41. 26.

and brake them] Wherein some wholly defend the act as being by Gods instinct, to signifie the breach of Covenant betwixt him and the people; and it may be so, because he reports it as an act rather of deliberation, then of passion, Deut. 9. 16, 17. and because he is no where condemned for it, as for a fault, and is commended for the meekest man that was upon the face of the earth, Numb. 12. 3. yet as (when his spirit was provoked) he spake unadvisedly with his lips, Psal. 106. 33. so being transported with zeale, (though for Gods glory) he might doe unadvisedly with his hands; and so he may be an example of mans imperfect sanctitie, which hath a mixture of Divine grace, and humane weaknesse even in the best.

V. 20. ground it to powder] Gold may by Art (as some have said upon their owne experience) be turned into powder: howsoever the fashion being marred by melting, and made a grosse lumpe; it was not uneasie to file or grate, or grind it to powder: or being melted, it might run thin, and become more brittle, & so made the easier to be turned into dust, as Deu. 9. 21.

strewed it upon the water] Which came from Mount Sinai, and ranne by the Camps of the Israelites: whether he strewed it upon the water all at once, or (by parts) gave to each a severall portion; is not here set down; but Deut. 9. 21. it is plain that he cast the dust of it into the brook.

made the children of Israel drinke of it] It is not said drinke of the Idol, for the words [of it] are in the translation, not in the Hebrew; so the drinking may be meant of the water, not of the metall, whereof the Idoll was made; whereby they might be admonished of the baseneſse, and weakneſse of their Idolatry: since the water, though weak, had overcome, and overwhelmed their upstart Idoll, and they could devoure the water. This was a liquid and cleare proofe, how foolish the people were in making of such a God, as could not defend himselfe from fire, nor file, nor water; and which by taking it (in a draught) might come forth as an excrement, whereby they might have it in more detestation, and contempt: and though the people were stiffe-necked, vers. 9. yet the Lord doubtlesse cast a terrour upon them, and so over-awed them by Moses, who had over-awed Aaron before, that they durst not resist, or refuse what Moses offered: as when the Levites set upon the rest of the people, and made a great slaughter among them, vers. 27, 28. (though they were many for one) for they were numbred up to six hundred thousand fighting men.

V. 21. what did] See Annot. on Gen. 20. 9.

V. 22. set on mischiefe*] With such an heavie violence, that I being but one, against so many, could make no resistance, with successe to the cause, or safetie to my person.

* Psal. 36. 4. Pro. 4. 16.

V. 24. there came out this Calfe] Aaron casting the jewels into the fire, might easily marre them; but without more ado then so, he could not make a Calf out of them: but that was done (say some Jewish Writers) by Art Magick, which might be besides the intention of Aaron: but the Text is plain, vers. 4. that Aaron was faulty, in giving forme to that matter, both by casting it, or causing it; or at least permitting it to be cast into a mould, and to be polished afterward, with a graving Toole; though being not a little daunted with the zealous and courageous indignation of Moses, he was afraid to acknowledge his offence to the full: and therefore (by way of extenuation) he telleth Moses, he cast the materials into the fire, and that out of it came the Calfe; as if it had beene a matter rather of chance, then of choice: which was so farre, not onely from truth, but from probabilitie also; that if extremitie of passion had not eclypsed his reason, he would rather have freely confessed his fault, then have pleaded for himselfe, by such a frivolous excuse; in which as in the precedent act, we may perceive that the worthiest and most high Priest (that is but a man) may erre both in his owne practice, and his proposals to the people in generall.

V. 25. naked*] As without armes being now out of Gods protection, who before was to them as compleat armour; but now they were as naked, and unarmed men among their enemies, as this verse sheweth: or their iniquitie was discovered as the deformitie of a naked man, who wanteth cloathes to cover it; their sinne being known to their open shame, Micah 1. 11. or they were naked, as stript of the chiefe ornament of their soules, that is, innocencie, as of the ornament of their bodies, their eare-rings; and naked as now laid bare for the lash of divine judgement.

* Gen. 42. 9. 2 Chron. 28. 19.

shame] Idolatry is a sinne that causeth shame, which is strongly signified by the Hebrew phrase, calling Idols by the name of dung, which should make us renounce them, with extreme contempt and detestation. See Deut. 7. 25, 26.

V. 26. Who is on the Lords side] By this he meaneth to distinguish those who were not guilty of the Idolatry, from those that were: (for all were not partakers of that abominable sin, 1 Cor. 10. 7. and of those that were, all were not guiltie in the same degree) that they might neither be slaine, which were innocent, nor that any such should side with, or assist the guilty against the execution intended; but rather separate from them.

all the sonnes of] It is probable that Aaron (the High-priest) being a sonne of Levi, had other Levites to joyne with him in setting up the golden Calfe, on whom these Levites, (who came together upon Moses Proclamation) did execution, vers. 29. But it is said, all the sonnes, &c. because the most of them were cleare from the sinne, and zealous to punish it; and that all the zealots, who assembled for this service, were Levites.

V. 27. slay every man his] Moses was a chiefe Magistrate, and Generall of this great Army; and so he had great power to punish hainous crimes with death: yet as in other extraordinary cases (Gen. 49. 7. Deut. 33. 9.) God turned the curse into a blessing. And though Moses prevailed for a reprieve of the people in generall; yet some, who were the forwardest in that wicked work, (for prevention of like impiety in future time) were to be made examples of terrour and caution to the rest. In this execution of the Levites, setting themselves in such an hostile opposition to all the offenders of every Tribe, (they being so many in number) there was an evidence of Gods over-awing power, and of the timorous guilt of sinne; that they did not take up Armes against them, for their owne defence: by such a divine vigour, were the people over-awed by our Saviour, when he whipped the buyers and sellers out of the Temple, Joh. 2. v. 15, 16.

V. 29. consecrate] To have bloudy hands, (in the cause and quarrell of God) by good warrant from him, is no defiling; but the hallowing or consecration of the person, who executes his vengeance. The word in Hebrew signifieth fill the hands, (for so it was at the consecration of the Priests) which in this place imports as much acceptation with God, as their consecration for the service of the Tabernacle.

every man upon his sonne, &c.] In revenging indignitie and dishonour to God, we must have no respect of man, of how neere relation so ever: our zeale for him must eate up all carnall affection to our neerest kindred, Deut. 13. 6. 9. & Chap. 33. 9.

V. 30. peradventure I shall*] Though Moses were a most gracious favourite of God, he would not take much upon him, in this Mediation: his humilitie towards God, and prudence towards men (who might have beene lesse fearefull to offend, if Moses had beene more confident of pardon) moved him, thus sparingly to speake; and indeed he might have cause to doubt of prevailing so farre, as he desired, on their behalfe, and as the event sheweth he did.

* 2 Sam. 16. 12. Amos 5. 15.

an atonement*] Zealous execution against hainous offenders, is a good meanes of Atonement betwixt God and man; and by this Atonement, he meaneth the staying of punishment; that God being satisfied with the sacrifice of the offenders, may forbeare to bring any further plague upon the people for that offence.

* Num. 25. 48.

V. 32. If thou wilt forgive] The words are passionately, or modestly suspended; the sense may be made up thus: If thou wilt forgive, thy mercy shall appeare to us, and we shall be thankfull to thee for it.

blot me] That is, rather then thou shouldest be dishonoured, and blasphemed by thine enemies, for destroying thy people, as vers.

verſ. 12. I could wiſh my name blotted out of the Book of life; that is, rather loſe my part in the life of a better world, at leaſt be cut off out of this by ſudden death: wherein he preferreth Gods glory before his owne ſafety; not wiſhing thereby the whole Doſe of damnation; (which conſiſteth not onely of eternall ſeparation from, but of eternall hatred and blaſphemy againſt him) or this great zeale might have ſome mixture of corrupt paſſion in it, which might cauſe him to ſpeake unadviſedly with his lips, Pſal.106.33.

V. 33. Booke] By a Book is here meant, no litterall Record, or Writing, but a figurative conformitie to the writing or recording of ones name in a Booke, (as many are) in favour, for honour or ſervice: and this may be underſtood of a temporall or eternall favour, either with limitation to this life, as that Moſes deſired rather not to live, then that all the people ſhould die that were involved in this ſinne: or with extent to the future; ſo he had rather loſe his intereſt in divine glory, then God ſhould be blaſphemed on this occaſion: both, or either of theſe he might meane by blotting out of Gods Booke; which phraſe we may underſtand by that we read, Luk. 10.20. where thoſe who are dearely beloved are ſaid to have their names written in heaven; and Dan.12.1. to be written in Gods Booke, which is called the Booke of life, Phil.4.3. Revel.22.19. on the contrary, thoſe he hateth are ſaid, not to be written there, Revel. 13.8. Pſal.69.28. or to be blotted out thence, as in the ſame place, and Revel.3.5.

V. 34. I will viſit] That is, if they provoke me againe to juſtice againſt them, I will remember this their iniquitie againſt me.

V. 35. * The Lord plagued] This is conceived by ſome, to be but a repetition of the plague, by the ſlaughter of the Levites, upon the people before mentioned: but it is more probable, that God afterwards (upon ſome new provocation) laid ſome plague upon them with remembrance of this Idolatrous tranſgreſſion.

Verſ. 1. Up hence] Not from the place where Moſes was with God: for that was upon the hill where God appeared, and Canaan was not up, or on high in reſpect of that; but it is meant of the place, where Moſes and the people were together before, and where they were to meete againe, when he came downe from the Mount; and he and they are thence bidden to goe up, becauſe the Land of Canaan was compaſſed with hils; ſo they that entered into it muſt paſſe up by the hils.

V. 5. into the midſt of] God threatens them, verſ. 3. that he will not goe up in the midſt of the people; here he threatens, I will come up into the midſt of thee: by the former he denieth his gracious preſence (in the Tabernacle, which was placed in the midſt of the Tents) for which Moſes intreateth the Lord, verſ.13. and after the worſhiping of the golden Calfe, removed quite out of the Campe, ver.7. but here he threateneth, that he will come among them with a vengeance, and ſuddenly conſume them, if their repentance prevent not their perdition.

and conſume thee] This Commination is propoſed, not as a peremptory denunciation of vengeance; but with an implicite condition of pardon to the penitent; and ſo it is ſet downe as a motive and preparation to repentance: and if ſo it prevaile, it may be a meanes of their preſervation: if not, they muſt expect this Commination to take effect.

* Put off thine ornaments] It it not fit that men ſhould pleaſe themſelves in outward pompe and adorning of their bodies, when God ſheweth himſelfe diſpleaſed with them.

* Verſ.4.6. 2 Sam.12.20. & Chap.19.24. Dan.10.3.

that I may know] That either I may ſhew mercy, if thou repent; or els puniſh, if thou perſiſt in thy ſinne; and that I may proportion my dealing with thee thereafter, as thou ſheweſt thy ſelfe to deſerve at my hands.

V. 7. the Tabernacle] Not that whoſe deſcription is ſet down, Chap 26. for that was not yet made, Chap.35. & Chap. 40. but ſome principall Tent, whether Moſes his owne, or what els, is not ſet downe: ſee Annot. on verſ.3. which might ſerve either for exerciſe of Religion, or for meetings for Civill matters.

of the congregation] So called, becauſe the people gathered together, or aſſembled at the Tabernacle, the place of publique worſhip, and of Oraculous direction. Or at leaſt came out and ſtood at the doore of their Tents, verſ 8.10. looking toward the Tabernacle (covered with the cloud) whither Moſes went to mediate betwixt the Lord and his people.

V. 8. roſe up and ſtood] The people were much affected with Moſes meſſage which he brought from God, which drew their eyes after him, and the more becauſe of the Tabernacles removall from the former to another place; but moſt of all becauſe of the coming down of the cloudy pillar, and Gods communing with Moſes at the doore of the Tabernacle; they the while ſtanding at their owne Tent doores, as unworthy to make any nearer approaches towards the place where God and Moſes met together.

V. 11. * face to face] Not that God hath a face or any ſuch parts as man hath, as hath beene noted on Chap.31. verſ. laſt; nor that Moſes could have a view of the eſſence of God, which is inviſible; but that he was pleaſed to ſpeake to him more familiarly, and more plainly then with others, and as one man ſhould ſpeake with another face to face, or mouth to mouth, Numb.12.8. Or beſides other more uſuall apparitions, as of the cloud and pillar of fire, he might conferre with him in humane ſhape, as he did with Abraham, Gen.18.

* Gen.32.30. Deut.34.10.

a young man] He is thought to be at this time about 46. years of age; or (as ſome reckon) fiftie, and ſuch in thoſe dayes were called young men, or youths; ſometimes boyes (as ſome render the word) by ſuch as were much their ancients, eſpecially if as yet they had no wives, (as Joſhua had not) and becauſe the younger ſort did uſually waite upon the elder; therefore waiters, young or old, were called by the name of young men or boyes; as becauſe Eunuchs were Court-officers, Court officers were called Eunuchs, though they were perfect men.

departed not] As being keeper of the Tabernacle in Moſes his abſence, and exerciſed there as his devotion and condition did require.

V. 12. ſend with me] God had ſaid, verſ. 2. he would ſend an Angel or Meſſenger before: here Moſes is inquiſitive who he was? and ſeems to be troubled that yet God had not revealed him unto him; eſpecially ſince God tooke ſuch particular notice of him, and profeſſed peculiar favour to him; and ſince the cloudy pillar did not now guide them, nor God appeare in the midſt of them, as formerly he had done.

by thy name] In the Scripture phraſe Gods favour to men is expreſſed by knowing of them, and their waies, as Pſal.1.6. as on the contrary, his diſpleaſure is ſignified, by not knowing them, as Matth.7.23. and knowing by name, implieth more acquaintance then by face, or ſight: for many know others ſo, whoſe name they know not; or cannot readily call to minde: and it is yet a further note of Gods favour to Moſes, that he was pleaſed to take eſpeciall notice of his name; and in his name to keep a memorandum of his tender care and compaſſion to Moſes, in his deliverance from drowning, when he was drawne out of the water, which his name Moſes ſignifieth.

V. 13. thy way that] Now God had altered his courſe in the guidance of his people, he deſires to know what way, or in what manner he meant to deale with himſelfe and the people: he prayeth that God would graciouſly conduct his people, as he had done, and that he might know he did ſo, by ſome undoubted evidence that he was preſent with him, and that he would ſhew himſelfe propitious to him, and to the people committed to his conduct.

grace in thy ſight] Theſe words are twice repeated in this verſe, verse, besides once more at the 16. verse: first, as an inducement to Gods further direction of Moses in the guidance of his people: secondly, as an effect of that favour, whereby it may appeare, he was accepted with God, and gracious in his sight.

that I may know thee] That I may experimentally prove how good thou art to thy people, who diligently secke after thee, and desire sincerely to serve thee.

V. 14. give thee rest] Not from journeying and labour; for yet the people were to be led on further by him, but from trouble of minde; so that amidst outward troubles and assaults of enemies, he should enjoy a tranquillitie of minde, in resting and reposing himselfe quietly in the confidence of Gods power and favour.

V. 15. if thou goe not] Moses had set his heart so affectionately on Gods presence, and was so prepared to presse his request unto him for it; that though God had granted what he had asked, he could not forbeare what he had before conceived to that purpose, which is set downe in this and the next verse.

V. 16. separated] That is, distinguished from other people, by thy benevolence to us, and thy giving us preeminence over them.

V. 17. I will doe this thing that] How gracious a favourite was Moses with God, how powerfull and profitable an Advocate for the people; when God is so ready to grant what he requests on their behalfe, as here (notwithstanding his threatening at the third verse) to promise not onely the conduct of his Angel, vers. 2. but a visible signe of his especiall presence among them.

V. 18. thy glory] Moses had found extraordinary grace with God, and he groweth more bold to advance in petition for more: and now he desireth to see, (not his essence, for that is invisible, 1 Tim. 6. 16. and Moses it is like, was not ignorant of it, but) his divine glory, as a glympse of that blessed vision of him, which God reserved for another life. It seemeth God spake with Moses by a sensible voyce, and that his presence was overshadowed with a cloud or darkenesse, so that his glory did not appeare; and therefore Moses desired the removall thereof, or that his glory might breake through it, and that he might see it, so farre as his condition of mortalitie was capable of it.

V. 19. my goodnesse to passe] Moses makes his demand of Gods glory, and he answereth him by his mention of his goodnesse; whereby he promiseth, that so much as is good and profitable for him to know, he will reveale unto him: Or, I will make (saith he) all my goodnesse to passe by: that is, I my selfe will passe before thee, and with my selfe all my goodnesse, and glory; but that is too much for thee to comprehend: it shall therefore passe, not stay for thee to gaze upon; passe before thee, that thou maist see a shadow of it behinde: and because in this state of defiled infirmitie and mortalitie, thou canst by the eye of sense discerne but little of mine excellencie, (whether for my goodnesse or glory) I will helpe the dimnesse of thy sight, by instruction of thine eare; and will proclaime my Name and Nature.

proclaime the Name] The Lord himselfe will utter his owne Name, & wil make mention of his Attributes: as Ch. 34. 5, 6, 7.

I will be gracious to whom I will] Among his Attributes his mercy is most glorious; and his mercy is the more glorious, in that he freely conferreth, and bestoweth it on whom he will, without any merit in any; and therefore it should passe without murmuring in all; for God is a most free Agent, and cannot come under any account for what he doth, or doth not. See Rom. 9. from vers. 16. to 23.

V. 20. not see my face] That is, thou canst not see me as I am, in my spirituall Majestie, which is altogether invisible; nor canst thou beare the brightnesse of that glorious apparition which accompanieth my presence, though I have talked with thee familiarly, as one friend doth with another, when they speake face to face. See the first Annot. on vers. 11.

No man see me and live] For my glory (if I should manifest it to the full) is too much for mans infirmity to apprehend, and it would astonish him so, as to make him as a dead man: see Revel. 1. 16, 17. Or if a man would see God, he must dye, and then he shall see (as it were) face to face, and know as he is knowne, 1 Cor. 13. 12. See the third Annot. on Gen. 32. 30. & on Exod. 24. 10. yet the very essence of God is still invisible.

V. 22. with my hand] Of Gods hand we must conceive as of his face: see Annot. on Vers. 11. and of his finger, Annot. on Chap. 31. vers. 18. God hid his glory from Moses his eyes, as if an hand had beene spread over his face to cover them.

V. 23. my back-parts] That is, when mine invisible glory is passed by, (wherein my Majesty most shineth, as beauty on the face) thou shalt see so much of my glory coming after it, as will be enough both for thy discerning, and for thy desire: and if God appeared in an humane shape at this time (as some conceive) he might see him behind as in the shadow, who in the brightnesse which went before, was too glorious an object for the eyes of any meere mortall man.

CHAP. XXXIIII.

Vers. 1. Hew thee] The former Tables were wholly of Gods framing, both for the matter, and the form; for God himselfe made ready the stony Tables to receive the writing; but here Moses prepared the Tables, and God wrote upon them, (as at the first) whereby he graciously received the people into favour again, restored them unto their precedent condition; yet this difference might mind them of their former miscarriage, which occasioned the breach of the former worke, which God immediately made; but now refused to repaire, renue, or to make wholly, as before. See Annot. on Chap. 31. 18.

like unto] God is constant to his Law, and so should his people be; neither taking upon them in any sort to alter it, nor by change of times or occasions, to hold themselves discharged from obedience unto it.

which thou brakest] God doth only mention, not blame the breaking of the Tables by Moses; whence may be collected, either that Moses did not amisse therein, or that God accepted of his zeale, and pardoned his errour. Here is no mention made of making of an Arke, wherein to lay the Tables; but it seemes God gave that in charge to Moses, at the same time, Deut. 10 1. to make an Arke of wood which served for that purpose, untill that more curious and glorious Arke was made, which was the principall furniture of the Tabernacle.

V. 3. not feed before] That which is said of the flocks and herds, was not for their sakes, who neither desire the sight of Divine secrets, nor could they sinne whatsoever they did; but it was to breed more reverence in the people, and to keep in their curiositie, and presumption in prying into what God would not have them know, whereto the proud corruption of their nature did too much prompt them. See 1 Sam. 6. 19.

V. 4. Mount Sinai] See the next Annot.

V. 5. there] This and the two next verses seeme to belong to Gods speaking to Moses, in the hollow cliffe of the rocke, mentioned in the former Chapter vers. 22, 23. though in the 2. & 4. verses, it seemeth God and Moses were upon the Mount when these words were spoken, and yet there also might these words, vers. 5, 6, 7. be uttered by God to Moses: for as he wrote the same words in the Tables, vers. 1. which he had written before; so he might repeat againe, what he had formerly spoken.

V. 6. long-suffering] Hebr. of wide nostrils For such as are so, doe more easily breath out the heat of their hearts and fervour of their spirits; and so are neither so vehemently angry, (for heat by restraint (as in a close oven) is more violent, then where there is vent) and are sooner appeased.

V. 7. for thousands] See Annot. on Exod. 20. 6.

and sinne] By so many words concerning sinne, God professeth the multitude of his mercies, as before by the number of persons; as if he had said, that he will pardon not only all sinners that soundly repent; but all sinnes of what kinds, or degrees soever, by what names or titles soever they be styled, upon mans heartie repentance, which is vertually included in the promise of pardon. See Matth. 12. 31, 32.

by no meanes] Though his mercy be much magnified, the wicked must not thereby be emboldened to offend; for he will not be so mercifull, as to restraine his justice from its proper worke on the wicked, Exod. 23. 7. & vers. 21. Josh. 24. 19. Job 10. 14. Mic. 6. 11. Nah. 1. 3. and he will be no meanes, that is, by no meanes prejudiciall to his justice, if they doe not make themselves capable of his mercy, by repentance of sinne for the time past, and reformation of life for time to come.

visiting the iniquitie] See Annot. on Exod. 20. 5.

V. 8. bowed the head] Though God be a Spirit, and therefore principally to be worshipped in spirit, Joh. 4. 24. yet man hath a body as well as a spirit, and he must glorifie him in both, 1 Cor. 6. 19. for both are his, and not only by right of creation, but of redemption also, as the same place of the Apostle plainly proveth.

V. 9. I pray thee] Moses found grace in Gods sight, and he improves all his interest in Gods favour for advantage of the peoples safetie, and prayes so much more importunately even for fortie dayes and fortie nights, as they were more ungratefull towards God, and himselfe more gracious with God; and he bends and bowes, and humbles himselfe so much the more, as they were more stiffe-necked and stout-hearted.

stiffe-necked people] God denyeth his presence, because they are a stiffe-necked people, Cha. 33. 3. but Moses desireth it upon the same ground: but for different reasons: God, because they had made themselves unworthy of such favour, and by abusing it might more provoke his anger to their own ruine; Moses desires his presence, the better to keepe them in awe and obedience, who otherwise would be like to be unruly: and therefore seeing the people are thus of nature, the Rulers have need to call upon God, that he would alwayes be present with his Spirit for their assistance, in resistance of their wilfull rebellions.

* for thine inheritance] * Psal.33.12. Zach.2.12.

V. 10. * I make a Covenant] That is, I renew my Covenant already made, or, I bind my selfe now to doe more then I have done; (which was as a new Covenant) this may be collected from the words following after.

before all thy people] They are called Moses his people, because committed to his government. See Annot. on Chap. 32. vers. 7.

marvailes, such] Both in the wildernesse, and in the land of Canaan, as the flowing of streames of water with a stroke out of the hard rock, Psal. 78. 20. blowing down strong walles with the breath of Rams hornes, Josh. 6. 20. making the Sunne and Moone stand still, Josh.10.13.

with thee] That is, with thy conduct of the people, or on thine and their behalfe.

V. 11. Amorite] See Annot. on Gen.34.30.

V. 12. take heed to thy selfe] Lest by making a league with Idolaters thou become an Idolater as they are, and so when they are cast out for their wickednesse, thou be unworthy to be received or continued in their stead.

* make no Covenant] * Chap.23.32. Deut.7.2.

V. 13. destroy] It is not enough to be no Idolaters our selves, but we must be zealous against the Idolatry of others, every man according to his interest in Gods cause, and the dutie of his place whereto God hath called him.

groves] Pleasant shady places, which they chose for their Idols.

V. 14. whose Name] By Name is meant God himselfe, as, The name of the God of Jacob defend thee, Psal.20. 1. So the next words (is a jealous God) doe shew.

Jealous] See the Annot. on Exod.20.5.

V. 15. they goe a whoring] The precedent words seeme to be directed to Moses alone, in the second person, now the second person is changed into the third: the meaning is, that Moses if he should make such a Covenant as a publique Governour, would include the people in the Covenant, and they by that meanes would be brought to goe a whoring after Idols; for Idolatry is spirituall whoredome, so in the 2. and 3. of Jeremie, and 16. of Ezekiel, and elsewhere; and that because there is a kinde of matrimoniall Covenant betwixt God and his people, as Hos. 2. 16. in which respect he is called a Jealous God in the precedent verse, and Chap.20. 5. and they that transgresse this Covenant, in turning their hearts from God to any creature of the world, are guiltie of adultery, Jam.4.4.

V. 16. * their daughters] * 1 King.11.2.

make thy sonnes] The weaker sexe may overcome the stronger, by temptations to Idolatry; therefore such unequall marriages are dangerous and to be declined. See Neh. 13.25.

V. 17. no molten gods] By this all Idolatrous representations are forbidden, as by graven images in the second Commandement: but the prohibition is here made rather by the name of a molten God; because the golden Calfe was such a one, Chap.32.4.

V. 18. unleavened bread] This and the other particulars, for the most part, from hence to vers. 24. are spoken of before, Chap.23. and have Annot. upon them.

in earing time and in harvest] Though tillage for an harvest, and harvest for mans sustenance be most necessary; yet the religious rest of the Sabbath, must not be broken for them, how much lesse for needlesse works or carnall sports?

V. 22. of weekes] That is, of seven weekes after the Passeover, viz. the Feast of Pentecost, Levit. 23.15. after 49. dayes, that is, a weeke of weekes, which is the fiftieth day.

V. 24. desire thy land] God will not only keepe others hands from spoiling thee; but will curbe the concupiscence of their hearts from desiring thy portion: because they shall have no hope, (if they attempt) to possesse it: so that thou mayst freely appeare, where he appoints thee, with assurance to finde all things in safetie at thy returne.

V. 27. these words] That is, the Ceremoniall precepts, which was accordingly done, when hee wrote the Booke of Exodus: but for the words of the Morall Law, God wrote them himselfe twice over, vers. 2. See the second Annot. on vers. 28. of this Chapter.

V. 28. fortie dayes, &c.] This remaining in the Mount was another fortie dayes from the former, Chap.24. 18. This miracle was to confirme the authoritie of the Law: and the like is observed of our Saviour before his publication of the Gospell, who fasted also fortie dayes and fortie nights, which both being miraculous, are no more to be followed by men then other miracles are. See Annot. on Exod.24.18.

he wrote] Some thinke God wrote the first writing, and Moses the second, which God seemes to command him, vers. 27. But see two Annot. on Chap.31. vers.18.

V. 29. Moses wist not] That is, knew not; for no man can see his own face but in a looking-glasse: or if he had seene it, it would seeme nothing to that glory which he saw of God when he passed by.

face shone] Moses desired to see Gods glory, Chap. 33. 18. Now he himselfe hath by the reflexe of the Divine splendour so much glory upon him, that others for feare, dare not looke upon him; how should he then, or any one else be able to comprehend the glory of the Divine Majestie, while he is in a condition of humane frailtie? Yet this makes for the honour of the Law, 2 Cor. 3. 7, 8. and for the honour of Moses who brought it to the people, who coming to them with this splendour upon him, was to be received as an Angel of God, Gal. 4. 14.

V. 30. * they were afraid] See Annot. on Exod.3.6. If his glory did so affright them, the Law might much more terrifie them, which in regard of mans transgression, (though in it selfe, holy, just, and good, Rom. 12.2.) wrought wrath, Rom.4.15. and that wrath condemnation, 2 Cor. 3.7. 9.

* 2 Cor.3.7. Luk.1.12.

V. 33. a vaile] To hide his face (whē he came as an intermediate Agent betwixt God and the people; for it may be this glory was not constant all times) because it was too glorious for the eyes of the people: how blind and base is our condition here, when it is not capable of a derivative glympse of Divine glory? and how incomprehensible is his Majestie, when a reflexive ray, or beame of his beautie, is too much for mortall men to looke upon?

V. 34. before the Lord] Which was in the Tabernacle or Tent of the Congregation. What that was, see Annot. on Chap. 33.7.

he tooke the vaile off] For though he were not capable of Gods glory, nor the people of his, yet his glory could be none occasion of terrour or amazement, since it was not so much as the least spark in the chimney to the Sunne in the firmament.

V. 35. with him] That is, with God.

put to death] The Sabbath is so often remembred, and upon such severe penalties imposed, because of the great importance of it to Gods glory, and mans good, and the proneness of our corrupt nature, either to forget it, or to profane it.

V. 3. kindle no fire] For any handy-worke, though for the framing of the Tabernacle: or, (as some expound) for dressing of meat, wherein the Sabbath was more strictly observed, then the first and last day of the Feast of unleavened bread, Exod. 12.16. though (in other respects) they were kept as precisely as the Sabbath: for though (according to our Saviours Argument in another case) that which is extraordinary, is usuallymore solemnly, reverendly, and respectively entertained; and there is more cost bestowed upon it, then on that which is ordinary; in this the case is otherwise; for, for the ordinary weekly Sabbath, there is a Commandement in the Decalogue, plainly and fully expressed, and by many Arguments pressed upon the conscience of the people, all written twice over by Gods own writing in the Tables of Stone, which cannot be said of any of the Anniversary Feasts: and when the chiefest of them, (which was the Passeover) light upon the weekly Sabbath, it was to be kept with more restraint, then if it had happened on another day; and then the libertie of dressing meat, or of kindling of a fire, to such a purpose, was to be forborne. Yet because the Sabbath was all the yeare long, and therefore (in Winter as well as in Summer,) and that in Winter little children, sicke or weake persons; yea and such as are reasonable strong could not comfortably persist, in the celebration of the Sabbath, without fire. It is not probable that all kinde of kindling of fire, to light a candle or to dresse meat, was forbidden on the Sabbath; but that such a kindling of fire as the duties of mercy and exigencies of necessitie required, was allowed; and though the Tabernacle were of much use for the solemne service of God, and there was very great cause, to hasten the worke: yet for that God would not give any allowance for any labour upon it; no not so much as for kindling of any fire to heat any toole, or melt any metall; and therefore is this strict prohibition brought in, as an Introduction of Caution, immediately before the preparation for the Tabernacle be presented.

V. 5. willing heart] God careth not for that which is given with grudging, 2 Cor. 9. 7.

V. 10. wise hearted *] Who was a skilfull and expert Artificer, especially for the curious worke, required for the framing of the Tabernacle.

* Vers. 25. 26. 31. 34. 35. & Chap. 31. 6. & 36. 1, 2.

V. 11. the Tabernacle] His Tent; and by Tabernacle is meant the whole, by Tent the curious and glorious part of it, and by Covering that which was spread upon it to preserve it: yet (sometimes) the covering over the principall Fabrick is called a Tent, Chap. 36. vers. 14. which is the covering of Camels haire put upon the Tabernacle.

V. 12. The vaile of the covering] Which hanged before the Mercy-seat, that it could not be seene. See Note on vers. 35.

V. 15. incense Altar] Chap. 30. 1.

V. 18. pinnes] These were sharpened in the lower part, and fastened in the ground, and they were to keepe the curtaines from whifling to and fro with the wind: the Pillars (which some Translations call Pinnes) also might be sharpened in like sort, that piercing deepe into the ground, they might support the Tabernacle with more firmnesse.

V. 22. and brought bracelets and earerings] If these were the same who before gave their golden earerings, to the making of the golden Calf, Ch. 32. 3. they now shewed themselves cordiall and reall converts, by this bountie to a better worke. If they were not the same, they were more religious towards God, and more wise in honouring him with their substance, and esteeming his service worthy of their most precious jewels.

V. 26. in wisdome] That were skilfull in spinning.

V. 28. and spice] Chap. 30. 23.

V. 29. by the hands of Moses] That is, the Lord gave a Commandement to Moses, concerning the framing of the Tabernacle, as it were delivering the worke into his hands, to be ordered by his appointment.

V. 34. may teach] So cunning and skilfull as to be Masters of their Art, able to instruct and teach others.

V. 35. a vaile of] That was the inward Vaile of the Tabernacle, dividing betwixt the Holy of Holies, (where the Arke was) and the other part called the Sanctuary.

CHAP. XXXVI.

V. 1. Sanctuary] By the Sanctuary, he meaneth here all the Tabernacle.

V. 2. * called Bezaleel] * Cha. 31. 2. They were endowed with gifts before, but that qualification did not warrant them to enter upon the publique worke, without a peculiar calling of Authoritie. See Exod. 18. 25. Act. 6. 3.

V. 3. every morning] Hebr. in morning in morning. That is, morning by morning, or every morning. By morning some conceive is understood the whole day artificiall, as Gen. Chap. 1. without any difference or distinction of houres: but in regard of the great forwardnesse of the people, it is like the former part of the day is meant.

V. 6. neither man nor] Both Sexes were imployed in preparing the Tabernacle: the women, in carding and spinning coloured wooll; and men in weaving their worke into a webbe of cloth, and other works.

restrained from bringing] Their liberalitie condemneth the backwardnesse of many, either to build an house to the Lord, or to uphold and repaire it, when it hath been built by others: and this restraint sheweth and blameth their fault, who thinke there cannot be too much bestowed on the outward magnificence and ornament of Temples or Churches.

V. 8. Cherubims] Which were little pictures, with wings, in the forme of children. See Annot. on Exod. 25. 18.

V. 10. fiftie loopes] Chap. 26. 10.

V. 14. Tent over the Tabernacle] The Tabernacle was a Tent, and is so called, vers. 18. but this Tent was a courser covering, to keepe it faire from offence of foule weather. See Annot. on Chap. 35. 11.

V. 19. above that] There were divers coverings of the most curious Tabernacle, one above another, to preserve it from the annoyance of raine and stormy seasons.

V. 20. standing up] To beare up the Curtaines of the Tabernacle.

V. 27. Westward] Or toward the Sea, which was the Sea called Mediterraneum, Westward from Jerusalem.

V. 29. coupled] Hebr. twined.

V. 30. every board] Hebr. two sockets under one board.

V. 33. middle barre] Of this barre there is no mention, in any precedent description of the Tabernacle; it seemeth to be a barre thrust through the middle of the boards; there were other barres, on the out-side, which were of use both to unite and strengthen them.

V. 35. a Vaile of blue] Which was betwixt the Sanctuarie and the Holiest of all.

Cherubims] See Annot. on vers. 8.

V. 37. hanging for] Which was betwixt the Court and the Sanctuarie.

needle work] Heb. The work of a needle worker, or, embroiderer.

V. 38. Overlaid their chapiters] That is, their heads, and knobs which were covered with golden plates, that nothing outwardly appeared on them but gold: but the pillars though they had gold upon them, were not wholly covered with it, but had, as it were, girdles or hoopes of gold, here and there; whereby they were rather adorned, then covered; for between these golden girdles, or couples, the wood was seene. It may seeme (by Chap. 26. vers. 37.) the pillars themselves were overlaid with gold; but in this 36. Chapter the particulars are more distinctly set downe, then in the 26. and therefore that verse is to be expounded by this, as in the present Annot. which is confirmed, Chap. 38. 17.

CHAP. XXXVII.

MAny of the particulars here mentioned are brought in before, Chap. 25. and Chap. 39. and there expounded.

V. 16. dishes] Chap. 25. 29.

to cover] Or, to poure out withall. The Hebrew word signifieth to cover, and to poure out: and in both senses these vessels called bowles, or covers, might be of use: for they might serve both to cover the Shewbread, and to poure out the drink-offering.

V. 4. unto the midst] So that the Gridyron, or grate was halfe so high as the Altar, and stood within it.

V. 8. || Looking-glasses] || Or, brasen glasses. Rab. Kimchi saith, that women brought their Looking-glasses, which were of brasse, or fine metall, and offered them freely unto the use of the Tabernacle. The words in the Originall, and other Languages, have nothing in them that signifieth glasse, but onely looking, or representing the looke, or to the lookes, which may be done in many sorts of metals; and for brasse in particular, it was the manner (not onely among the Jews, but other Nations) for women to dresse themselves by setting a piece of shining brasse, or some other piece of bright burnisht metall before their faces; as the manner with us, and many others is to use steeled glasses. See Plin. Nat. Hist. lib. 33. c. 9. These (notwithstanding their former fashion to trim themselves by them) they willingly gave up to the service of the Sanctuary, preferring therein Gods glory before their owne gracefulnesse.

assembling] Their Assembling to give up their desireable things to the service of God, was (according to the Originall reading) by troopes; so forward and free-hearted were they in their offerings, that they seemed to make haste, and as it were to strive who should come soonest with their gift.

V. 13. * East side Eastward] * Chap. 27. 13.

V. 21. summe of the Tabernacle] As an Inventorie of the particular furniture of the Tabernacle to bee kept by the Levites, and of the cost which was bestowed upon it, by the oblations of the people.

Levites] That the Levites might have the charge thereof, and minister in the same, as Eleazer and Ithamar, Num. 3. 4.

V. 42. * according to all] Signifying that in Gods matters man may neither adde nor diminish.

* Chap. 25.40. 1 Chron.28.19.

V. 43. blessed them] Whereby is not meant (as some take it) the consecration of the Tabernacle, and of the things that appertained to it, for that is done in the next Chapter: but the blessing of the people, for their forwardnesse and bounty, for the building and furnishing of the Tabernacle; and his blessing of them, was praising of them for what they did; and praying for them, that God would blesse them from his Sanctuary, for their good will and free-heartednesse to his Sanctuary.

CHAP. XL.

Vers. 2. THe first day] Of the first moneth, and the second yeare after their departure out of Egypt, vers. 17. after that Moses had beene fourtie dayes, and fourtie nights in the Mount, he came down and caused this worke to be done; which being finished, was set up in the moneth called Abib, which containeth part of March, and part of Aprill.

Tabernacle of the tent] See Annot. on vers. 6.

of the Congregation] Or meeting of the Priests and Levites, and people, according to the degrees of their approaches: for the High-priests had admittance where other Priests had not; and the Priests in respect of place, had a preeminence above the Levites, and they above the people who assembled in the Court of the Tabernacle; yet so as that they were all accounted as one assemblie: that is, where God (by his especiall presence) met with his assembled servants. See Annot. on Chap.29.42,43.

V. 4. set in order upon it] Which (every week) were to be renewed, and set in order. See Annot. on Chap.25.30.

V. 5. hanging] This hanging, or vaile, was betwixt the Sanctuary and the Court.

V. 6. Tabernacle of the tent] When the name Tabernacle and Tent are thus set down, (though they be so farre the same, that ye may call the Tent a Tabernacle, and the Tabernacle a Tent) the one may be taken for the curious piece of worke, which was so richly and so gloriously framed; the other for the covering that was upon it, vers. 10. to preserve it, as a type of Gods providence, and protection of his Church, Isa.4.6. See vers. 19.

V. 9. anoynt the Tabernacle] See Levit.8.10.

V. 10. the Altar] See Levit.8.11.

most holy] Heb. holinesse of holinesses.

V. 15. everlasting] So that their children succeeding should not need to be anointed againe, but approved in their office successively, by vertue of the first unction: and though onely the High-priest were particularly anointed in his personall succession; yet the Priesthood may be called everlasting in that sense, that other Leviticall ordinances are said to last for ever. See Annot. on Exod.12.14.

V. 17. * Tabernacle] * Num.7.1.

second yeare] That is, after they came out of Egypt, Num. 7. 1. so that they continued in the wildernesse a whole yeare almost before this Tabernacle was set up, and it was set up seven moneths after Moses came with his directions for it, from the Mount: for he came downe thence the twenty eighth day of the fifth moneth after their departure out of Egypt, from whence to the first day of the first moneth of the second yeare are seven moneths, which (with the five moneths before) make up a whole yeare, with which ends the story of the Booke of Exodus.

V. 20. Testimony] See Annot. on Exod.16.34.

V. 21. Vaile of the covering] See Annot. on Chap.35.12.

V. 22. Table] That is, the Table of the shew-bread.

V. 23. in order] See Annot. on Chap.25. vers. 30.

V. 27. he burnt sweet incense thereon] Moses for the present did that, which when the Tabernacle was finished, and the worship of it established in a settled course, belonged to the Priest.

V. 28. doore of] That is, between the Sanctuary and the Court.

V. 29. as the Lord commanded] At the 19. verse.

V. 32. they washed] Exod.30.20,21.

as the Lord commanded] These words in this Chapter are repeated [many times, as vers. 19. 23. 25. 27. 29. 32. to note what warrant Moses had for this curious worke, and how punctuall he was in performance of Gods command; and in the exact repetition of so many particulars, he sheweth that his historie is composed not for delight, but for truths sake, since these particulars have no allurement in them, to make a wise man willing so often either by his Pen to write them, or to read them, as they are written; being many of them, (saving for Gods command) matters of little moment.

V. 34. then a cloud] The pillar of the cloud, which was before upon the former Tabernacle, now (by a new miracle) removed to the new Tabernacle; so did the pillar of fire, shining with greater glory then before.

V. 35. not able] By reason of an astonishing reverence: and it may be also, the brightnesse of the glory might be some impediment to his sight, for a time; this was extraordinary; for if it had beene usuall, it would have hindered the holy ministration in that place.

V. 36. * went] Heb. journeyed. * Num.9.17.23.

V. 38. * For the cloud] Thus the presence of God preserved and guided them, untill they came to the promised Land. * Numb.9.15,16.

fire was on it] That was over it, so as to give light; not to cause any burning: and while the cloud stayed, the people stirred not; when it removed, they removed also, and went that way whereto it guided them. Thus is the Book of Exodus at an end (See Annot. on vers. 17.) in the yeare of the world, 2484. and of Moses his age, 81.

These Annotations ensuing, are the supplement of the omission of some part of the twentieth Chapter, by the errour of the Printer, formerly confessed, and promised here to be inserted.

V. 20. prove you] That is, to trie you, or discover you; how weake, how wicked, or well affected you are: whether you will obey his precepts, as you promised, or no: which probation or triall, is not for satisfaction to God, who knoweth man even to his thoughts, his thoughts afarre off, Psal. 139. 2. but to himselfe, and to others, for conviction, and correction when they did amisse.

that his feare] In the beginning of the verse, the people were forbidden to feare, and here they are required to feare: so here is a two-fold feare; the one a servile, or slavish feare, which starteth perplexedly at the apprehension of danger: the other, a filiall and awfull feare, composed of reverence and love: of the former, he saith, feare not; and of the latter, these words, That ye may feare, are understood.

that ye sinne not] Matth. 10.28. Gen.20.11. Albeit we should so obey God for pure love, that we should be obsequious unto him, though our disobedience were not dangerous to our selves; yet there must be a bridle from sinne, and a spurre unto vertue, as well as beneficence a baite to obedience, Isa. 1.19,20.

V. 21. thick darknesse,] Exod. 19.16.18. 1 King.8.12.

V. 22. * from heaven] Not from the highest heaven, but from the place where then he made demonstration of his especiall presence, which was upon the top of Sinai; or above that in the aire, which is sometimes called heaven: as Gen. 1.20. Job 35.11. Psal.79.2. Jer. 7.33.

* Deut.4.36. Neh.9.13.

V. 23. with me] That is, to be served together with me.

or deliverance to your selves, by serving of them.

Ye shall not make] See Annot. on vers. 4. God repeats again, his prohibition of Idolatry; wherein he discovereth his owne detestation of it, and mans disposition to commit it.

V. 24. * in all places where I record] Where he fixeth his solemne worship, for the memoriall and honour of his Name; as on Altars of earth, here of stone, vers. 25. Deut. 27. 5. Josh. 8. 31. of brasse, Exod. 38. 2. 2 Chron. 4. 1. in the wildernesse, in Canaan, in the Tabernacle or Temple; yet by divine instinct, and dispensation, sacrifice was sometimes offered up, in other places; as in Mispa, 1 Sam. 7. 9. and in Ramah, vers. 17. and else-where.

* Deut. 12. 5.

V. 25. * lift up thy toole] He meaneth this of such accidentall, and uncertaine Altars, as were made in severall places, upon severall occasions; afterwards when there was a certaine place of worship, it was ordained otherwise, Chap. 27. 1, &c. & 38. 1, 2.

* Deut. 27. 5. Josh. 8. 31.

thou hast polluted it] Curiositie in Gods service against his command, is not an ornament, but a defilement: so the flourishes of Rhetorick, when they are brought in, as a necessary garnish to the word of God, to make it gracefull (as if it were of none operation, or worthy of no acceptation with them) are but as a garland of weeds, neither gracefull to the sight, nor sent. See 1 Cor. 1. 17. & 12. vers. 4.

V. 26. Not goe up by steps] This was for a time onely; for afterwards there was an Altar made, not onely of the height of three cubits, Exod. 27. 1. but ten cubits high, 2 Chron. 4. 1. with staires, Ezek. 43. 17. yet it is thought by some, the going up unto it was not by steps, or staires, but by a continued ascent raised so high, from the lowest place neare unto it, without any degrees marked out proportionably, one above another.

nakednesse be not] Which might be, by the stooping of his body and flying abroad of his cloathes: for men wore garments open below, against which inconvenience when Altars were set higher, linen breeches were prescribed, Exod. 28. 42, 43.

ANNOTATIONS
ON THE THIRD BOOKE OF MOSES, called according to the Greeks and Latines Leviticus, but in Hebrew the name is given it from the first words where with the Booke beginneth, which is Vaiikra; that is, and the Lord called.

The Argument.

THe Name Leviticus, most received in Translations, noteth a principall part of the Contents of the Book, which is the function of the Levites; Who in the generall are all the Sonnes and male-descendents of the Patriarch Levi; but the office of the Priest being confined to the line of Aaron, the other Levites of the posteritie of Cohath, Merari and Gershom (Who were the sonnes of Levi) Were distinguished from them, as ministeriall Assistants from the principall Agents in the sacrifices and other services of the Sanctuary; so that though all the Priests were Levites by their parentage; all the Levites were not Priests by their office; for all but those of Aarons Family were distinguished from them, and subordinate to them in the Priestly ministration; which take up most of the first part of this Booke; Whereto are added divers rites and rules concerning the sanctification of the people from pollution both outward and inward; and of the place where, and times when Gods solemne service was to be performed; together With promises and threatnings to quicken men to an holy care of keeping of the whole Law. The book was indited by God, and delivered to Moses in the second yeare of the peoples departure from Egypt, in the yeare of the world, (as some reckon) 2455. (as others) 2514. and it appeareth (by comparison of the beginning and end of Leviticus, With verse 15. of the last of Exod. and with Numb. 1. 1.) that it was begun and finished in a moneth, to wit, the first moneth of the second yeare before mentioned. Of this Booke, Hierom in an Epistle to Paulinus, saith thus: Leviticus is a Booke at hand, in which every sacrifice, yea almost every syllable, and the garments of Moses and Aaron, and the whole Leviticall order breathe heavenly Sacraments; so that none may Wonder, if from thence we shall observe mysticall senses.

CHAP. I.

Vers. 1. AND the LORD] The close of the last Chapter of Exodus is how the cloud of the Lord was on the Tabernacle by day, and that fire was upon it in the night in the sight of all the house of Israel, throughout all their journeyes: and after the description of the Tabernacle, and the things appertaining to it, fitly followeth (by orderly connexion) the story of the Leviticall Priesthood, for the service thereof: and therefore it beginneth with And. See the Note on Chap. 1. vers. 1. of Exod.

the LORD called] With an audible voyce; whereby it appeareth that Moses was first instructed by the Lord himselfe, before he delivered these ordinances to the people. See 1 Cor. 11. 23.

out of the Tabernacle] Or Tent, from the Mercy-seat, Moses being without it; for he could not enter into it when it was covered with a cloud, and filled with the glory of it, Exod. 40. 35.

of the Congregation] See Annot. on Exod. 40. 1.

V. 2. cattell of the herd] By which is meant the greater sort of cattell; as oxen, kine, and heifers, and of the flock, by which the lesser cattell is meant: in particular, sheepe and goates, vers. 10. which were equally acceptable to God under the Law: (though in the Gospel by sheepe are signified the Elect, by goats Reprobates, Matth. 25. 32, 33.) because to man they were of most use for his sustenance and maintenance, both for food and raiment; that thereby he might professe his dependance upon God for both; and his preferring of Gods glory before his owne benefit, in giving them up in sacrifice to him, Chap. 22. 18. And these creatures were the rather to be served up (in sacrifice to him) in opposition to the Idolatrous respect which the Egyptians had of them: whereof see Note on Gen. 46. 34.

V. 3. burnt-sacrifice] All the cattell that were offered in sacrifice, were usually burnt: and therefore they might all be called burnt-sacrifices: but this rather then any, because it was wholly burnt; nothing saved of it but the skinne, Levit. 7. 8. of the Greeks called Holocaust, that is, wholly burnt.

a male without blemish] A male, because that is the worthier sexe; without blemish, that is, the best and perfectest in his kind: see Annot. on Exod. 12. 5. to signifie the perfection of the person, (whereof this sacrifice was a type, 1 Pet. 1. 18, 19. & 2. 22.) and that God the Creator is worthy to be served with the best of his creatures. See Note on Gen. 4. 4.

voluntary will] There were other oblations which were not left free to a mans owne choyce, but were prescribed by expresse precept; as that of the first-borne, Exod. 22. 29. besides others: yet none of them were to be offered against the will, but with a good will: for God loveth a chearefull giver, 2 Cor. 9. 7.

at the doore of] Within the Court of the Tabernacle, and neere unto the doore of it, where it was to be presented before it was offered upon the Altar. For that part of the Tabernacle next

1.16. East part] In reverence to the divine majesty; as far from the Ark of the Testimony as might be, the same standing Westwards, in the Holy of Holies. Ainsworth. Dutch Anot.

next to the doore was for the assembly of the people, the inner part neere to the doore of the Tabernacle, where the Altar stood, was onely for the Priests and Levites, whither the people might not come: This Tabernacle was a Type of Christ, Heb. 9.11. by whom all services as by a doore, have passage to, and acceptance with his heavenly Father.

V. 4. put his hand] See Annot. on Exod. 29. 10. Chap. 3. 28. & 4.15. & 7.30.

burnt-offering] The Greeke word, which the Latines also use in this and the foregoing verse, signifieth a whole burnt offering; because all of it was burnt except the skinne, and in some cases that also. The Hebrew word Olah, or Gnolah, tends to the same sense; for it is so called from ascending; because it ascended up to God in flame and fume; and none of it was reserved for a portion to the Priests, or to him at whose cost the sacrifice was brought; and this signified that a man was wholly to give up himselfe to God both body and soule, with all the parts of the one, and faculties of the other; and in both these respects, that is, of proprietie to God, and integritie to man, it had the preheminence above all other oblations of the Law.

to make an atonement for him] The same sacrifice was offered up for divers ends, as this burnt-offering to expresse gratulation for good received, Psal. 51. vers. 18, 19. and to procure pardon and remission for sinne committed, Job 1.5.

V. 5. he shall kill] That is, he that brings it, not by himselfe, but by the Priest, (for one may be said to doe that, which another doth for him, or in his name, Joh. 4.1, 2.) whose usuall office it was to performe sacrifice, to sprinkle the bloud, with an implied confession that the partie who brought the sacrifice deserved to have his owne bloud spilt, and supplication to be spared from death for his passions sake; whereof this bloud shed was a figure, which represented Christ, Heb. 9. vers. 13, 14. By sprinkling this bloud then above the Altar, might be signified the offerers acknowledgement of his guilt of the bloud of Christ; and withall the killing of the sacrifice for him, was an instruction unto him, to mortifie all his carnall lusts and affections: as Gal. 5.24.

Altar] Of the burnt-offering, Exod. 27. 1. Chap. 3. 2. 8. 13.

V. 6. he shall slay] That is, the Priest to whom it belonged by ordinary dutie to do it, though upon extraordinary occasions the Levites assisted in that service, 2 Chron. 29 34.

V. 7. put fire] The fire that kindled the sacrifice at first, came down from heaven, Levit. 9. 24. that fire once kindled, was to be continually nourished with fire, that it might never goe out: any fire but that was accounted strange fire: and to bring strange fire, to burne either sacrifice or incense, was impious, and perillous; as the example of Nadab and Abihu sheweth. This putting of fire then upon the Altar, was either a continuance of fire by putting more fewell unto it, and laying the wood in order upon it; or it was the laying of the fire on the Altar againe, when it had been removed, for the taking away the ashes, (when it was too full of them) that it might be cleansed: and this fire was not onely instrumentall to burne the legall sacrifice; but typicall to signifie the zeale of the Evangelicall Sacrifice, Jesus Christ; whose zeale for his Fathers glory, did eate him up, Joh. 2. 17. and gave him up for his brethrens safetie, to death, upon the Altar of the Crosse, which is as violent and painfull death, as by burning with fire.

V. 9. but the inwards] By which some understand all the intrailes, even to the guts, which emptied, and cleane-washed, were to be put into the Lambe againe; others conceive, that by the inwards, must be understood onely the heart and liver, and such inward parts, as were eaten by men, out of sacrifice: for as such creatures only were sacrificed, as served for the sustenance of man: so such parts of them were excepted from sacrifice as did not usually serve for food; for which cause the holocaust, or whole burnt-offering, was not burned with the skin, Levit. 7.9. and in that respect the Altar might be called a Table, Mal. 1.12. not onely because Gods provision was laid upon it, but because men many times feasted on the portions reserved from it, 1 Cor. 10.18.

wash in water] This signifieth the cleanenesse and puritie that was in Christs Sacrifice, and of that which should be, Heb. 10. 22. in our services to God, which are sacrifices, as having reference to God, though they be immediate beneficences to men, Heb. 13.16.

unto the LORD] A savour of rest, which pacifieth the anger of the Lord; and maketh it rest and be still, Ezek. 16. 42.

V. 11. Northward] The Tabernacle Doore, and Altar were so situate, or placed, that on the North side, there was more space for such acts, as required most roome, as the killing and dressing of the sacrifices did.

before the LORD] Before the Altar, at the doore of the Tabernacle, where the Lord was pleased to afford his speciall presence.

V. 12. on the wood] Or, on the grate over the wood. See Exod. 27. 4.

V. 13. wash the inwards] The inward affections are to be cleansed from sin, and so are the outward actions, noted by the legges wherewith men walke in their open conversation. See Ezek. 36.25. Joh. 13.5.10.

V. 14. turtle doves] That Bird in Hebrew is called Tur, from meditation, because that the Turtle seemes to sit as one that meditates on serious matters; and to mourn for some mishap or affliction. Of Birds, Turtle-doves, and young Pigeons were chiefly offered, Levit. 14.4. though there they be not particularly named; and of them the Turtle was the best for kind, the young the best for time: this was the oblation of the poore, who were not of abilitie to offer a Lambe. Levit. 12.8. there is no mention either of Turtle, or of Pigeons. These were offered rather then Hens or Capon, because their feeding is more cleane then household-birds; and rather then Partridges, though they be dainty meate, because they are more hardly come by, then Doves, who love to lodge in houses, as men doe.

V. 15. wring] wring off his head. So Levit. 5. 8. Some thinke it was enough to pinch the Bird in the head to death, and that the neck was not to be wrung off, but that were a kinde of strangling, (whereby the blood was kept in, that should be let out) which was not admitted, either in meats or sacrifices; besides, the Text saith, it was to be burned, (and it seemes) by it selfe; but that could not be, if it were only pinched and not wrung off.

side of the Altar] Hebr. upon the wall of the Altar. For it had a wall of boards about it.

V. 16. his crop with his feathers] See a reason hereof, Annot. on vers. 9.

East part] Of the Altar towards the doore of the Court, for the more reverence and decency of the Tabernacle.

V. 17. not divide it asunder] So some conceive the wings were to be divided, not the body of the Birds, but that was to be opened long-wise, as not to be cut cleane through, nor to be cut in pieces, or parted asunder, as other sacrifices were. They that by Birds understand heavenly-minded persons (for the fowles are called the fowles of heaven, Job 35. 11. and the Turtle or Dove is noted, as most representing the condition of such) observe that such should not be divided by Schismes or Factions, or distracted by secular cares. See Annot. on Gen. 15. 10. But especially in their devotions, (which are spirituall sacrifices) their intentions and affections should be wholly fixed upon that holy object, to which of dutie they are to be directed.

CHAP. II.

Vers. 1. Meat-offering] The burnt-offering was not offered without the Meat-offering. Numb. 15. 4. 7. 10. But that was legally prescribed, and so of dutie; this was voluntary at the Offerers choise: besides, that was limited, for the measure; (in the place fore-cited) this was left to the free-will of the Offerer, to make the proportion. The word in the Originall, which some Translations take up, is Mincha, and it is taken for Oblation of things without life, as Bread, Meale, Wine, Salt, Oyle: and of such things Oblations were made for many Reasons. 1. Because God, as he was the giver of these, as well as of the other creatures; so he was to have a tribute of these, as well as of the former sort. 2. Because the poorer sort might have opportunitie more often to exercise their Devotion to God in the Service of his Sanctuary. 3. Since they that wait on the Altar, were to live on the Altar; and such particulars were of use to that purpose, as well as they. 4. Because Gods Altar had a conformitie to a Table, Mal. 1. 7. 5. By this the poore were to make thankfull acknowledgement of their portion to God, as well as the rich; and for mysticall signification, this Free-will offering did signifie the freenesse of Christs offering himselfe in sacrifice to God, Joh. 10. 15 17. Hebr. 10. 7.9. in conformitie whereto, Christians ought freely to offer up themselves a living Sacrifice, Rom. 12.1.

of fine floure] Without any mixture of branne, for God is worthy to be served with the best of each kinde; contrary to the practise of covetous hypocrites, Malach. 1.14.

oyle upon it] Oyle was used for meat, 1 King. 17. 12. for medicine, Luk. 10. 34. for ornament to make the face to shine, Psal. 104.5. for lamps to burne, Exod. 25.6. In which respect it might typifie Christ, who is called oyle, Esa. 10. 27. though the word be rendred anointing; for he is meat, and medicine, and ornament, and illumination, and all unto his people that is good for them: It is put also, for the holy Ghost and his gifts, Psal. 45. 7.

frankincense] The chiefe use of that was to make a sweet smell, and so it was the fitter to signifie the sweet odour of our Saviours sacrifice, Eph. 5.2. without whom truly apprehended by faith, and sincerely served without hypocrisie, all Religious services are unsavoury, though offered with the sweetest Incense, Esa. 1.13. Jer. 6.20.

V. 2. burne the memoriall of it] A part of this Meat-offering, ing, (about an handfull) was to be burnt as a remembrance and intimation of the whole, that was given to God; whereof though part were burned, the rest remained for sustenance of Gods servants. Levit. 6. 16. and consequently for the maintenance of Gods service; and in giving that portion so unto God, the whole stocke was acknowledged as a gift from God.

V. 3. most holy] Hebr. holinesse of holinesses. The Hebrews emphatically expresse things, by doubling the Noun, and changing the Number, as King of kings, Revel. 17. 14. that is, a most powerfull King; Servant of servants, Gen. 9. 25. that is, a most vile and contemptible Servant. Song of songs; that is, a most excellent Song; and Heaven of heavens, that is, the highest and most glorious heaven. So are such Sacred things called in the Law which none might touch, or which none might eate of, but the Priest, and that in the holy place, neere the Altar; Levit. 6.26. & Chap. 7. vers. 6. & Chap. 10. 12. and of other common Sacrifices the Priests part might be brought home to his house, and there eaten by his Wife, Children, and the rest of his Family.

V. 4. baked] The former offering was of Meale not hardened by the fire, this is of meale made into bread, either baked in an oven, or in a pan, or plate, as some conceive in the Sanctuary, because of that is said, Ezek. 46. 20. -- & 1 Chron. 23. 28, 29.

V. 6. in pieces] Because part was to be offered to God, and part reserved for the use of man, to wit, of Aaron and his sonnes, vers. 10.

V. 11. no leaven] This was not generall: for at Oblations of first fruits, such as were the wave-loaves, Levit. 23. 17. and at oblations of thanksgiving, leaven was admitted, Levit. 7. 13. yet the unleavened bread was more pure, and it served also, to renue the memory of the Israelites miraculous deliverance out of Egypt, when they went away in such hast, that they had not leisure to leaven their bread, Exod. 12. 34. and it was more meet to represent our Saviour, the bread of life; for hypocrisie is signified by leaven, Luk. 12. 1. and the want of leaven signifieth sincerities, 1 Cor. 5. 8. Besides these Religious reasons, some alleadge certaine Physicall considerations of leaven, as that it puffeth up the belly, and if it should be burned, would be more unsavory in the smell: but the former reasons may suffice.

hony] Hony (as some thinke) was forbidden to be offered by the people of God, because it hath the operation of leaven; some, because the Gentiles used it in oblations to their Gods: and though they used salt in their sacrifices also, yet that was not forbidden, but prescribed, vers. 13. because salt preventes putrefaction, and makes that which is eaten with it more savoury to the taste; or because, where leaven is forbidden, there the bitter bondage of the Israelites is to be remembred, according to the precedent Annotation; wherefore unleavened bread and bitter hearbs are joyned together, Exod. 12. 8. wherewith the sweetnesse of honey doth not suit, by which also (as some of the Ancients expound it) is signified the delight of the flesh: yet of both there might be an offering to the Priests, as the next words imply.

V. 12. not be burnt] But reserved for the Priests, Numb. 18. 13. yet the meat-offering made by, and for the Priests themselves, was to be wholly burnt, and none of it eaten, Levit. 6. 23.

V. 13. salt] Salt gives a pleasant seasoning to meats, and keeps them from corrupting; By that the incorruption of communication is noted, Colos. 4. 6. yea and the soundnesse of the minde and manners, Mark. 9. 50.

of the Covenant] Which they were bound, as by Covenant, to use in all sacrifices, Num. 6. 18. 19. Ezek. 43. 24. Mar. 9. 49. Or it meaneth a pure and sure Covenant, to indure while these Leviticall Ordinances were to last; for salt is a preservative from corruption, therefore a durable Covenant, is called a Covenant of salt, 2 Chron. 13. 5. and the state of corruption is said to be unsalted, Ezek. 16. 4.

V. 14. meat-offering] The Hebrew word signifieth a gift in generall; but use hath so restrained it to this kinde of gift in particular, that some Translations retaine it; the English renders it meat-offering by way of distinction, chiefly from holocausts or whole burnt-offerings, of which no part was reserved for the Priests; and consisted principally of such things as served for meat, and wanted life; as of bread to eate, cakes, wafers, &c. and salt to season, of oyle, of which some kinds served for meat, some for perfume, (as Frankincense did) whereby the anoynting of Christ was signified, 2 Cor. 1. 21. 1 Joh. 2. 27.

greene eares] This was the third sort of Oblation made of corne, the last in worth, but the first in nature, and in time; for it was of the Barley harvest: whereby the people were to learne, that which way soever they made use of their corne, God was to have a tribute of honour, and the Priest a portion of it for his support in the service of the Sanctuary.

V. 16. burne the memoriall] That is, the thing offered for a memoriall, by a figure called a Metonymia. See Annot. on vers. 2.

CHAP. III.

Vers. 1. Peace-offering,] Sacrifices of thanksgiving offered for Peace, (by which word the Hebrews signifie all prosperitie;) and those either generally, or particularly; for there were generall sacrifices for all, and particular for Prince, or Priests, or the people by themselves; and some of them were for reconciliation, when God was offended for sinne; Judges 20. 26. 1 Chron. 21. 26. and some for thanksgiving, when he was at peace with them, and pacified towards them: the former were first offered, for no works or service can be acceptable with God, unlesse an expiation and reconciliation for sinne goe before, and by these Peace-offerings are signified: 1. Christ his Oblation of himselfe, as bearing upon him the chastisements of our peace, Jer. 53. 5. and so becoming our Peace-maker with God, Matth. 3. last. Eph. 2. 14. and 2. the Sacrifice of Praise, which was fit to be joyned with an offering for Peace, that so while we beg new grace we may shew our selves gratefull for former favours: And the Hebrew writers conceive, they were called Peace-offerings, because part of them was offered to God, part was given to the Priest, and part to him who brought it to be offered; signifying an agreement among all who were at it, and were sociably partakers of the same thing.

V. 2. at the doore] That is, where the brasen Altar was, on the East side of the Court; wherein they differ from whole burnt-offerings and sin-offerings, which were offered on the right side of the Court, or towards the North, Levit. 1. 11. & 6. 21, 25. & 7. 2. and the reason of it is, because part of the Peace-offering, to wit, the fat and breast were to be waved before the Altar, upon the hands of him that came to offer it, Levit. 7. 30. and he himselfe to offer it to God, and the Priest was to take it out of his hand; and it was not lawfull for the people to come into the Priests Court, therefore the offering was to be made at the entrance of the Court, whither they might come; and it was to be offered here, because it was not of the most holy things of which only the Priest did eate, (for he that offered it ate a part of it.)

V. 3. of the peace-offering] That is, part of the Peace-offering, for of this sacrifice one part was burnt, another was reserved for the Priest, and the third belonged to him that brought it; for the right shoulder, and the breast, Levit. 7. 30. with the two jawes, and the mawe, were the Priests; and the rest his, at whose cost the oblation was made, Lev. 7. 15, 16. and hence it was, that in this offering Turtle-doves, and young Pigeons were not permitted to the poorer sort to offer, as they were in the whole burnt-offering, because in them being so small, this division could not conveniently be made.

the fat which covereth the inwards] The fat as the best of the Sacrifice, is offered up unto the Lord, and so teacheth, that the best is still to be given him.

V. 4. the two kidneys] It was not sufficient to sacrifice the eare, or foot, or any outward part, which might be parted without losse of life; but the inward parts must be offered, without which the creature cannot live; because the persons for whom the sacrifice was offered, deserved death; and without the death of Christ, could not be redeemed; and the sacrificing of these inward parts, signifying the mortifying of the inward lusts and affections of the flesh, Gal. 5. 24. having their root in the reines or kidneys; they are therefore here mentioned, for more serious consideration of that part.

V. 6. male or female] In the Peace-offering it was indifferent to offer either male or female, which might be accepted here; because these are by way of thanksgiving for externall blessings, but in whole burnt offerings, only the male as the chiefe. Chap. 1. 3. See Chap. 4. vers. 32. where a female is expressely prescribed, as also Chap. 5. vers. 6. ℣ 28

V. 8. upon the head] See Annot. on Exod. 29. 10.

V. 9. the whole rumpe] Even to the back-bone, over against the reines or kidneys (as the Hebrew Text importeth.) This was peculiar to the peace-offering, of a sheepe, a lambe, or ram; but if the peace-offering were an oxe or a goate, it was not so. The offering of the rumpe some interpret to be an intimation of perseverance to the end; but it rather sheweth that there is not the meanest part of the creature, but God hath a right unto it; and that be a thing never so contemptible in it self, God can make it honourable by applying it to his service, in sacrifice, as here; in a Sacrament, as in Circumcision, Gen. 17.

V. 11. the food] Heb. bread. Whatsoever is burned may be said to be food to the fire which devours it; but the sacrifice is called food or meat, in respect of God, who takes delight in it as a man doth in his meate, when he is refreshed by it: See Mal. 1. 12. which sets forth Gods love, who reckons himselfe as a guest at their feasts.

V. 13. before the Tabernacle] At the doore of the Tabernacle.

V. 16. all the fat is the LORDS] It is certaine that the fat fat of uncleane beasts neither ought, nor could be consecrated to the Lord, nor of cleane beasts which might not be used in sacrifice, as Harts, and wild Oxen; and it is certaine, that the fat that is mixed with the flesh of cleane beasts, they might eat, Deut. 32.14. for they were onely forbidden the fat which covereth the inward vitall parts; to wit, the heart, liver, lungs, kidneys, and small guts with a continued net or caule, and so might easily be separated from the other flesh. And this fat was so strictly forbidden to the Jewes, that they might in no case eate it, no not if they killed their beast at home; for it is called a law to them in all their dwellings, and joyntly forbidden with bloud, which they might not eate in any case, any where. But this some understand onely of the fat of goats, sheep, and oxen, as Josephus saith in his third Booke of Antiquities, Chap. 10. That cleane beast which might not be offered unto God, they might eate its fat; but the fat of them that might be offered to God, they might not, and that upon paine of death, Levit. 7.25. But if the beast were killed at home, the fat ought not to be consecrated to the Lord, because it is no where commanded; but as the bloud was to be poured on the ground, so was the fat to be burned with a profane fire, unlesse haply they might use it to make candles of it, or to other profane or common, but honest uses; as is granted, in almost the like case, Levit. 7. 24.

V. 17. neither fat nor bloud] These two are prohibited as not wholesome enough to be mans meate, (as some conceive;) and though they be both forbidden together, yet it is with this difference, that not all fat is forbidden to be eaten, Neh. 8. 10. but onely the fat of the oxe, or sheepe, or goat offered in sacrifice, Levit. 7.23. (and this chiefly, the fat of the inwards) or of beasts that die of themselves, or are torne of wilde beasts, vers. 24. and the fat was the fitter for sacrifice, because it would soone take fire, and goe up in the flame; but for bloud, that was more generally forbidden, Levit. 17.14. 1 Sam. 14.32,33,34. which might be, first, for distinction of the Jews from the Heathens, who used to drink the bloud of their sacrifices: secondly, for morall admonition against crueltie: thirdly, for mysticall intimation of reverence to the bloud of our Saviour, signified by the bloud-shedding of the sacrifices; as David would not drinke of the water of the well of Bethlehem, but poured it out in an offering before the Lord, because it was equivalently (as he called it) the bloud of those who fetched it with the perill of their lives, 2 Sam. 23.17.

CHAP. IIII.

Vers. 2. [I]Gnorance] Either of the Law, or of the fact, which a man is bound to know, and may know; for ignorance in sinne is no securitie against punishment; it may sometimes extenuate a sinne; but it cannot annihilate it, or take it wholly away, nor procure a totall impunitie to the sinner, Luk. 12.48. and if it be wilfull ignorance, it doth rather aggravate the guilt, then abate any part of it: to these sinnes of ignorance may be referred sinnes of infirmitie, proceeding from inconsideration, when a man is suddenly overtaken in a fault, Gal. 6. 1. and it is probable it extends not to all in generall; but such for which the conscience would more likely be touched; for of ordinary deviations there was an expiation by the daily burnt-offerings for the whole Church, and the sacrifice of the day of Atonement, Levit. 16.30.

V. 3. that is anointed] Meaning the High-priest, as the Chaldee, and Seventie render it, anointed with that soleran oyntment, Exod. 29.7. and he onely in the ages following was anointed, Levit. 21.10. Anointed is especially mentioned, because for any sinne committed before anointing, a peculiar oblation was not required; but onely such a one as was offered for the Prince, or one of the people.

sinne] This taught them they must looke for another Mediatour which had no need of an offering for sinne, but could make a perfect atonement betwixt God and them, Hebr. 7. 26,27,28.

according to the sinne of the people] That is, if as he is a man, not as a Priest, he sinne, as others of the people doe, as being subject to the like passions as others are, as Act. 4.15. Heb. 5. 2, 3. or so sinne according to the sinne of the people, as scandalously to draw others to sinne, or to incourage them in sinne by his corrupt teaching of the Law.

sinne-offering] This differs from a peace-offering; because in this the offerer had no part; but the fat and kidneys, and bloud being offered to God, or burned; the rest came to the Priest; for they were altogether holy to God, and so could not be carried out of the holy place by any but the Priests; nor eaten any where but in the holy Court, Chap. 6. 26. (whence the Priests were said to eate the sinnes of the people) and this onely in sacrifices for the sinne of private men, or publique Princes; for those which were offered for the High-priest, or all the people, the fat and bloud being offered in the holy Court, were wholly burned without the Campe, for the greater horrour of greater sinnes: but in peace-offerings the third part returned to him that offered them. Secondly, the sinne-offering was to be made away the same day it was offered; but the peace-offering in some cases might be set aside till the morrow, Chap. 7. 13. Thirdly, in peace-offerings might be used oyle and frankincense; but not in sin-offerings, because they make for delight and pleasure, which were to be farre from a repenting sinner. Lastly, it was peculiar to the sin-offering that the bloud of the sacrifice was put upon the hornes of the Altar; but with this difference, that in the sacrifices for the sinne of the High-priest, or of all the people, (the bloud whereof was brought into the Sanctuary) the bloud was put upon the hornes of the Incense Altar, v.7. but in others, upon the Altar of burnt-offering, vers. 25. Of the difference betwixt a sin-offering and a trespasse-offering: see Annot. on Chap. 7. v. 1.

V. 4. kill the bullocke] Hereby confessing that he deserved the same punishment which the beast suffered.

V. 5. the Priest that is anointed, &c.] Here the sinner himselfe, Heb. 7. 27. is ordered to bring the bloud of his sin-offering into the Tabernacle, which was not yet enjoyned in any sacrifice. This typified our way opened into heaven by the bloud of Christ, Heb. 10.19,20.

V. 6. sprinkle of the bloud seven times] A mysticall number, signifying our perfect cleansing from sinne by the sprinkling of Christs bloud, Heb. 9. 13,14. and that our sins require much purgation, Psal. 51.2.

the vaile of the Sanctuary] Which was betwixt the Holiest of all and the Sanctuary, called usually Parocheths in the Hebrew, Levit. 16.2. to distinguish it from the other vaile at the entrance of the Tabernacle, called Masach, Exod. 26.36.

V. 11. the skinne of the bullocke, and his flesh] In this, and the sin-offering for the whole Congregation, wholly burned without the Campe, the Priest did eat no part, Levit. 6.30. (though he did in other sin-offerings, vers. 26. of this Chap.) because the offerer might not eat of the sin-offering; but in these the Priest was offerer either solely, as here; or inclusively, as in the sin-offering for all the Congregation. This might signifie the detestableness of sin, especially of Sacred persons, or of a whole people, which here, as it were, on the back of the bullock, was carried out of the Campe. Secondly, that the True sin-offering should suffer without the gate, Heb. 13.11,12. Thirdly, that by Christ his sufferings, our sinnes are fully pardoned, removed farre from us: and for the person that was to carry this sin-offering out, though it seeme to be the High-priest, vers. 12. yet he was onely to see it done, and not by doing it himselfe, render himselfe unclean, as you may see in the same case, Chap. 16. 27,28.

V. 12. where the ashes] The ashes of the sacrifice offered upon the Altar, were first placed in the Court neere the Altar, and thence they were afterwards carried out of the Campe into some stony place, where no dirt nor carrion was cast: and this was done, the better to preserve the service of God from all contempt.

V. 13. if the whole Congregation] Or the greater part of the people. The multitude excuseth not from sinne, but if all have sinned, they must all be punished, if Gods justice be not appeased by sound repentance; (which is such a sorrow for sin, as worketh a change both of the minde, and of the manners of the sinner) see Gen. 6.12,13. & 19.0. Hence also we may observe, that not onely particular persons, but particular or Nationall Churches may erre.

V. 14. then the whole Congregation shall offer a bullock] This prescription is generall for all sinne; but for omitting some ceremoniall duties enioyned them, Num. 15. 24. they were to offer a kid of the goats for a sin-offering.

V. 15. Elders] Not the Priests in this case, but the heads and Magistrates, which were seventy in number, Exod. 3. 16. & Chap. 24. 1. for all the people could not lay on their hands, therefore it was sufficient that the Ancients of the people did it in the name of all the Congregation.

V. 16. the Priest that is anointed] That is, the High-priest. See Annot. on vers. 3.

V. 18. Altar which] That is, the Altar of Incense. See Annot. on vers. 3.

V. 20. as he did the bullock for a sin-offering] That is, the bullock offered for the sinne of the Priest, called the first bullocke, vers. 21.

forgiven them] That is, they shall be accquited from their offence, and not onely from the guilt of sinne, but from any ecclesiasticall or externall censure or punishment of the Law.

V. 21. without the Campe] All whole burnt-offerings for sinne were to be burned without the Campe, or Host, Exod. 29. 14. See Heb. 13. vers. 12,13.

V. 22. When a ruler] Of a Family, or any head of a Tribe, or any Governour; for the word in the Originall signifieth one elevated, or lifted up above others, as Numb. 1. 4. & Chap. 7. vers. 2.

and

and is guilty: Or if his sinne wherein he hath sinned, come to his knowledge, &c.] That is, whether presently he come to acknowledge it; or afterwards it be disclosed unto him, so soone as he knows of it, he shall bring his sin-offering.

V. 24. and kill it] That is, the Priests shall kill it; for it was not lawfull for any out of that office to kill the beast. So vers. 33.

before the LORD] See Annot. on Chap. 1. vers. 11.

V. 25. and put it upon the Altar] Neither this for the ruler, nor that for private persons, vers. 30. were sprinkled before the Vaile in the Tabernacle, nor upon the Altar of Incense, as those for the Priest and all the people were, vers. 6, 7, 16, 17, 18. for their sinnes as more hainous, required a more solemne manner of atonement.

V. 26. an atonement for him] Wherein he represented Jesus Christ.

V. 29. in the place] That is, at the doore of the Tabernacle, where all ought to be killed, Levit. 1. 5.

V. 32. a female] See Annot. on Chap. 3. vers. 6.

V. 33. he shall lay his hand] Meaning, that the punishment of his sinne should be laid upon the beast, and that as he had received all he had from the hand of God; so with his owne hand he offered that sacrifice willingly unto God. It is uncertaine here who should lay his hand; it seemes here, and vers. 15. that the bringer of the sacrifice, or he for whom the sacrifice was offered, was to lay his hand upon the head of it; but for the killing of it, it belonged to the Priest onely.

in the place] That is, a place beside, or neere the Altar.

V. 34. according to the offerings] Or upon the offerings, or besides the burnt-off rings, which were daily offered to the Lord. See Chap. 3. vers. 5.

CHAP. V.

Vers. 1. Soule sinne] That is, a person, as Chap. 4. vers. 2. for the soule, as more excellent then the body, is often put for the whole person in the Scripture, by a Synecdoche of the part for the whole; which brings forth another figurative speech, as when that which belongeth properly to one part, is ascribed to the other, as touching to the soule, vers. 2. which properly appertaineth to the body, though not without the societie of the soule: so also eating, Chap. 7. vers. 20.

and is a witnesse] This seemes not to be meant of secret faults, but rather of such as come to publique triall before the Judge; in which case, he that knoweth any thing for the clearing of the truth, and will not reveale it, his connivence, and silence in such a case, gets him a guilt of other mens sinnes, besides his owne.

whether he hath seene or known it] That is, whether he were an eye-witnesse of the injury done to his neighbour, or otherwise came to know it, he must discover the truth, when they to whom the oath is given cannot, or will not; or else he is guilty and must offer a Trespasse offering, because his brother is prejudiced by his silence.

V. 2. if a soule touch] See the first Annot. on this Chapter.

uncleane and guilty] Ceremonially uncleane, and guilty of the breach of a Ceremoniall law, though he knew it not; yet the conscience was not defiled by such casuall accidents, nor by any thing without the man, Matth. 15. vers. 11. 18. unlesse by wilfull ignorance, or inconsideration; so as there was a Ceremoniall cleansing, Numb. 19. 6, &c. for the touch it selfe, whether ignorantly, or knowingly committed; there was by inconsideration or carelesnesse a Morall guilt contracted, in which respect he was to bring a Trespasse-offering, as is here expressed.

V. 3. then he shall be guilty] If when he knoweth it, he doe not performe what the Law appointeth in that case, then he is not onely Ceremonially, but Morally guilty, as a contemner of the Ordinance of God.

V. 4. sweare] That is, rashly, without consideration of what is right and just, or what is within his power to performe; such an oath was that of David against Nabal, 1 Sam. 25. 22.

to doe evill] That may be not onely to commit an evill of sinne, but to inflict some evill of paine, disgrace, or damage upon himselfe or others; which though it might be just to be done, the rash resolution or swearing to doe it was a sinne.

V. 5. in one of these] Which have beene mentioned before in this Chapter, that is, faults of infirmitie, ignorance, and inconsideration.

confesse] With repentance for his fault, or els, neither confession, nor oblation would doe him any good: and this the offender ought to doe in other sacrifices for sin, though it be not so expressed; with offering of sacrifices there was confession of sins as a part of the offerers profession of repentance. The Hebrews write that this confession was thus to be made. I have thus or thus committed such a sinne, I am ashamed, and it repents me; I will never returne to the same againe. And some make this to be the reason, why the Priests were commanded to eate the remainder of the sacrifice for sin, alone, and that within the Court, not so much as those of their owne house admitted, lest by this meanes the offerers sins confessed to the Priest, might be divulged. And some here note, that it belonged to the Priests to determine betwixt sins and trespasses; between sins of lesse and greater weight, (of which we may see the foregoing Chapter) and that according to the estimation of the trespasse, a greater or lesser sacrifice might be prescribed; for this was not left arbitrary to each private man; for so one sacrifice might easily have beene substituted in the place of another: Nor doth this confession make for the private confession of the Papists, for it seemeth this was not spoken of hidden faults, because the matter was brought before the Judge, vers. 1.

V. 6. trespasse offering] See Annot. on Chap. 7. vers. 1. This no lesse then the sin-offering, typified Christ, whose soule was made an offering for sinne, Isa. 53. 10. where the word in the Originall is the same with this here rendered Trespasse offering.

the Priest] Not the High-priest onely, but any of the inferiour Priests; for in this case there is no distinction, no exception of any, as too meane; no exemption of any, as too great.

a female] The male is especially to be offered in some cases, yet sometimes a female is not onely allowed, but especially prescribed, as here, and Chap. 4. 32. to shew, that though God preferred the male, he did not reject the female. See Gal. 3. 28.

V. 7. turtle doves] Why they were used in sacrifice, see Annot. on Chap. 1. 14.

V. 8. sinne-offering first] The particular known sinne must first be expiated, because it is best knowne; and therefore should be first repented of; and if it be not, it will provoke God to reject the burnt-offering, as Matth. 5. 23, 24.

wring off his head] Of which see Annot. on Chap. 1. vers 15.

V. 10. an atonement for him] Or declare him to be purged of his sinne, or the Priests mediation betweene God and the party, is a type of the true atonement betwixt God and man, made by Jesus Christ; and so it may be called a typicall atonement, as Christs is an atonement reall.

V. 11. an Ephah] See Annot. on Exod. 16. 16.

no oyle] This is forbidden in the sinne-offering, if not onely for distinction from the meat-offering whereof see Lev. 2. 1. according to the will of the Law-maker; for signification, that oyle that serves for light to the eyes, and lightsomenesse in the lookes, was not so futable for sorrowfull confession of sinne, a deed of darkenesse; and the sweet frankincense might be forbidden, to make the offerer more apprehensive of the unsavorie sent of sinne in the nostrils of the Almighty. Some thinke it might intimate, that neither by any grace in us, or any prayers proceeding from us, (which were signified by oyle and frankincense) but onely by Christ we are reconciled to God.

V. 12. a memoriall] See Annot. on Chap. 2. v. 2.

V. 13. shall be the Priests] In some sin-offerings the Priest had nothing at all, Levit. 16. 27. in others he had onely the skin, as where the flesh was wholly burnt, Lev. 7. 8 in other sin-offerings, when the bloud was sprinkled upon the brasen Altar, the fat and bloud were offered to the Lord, the flesh reserved for the Priest, Levit 6. 26. In peace-offerings, the fat and bloud were offered, as before; but the breast and right shoulder bestowed upon the Priest Levit. 7. 33 34. the rest remained, as of right, to him that brought the offering. In meat-offerings, an handfull of the flower, and some of the salt, oyle, incense, and wine being offered, the Priest had all the rest, Lev. 2 3. & Ch. 7. 9. & Ch. p 9 17.

V. 15. in the holy things] By taking away the first fruits, or tithes, or any other thing due unto the Priests, and Levites, vers. 16. Or by eating of things dedicated to God, as the shew-bread; or other things of like kind, which he ought not to doe, which must be understood of ignorant or unadvised, not presumptuous defrauding of God of that that belonged to him. See Chap. 22 14.

a ramme] This sacrifice being greater then the former trespas-offerings, insinuates the hainousnesse of the sinne of Sacrilege.

with thy estimation] The estimation of the Priest, Chap. 27. 12.

shekell of the Sanctuary] See Annot. on Gen. 23. 15.

V. 16. a fift part] In money, for a recompence of the wrong; for so much was added if any of the holy things were bought againe by the owner, Levit. 27. 13. 15. 19. and to make men more carefull to doe all right unto his Sanctuarie.

V. 17. he shall beare his iniquitie] Heb. hath borne his iniquitie.

V. 18. ignorance] Els if his sinne against God proceed from presumption, he must die, Num. 15. 30.

CHAP.

Caps 4. 27, 28. The Least actual Sin cañot be forgiven without ye Blood of Jesus Christ. What Signify Merits then; and of Distinction of Sins into Venial & Mortal?

CHAP. VI.

Vers.2. IF a soule commit a trespasse] This Law is concerning sinnes done wittingly.

V. 2. against the LORD] The particulars repeated are sinnes against man, as Gen. 20.6. yet they are said to be against the Lord, because against his Law; or because those sinnes, which are secret to men, are yet done in his sight; whence it is that Peter saith of the hypocrisie of Ananias; Thou hast not lyed unto men, but unto God, Act. 5.4.

V. 5. the principall] In kinde, or in the full worth of it.

fift part] See Annot. on Chap. 5.16. If he were convicted by the Law, he was by vertue of those Judiciall Laws, Exod.22. to pay double; but if, as here, out of conscience he confesse what the Law could not convince him of, only a fift part was to be added.

V. 6. a ram] For a sinne of Ignorance, the Oblation was a Goat; for a sinne of Knowledge, a Ram: the more guiltie, the more penaltie, and the deeper damnation, without repentance.

with thy estimation] See the Annot. on 5.15.

V. 9. law of the burnt-offering] That is, the ceremonies which ought to be observed therein.

burnt-offering] Though other offerings were burnt, at least in part; this was called the burnt-offering before any other, because it was wholly burnt, and it was the daily sacrifice of a Lambe in the morning, and a Lambe in the evening. See Numb. 28.3.

all night] The Priest was to burn it with a slow fire, and by so many pieces one after another, that it might last all night; which required his intentive vigilancie upon the service, and admonished withall, that God was not to be honoured by day, and dishonoured by works of darknesse in the night; but that men should set their waking thoughts towards him upon their beds, who watcheth over them all the night, Psal. 4.4. And the morning sacrifice was to be burned in the like leisurely manner, unlesse some other sacrifice to be performed after it, required a greater and quicker fire.

V. 10. the ashes which the fire hath consumed] Ashes are said to be consumed, when the consuming fire hath burned the fuell into ashes, as meal is said to be ground, when corn by grinding is turned into meal, Isa.47.2.

V. 11. a cleane place] See Annot. on Numb.19.9.

put off his garments] Because the carrying of the ashes out of the Camp, was not in it selfe a sacred action, for which the holy garments were ordained.

V. 12. not be put out] The fire that came down from heaven, and consumed the burnt-offering, Levit. 9.24. was to be kept perpetually burning, and neither to be put out, as it is here; nor yet by negligence suffered to goe out: and this might signifie, 1. That no humane devises but only that which comes by direction from heaven, is to be admitted into Gods worship. 2. That God accepts no sacrifice, but that which is offered by that fire from heaven, the Spirit, Matth. 3.11. 3. Since it came down first as a testimony that God did graciously accept that first sacrifice, the continuance of it might intimate, that still he was well pleased with their sacrifices, performed according to his direction.

fat of] The fat was not to be offered alone, but to be burnt upon the daily burnt-offering, for it was too small a matter of it selfe to be presented to God.

V. 16. and his sonnes] Unlesse they were for some uncleanesse to be debarred from that holy diet, Levit.22.6.

eaten in the holy place] It might be for these reasons; 1. To minde them of sober using these holy things, as eating them in Gods presence; 2. To minde them of the singular puritie required of those that were honoured above the people; 3. It might intimate, that none but within the pale of the Church should be the better for Christ.

V. 17. not be baken with leaven] That is, kneaded with leaven, and after baken; and this is ordained not only for Gods peculiar part, but for that which was allotted to the Priests also; for that part given to God was in the name of the whole, and so the whole meat-offering was to be without leaven. See Annot. on Chap.2. vers.11.

V. 18. shall be holy] See Annot. on Exod.29.37.

V. 20. Aaron and his sonnes] That is, of the High Priests, and the Priests his sonnes: this is not personall to the Priests that then were, but perpetuall for succession.

perpetuall] So oft as the high Priest shall be elected and annointed: yet it is held by some, that this meat-offering was a daily oblation, as the Lambe that was sacrificed morning and evening, whether at the charge of the Priest, or whether (which is more probable) it was supplyed out of the publique Corban or Treasury.

V. 22. of his sonnes] That is, the eldest sonne, if he have no deformitie or impediment, which by Law makes him uncapable of that holy calling; as Levit.21.18. if he be, the second brother is to succeed, and so in the like case the third, &c.

for ever] So long as the Leviticall Priesthood shall continue.

V. 23. wholly burnt] The offering being made by the Priest, and for the Priest, his own service was a debt, and so he was to have nothing for it; but when he offered for the people, he was for a recompence of his service, to have a portion of the sacrifice; see vers.26. of this Chapter. Or else because he was a sinner and could make no atonement for himselfe, therefore his meat-offering was wholly burnt, not eaten, to teach him to looke for salvation by Christ.

V. 26. shall eat it] That is, the blood being sprinkled, and the fat burnt, except such sin-offerings whereof the blood was carryed into the Tabernacle, vers.30.

V. 27. shall be holy] See Annot. on Exod.29.37. & Exod.30.29.

upon any garment] Meaning the garment of the Priests.

wash that] The blood was to be separate from all prosane, or common use, in reference to the blood of Christ, who was holy, harmlesse, undefiled, separate from sinners, in respect of societie in sinne, Heb.7.26. though sometimes he was companion with great sinners for their conversion from sinne. Matth.9.12.

in the holy place] In the Court of the Tabernacle, where the washing Laver stood, and the garment washed from the blood returned to a common use, and might be worne and used any where as occasion required.

V. 28. earthen vessell] The liquor that boyled the sin-offering might pierce into an earthen vessell, and therefore it was broken; and the rather, because the losse was not great; but if the pot wherein it was sod, were iron or brasse, it was to be scoured and rinsed: all which might shadow the infection of sinne.

water] Which was in the Laver neere unto the Altar, Exod.30.18.

V. 30. sin-offering] Which was offered by the High-priest and the whole Assembly, in the yearely expiation; Lev.16.27.

whereof the blood] Which was done in the sacrifice for the Priest and all the people, Chap.4.6.18.

burnt] Wholly burnt out of the campe, Chap.4.12.21. nor yet was this a whole burnt-offering; because it was not burned whole upon the Altar, as that was, but was divided into parts, as a sacrifice for sinne, and so carryed without the Campe, and burned.

CHAP. VII.

Vers.1. THE trespasse-offering] The names of a sinne and trespasse-offering are diverse in the Originall, yet not so diverse in reall sense, as in verball sound; and so, though some will have the one, viz. Asham rendred by Delictum, and the other, viz. Chattah by Peccatum, and understand peccatum to be a sinne of commission, & delictum a sinne of omission, yet the Originall words are promiscuously used and interpreted in the Hebrew Lexicons in the same acceptions; notwithstanding by the difference of sacrifices it appeares by the Text, that there is a different degree of guilt, betwixt the offence which is called Chattah, and the other which is called Asham, and that in this difference the aggravation lyes upon Asham, because to Asham translated trespasse is required a greater and more costly sacrifice, then to Chattah, rendred Sinne: Now the aggravation or greater guilt might consist in this, that Asham, i. e. Trespasse was committed against greater light, or with more deliberation, or with more consent of will, or with inconvenience, or injury to another; which is agreeable to the word Trespasse; for Sinne may be immanent in us; but Trespasse is a transient guilt, which hath an offensive operation upon others, and so becomes so much the more faultie, as it is more extensive.

V. 2. place] At the Court gate.

V. 6. male] Except he be ceremonially uncleane, as v.20.

among the Priests] The offering of the sin-offering, and trespasse-offering did properly belong unto the offerer, for one Law was for them both; yet the offerer might, and many times (it is like) did give part thereof unto the Priests, and to their sonnes; but not to their females.

V. 7. one law] The same ceremonies, notwithstanding that this word trespasse signifieth lesse then sinne.

shall have it] Meaning the rest which is left, and not burnt, shall be the Priests, Levit.6.26.

V. 10. dry] Because it had no oyle put upon it, or offered with it, Levit.5.11.

as much as] That is, every Priest in his turne of administration, shall have the same Oblations allowed him, which happened in his course; or, as the Jewes expound it, the flower or meale which was offered, was equally to be divided among the Priests; but if it were baked, or any way hardened with fire, it was the proper portion of the Priests, that did officiate for that time, and every Priest according to the lot of his ministration, wherein they had an equall priviledge.

V. 11. sacrifice of peace-offering] Whether it be to obtaine a blessing, and so called an offering for peace or safetie, or whether Eucharisticall for a blessing already received: the latter is spoken of, from the eleventh verse to the sixteenth; and from thence to the nineteenth of the former.

V. 13. leavened bread] Leaven was not allowed but in this kinde of Oblation of giving of thanks, Levit. 2. 11, 12. which though it were given to the Priests, was not (as is thought by divers) offered upon the Altar, but tendered to them towards their maintenance onely.

of thanksgiving of his peace-offering] Peace-offerings were diversly distinguished; some were Oblations tendered without a vow, others with a vow; those without a vow, were either by way of absolute devotion to God, in acknowledgement of his goodnesse in generall, or with reference to some precedent mercy received: the peace-offerings that were presented with a vow, were either such as were simply vowed, without respect of any, either foregoing, or future favour; or conditionally vowed, as when Jacob vowed, saying, If God will be with me, and will keepe me in this way that I goe, and will give me bread to eate, and raiment to put on, and that I come againe to my fathers house in peace, then shall the Lord be my God, Gen. 28. 20, 21. And as there was this difference in the offerings themselves, so there was difference in the disposall of them when they were offered; those that were offered in reference to a precedent mercy, were to be eaten the same day they were offered, vers. 15. Chap 22. 30. and if any did eate of them afterward, the sacrifices became voyd and fruitlesse, vers. 18. and he that so did eate, became profane or uncleane, Chap. 19. 7, 8. and was to be punished with death: but those which were for a vow or voluntary offering, might be reserved till the next day, and no longer, as is expressed in the 16. and following verses, and Chap. 19. 6. and Philo adds this reason, because now they are not his that offered them, but Gods to whom they were offered, who since he is a beneficent and munificent God, will not have them thrust into cupboards, but communicated to guests, especially to the needy; but the true reason may be something in the unrevealed will of the Law-maker. If it be demanded, in what place these were to be eaten, whether in the Court of the Temple; the Answer is, they might be eaten by the Priests, and people also, in any cleane place, Chap. 10. 14. that is, free from all legall uncleanesse: Therefore after they had committed to the fire the parts that were to be burned in sacrifice to God, viz. the fat and rumpe, &c. and given the Priest his due out of the sacrifice, to wit, the right shoulder, and the breast; they carryed the rest, being boyled, (for nothing was rosted in the Court of the Temple) to their home; where they ate it with their family, and whomsoever else they would invite, provided that they were cleane, vers. 19.

V. 17. burnt] Both to shun superstition towards Gods holy meat, and to keep it from common and profane use.

V. 18. beare his iniquitie] That is, he shall be punished for his iniquitie. In the same sense is the phrase used, Levit. 20. 17. 19, 20.

V. 19. toucheth] After it is offered; (for being carryed out of the holy place, it might casually be touched by some uncleane person or thing) and if it were polluted before, it should not be offered to God at all; the touch of any uncleane thing, or person, though but ceremonially unclean, polluteth it; Hagg. 2. 13. and it was not to be eaten, but to be burnt, not by the holy fire of the Altar, but by common fire; but if it were not yet offered, such a touch did not so taint it, but it might be eaten, Deut. 12. 15. & 22.

V. 20. the soule that eateth] If any being uncleane, whether personally, as here, or by touching any unclean thing, as in the following verse, doe wittingly eat of the peace-offering, they must die, but if unwittingly, there was a sacrifice of Atonement prescribed for them, Chap. 5. 2. And this might intimate to us, that they that have given up their names to Christ and yet hate to be reformed, destruction will be their end, nor will God reckon them among his people; and more particularly, that they who partake of the seales of the Covenant of grace unworthily, eate and drinke judgement to themselves.

V. 21. cut off] See Annot. on Gen. 17. 14.

V. 23. fat of oxe, &c.] Because these three creatures were sacrificed up unto God, the fat especially, vers. 25. See Annot. on Chap. 3. v. 17.

V. 24. And the fat of the beast that dyeth of it selfe, &c. may be used in any other use] Hence some conceive, that though the touch of such carkasses did render a man uncleane, yet the touch of the fat of those dead beasts that dyed of themselves, did not defile him.

V. 26. blood] See Annot. on Chap. 3. vers. 17.

V. 29. shall bring his oblation] Though the peace-offerings might be eaten in any cleane place, yet they were to be brought to, and offered at the Altar.

V. 30. His own hands] That is, the hands of him that brought the Oblation; upon which the Priest put the breast of the sacrifice, with the fat, and it may be with them the shoulder also, and unleavened bread, as Exod. 29. v. 22, 23, 24 some silver-charger being between his hands and the sacrifice; and thus the Priest putting his hands under the hands of him that held them, lifted them up, and moved them to and fro, as many both Hebrew, and Christian writers have set forth.

wave-offering] Of this waving, see Annot. on Exod. 29. vers. 24.

V. 31. the breast shall be Aarons] The breast belonged to the High-priest, and his family; but the right shoulder was for the Priest that did officiate, or doe the office of a Priest for that turne.

V. 32. heave-offering] See Annot. on Exod. 29. 24.

V. 35. the anointing of Aaron] That is, the priviledge, reward, or portion of his anointed function.

V. 37. of the consecrations] Of the sacrifice which was offered when the Priest was consecrated, Exod. 29. 22.

CHAP. VIII.

THis Chapter, for the most part of it, containeth the same things which are before set downe, and expounded, Exod. 29.

V. 8. Vrim and Thummim] See Annot. on Exod. 28. 30.

V. 9. holy crown] Or, plate of pure gold. So called, because the Hebrew word Nezer, signifieth a crown, of which forme this plate was; and it was called holy, because it was separated to an holy use; and because on it was graven holinesse unto the Lord, Exod. 28. 36.

V. 10. anointing oyle] Of this, see Exod. 30. vers. 23, 24, 25.

V. 11. seven times] That number commonly notes perfection, because the seventh day, being a day of rest after worke, was a witnesse that the worke was done; and it is a number of holinesse also, because the seventh day was consecrated to holy rest, and so the fitter to be observed in consecration of Priests to holy duties, principally to be performed on that day. See Annot. on 1 Chron. 15. 26.

V. 14. bullock] For bullock, see Exod. 29. vers. 35, 36.

V. 15. Altar] That is, of the burnt offering.

powred the blood at the bottome of the Altar] The Altar hath a twofold sanctification; the one passive, whereby it is sanctified, as in this place; the other active, whereby it sanctifieth the gifts or oblations that are offered upon it, Matth. 23. 19.

reconciliation upon it] By offering for the sinnes of the people.

V. 17. his hide] In other burnt-offerings which are not of consecration, or offering for himselfe, the Priest hath the skinne.

V. 19. he killed it] That is, Moses, so also vers. 20. 23. which he did, because yet the Priests were not established in their office.

V. 24. tip of] See Annot. on Exod. 29. 20.

V. 27. wave-offering] See Annot. on Exod. 29. 24.

V. 29. anointing oyle] That which was common to him with the inferiour Priests, was the sprinkling of oyntment mingled with bloud upon them, and their garments, and the anointing of the right eare, and right thumbe, Exod. 29. 20. the composition whereof is prescribed, Exod. 30. vers. 23. 30. the consecration peculiar to the High-priest, was by pouring out that precious oyntment upon his head, vers. 12. of this Chap. & Exod. 29. 7. Psal. 133. 2.

V. 34. commanded to doe] Hereafter, concerning the consecration of the High-priest, and those of inferiour order, both for the consecration and atonement here prescribed.

V. 35. shall ye abide] Now they have what belongeth to consecration for the Priests office, he requireth their diligent and constant residence upon their Charges.

day and night] During which time though they went not to bed, they might take some refreshing by sleepe in a sitting posture.

that ye dye not] Death is the due reward of disobedience to God, though but in a ceremoniall observance.

V. 36. by the hand] By commission made to Moses, as it were delivered into his hand, Mal. 1. 1.

CHAP. IX.

Vers. 1. Eighth day] After the consecration of seven dayes before, which were required for compleat consecration of the Priests.

on the eighth day] From the consecration of Aaron, and the Tabernacle, and Priests, which fell in the first moneth of the second yeare of the Israelites departure out of Egypt.

Elders of Israel] Who were called for the more solemne and honourable entrance of them into the execution of the Priestly function.

V. 2. Take thee] The High-priest was to begin his office with with sacrifice for himselfe, that he might mediate betwixt God and the people with more acceptation; in this, (though otherwise a Type of Christ) he was farre inferiour to Christ, who was so holy, as not to need a sacrifice for himselfe, Heb. 7. 27. so holy, as to sanctifie the unholy by his sacrifice.

sinne-offering] Aaron entereth into the profession of the Priesthood, and offereth the foure principall sacrifices, to wit, the burnt-offering, the sinne-offering, the peace-offering, and the meat-offering.

V. 3. of the first yeare] That is, that neither calfe, nor kid, nor goat, be above a yeare old.

V. 4. will appeare] Sending fire from heaven to kindle and consume the sacrifice; see Annot. vers. 24.

V. 5. before the Lord] Or the doore of the Tabernacle, where the glory of God appeared.

V. 7. make an atonement] Reade for the understanding of this place, Heb. 3. 3. & Chap. 7. 27.

V. 9. put it upon the hornes of the Altar] To wit, of the brasen Altar; which was first to be sprinkled, and by that was passage made to the Altar of incense, as afterwards: see Chap. 4. vers. 5, 6, 7. see also and compare, vers. 15. of this Chap. with Levit. 4. 13. 17, 18.

V. 10. be burnt] That is, he laid them in order, and so they were burnt, when the Lord sent downe fire upon them: so that what is set downe vers. 10, 13, 17, 20. is brought in by way of anticipation before the 24. verse.

V. 17. of the morning] The daily sacrifice was first in the morning, and last in the evening; yet the burning of incense in the morning, was ever before the morning sacrifice.

V. 20. upon the breast] Of the sacrificed beast.

V. 21. waved] See Annot. on Exod. 29. 24.

V. 22. lifted up] His hands were lifted up towards God, and stretched out towards the people; to shew, that he expected from above the blessing which he desired to bestow upon the people, which, it may be, was in such a forme as is set downe, Numb. 6. 24.

came downe] Because the Altar was neerer the Sanctuary, which was the upper end; therefore he is said to come downe.

V. 23. went into] To carry the bloud of the sacrifice for sinne, according to the Ordinance, Levit. chap. 4. 7. & 16. verses.

blessed the people] Or prayed for them; and withall he might speake peace unto them in Gods Name.

the glory] That is, an extraordinary splendour, or brightnesse, appearing out of the cloudy pillar, as Exod. 16. 10.

V. 24. came a fire] For the seven dayes of sacrifice before, Moses used fire, but after the eighth day, fire in a miraculous manner descended from above, and consumed the sacrifice; to testifie Gods approbation of the institution Priesthood, and to breed more reverend acceptation of it among the people: this fire thus sent from heaven was to be kept continually burning, that it might never goe out, as God appointed, Chap. 6. and therefore it was charily carried in some vessell for the purpose, when they journeyed in the wildernesse; and so it continued untill the Temple of Solomon; and then fire came down again from heaven, 2 Chron. 7. 1. which continued untill the captivitie of Babylon, and after that it was said to have beene miraculously renued in the second of Macc. 1.

CHAP. X.

Vers. 1. Strange fire] Not taken from the fire of the Altar, which was sent from heaven, Chap. 9. 24. but from that fire wherewith the flesh of the sacrifices was boyled; which, as some conceive, was strange, in respect of that which was customably used for burning of incense, Chap. 16. 10. and sacrifices: so that is strange in respect of God, which is most familiar with men; and contrarywise, as Luk. 16. 15.

commanded them not] In Gods worship Gods command, not mans wit, or will, must be our rule.

V. 2. fire from] In making light, or slighting the fire sent downe in favour from God, fire cometh in judgement from him to destroy them; and this either came from heaven, or from out of the Tabernacle: see Numb. 16. 35. answerable to it: they that contemned the fire sent downe from heaven, by fire from heaven are consumed, or rather killed, as with lightning; for their bodies were carried out of the Campe, and buried.

V. 3. I will be sanctified] They that come neere me in an holy ministration, or profession, must above others witnesse my holinesse in their reverend and religious handling of holy things; and if they doe not, I will avow mine owne holinesse in a just vengeance against their wickednesse.

and Aaron held his peace] In this story concerning Aaron and his sonnes, there are many things remarkable; as the great judgement of God, for a seeming light offence, upon his sonnes; and Aarons silence, whether as oppressed with the greatnesse of his griefe, which oftentimes wants the vent of answerable expressions; or convinced of the justnesse of the punishment, and the good event which was to ensue upon it, as the glory of God, and converting the crosse into a blessing to his posteritie.

V. 5. in their coats] That is, their linen garments, wherein they ministred; for as in these they sinned, so in these were they buried.

V. 6. Uncover not] Put not off your Mitres and Bonnets, to put on the covering of mourners (whose custome is to have their heads covered in an especiall manner, 2 Sam. 15. 30. & 19. 4. Jer. 14. 3, 4.) as though ye lamented for them, preferring your naturall affections before the Divine judgements, Chap. 19. 28. Deut. 14. 1. & Chap. 33. 9.

upon all the people] The Priests, if they be good, may blesse the people; if bad, may be like to bring curses upon them.

bewaile the burning] Not so much in pity to them, as in devotion to God; whose honour impeached by their presumption, is more cause of mourning then their death, who justly deserved it.

kindled] In destroying Nadab and Abihu, and menacing the rest, unlesse they repent.

V. 7. ye shall not goe] See Annot. on Chap. 8. vers. 35.

V. 9. nor strong drinke] Lest it should so affect their heads, or hearts, as to make them faile either in devotion, or in decencie and decorum belonging to their holy ministration; and from this ordinance, presently made upon the act of Nadab and Abihu; it is thought, they were raised up to this presumption, by the fume of strong drinke. The devilis Gods Ape, by whom, in imitation of this, the Egyptian Priests were forbidden wine and flesh continually: and so did he imitate the continuall burning of the fire upon the Altar, Cha. 6. 12. and that in divers places among the heathens, as among the Persians, who made a God of it; and among the Delphi and Græcians, who worshipped it in the temple of Apollo; and the Romans, who worshipped it under the name of Vesta, committing the charge of it to the Vestall Virgins; and if it chanced to goe out, it was held fatall to the Citie. Rhodigin: Antiq. Lect. l. 14. c. 14.

V. 12. Take the meat-offering that remaineth] That the severe judgement on Nadab and Abihu might not make them so to mourne, as to neglect their meate, or to intermit their service, or to be lesse lightsome in it then before; they are incouraged to their duty, as it were, by a kind invitation, to participate of the provision of Gods Table; for so the Altar is called, Malac. 1. 7.

V. 13. the holy place] That is, in the Court of the Tabernacle neere to the Altar of the burnt-sacrifice. See Chap. 6. 26.

V. 14. daughters] For the breast and shoulder of the peace-offering might be brought to their families, so that their daughters might eate of them; as also of the offering of first fruits, and the ~~Easter~~ lambe.

V. 15. heave shoulder] See Annot. on Exod. 29. 24.

V. 16. sought the goat] Upon the sudden and dreadfull death of Nadab and Abihu, Eleazer and Ithamar their brethren, either by distraction, or inconsideration, had burned the goate of the sinne-offering without the Campe, contrary to the due order; for it should have beene eaten by the Priests: See Annot. on vers. 18. Moses not knowing what was become of it, diligently sought after it, out of a care that Gods Ordinance should be observed, and the Priestly rights preserved: read vers. 17, 18.

left alive] And not consumed by fire, as Nadab and Abihu their brethren were.

V. 17. to beare the iniquitie] That is, to appeare in their stead, and to confesse their iniquitie, and to make atonement for them. There is another bearing of iniquitie, when the Priests make themselves guilty of the peoples sinne by their silence, Ezek. 33. 6. but that is not meant in this place.

V. 18. not brought in within] The goate of the sinne-offering was not of those kinds of sacrifices, whose bloud was to be sprinkled in the Sanctuary, upon the Altar of incense; for such sacrifices were not to be eaten as this sinne-offering of the goat was, but to be burned without the Camp. 6. vers. 30.

V. 19. accepted] Aaron being passionately affected at the death of two sonnes, and the chiding of other two by Moses, intimates his unfitnesse, in regard of the distemper of his mind, to doe his office with acceptation to God, who would have them to eate with joyfulnesse in his presence, Deut. 12. 7. & 26. 4. Hos. 9. 4.

V. 20. content] Moses considering his great sorrow, bare with his infirmitie, at least for that time; yet afterwards when he was in better temper, he might take opportunitie to speak that which then he could not well have borne.

CHAP. XI.

IN this Chapter, the Hebrewes are forbidden many sorts of creatures for food; not that any creature was evill or uncleane of its owne nature, for God made all things good at first, Gen. 1. vers. last: Rom. 14. 14. 1 Tim. 4. 4. Tit. 1. 15. but for manifold reasons: first, in respect of God; secondly, in respect of men: First, for God; he hereby sheweth his right to dispose of the creatures, as well negatively, what they shall not doe; as positively, what they shall doe. Secondly, for men; this abstinence was of use both physically, and morally: for the first; many of these forbidden meats yeeld no good nourishment to the body, and so are not generally so wholesome, as those that are allowed. Secondly, for the morall use of these prohibitions; it was to exercise men in obedience to God, in forbearance of things in themselves lawfull, and many of them delightfull to the palate. Secondly, in the practise of temperance against the ranging of the appetite after excessive variety. Thirdly, in shunning the vices that were Symbolically signified in the qualities of the creatures; as the filthinesse of the dogge, and swine, 2 Pet. 2. 22. Fourthly, in keeping the further distance from the Tables and communion of Aliens from the true Religion, whereby they might be corrupted both in their consciences and manners.

Vers. 1. Unto Moses and Aaron] The Civill and Ecclesiasticall Governours, are both to have a care that the Ordinances of God be observed. See Ezek. 44. 23. & Numb. 9. 6.

V. 2. These are the beasts] This difference of cleane and uncleane beasts was revealed to the Fathers from the beginning. See Annot. on Gen. 7. 2.

V. 3. parteth the hoofe] He noteth foure sorts of beasts; some chew the cud, and some have onely the foote cleft; others neither chew the cud, nor have the hoofe cleft; the fourth both cheweth the cud, and hath the hoofe divided; of which last sort onely, they were to take their food of flesh.

V. 4. divideth not the hoofe] The dividing of the hoofe is to be understood of a dividing into two parts, as in the hoofe of a Cow, or a Sheepe; not a subdividing into many parts, as in the case of a Cony: see vers. 26. & Deut. 14. 6.

V. 5. Cony] The Originall word Shaphan, is a generall name of fearefull creatures, which runne away and hide themselves in holes from the light and societie of man; most take it for a Cony, which hath its hiding place in the rocks, Pro. 30. 26. Psal. 104. 18. but some take it for a creature in Palestine about as big as an Hedge-hogge, but made partly like a Mouse, partly like a Beare, that hides it selfe in holes as Conies doe.

V. 8. not touch] This prohibition requires a great estrangement from all pollution, which is morally to be observed at all times, Esa. 52. 11. though under the Gospel such Ceremonies be abolished, Col. 2. 20. 21.

V. 9. finnes and scales] Finnes and scales in fishes, answer to wings and feathers in birds; so they are more in motion and action, and are therefore wholesomer then Eeles and Lampreys, which having neither, lie lazily in the mud.

V. 10. that move] As little fish ingendered of the slime.

living thing] As they which come of generation.

V. 13. Ossifrage] Some take the Ossifrage to be a Griffin, which is a bird of an Eagles kind, but bigger then an ordinary Eagle, and is very strong and ravenous, having a very crooked beake and talons, whereby it is able to take up the lesser sort of living creatures, and by dashing them downe to breake their bones; for which cause it is called an Ossifrage, which signifieth a bone-breaker: and not onely so, but, as some report, some of the Eagles kind are found so great and strong, that they can carry a whole Oxe or horse at once to their neast, to feed their young; yea and take up an Elephant into the aire, and when they have killed him, by letting him fall to the earth, they devoure him.

Ospray]. Some take the Ospray for the same thing with the Ossifrage; as if it were a changing of the word Osbreake into Ospray. The name of it in Greeke, signifieth a Sea-Eagle, which is a bird of great bigneſse, and of sharpe sight, whereby discerning the prey in the water, he suddenly striketh at it and seiseth on it, Plin. lib. 10. ch. 3.

V. 16. Owle] The word is rendered by some, an Ostrich, which is a great bird of so heavy a body, that her wings will not beare her up in the ayre, and so they serve not for flying, though for flight or running fast on foote; the Hebrew is Daughter of the Owle: whereby the mother is not permitted to be eaten, but the rather prohibited; because the old is not so easily digested as the young.

the Night-hauke] That is, the Night-raven, which seeth to take his prey in the night: these Night-birds might be the rather forbidden, to mind Gods people to avoid deeds of darknesse, and to walke as children of light, Ephes. 5. 11.

V. 17. Cormorant] A bird which by diving into the water (as the name in Latine signifieth) taketh fishes; the Vulgar Translation renders the Originall word Shalach by the word Ibis, which signifieth an Egyptian bird somewhat high with stiffe legges, and a long bill, which doth good service in that Countrey by killing the Serpents brought out of Lybia with Southerne windes, against which the Egyptians make their prayers unto Ibis for preservation from them, Plin. lib. 10. chap. 28.

V. 18. Gier-Eagle] Though it may not be for food to the body, it may be of use for instruction to the minde; for according to the Originall, the name Rahham, signifieth tender love of the damme to the young.

V. 19. Storke] The nature of the Storke (as the name Hhasidhah importeth) is, on the contrary, to be kinde to its damme, and it is noted to build high, Psal. 104. 17. and to feed low on fishes, snakes, and frogges; for which cause it may be the rather rejected as unfit for food.

V. 20. All fowles that creepe] As fowles they should flye; but creeping basely on the ground, they may note the ambiguous, and earthly-minded disposition of worldly men.

upon all foure] Some things that flye have foure feete; some have more, as hornets, bees, flies; and those that have more feet then two, have no fewer then foure; and those that have more then two are excluded from use of meat (as uncleane), when they who have foure are mentioned in the prohibition of meats. See vers. 42.

V. 22. Locust] The Locust is of divers kinds, and of them the Grashopper is one, so that some for Grashopper read Locust; one sort of them is called Ophiomachus, of making warre with Serpents, whereof Aristotle maketh mention, de hist Animal. l. 9. c. 6. and though to us the Locust or Grashopper be loathsome as for meate, yet in themselves, and to all they are not so, but serve for food to some people; as in India there be Locusts of three foot long, whereof the Natives use the legges being dried for sauce, Plin. lib. 11. ch. 29, &c. the Ethiopians, and Parthians, and some other people use them for meat, Aristot. hist. Animal. lib. 6. ch. 30. and with some, powdered Locusts is their onely food, Plin. lib. 6. ch. 30. And so doe many eat frogs and snailes, forbidden vers. 30. which afford so much good nourishment (being boyled in milke) as serves to repaire the decay of the body, made by a Cough and Consumption: and in some places Pismires are used for dainties, the different custome of Nations becoming a kind of law, for the different use of the creatures for mans sustenance; howsoever, though whatsoever God forbiddeth be not in it selfe unfit for meate; as we see by our use of the Swine, the Swan, and other creatures; yet nothing that God allowed was unwholesome to those to whom it was allowed. Besides, in divers Countries the kinds of creatures are so diverse, as that which is very good in some places, is scarce tolerable in others.

Beetle] The Originall word Hhargol, is not found in any other place.

V. 23. which have foure feet] That is, if they had all foure equall; but if the hinder feet were longer, whereby they might leape, they were cleane as is expressed, vers. 21.

V. 24. untill the even] Not alwaies; and this limitation might mind the people of a state of religion where these Ceremonies should cease.

V. 25. beareth] That is, out of the Campe, or out of the way, as being offensive to passengers.

V. 26. not cloven footed] See Annot. on vers. 5.

V. 27. pawes] Or, hands. That is, whose fore-feete are in use like hands, as in an Ape, or Beare.

V. 29. after his kind] For the creatures were to ingender, and increase according to their owne kinde; and not by mixture with other kinds, Levit. 19. 19.

V. 30. Camelion] A Camelion is a creature like unto a Lyzard, or Newt, in which two things are very strange; the one that he seemeth to live onely on the Aire; which makes him for the most part to gape, and put his head upward to draw it in; the other, that it taketh what colour is next him by resemblance, unlesse it be red, or white. Arist. hist. Animal. lib. 2. ch. 11. Plin. hist. lib. 8. c. 33.

V. 31. uncleane] Not onely to eate, but to touch their dead bodies; vers. 32. 40. and this uncleanesse, as long as it lasted, was a cause of prohibition to enter into the Sanctuary, and to partake of the sacrifices.

V. 32. or skinne] Skins are used sometimes for bottles, sometimes for bagges, and those serve either for moist, or drie things.

uncleane] This was onely a Ceremoniall uncleanesse, not a Morall; and therefore Christians are not defiled by such meanes; yet while the touching of them was forbidden by God, though in it selfe it did not defile the man in his body; much lesse in his soule, the disobedience even in such a small matter brought a guilt upon the soule, which did defile it, while the prohibition was in force.

untill the even] And at even the uncleanesse expireth, or vanisheth of it selfe.

V. 33. ye shall breake it] Why washing should not serve the turne for cleansing in earthen vessels as well as others, no naturall

v. 5. 66. days. See Babington on the place. p. 465.

12. 2. As to Chr^t his Conceptio-
-on & Birth, way none! But Ma-ry was a Sinner all the While.

naturall reason can be rendered: if by earthen vessels we understand reprobates, as some doe, the breaking of them may signifie their destruction, as Psal.2.9. Jer.9.11. as the washing of the other, and sparing them, may note the cleansing of other sinners by teares of contrition.

V. 34. such water] That is, uncleane water, coming from an uncleane vessell or place.

V. 36. that which toucheth] So much water of the fountaine as toucheth the carkasse and no more shall be uncleane; and though an uncleane thing fell into a fountaine, or cisterne, yet it is held by many not to be polluted, because of the necessary use of water upon all occasions.

V. 37. sowing seed] Because being sowne, man had nothing to doe with it for food, untill it was dead and quickened againe, Joh. 12.24. 1 Cor.15.36. and so none uncleanenesse could be imputed unto it, that was not taken from it before it came to the use of meat.

V. 38. but if any water] That is, by steeping the seed, not for sowing (as before) but for the use of meat, as Wheat is used for meat without grinding or baking; for that which is wet is more apt to take or retaine any defilement that fals upon it, then that which is dry; in which case it was not to be eaten, but to be given to beasts.

V. 39. if any beast of which ye may eate, die] By inward sicknesse, or outward violence, as of strangling; (so that the bloud were not let out of the veines) or of tearing by beasts; such a beast became ceremonially uncleane, and might neither be eaten, nor touched; yet with exception of the fat, in such a case; whereof see Annot. on Chap.7.ver.24.

V. 40. he that eateth] That is, ignorantly, or of urgent necessitie; for if he did it knowingly and with his will, his contempt was to be answered with the punishment of death, Numb.15.30.

V. 43. defiled thereby] Either by eating or touching them.

V. 44. sanctifie your selves] That is, you shall by application of these ceremoniall ordinances to your souls, inure your selves to a carefulnesse in your conversation, that you be not polluted with the societie of sinners, who are morally uncleane, as the beasts are uncleane ceremonially; and as by touching them there was contracted a ceremoniall uncleanesse; so may a man become morally defiled by familiaritie with the wicked: this was the spirituall use of this carnall commandement, for meat in it selfe was nothing to the sanctitie, or sinne of the soule, Mark.7.15. Rom.14.14. 1 Cor.8.8.

V. 45. For I am holy] I hate all manner of uncleanesse; especially, the Idolatry of the Gentiles, which they commit upon the creatures, even those which are most base, as such as creepe or crawle upon the earth, and my holinesse must be to you a patterne for your imitation and practise.

CHAP. XII.

Vers.2. Separation] The separation for uncleanesse was divers; for some were separate not only from participation of holy things, but from civill societie, as lepers; such as had a flux of their naturall seed, and those that were polluted by the dead, Numb.5.2. Next unto these was the separation of a woman upon her child-birth, or having her monethly courses, during which time she was shut up at home from all communion of company, save such as were (out of charitable necessitie) to minister unto her; for whatsoever or whomsoever she touched, contracted thereby a ceremoniall uncleanesse: Joseph. l.2.contr.Appion. Other inferiour or lesser uncleannesses (though they did shut the partie out of the sanctuary, and from touching or eating of holy things,) did not excommunicate any from company with others; this ceremoniall uncleanesse was taken notice of, where there was no morall impuritie, nor could be; as in the Virgin Maries purification, Luk.2.22. Quære.

infirmitie] That is, by her monethly purgings of blood, called commonly womens sicknesse, and for that women were uncleane seven dayes, Chap.15. vers. 19. during which time they were to be separated at home, from their husbands; and abroad, from the Tabernacle, and from touching any hallowed thing; this was for their uncleanesse without child-bearing, but with it, the first seven dayes the woman was to be separated from all but such as were to doe offices of necessary and charitable Attendance on her person; and from familiaritie with her husband (as an husband), she was to be separated for a farre longer time, as untill the dayes of her purifying were fulfilled, as they are reckoned, vers.4. & 5.

V. 3. on the eighth day] On this day was appointed circumcision of the male children, which being a Sacrament, was more seasonably administred, when the ceremoniall uncleanesse here mentioned was past.

V. 5. threescore and sixe dayes] Which with the two weekes of strictest separation, made up eightie dayes; just twice as long as for the birth of a male child; for this some seek for reasons in nature; and affirme that after a female birth the purgings sometimes are not wholly ended untill the eightieth day, whereas after a male they use not to continue above fortie dayes; So Hippocr. de natura pueri; Valesc. de sacra philos. Chap. 18. But others deny this, and hold it a vaine thing to search for naturall reasons for this prescript, as taking it to be purely ceremoniall (as circumcision was), which yet may morally minde women of their originall causalitie in sinne, wherein they had the first hand, 1 Tim. 2.14. which is the greatest uncleanesse of all others; that they may be lesse proud, and more holy; yet it might be, that the longer time was taken for a female birth then for a male, because the male was circumcised, the female was not; but this reason will not reach to the proportion foremention ed. } N.

V. 6. for a sonne, or &c.] Not for the purification of the child, but of her selfe the mother of it.

for a sin-offering] That may be understood either ceremonially, because by the Leviticall Law she was held uncleane; or morally, because by naturall corruption she might not only be guiltie of a sinfull conception, but by impatience under the pain of child-birth, might sinne against God. } vid. v. 2.

doore of the Tabernacle] Where the burnt-offerings were wont to be offered.

V. 7. male or female] Though the uncleanesse were different for male and female, the cleansing was the same for both; one and the same Christ typified in the sacrifice, is the same for justification to male, and female, Gal.3.28.

V. 8. cleane] From that ceremoniall uncleanesse, so that she may be restored to that from whence she was before debarred.

CHAP. XIII.

IN this Chapter (said a famous School-man, and Commentator of the Popish partie, when he had rehearsed it) of the discerning of the Leprosie in men and in garments, there is nothing for me to expound; but I leave this charge to the Physitians: but Divines must not so passe it over. The Leprosie treated of in this Chapter, seemeth to be, not only that disease which is best known by that name in later times, but as Valesius observeth, de sacra Philosophia, Chap.19. by the various description of it, it may be conceived to containe the severall kinds of diseases, at least divers of them, which appeare in the skin, as Morphew, Itch, Ring-worme, Scaldhead, and other breakings out of the skin, which overspread or crust it with a kinde of tetter, scab, or skurfe; as also that disease, which arising from a grosse distemper of the humours, causeth the loosening of the haire of the head and beard, and the falling of it off from the roots: all which might be called leprosie, being one way or other like that which is commonly known by that name, which was more incident to such as lived in hot regions, as Egypt; especially, if their multitude were great, and roome little; which might occasion the slander of Justine the Historian against the Jewes; which was, that they were driven out of Egypt, because they were infected with the scall, or itch; So Justine histor. lib.36. p.284. There is another disease imputed to the Jews by Appion, to which Josephus maketh Answer in his second Booke against that Grammarian, p. 783. but that is brought in upon another occasion, which hath no affinitie with the fiction of Justine.

Vers.2. Right spot] Shining like the scale of a fish, for so the leprosie sometimes beginneth to appeare.

V. 3. white] This is the first sort of leprosie observed, which is discerned by the white colour of the haire, and the degree of inherence of it below the skinne and within the flesh: of this colour, was Moses leprous hand, Exod. 4.6. and Miriam his sisters leprosie as sister to his was of the same complexion, Num. 12.10.

the Priest shall looke] The Priest rather then the Physitian, because it belonged to him to admit, or to keep back from the Sanctuary, and services of Religion, 2 Chron.26.20. and to see that the ceremonies of cleansing were duely observed; yet when he viewed the leprosie, he had (as some conceive) the advise of the Physitian; for the profession of Physick is ancient, as appeareth, Gen. 50.2. though the authoritie of pronouncing leprous or cleane belonged to the Priests only. And for this discerning or differencing between the sound and infected, (touching this disease) they might have sufficient knowledge, either by Art, or observation, and the direction of the rules here delivered; or, if need were, by revelation from God, for God would not call the Priests to an office, for which he would not see them furnished some way with gifts to discharge it; and if the Priest pronounced any uncleane, they were put out of the Camp, whosoever he or she were.

deeper then the skinne] Which eateth into the flesh. See Numb.12.12. & 2 King.5.14. The leprosie of the body is a resemblance of the defilement of the soule, and the depth of it below the skinne though but one spot, is as sinne deeply rooted in the ſoule by habituall inherence, though but one. See verſ. 20.25,26,30,31,32,33,34,35.

pronounce him uncleane] Hebr. make him uncleane. But the meaning is, he ſhall declare or pronounce him ſo to be; as Ezekiel is ſaid to deſtroy the Citie by an aſſured prediction of the Cities deſtruction, Ezek. 43. 3. And ſo the miniſteriall remiſſion of ſins is ſometimes phraſed as if it were Judiciall, when it is but declarative; which though another may doe as fully as he, as another may ſprinkle water with the words of Baptiſme; yet it cometh with more aſſurance and comfort from him, who doth it with an eſpeciall warrant from God.

V. 6. and be cleane] Though he be not cleane from the ſcab, yet he ſhall be pronounced cleane from the leproſie; and ſo not be ſhut out of the Camp, though he might keep in; becauſe in ſuch a caſe he could not be ſeene with acceptation of others for humane ſocietie.

V. 10. riſing be white] Phyſitians of later times make triall of leproſie by rubbing of the fleſh, and pricking of a needle: for if the fleſh being rubbed turne not red; and if pricked with a needle, it bleed not; it is a ſigne of leproſie in a deep degree of infection; and if it eate into the fleſh and the bones, as ſometimes it doth; it is incurable.

quicke raw fleſh] The former kinde of leproſie appeared in the haire and skin, this ſheweth a deeper degree of malignitie fretting into the quick fleſh, and making it raw.

V. 13. covered all his fleſh] Such a ſcurfe, though it were a grievous plague, was not the infective plague of leproſie; and it argued the ſtrength of naturall conſtitution within, when the venome of the diſeaſe was driven out and diffuſed over the outward parts, except when here and there raw fleſh appeared, which was a token that it was not wholly driven out, but lurked ſtill in the fleſh.

V. 16. changed into white] When a white skin cometh upon the place that was raw, it is a ſigne that the fleſh is healed.

V. 23. ſpread not] That is, a clearing ſigne, becauſe the leproſie is a running or ſpreading diſeaſe. See verſ. 28,34.

V. 29. head or beard] The head common to man and woman, the beard peculiar to the man, though both ſeeme to be ſaid of both.

V. 30. yellow] Verſ. 3. The leproſie of other parts was noted by a white haire, this of the head and beard by a yellow thin haire, in ſuch ſort, that if a man were of yellow haire before, it might be diſcerned what was naturall to him, and what adventitiall coming from the diſeaſe.

V. 33. ſhaven] That the haire taken away, it may the better appeare whether the leproſie ſpread.

V. 36. not ſeeke for yellow] That is, he ſhall not care whether yellow haire be there or no.

V. 39. freckled ſpot] Like the Morphew, which ſome conceive to be one of the disfigurings and diſeaſes here deſcribed in this Chapter.

V. 40. fallen off] This is thought by Phyſicians to be properly that diſeaſe which is called Alopecia, a word taken from the name of a Fox, becauſe it is obſerved to belong to that kind of creature more then others; which ſometimes proceedeth from ſuch a degree of malignitie, as is of like nature with, and ſo cometh under the name of Leproſie.

V. 40. he is bald] The haire though it be an excrement; is an ornament to the head, and face, where there is maturitie of age for a beard, and when it cometh kindly, it ſheweth a good temperament of heate and moiſture: and therein as many take a pride, ſo God ſometimes puniſheth that pride with a ſhamefull baldneſſe, Iſa. 3.24.

V. 45. cloths rent] Which might conduce to the cure of the diſeaſed; for ſo the bad humours might the better evaporate and breath out; and to the caution or ſafety of the ſound, who might thereby be warned to keepe a due diſtance from the infected partie; for they did weare long garments cloſe before: and it might alſo ſignifie the ſorrow of the Leper becauſe of his preſent ſenſe of ſinne and miſery; which is often ſignified by the rending of the garments in the Scriptures.

covering upon his lip] See Ezek. 24.17. & Mic. 3.7.

uncleane, uncleane] As lamenting his miſery, and giving warning to others againſt the infection. Such as leproſie is to the body, is ſinne to the ſoule; and therefore we muſt flye from the infection of it, as a loathſome leproſie, Eſa. 52. 11. Lam. 4. 15. the cauſe of this diſeaſe here deſcribed many times did not ſo much proceed from a naturall diſtemper, as (out of an exceſſe of flegme, or black melancholy bloud) as from a divine judgement for the ſin of man; ſee 2 King. 15. 5. eſpecially that kind of it which ſet ſo deepe an infection upon the clothes and wals, Levit. 14.37. And it is obſerved to have moſt infected the Jewes upon their revoltings from Religion, and that Chriſtians tooke the infection of it from their Countrey, when they came thither to manage the warre undertaken for recovery of it out of the hands of the Turks.

V. 46. without the Camp] As Miriam was, Numb. 12. 14. This was during the peoples journeying in the wilderneſſe; after when they were ſetled in Canaan, the lepers were ſhut out of the Cities, Luk. 17. 12. 2 King. 7. 3. at leaſt were confined to an houſe by themſelves, though Kings, as Azariah was, 2 King. 15. 5. & 2 Chron. 26. 21. yet upon neceſſary occaſions they were permitted to come into the ſtreets, and high-wayes, obſerving a due diſtance, that they might neither give offence, nor others take offence from them. Luk. 17. 1. This may intimate how odious the ſpirituall leproſie is to God; and how infectious evill company is to men.

V. 55. not changed his colour] That is, ſo as to returne to the colour it had, before it was infected; for waſhing would make ſome change, but if a taint of the contagion yet appeared in it, which could not by waſhing be got out of it; it was to be burned: at leaſt that part which was ſo deepely infected, that it could not be waſhed cleane, was to be cut out, and caſt into the fire.

V. 58. the ſecond time] To the intent he might be ſure the leproſie was departed, and that all occaſion of infection might be taken away.

V. 59. the law of the plague] If the Chriſtians compare their condition with the Jews for laws and plagues in this and the 11. Chapter, they will find great cauſe to praiſe God for their better ſtate; no ſuch prohibitions of meats as theſe, no ſuch plague, or not ſo common in moſt places, as the plague here very frequent among the Jewes.

CHAP. XIV.

Verſ. 3. Goe forth] It is ſaid, verſ. 2. the leper ſhall be brought unto the Prieſt; here, that the Prieſt ſhall goe forth to the leper; yet no contradiction: for the leper remained at ſome diſtance out of the Campe, and the Prieſt coming to the out-ſide of it toward the leper, the leper made his approach unto him.

V. 4. and cleane] That is, ſuch as by the law were permitted to be eaten; the birds mentioned before for oblations, were Turtles and Pigeons; theſe are taken to be ſparrows, according to the other reading in the margine.

V. 5. ſhall command] The Prieſt was not to kill the bird, for it was not properly for a ſacrifice, ſince it was to be done far from the Altar, and without the Campe; but for expiation of the leprous perſon by the ſprinkling of the bloud of it upon him.

that one of the birds be killed over running water] Water and bloud are here to be mingled together; for Chriſt (whoſe Paſſion was typified by theſe ſacrifices) came by water and bloud, 1 Joh. 5.6.

V. 6. and the Cedar-wood] The manner of this ſprinkling is conceived to be thus; there was a rod or ſtick of Cedar-wood, to the top whereof was tied the live bird with the taile upward, and head towards the handle of the ſtick; with the bird was tyed Scarlet wool; then was the bird both wings and taile plunged into the water, coloured with the bloud of the killed bird, and therewith was the leper ſprinkled; and after that, the live bird ſprinkled with the bloud of the killed bird was ſet at libertie, to flie away. In this expiation ſome obſerve this conformitie betwixt the leprous contagion, and the law of cleanſing: as firſt, the leproſie did corrupt and putrefie the skinne; oppoſite to that was Cedar-wood, which is commended for firmneſſe and ſoundneſſe againſt putrefaction. Secondly, the leproſie was of a very foule and offenſive colour; contrary to that was the freſh and faire colour of Scarlet. Thirdly, the leproſie had a very ill and unſavory ſent; the ſweetneſſe of Hyſſope was a remedy againſt that. Fourthly, the leproſie did eate up the body, by a conſumption of the fleſh; and it may be, cauſed death; the ſparrow let looſe and flying abroad, was a ſymbole, or ſignificant ſigne of the recovery of the health, and conſequently of the continuance of the life of the leprous.

V. 7. ſeven times] That number is often uſed in holy miniſtrations, as alſo in miraculous operations, 2 King. 5.10.14. by reaſon of Gods reſting on the ſeventh day, as witneſſing the perfection of his creatures made the 6. dayes before; ſo that there was no need of any more to be done: ſee Annot. on Chap. 8. verſ. 11. yet ſometimes ſeven is taken for many.

living bird looſe] Signifying that he that was made clean was ſet at libertie, and reſtored to the company of others. By theſe two birds ſome take to be ſignified the two natures of Chriſt, the one ſubject to death, the other ſecured from death.

V. 8. ſeven dayes] Though he were admitted to come into the Campe, yet muſt he not for ſeven dayes returne to his owne tent, leſt ſome remainders of the leproſie ſhould lie hid, and by familiar ſociety, ſhould be tranſmitted to the infection of his wife, or any of the family.

V. 9. ſhave] He was ſhaven before, verſ. 8. and at ſeven dayes end was to be ſhaven againe; for waſhing and ſhaving were of uſe for the clearing of the party from his leproſie.

V. 10. log of oyle] A Log was the leaſt meaſure for moiſt things, things, containing the quantitie of five egges; or, as some say, sixe of ordinary bigneſse.

V. 11. maketh him cleane] That is, pronounceth him. See Annot. 4. on Chap. 13. verſ. 3.

V. 13. Holy place] In the Court of the Tabernacle, beside the Altar of burnt offerings.

* is the Prieſts] * Chap. 6. verſ. 26, 27.

moſt holy] Of oblations that were to be eaten, none were more holy.

V. 14. tip of] See Annot. on Exod. 29. 20.

V. 16. before the Lord] Before the doore of the Tabernacle where God gave evidence of his eſpeciall preſence.

V. 19. the burnt-offering] That is, the lambe of the firſt yeare; the ſin-offering was to be made for reconciliation with God, before he would accept an oblation of thankeſgiving from man. Some demand, why there ſhould be an offering for leproſie, it being no ſinne? the Anſwer is, that though it be not a ſinne in it ſelfe; that is, no breach of the morall law, yet the ceremoniall law requireth a cleaneneſſe to which the leproſie is contrary; and ſo it may be ſaid to be ceremonially a ſinne; or it may require a ſacrifice, becauſe it many times preſuppoſeth a guilt of ſinne, which did deſerve ſuch a ſhamefull curſe; as you may ſee in the caſe of Miriam, Numbers 12. verſ. 10.

V. 21. waved] Of the waving of the offering, ſee Annot. on Exod. 29. 24.

V. 34. I put a plague] See Annot. on Chap. 13. verſ. 59.

V. 36. that all that is in the houſe be not made uncleane] To wit, upon the Prieſts pronunciation of the uncleanneſſe; from whence, and not before, the ceremoniall uncleanneſſe was contracted: the like is to be beleeved of company with the leprous perſon before his uncleanneſſe be legally proclaimed.

V. 37. in the walls] Which argued a ſtrong and ſtrange infection, whether of the aire, or breath of the leper; which is ſo much the fitter to ſet forth the infection of ſinne, whereof leproſie is both an effect and a type: for as the leproſie is ſo infective that it reacheth even to the walls of the houſe, and fretteth and corrupteth them even to their ruine; ſo doth the guilt of ſinne bring judgement, not onely upon the perſon of the ſinner, but upon the timber and ſtones of the houſe: ſee Zach. 5. verſ. 4.

V. 41. an uncleane place] Where carrions were caſt, and other filth, that the people might not be therewith infected.

V. 45. he ſhall breake] That is, he ſhall command it to be pulled downe, as verſ. 40.

V. 49. ſcarlet] It ſeemeth that this was a ſcarlet-coloured lace, or twiſted ſtring, to binde the hyſſop to the wood; the Apoſtle to the Hebrewes, calleth it ſcarlet wooll, Heb. 9. 19.

CHAP. XV.

Verſ. 2. Out of his fleſh] Which is meant chiefly of a diſeaſe by Phyſicians called Gonorrhœa, but is more ordinarily known by the name in the margine of the Bible; which proceedeth from a weakeneſſe of nature, cauſing a feebleneſſe in the retentive facultie, which may proceed from overſtraining the ſtrength in any wiſe; but eſpecially by contemning the counſell of the Wiſe man, Prov. 31. 3. This differs from that emiſſion of the ſeed which is caſuall in ſleepe, verſ. 16, Deut. 23. 10. yet both did make a man ceremonially uncleane.

V. 3. be ſtopped] If it have runne, and afrerwards be ſtopped, yet the precedent running ſhall be judged an uncleanneſſe; or if by obſtruction or ſtoppage, the abundance of it be irritated, or provoked with more violence to iſſue out.

V. 4. Every bed whereon he lyeth] Such as this diſeaſe of leproſie is, is the infectious nature of ſinne; defiling all that the wicked hath to do withall, Tit. 1. 15.

V. 8. he ſhall waſh] That is, he that is ſpit upon.

V. 15. a ſinne-offering] In reſpect of the ceremoniall uncleanneſſe; if it proceed meerly of infirmitie, of the retentive facultie, without the fault of the perſon; it is rather a ſickneſſe of weakneſſe, then a ſickneſſe of wickedneſſe.

V. 16. waſh] The time is not ſet downe for waſhing, but ſince the uncleanneſſe is limited to the evening, it is like the waſhing was to be the next morning after that the uncleanneſſe happened.

uncleanneſſes] Theſe ſeverall caſes of uncleanneſſe ſerve for humiliation, and caution, in regard of the implied defilement and corruption cleaving to naturall actions; eſpecially thoſe which moſt appertaine to the propagation of mankind.

V. 18. The woman alſo] Though marriage be Gods holy Ordinance made in the ſtate of innocencie, Gen. 2. 24. and in that reſpect it be honourable in all, and the bed undefiled, Heb. 13. 4. yet the exerciſe is not ſo undefiled in any, but that ſome imputations of guilt may be charged upon it.

V. 19. whoſoever toucheth] This is to be meant of ſuch as were of yeares of diſcretion, and were not to performe a neceſſary and charitable miniſtration to her perſon; not of infants or children in their minoritie, who were not capable of ſuch prohibitions.

V. 20. in her ſeparation] Whereby ſhe is ſeparate from her husband, from the Tabernacle, and from touching any holy thing.

V. 24. ſeven dayes] This is meant of meere lying with her, and of the uncleanneſſe which might be taken as a bed-fellow onely, without any more familiaritie with her; for if in ſuch a caſe he lay with her as with a wife, if the fact could be proved, they were to be put to death, Chap. 20. verſ. 18. and this the rather, becauſe by ſuch commixtion a monſtrous and leprous birth might be begotten.

V. 25. beyond the time] That is, beyond the uſuall time of her female fluxes, the diſeaſe called by Phyſicians Hemorrhoides, more vulgarly Emerods.

V. 30. uncleanneſſe] Not that it is a morall, and conſequently a ſinfull, but a meere ceremoniall uncleanneſſe.

V. 31. that they die not] There was danger of death in the breach of a ceremoniall law; that ceremoniall uncleanneſſe (eſpecially if to it were joyned a careleſſe neglect, or wilfull contempt) was capitall and deadly to the offending perſon; which may be a good admonition to Chriſtians when they appeare before the Lord, eſpecially in Prayer, to beware of all morall pollution which may ſhut Gods eare againſt their ſuits, Pſalm. 66. 18. or move him when they aske bread, and fiſh, to feed them; to anſwer them with a ſtone, to bruiſe them, or a ſerpent, to bite them.

V. 31. defile my Tabernacle] By coming unto it, when by reaſon of their uncleanneſſe, they are by theſe ceremoniall ordinances to be ſeparated from it.

CHAP. XVI.

IN this Chapter is inſtituted the Feaſt of expiation; whereof one occaſion was the ſinne and puniſhment of Nadab and Abihu; and the end was for the preſervation of the reverence of the Tabernacle, and of the holy ſervices belonging unto it, that none might preſume, as they had done, to doe any thing in ſuch matters, but according as the Lord had expreſſely preſcribed.

Verſ. 2. Not at all times] Into the moſt holy place; for that was the place which God did moſt appropriate to his own preſence; into which none was to come but by his eſpeciall appointment; and he appointed the High-prieſt only, and him but once a yeare, Verſ. 34. & Heb. 9. 7. Exod. 30. 10. and that was in the moneth of September: but this is to be underſtood with reſpect to his Prieſtly miniſtration, which was but once a yeare, as figuring the ſacrifice of Chriſt once made in the time of his life, and no more, Heb. 9. verſ. 7, 8. 11, 12. but upon other neceſſary occaſions, the Prieſt might enter into the moſt holy place, as when the Tabernacle was to be taken down, and removed.

for I will appeare] The reaſon ſeemeth to contradict the rule; for if God appeare there, there is more cauſe for Aaron to make his addreſſe thither to conſult with him, and to receive revelations from him; but the meaning is, that Gods appearance there ſhould be at ſuch a time, as Aaron might make his approach thither, as the next words manifeſt.

V. 3. with a young bullock] That is, with the bloud of a young bullock, not with the body of it; which was to be offered for the ſinnes of the High-prieſt and his family, verſ. 6. for, for the ſinne of the people he was to offer a goat, verſ. 5.

and a ram] This ram was not to be ſacrificed at his entrance into the Holy of holies; but afterward, upon his returne, it was to be wholly burnt upon the Altar of burnt-offering: the young bullock, and the ram, were for the ſolemnitie of the High-prieſts entrance into the moſt holy place; but the two lambes for the daily burnt-offering, Numb. 28. 3. and the bullock, ram, and ſeven lambes, and he-goat, Numb. 29. 7, 8, 11. were for the ſacred ſolemnitie of the day of expiation, which followed the oblations of the bullock and ram fore-meutioned.

V. 4. put on] Not thoſe glorious garments which were peculiar to the High-prieſts, but thoſe which were common to him with inferiour Prieſts, verſ. 23. becauſe this was a day, not of jubilation or gladneſſe, but of humiliation and ſorrow, and ſo rather a faſt, then a feaſt, Numb. 29. 7. though uſually called the Feaſt of Expiation. Yet ſome conceive from verſ. 24. that in the latter part of the ſolemne ſervice he wore his more glorious robes; which were peculiar to him as he was High-prieſt: And by theſe diſtinct habits, the one ſort meane, the other eminently glorious; might be repreſented the double ſtate of Chriſt, the one of humiliation, the other of Majeſtie; the one Temporall, the other Spirituall.

V. 5. And he ſhall take] In this day of reconciliation, the High-

High-prieſt did all the ſervice in the Holy of holies himſelfe; figuring the ſole reconciliation of us unto God by Chriſt onely.

V. 6. Offer] In the wilderneſſe there was not any ſacrificing, but at Mount Sinai, for fourtie yeares together, Exod. 16. neither were the people furniſhed with frankincenſe, hony, wine, or cattell for ſacrifice; ſo that in the wilderneſſe onely the Judiciall and Morall lawes did binde, as ſome hold, except ſome expiations, Numb. 5.2. neither in the deſert were any feaſts obſerved but the Sabbath.

his houſe] To which were referred all the Prieſts and Levites; for theſe were not reckoned among the people, but appertained to the family of the High-prieſt, whoſe ſonnes the Prieſts were, and the reſt of the Levites his kinſmen.

V. 8. lots] By which the Lord made choyce of what he would have done, Prov. 16.33. according to whoſe counſell and will alone, not by the appointment of any humane policie, or prudence; the whole worke of Chriſts Mediation, and mans Redemption was accompliſhed.

one for the Lord] To be ſacrificed unto him, the other as making an eſcape from death, being ſent into the deſert, verſ. 10. & 21. was called the ſcape-goate: they were both alike in themſelves, and by caſting lots the Lord made a choyce which of the two ſhould die, or be reprieved, or delivered from death, for the lot is at his diſpoſall, Pro. 16.33. Of which two the one is conceived to be a type of Chriſt his immortall Deitie; the other of his mortall humanity; or the one of his death, the other of his living againe by his reſurrection.

V. 10. ſcape-gote] See Annot. on verſ. 8.

to make an atonement] By confeſſing of ſinne in the name of the people, and praying that God would transferre their guilt upon the goate, before he were ſent away into the wilderneſſe. See verſ. 21,22.

V. 11. the bullock] Some reade the calfe, or heifer; but this was not that red heifer mentioned Numb. 19. for that was offered for the people without the Campe; this for the Prieſts upon the Altar within the Court of the Tabernacle.

V. 12. a cenſer] That is, a fire-pan, or perfuming-diſh, to hold coales for the burning of incenſe; the compoſition whereof is ſet down, Exod. 30.34,35.

within the vaile] Into the Holy of holies.

V. 13. the cloud] That is, the vapour or ſmoak aſcending from the perfume, to cover the Mercy-ſeat, that there might be no curious prying into divine ſecrets, Deut. 29.29.

upon the Teſtimonie] That is, the Arke, where was laid the Law, the Teſtimonie of Gods covenant with his people, verſe 13.

that he die not] As Nadab and Abihu did, by contempt, or neglect of thoſe obſervances which God preſcribed: Which ſheweth that mans obedience muſt be ordered by the Majeſtie of the Authour, rather then the meanes of the matter which is preſcribed, or prohibited. See Exod. 4 24,25.

V. 14. upon the Mercy-ſeat] The bloud was ſprinkled upon the Mercy-ſeat, to ſhew that by the bloud of Chriſt Gods mercie and juſtice were reconciled, and ſo his people ſaved from deſtroying indignation.

upon the Mercy-ſeat] Some reade, over againſt the Mercy-ſeat; or towards it; ſo that the bloud muſt not touch it.

Eaſtward] That is, with his face Eaſt-ward, towards the people; for the head of the Sanctuary ſtood Weſt-ward. This ſignified, that as the Prieſt had need of this ſacrifice as well as the people, verſ. 6. and the people had a right in it, as well as the Prieſt, verſ. 15.

V. 15. then ſhall he kill] This, though here mentioned, was done before Aarons entrance into the Holy of holies; (though after the killing of the bullock) for Aaron being to goe into it but once a yeare, Heb. 9.7. was not to goe into it twice a day, though he were allowed entrance into it one day onely.

V. 16. for the holy place] The holy place was to be purged from the pollution of the people, though they came not into it; becauſe they had their part or intereſt in the ſervices there performed, which though offered unto God, by the Prieſt were moſt of the preſented as from, and for the people; Wherein appeareth the extreme pollution of ſinne like that of leproſie, Chap. 13. which tainteth not onely the perſons of ſinners, but places alſo whereto they have a reference, though it be not immediate.

V. 17. Tabernacle] That is, in the Holy place which was Eaſt-ward on this ſide of the Holy of holies where the High-prieſt onely was allowed to enter.

V. 18. unto the Altar] That is, the Altar of Incenſe.

V. 20. reconciling the Holy place] See Annot. on verſ. 16.

V. 21. head of the live-goate] The live-goate, or ſcape-goate was a type of Chriſt as well as that which was ſacrificed; the ſacrificed goate ſignified dying Chriſt; the ſcape-goate alive in the wilderneſſe, ſignified Chriſts deliverance from death, and living, as the ſeparated goate, out of the communion of men, with whom he formerly converſed: See Annot. on verſ. 8. 10. Yet ſome hold that this ſcape-goate was not to ſcape death, but to be killed and devoured by the wild beaſts of the wilderneſſe; and that the one goate ſignified our Saviours ſuffering in the Citie of Jeruſalem; the other his ſufferings out of it, by barbarous and brutiſh men. The Devil as Gods Ape, ſometimes enjoyned his Prieſts this expiation; for Herodotus reports, that the Egyptians were wont to heape up imprecations and curſes upon the head of a ſacrifice, ſelected for the purpoſe; that if any evill were impendent over them, or the Egyptians, it might be turned upon the head of the ſacrifice: and then they caſt it headlong into the River Nilus to be drowned; or ſold it in the market to ſome Grecian, or profane perſon.

V. 23. leave them there] Thoſe garments were peculiar for that dayes ſervice, in the moſt Holy place; which done, they were not to be worne untill the like occaſion returned, and then he was to put on the ſame, or the like.

V. 24. in the Holy place] In the Court of the Tabernacle, where was the Laver, Exod. 30. 18. Yet ſome conceive this waſhing was before he came forth into the Court of the Tabernacle, as the words of this verſe doe ſeeme to import.

put on his garments] That is, his glorious garments proper to the High-prieſts: for now the proper office of expiation was paſt, and the reſt of the day was allowed to be ſpent in more chearefull ſolemnitie.

V. 26. ſhall waſh] To put away the ceremoniall impuritie or uncleanneſſe, which he contracted by touching the goate ceremonially laden with the guilt of the peoples ſinne, and with the imprecations belonging to them.

V. 28. he that burneth] He to whom that ſervice was committed; which was not performed by the Prieſts, but by another upon their appointment.

V. 29. for ever] See Annot. on Exod. 12.14.

ſeventh moneth] That is, as the Hebrewes call it, Tizri, anſwering to our September.

upon the tenth day] The ſolemnitie began the ninth day at even; Chap. 23.32. but the tenth day was moſt obſervable for the ſacrifices of expiation, or atonement.

afflict your ſoules] Though the affection to, and fruition of ſin be pleaſant, the humiliation for it is very bitter; and an affliction not of the body onely by faſting, Act. 27. verſ. 9. but of the ſoule, by anguiſh and ſorrow for ſinne.

V. 31. a Sabbath] This day of ſolemne humiliation, wherein they were to afflict their ſoules, verſ. 29. Pſal. 35.13. by faſting and mourning, was to be obſerved as a Sabbath, with ceſſation from all manner of worke, verſ. 29.

V. 32. he ſhall anoint] It is not ſaid who ſhall anoint; but it may be meant of God, by whoſe authority or command he was to be anointed; as the Prieſt is ſaid to breake downe the houſe, Chap. 14. 45. which he doth but command to be broken downe, verſ. 40. Or the High-prieſt in being, is to anoint his ſucceſſour in that office, that he may ſerve in his fathers ſtead, when he is dead.

V. 34. everlaſting ſtatue] See Annot. on Exod. 12.14.

CHAP. XVII.

Verſ. 3. That killeth] Not for the common uſe of meat, but for the religious uſe of ſacrifice; which though others could do as well as the Prieſt, (as Butchers and Cookes) yet ſince the doing thereof was the proper office of the Prieſt, none might uſurp it, that was not of that function: and God would have good things done in a good manner; and hereby alſo he would prevent Idolatry, which would eaſily have crept in, if every one were left to his owne private way of Sacrifice, or ſerving of God.

V. 4. and bringeth it not] This is not onely a prohibition of the people, from uſurping of the Prieſts office; but a limitation of Sacrifices to the place expreſſely preſcribed; yet by inſpiration from God, ſometimes other places were uſed for ſuch holy Oblations, as by Manoah, Judges 13. 19. by Samuel, 1 Sam. 7. 9. and Ch. 11.15. and Ch. 16. 2. and by David, 2 Sam. 24. 18. and by Elias 1 King. 18. 23. Notwithſtanding, regularly, they were to bring their ſacrifices unto the door of the Tabernacle, as a type of Chriſt, Hebr. 9.11. but the antitype now exhibited, that type, and the limitation of locall liberty, is aboliſhed; ſo that now a ſpirituall ſacrifice offered in ſincerity, will be accepted every where, John 4.21,24. Malach. 1.11.

Blood ſhall be] He ſhall be reputed as guilty, as worthy of death, as if he had killed a man, Iſai. 66.3. becauſe the blood of the ſacrifices was in equivalence the blood of man which was to be redeemed thereby, (as the water of the Well of Bethlehem is called the blood of thoſe men, who hazarded their lives to breake through the hoſt of the enemies to fetch it for David, 2 Sam. 23.17.) therefore the ſhedding of that blood otherwiſe then God did warrant, was accounted as the ſhedding of mans blood.

cut off] He ſhall be puniſhed by death, by the ſentence of the Judge, if it be known; if it be ſecret, by the judgement of God: upon ſuppoſition of this ſin, the Iſraelites prepared war againſt the Reubenites,

Of this Katharine Howard little is reported, and yet too much, if all be true, of her incontinency, which cost her her Life. The greatest good the Land got by this death, was a general leave to marry Cousin-Germans, formerly prohibited by the Canon, and hereafter permitted by the Common Law; A door of lawfull Liberty left Open by God in Scripture, shut by the Pope for his privat profit. Reubenites, Joſh. 22.12. Some underſtand this cutting off to be the ſentence of Excommunication, whereby the offender is put out of the ſociety of Iſrael, and put into the ſtate of an Heathen or Publicane; though the Jewes underſtand it ordinarily of an extraordinary death, by divine vengeance.

V. 5. open field] Before the tabernacle was built, they uſed to offer ſacrifices abroad; ſometimes in fields, ſometimes on mountains, and in groaves; but they are now charged to bring them unto the door of the Tabernaele.

peace-offerings] The like is to be underſtood of ſinne-offerings, and whole-burnt-offerings, though they be not expreſſed as theſe be; which are not therefore particularly named, becauſe they were more limited for theſe Oblations then for others; but leſt they ſhould take more liberty in theſe then in others; becauſe they were moſt frequent, and were in part applied to feaſt the offerer; and in this preciſe caution for that which was more common, the whole-burnt-offering was the better ſecured from contemptible communities which might befall it, if it ſhould be offered any where but in an holy place appointed for that purpoſe.

V. 7. unto Devils] Meaning whatſoever is not the true God, Deut. 32. 17. Pſal. 106. 37. 1 Cor. 10. 20. 2 Cor. 11. 15. Revel. 9.20. but yet taken for a God, and worſhipped as a God; The Hebrew word Sehhirim, or Segnirim, ſignifieth hairie, and goatiſh, of Sahhar or Sagnar an haire, or hairie creature, or goat; by which may be meant thoſe devils who appeared rough and hairie, as the Satyres, or Faunes, Eſay 34.14. or becauſe the apparition of ſuch, through fear made the hair ſtand on end; as Job 4.15.

No more] Here it appeares that the Jewes were much addicted to Idolatry; and it is like they both learned it, and practiſed it in Egypt, Ezek. 23.8.

V. 10. face againſt] That is, I will apparently declare my wrath, by taking vengeance on him, as Cha. 20. v. 3.

V. 11. in the blood] Becauſe blood is the ſeat of the vitall ſpirits, from the purer part whereof the ſpirits are ingendred; without which they cannot continue, though the blood may continue in the body when the life is gone, by ſtopping of the breath; beſides other reaſons there rendred, here is an eſpeciall conſideration of the proprietie of blood of Atonement by ſacrifice, Heb. 9.22. whereby, being conſecrated to God, it is ſeparated from Common uſe.

V. 13. or of the ſtrangers that ſojourn] There was a ſtranger in blood, that is, none of their kindred; a ſtranger in habitation, that is, a Sojourner, rather then a dweller amongſt them; and a ſtranger in Religion, a worſhipper of a ſtrange god, or of the true God in a ſtrange manner to that which God preſcribed: He that was a ſtranger in blood, might be no a ſtranger in religion; ſuch were divers convert Proſelytes, who were of the ſame faith and profeſſion with the naturall Jewes; and theſe were to obey the ſame Laws with the Iſraelites, and beare the ſame puniſhments which belonged to the violation of them. See ver. 8. 10.

cover it] Leſt beaſts ſhould lick it up, and by taking delight in the ſweetneſſe of it, ſhould become more cruell, either to their own, or to any other kinde.

V. 15. ſoule that eateth] The ſoule in proprietie of ſpeech eateth not, but the body as animated by the ſoule. By the ſoule here is meant the perſon, the more excellent part being put for the whole; as in many other places of the Scripture. See Annot. on Chap. 5. verſ. 1.

V. 16. his iniquitie] That is, the puniſhment of his diſobedience in that behalfe; for there is ſuch affinitie betwixt wickedneſſe, and the reward due unto it, that one name is many times uſed for both.

CHAP. XVIII.

Verſ. 3. Doings] Ye ſhall preſerve your ſelves from the abominations following, which the Egyptians, and Canaanites uſed.

V. 4. judgements] judiciall lawes.

ordinances] Whether Morall, or Ceremoniall precepts.

V. 5. which if a man doe, he ſhall live] But ever ſince the fall he was diſabled to doe what the Law required; therefore the failing of juſtification and ſalvation, by what is in a mans ſelf, ſerveth 1. to ſhew how perfect our condition was before the fall: 2. what God might expect of us ſince we have fallen, in that we fell not by his, but by our own default: 3. to direct us whither to have recourſe, viz. to Chriſt, from the Law, Gal. 3. 24. by whoſe merit and mediation we may be acquitted, when by the Law we are condemned.

I am the Lord] And therefore ye ought to ſerve me alone, as my people; this is often repeated, as verſ. 4, 5, 6, 21, 30. to mind the people of Gods right of command, and power to puniſh; and to admoniſh men to marke and conſider not ſo much what it is, as who it is, by whom any thing is commanded, or forbidden.

V. 6. None of you, &c.] Hebr. man, man. That is, not any man ſhall approach any that is neer of kin to him.

Neare of kin] As according to the degrees after mentioned.

uncover their nakedneſſe] By this phraſe is ſometimes meant, the laying open of ſecret faults, or infirmities; but here it ſignifieth a literall uncovering of the body, for ſuch familiarity with it as properly belongeth to lawfull marriage.

V. 8. fathers wife] That is, not thine own mother, but thy ſtepmother: of this inceſt you may ſee 1 Cor. 5.1. it was Reubens ſin, Gen. 35.22.

thy fathers nakedneſſe] That is, that which none but thy father may uncover: and it may be called the fathers nakedneſſe, becauſe the husband and wife, though they be two perſons, are by the bond of matrimonie but one fleſh: So that any fleſhly action towards the one, hath a guiltie offenſiveneſſe towards the other.

V. 9. thy ſiſter] By both parents, or by the mother onely; (for of ſiſters by a ſtepmother order is ſet down ver. 11.) born in marriage, or out of marriage, (by fornication, as a baſtard;) yet it was not generally ſo taken, for Thamar thought, that David would have given her for a wife to Amnon, if he had made requeſt for her unto his father, 2 Sam. 13.13.

V. 10. thine own nakedneſſe] That is, ſo neer of kin unto thee, deſcending from thee in a right line, that beſides thine own perſonall ſinne and ſhame; thou wilt have ſo much more part and guilt in theirs, as they are more thine then others; ſo that their fault will be thine infamie, See Gen. 34.30. and by ſuch an act, as her nakedneſſe is uncovered, ſo thy naughtineſſe may be diſcovered by an inceſtuous birth.

V. 14. approach] By this here is meant, the neereſt degree of naked communion.

thine aunt] When thine uncle is dead; by the ſame reaſon that a man is forbidden the bed of his fathers brothers, or uncles wife, or aunt; a woman is forbidden the like neerneſſe to her aunts husband; for as in Logick, ſo in Divinitie, the difference of ſexe varieth not the caſe ſo much, as to make it unlawfull in the one, and lawfull in the other; ſomewhat it doth, for where the Aunt is married by the Couſen or nephew, there a ſuperior relation is brought under an inferior; but where the uncle marrieth his neece, there a ſuperior is made head of an inferior, which is more decent; but that which here is moſt reſpected, is not ſo much the relation of a ſuperior and inferiour, (for a miſtris might marry a ſervant of the ſame religion and tribe, as well as a maiſter might marry a maid-ſervant) but the neerneſſe of blood, which is the ſame betwixt Aunt and nephew, as betwixt Uncle and Neece; ſo much the Hebrew phraſe imports, verſ. 6. ſee the text and margin, and therefore it is as unlawfull for the father to marry his own daughter, as for the mother to marry her own ſonne; yet of the marriage of the Uncle and Neece there are divers examples, as of Nachor with his neece Melcham, Abraham with Sarah his neece, (as is moſt probable) and Amram, the father of Moſes, married his Aunt; Exod. 6.20. but this was before this law was made; and for the Jewes, who at this day obſerve it not, it may be thought to be a part of their apoſtaſie from true religion. By this prohibition of marriage with the Aunt, ſome conceive the marriage with Couſen Germans is forbidden, becauſe there is conſanguinitie betwixt them, but onely affinity betwixt the Aunt and the husbands ſonne; but the husband and wife being one fleſh, Gen. 2.24. this affinity may make more for prohibition of marriage then any other; howſoever, it is ſafe to forbear what is doubtfull, and to keep aloof from what is unlawfull; eſpecially the choice of lawfull marriages being large enough, without the hazard of ſo great a ſinne as Inceſt. If it be ſaid, that this is a Leviticall law, which doth not oblige us under our chriſtian condition; it may be anſwered, that the Jewes had allowance for neerer matches then other people, eſpecially Chriſtians; for among them a man might, or rather muſt marry his brothers wife (when he was dead) to raiſe up ſeed unto him; Deut. 25.5. which in Chriſtianity is condemned, Matth. 14.3,4. as well as marrying the fathers wife. 1 Cor. 5. 1. But what in this is forbidden to the Jewes, is much more forbidden to the Chriſtians; who, having more latitude, and libertie of choice then they had, who were to marry, not onely with their own nation, but within their own tribe, and ſometimes (as hath been ſaid) two brothers muſt ſucceſſively be husbands to one wife; are leſſe capable of excuſe, if in carnall concupiſcence they tranſgreſſe theſe prohibitions: and in the generall, (ſince the goſpel is the law of love and charity, not to one nation onely, but all the world over) as far as conſanguinity, or affinity will work in affection, without a new tye of matrimony, ſo far reacheth matrimoniall prohibition, and ſhould there firſt begin, where the relations are ſo remote, that they have little, or no operations of love; that ſo charity might be more diffuſive, and not ſo contracted to ones kindred, as it was among the Jews.

V. 15. ſonnes wife] when he is dead, much leſſe mayeſt thou doe it when heis alive.

V. 16. Brothers wife] Neither while he is alive, nor when he is dead; except in an eſpeciall caſe, and upon an eſpeciall warrant, Deut.25.5.

V. 18. to her ſiſter] This is not to be underſtood onely of another naturall ſiſter, as if a man might have two wives, ſo they were not ſuch ſiſters; or two ſiſters one after another to wife, the latter upon the death of the former; for the marriage of the brothers wife is forbidden before, verſ. 16. and by conſequence, a woman muſt not marry her ſiſters husband; and ſo two ſiſters are already forbidden to be married to one man, verſ. 16. Wherefore it is moſt probable, that this is a prohibition of Polygamie: that is, of having more wives then one at once; and the reaſon ſheweth it, that the one may not be a vexation to the other, which is like to fall out not onely betwixt naturall ſiſters, as Leah and Rachell, Gen.30.1.14. but betwixt thoſe that are not of kinne; as betwixt Hannah, and Peninnah, 1 Sam.1.6. And for the word Siſter, in a generall acceptation, it may be applied to any woman; as the word Brother, to any man, Gen.19.7. and it is to be noted, that it is ſometimes applied to things, which in propriety of ſpeech, come not under ſuch a title or denomination; as the wings of the beaſt, Ezek. 1.9. are ſaid to touch a woman to her ſiſter, as the Hebrew phraſe carrieth it.

V. 21. paſſe through] The children dedicated to the Idoll Molech, paſſe through two fires, made on each ſide their way to it, that by that paſſage they may be purged, and ſo prepared for a ſacrifice to the Idoll: all but the head of this Idoll repreſented a man, and being made of braſſe, aud hollow, fire was put into it, and children put into the armes of it; wherein with the burning heat they were tormented to death, while their deluded parents danced about them, with the noiſe of Drums, and other loud Inſtruments, which might out-ſound their lamentable cries. This Idoll was called ſometimes Molech, and ſometimes Moloch, Amos 5.27. ſometimes Melchom; all having a conformitie in ſenſe and ſound with Melech, a King: and this was the principall Idoll of the Ammonites, 1 King.11.7. and of their neighbours the Phœnicians, and from thence it came unto the Canaanites, called alſo Baal: compare 2 King.23.10. Jer.19.5. & Chap.7.31. & Chap.32.35.

profane the Name] That is, diſhonour it by departing from God, to ſerve ſuch an Idoll, in ſuch an abominable manner. See Jer.2.7,8. Rom.2.24.

V. 24. which I caſt out before you] The ſinnes of the Gentiles which had not the Law in Tables of ſtone, were ſinnes againſt the Law of Nature, written in the fleſhly tables of the heart; wherein their conſciences might accuſe them, Rom. 2. 14. and juſtifie God in his juſt judgements upon them.

V. 25. viſit] I will puniſh the Land, where ſuch inceſtuous marriages, and pollutions are acted and permitted.

vomiteth] He compareth the wicked to evill humours, and ſurfetting, which corrupt the ſtomach, and oppreſſe nature, and therefore muſt be caſt out by vomit.

V. 26. ſtranger] Some take a ſtranger here, for a ſtranger in Nation, but not in Religion, which ingageth him to the ſame lawes and penalties with the native Hebrewes; but the ſinnes here mentioned, were ſome of them ſo abominable, that they were to be puniſhed with death in whomſoever. See Annot. on Chap.17.verſ.13. & Annot.on Chap.20.verſ.2.

V. 28. ſpued out] Both for their wicked marriages, unnaturall copulations; and for their Idolatry, or ſpirituall whoredome with Molech, and like abominations. See Levit. 20. verſ.3.5.

V. 29. the ſoules] That is, the perſons; See Annot. on Chap.17. verſ.15.

cut off] Either by the Civill ſword, or by ſome plague, that God will ſend upon ſuch wicked people. See Chap.17. verſ. 4.

CHAP. XIX.

Verſ.3. His mother, and] The mother is named firſt, becauſe children being moſt familiar with their mothers, are moſt apt to contemne them; and therefore to make them the more to reverence them, they are required to hearken to the words of their mother as to a law, Prov.1.8. but to the words of their father as to an inſtruction; the tie of obedience being for caution, made moſt ſtrict, where diſobedience was moſt like to breake out.

and keepe my Sabbaths] In the Decalogue or tenne Commandements, the Commandement of the Sabbath is ſet before the Commandement of honouring of Parents; becauſe that of the Sabbath is a duty of the firſt Table, and the Commandement for obedience to parents is a dutie of the ſecond Table; but here the order is firſt for obedience to parents, becauſe they are charged with the obſervation of the Sabbath, both for themſelves, and for their children, and ſervants, Exod. 20. verſ. 10.

V. 4. molten gods] By which (by a figurative ſpeech called Synecdoche) all ſorts of Idols are forbidden; and it may be, the rather under this name, and notion, becauſe of the golden Calfe which was a molten Image.

V. 6. the ſame day, and on the morrow] Of peace-offerings there are two ſorts: the one is for impetration or obtainement of good, and for that there was no ſet time preſcribed; for it is ſaid, ye ſhall offer it at your owne will, and that was to be eaten the ſame day it was offered, and on the morrow: the other was for thankeſgiving, and that was to be eaten the ſame day: See Annot. on Chap.7.verſ.13.

V. 12. neither --- profane] Not uſe it as a common name, without reverence, whereby it may come into contempt.

V. 13. not abide] Becauſe he that worketh for hire, is commonly ſo poore, that he hath not proviſion for a day before hand.

V. 14. not curſe] Not ſpeake evill of the deafe, nor of the abſent, who is as a deafe man to that which is ſpoken out of his hearing, as a deafe man to what is ſpoken in his preſence is as one that is abſent.

V. 14. before the blinde] Though men neither hear what we ſay, nor ſee what we doe; the awe of Gods omniſcience, and of our owne conſcience, muſt binde us to our good-behaviour towards them, not onely from open, but from ſecret injuries.

V. 15. perſon of the poore] That is, not ſo reſpect the poore in his povertie, as in pitie to him, to wrong the rich, or mighty; nor ſo feare or honour the mighty, as to comply with his oppreſſion of the poore, againſt right and juſtice. See Exod. 23. verſ. 3.

V. 16. ſtand againſt the bloud] By telling tales, which may inrage others to his ruine, Ezek.22.9. as by Doegs example is evident, 1 Sam.22.9.18. Pſal.5.2.19. Or by conſenting to the death of the innocent, or conſpiring with the wicked to that purpoſe.

V. 17. in any wiſe rebuke] Hatred is forbidden, and rebuke preſcribed as contrary to it, and this according to the dealing of God himſelfe with his deare children, Prov. 3. 12. Heb. 12.16. therefore rebukes muſt not be given in hatred, or wrath, but in love; and when they are lovingly tendered, they muſt be kindly entertained.

V. 18. as thy ſelfe] Which requireth a conformitie in qualitie, not a correſpendence of equalitie, as Joh. 17. 21. the love to another muſt be like in kind, for ſinceritie, without deceit, 1 Joh. 3. 18. and for efficacie, without defect; when we have opportunitie to doe others good, or to ſave them from hurt.

V. 19. divers kind] The reaſon of this was; that the order of nature, in the diſtinct kinds of creatures, might be preſerved; and with this there was implied an inſtruction againſt mixtures of Religion; as the prohibition of mingling of ſeed of ſeverall ſorts, and the wearing of a Linſey-woolſey garment, in this verſe, was a document or leſſon of ſimplicitie, or ſinceritie, againſt double-dealing. Object. But the Jewes had many Mules, which proceed from the mixture of an Horſe and an Aſſe, and therefore it is like, they obſerved not this rule: Anſw. There are, that doe affirme, that Mules, are male and female, and doe ingender in their own kind; but if they doe not, they might be ſtored with Mules, in Faires, and Markets, Ezek.27.14.

V. 20. becauſe ſhe was not free] Freedome was a great priviledge, as bondage a grievous preſſure; but note that priviledges doe more oblige, and more ſtrictly binde men to their good-behaviour; and binde them over to ſeverer puniſhment, if they breake them; as unto death, if the woman were not bound, but free, Deut.22.23.

V. 23. as uncircumciſed] As thoſe Nations, which were uncircumciſed; that is, legally uncleane.

three yeeres] Whether this was for a naturall reaſon, becauſe the fruits of a new plantation were weake, and wateriſh; or for ſome myſticall cauſe, it is uncertaine: but certainly God had power, to make his allowance, or reſtraint of fruits, as well as of other creatures, Levit. 11. whereby the appetite was to be curbed, and the people enured to forbeare lawfull things, that they might be the further eſtranged from things unlawfull: and withall the fruits in the fourth yeare coming to more maturitie and perfection, were the fitter to be offered up unto God, who is alwayes worthy to be ſerved with the beſt.

V. 24. all the fruit] Beſide the firſt-fruits, which were given to the Prieſts, and the common Tithes given to the Levites, and the tithes of tithes which the Levites gave to the Prieſts; there were two ſorts of tithes enjoyned the Jews: Firſt, the yearely Tithes mentioned Deut.12.12.17. & Chap. 14.22. and of theſe there was an holy feaſt made at Jeruſalem, Deut.12.14. at which the Levites, Orphans and Widows were to be, and their domeſticks

16. Brothers Wife] By this Law it follows neceſſarily, that a woman being married to the one Brother, ſhe may not marry the other, after the former's deceaſe: and conformably, a man being married to one Sister, he may not after her death, marry the other.
Dutch Annot.

18.23. Neither ſhalt thou lie with any beaſt to defile thy ſelf therewith _____ it is confuſion.
Levit. 20.12. they have wrought Confuſion.

ſticks, and friends might be preſent; and among theſe Tithes were reckoned theſe fruits of the fourth yeare here mentioned. Secondly, thoſe that were ſet apart every third yeare, as is preſcribed, Deut. 14,28. & Chap. 26.12. and theſe were onely to feaſt the Levites, and the poore widowes, and orphans, and needy ſtrangers; and theſe were not eaten at Jeruſalem (as the former) but by every one in his owne Citie, Deut. 14.28.

V. 25. that it may yeeld unto you the increaſe] The way to be rich, is to obey Gods command, though for the preſent it may ſeeme to tend to povertie; as to give a portion to ſeven, and alſo to eight, Eccleſ. 11.2. that is, to many; though no more be to be expected of them, then by caſting bread upon the waters, as in the precedent verſe, to give plentifully, Luk. 16. 38. which in a way of charitie is not a caſting away, but a ſowing, which will be reaped in a plentifull increaſe as at the harveſt, 2 Cor. 9.6. to pay tithes freely, is more profitable for the giver, then for the receiver, Mal. 3. 10. to ceaſe from traffique, or queſtuous commerce upon the Sabbath, though worldlings account the Sabbath a great interruption to their profit, and cry out of it, as if on that day the Sunne proceeded a ſlower pace then on others, Amos 8.5. For to thoſe that conſcionably keepe that day, it is a day, not onely of glory to God, but of benefit to themſelves; and that not onely ſpirituall to their ſoules, but alſo temporall in their eſtates; which, (if they religiouſly obſerve that day in the Sanctuary, and in their Families,) are like to proſper the better all the weeke after: ſo though the forbearing of the firſt three yeeres fruit ſeeme to be matter of damage, by Gods bleſſing upon their obedience, it ſhall turne to their advantage.

V. 26. nor obſerve] Superſtitiouſly; as thoſe do, who accouut ſome dayes lucky, ſome unlucky: ſee Annot. on Gen. 1.14.

V. 27. not round the corners] The word round, in the Originall, ſignifies ſuch a rounding as may be without cutting, a rounding in generall, which ſome take to be a compaſſing the head with a Garland, as was in uſe among them that celebrated the Feaſts of Bacchus; and the word Corners, in the Originall, is in the Singular number; and being ſo, it may note ſome ſingular cutting of one corner of the head round, in the manner of a circle (as the Egyptians, it may be, had their crownes ſhaven, as now is in uſe with the Popiſh-prieſts) or elſe in the manner of an halfe-Moone. Or taking the Singular number for the Plurall, the prohibition may be meant, as ſome conceive, of criſping, or curling round the haire in ſome corners of the head; or cutting off the longeſt of the haire, to offer tuffs, or locks of it as a devoted oblation to Idols, as many heathens did, making the bare place round, with a ſuperſtitious conceit of a round figure, as moſt pleaſing to God, and moſt like God, whom ſome Philoſophers defining, ſaid, God is a Circle, whoſe Center is every where, and his Circumference no where: or of cutting the haire, as the Egyptian Prieſts did, who worſhipped the Idols Anubis and Iſis, ſhaving round their heads, and the haire of their eye-browes; or of cutting round the haire in mourning, to which may be applied, Iſa. 15.2. & Jer. 48.37. which the Egyptians required even of their women, when their Idolized Oxe, called Apis, died. But hereby was not forbidden to them, much leſſe to Chriſtian men, to weare the haire in a moderate meaſure, betwixt ſhaving of the head, and nouriſhing the locks, Ezek. 44. 20. See 1 Cor. 11. 14.

V. 27. Of the beard] Becauſe a decent growth of the beard, is a ſigne of manhood, and a remarkable difference of the male, from the female ſexe: and this was forbidden to be done in that ſuperſtitious manner which heathens uſed, who conſecrated to their gods not onely their locks, but their beards alſo; eſpecially the firſt doune of it. Plutarch. in Theſeo, & Sueton. in Nerone. 1.12.

V. 28. nor print any markes] That is, you ſhall not make or receive any impreſſion upon your fleſh, or skinne, as tokens of Idolatry, or ſuperſtition: See Deut. 14. 1. 1 King. 18. 28. Jer. 16. 6.

V. 30. and reverence my Sanctuary] Or, feare my Sanctuary. The Sabbath is not to be profaned, becauſe it is Gods holy day; nor the Sanctuary, becauſe it is the place of his eſpeciall preſence, Gen. 28. verſ. 16, 17. & Eccleſ. 5.1. Some of the Hebrewes expound it thus; that though every place where prayer was made, and the law taught, were to be reverenced, yet eſpecially was Jeruſalem; becauſe the Sanctuary was there; whence they gather, that a dead man ought not to abide there all night, nor the bones of a dead man to be carried through it. But though both Sabbath and Sanctuary were to be uſed with reverence, the Sabbath was firſt and chiefly to be regarded; for there was a Sabbath before the Sanctuary was made; and for the keeping of the Sabbath holy, there was, and is an expreſſe precept in the Decalogue, not ſo for the Sanctuary. 3. The holineſſe of the Sanctuary is gone, and the Sanctuary it ſelfe; therefore now in every place God will accept of a ſincere ſervice, Joh. 4.21,23,24. of every one, 1 Tim. 2.8. It was therefore an abſurd ſuperſtition in the one, and profanenеſſe in the other, when the Sanctuary, the place of worſhip was held in ſo great reverence by many of later times, that they would not come into it without demonſtration, or oſtentation of devotion, and reverence; eſpecially in their approaches to the Altar, (as they Jewiſhly, or Popiſhly called the Lords Table) when they allowed carnall recreations on the Sabbath day, and thoſe of that ſort, whereof there is queſtion at leaſt, whether they were lawfull any day. NB.

V. 32. riſe up] In token of reverence. See Chap. 23. 15. Gen. 31.35.

V. 34. as one borne among you] That is, if he be not of the Canaanites, who were to be deſtroyed; but a Proſelyte; that is, a circumciſed convert, profeſſing the Religion of the Hebrewes.

V. 35. mete-yard] Or line, for the meaſuring of ground. The Hebrewes ſay, there was injuſtice in the mete-yard, when a man meaſured ground for one in faire weather, for another in foule; for in rainy weather it was longer, and in faire weather ſhorter: which may be true if the Line were of leather, or of ſuch matter as the ſtring of a Watch: but the ordinary lines, ropes, or cords of haire, or hempe, or flaxe, flagge more in dry weather, and ſo are longer then in wet.

in weight] Wherein, (as ſome of the Hebrewes ſay) not onely he offended, that uſed an unjuſt weight and ballance, but he alſo that had them at home, though he uſed them not; perhaps, becauſe having them by him, he might ſometimes be tempted to make ill uſe of them; at leaſt it argued too little zeale againſt injuſtice in him who would keepe them neere him, when with deteſtation he ſhould caſt them from him, as the monuments, and inticements to Idolatry, Iſa. 30,22.

meaſure] There might be a two-fold unrighteouſneſſe in meaſure; the one when it was not of a juſt capacitie; the other when it was ſo filled with liquid things, by pouring them out with an high hand, that there was much froth in ſtead of ſubſtantiall liquor; which after a while would ſhrinke, and ſo the want of due meaſure would be manifeſt.

V. 36. Ephah, and a juſt Hin] Of the Ephah, ſee Exod. 16.36. and of the Hin, ſee Exod. 29.40.

CHAP. XX.

Verſ. 2. Strangers] In faults and penalties for ceremoniall matters. By ſtrangers are to be underſtood Proſelytes, or Converts; as Chap. 17. verſ. 15. but for morall, and capitall crimes and puniſhments, (eſpecially ſuch as was the ſervice of Molech) the word Stranger, might comprehend all Aliens from the Common-weale of Iſrael, whether Converts or no.

Molech] By Molech here are meant all kinde of Idols; of Molech in particular, ſee Annot. on Chap. 18. verſ. 21.

V. 3. defile my Sanctuary] Though Molech was not honoured either in the Tabernacle, or Temple, which were the Sanctuaries of the Lord; the former in Moſes time, the latter from Solomons time; yet his Sanctuary was defiled, and defamed, when the people of his Covenant rejecting that, revolted to Idolatry; or with that, did exerciſe Idolatry in other places, and then came with polluted hearts and hands, to worſhip in his Sanctuary: as Jer. 7.9,10. And ſo for the like reaſons his Name is ſaid to be profaned. See Annot. on Chap. 18. verſ. 21.

V. 4. hide their eyes] Though the people be negligent in their dutie, to defend Gods right, yet he will not ſuffer wickedneſſe to goe unpuniſhed: or if men know it not, or could not legally convince the offender, by evident proofes, God himſelfe will both finde him out, and cut him off.

V. 5. againſt his family] By family in the generall, may be meant any one of the ſame Nation; as by neighbour in the ninth Commandement is meant not onely he that dwels nigh us, but any one with whom we have to doe: or more particularly, his kindred, who either by conformitie to his practiſe, or connivence at his ſinne, might contract to themſelves a participation of guilt.

cut him off] By ſome divine vengeance, if the hand of man, by courſe of juſtice, doe not avenge the quarrell of my Covenant, by putting him to death.

V. 8. will ſanctifie you] In the precedent verſe, they are commanded to ſanctifie themſelves ſo farre, as by uſing outward meanes and helps they may become good, and doe good, and ſhunne ſinne; but it is God that worketh the inherent holineſſe of the heart, and outwardly ſanctifieth, and ſeparateth them by holy obſervations from other people, verſ. 24. 26. & Chap. 22. verſ. 9.

V. 9. that curſeth] By curſing is meant all manner of reviling, or reproaching of naturall parents. See Exod. 21. v. 17.

put to death] It is like, by ſtoning, as Deut. 21. verſ. 20,21. which puniſhment, for more reproach, was, as ſome obſerve, inflicted on them ſtripped of their clothing.

his bloud ſhall be upon him] That is, the guilt of his owne bloud, which, but for his sinne, would not have beene shed in this case.

V. 10. the adulterer and the adultresse shall surely be put to death] Both are faulty in the sinne, therefore both must fall by the punishment, which was equall, though the sinne were unequall; for in some respects the man might be the greater sinner, as if he acted the Devils part to tempt the woman; and in this respect the womans sinne might be the greater, because by adultery she might steale in a falle heire to the estate of her husband; and because it was neither lawfull, nor tolerated for one woman to have the use of many men, as it was for a time tolerated for one man to have the use of many women: yet which so ever sinned least, deserved death; and there was not so much severitie in inflicting death upon that degree, as mercy in laying no more weight of punishment upon the greater guilt.

V. 11. fathers nakednesse] See Annot. on Chap. 18. v. 8.

V. 14. it is wickednesse] That is, an execrable and detestable degree of wickednesse.

V. 16. and the beast] Though beasts cannot commit sinne, (because the law of holinesse is not given to them) yet such is Gods hatred against it, that he punisheth the appurtenances unto it, to make it as odious unto men, as it is to himselfe; and to take away the memoriall of so abominable a villany, the offender and his partner in that impuritie, must be taken away by fire, that nothing may remaine of them.

V. 17. in the sight] That others may see, and feare, what the guiltie doe feele; which is the chiefe end of such open and exemplary punishments.

see her] The sense of seeing in regard of the excellency, and certaintie of it, is put many times for other senses; as Exod. 20. 18. Rev. 1. 12. for hearing, and here for touching.

V. 18. in her sickenesse] That is, in her monethly infirmitie.

fountaine] Or, issue. For of the same thing, the phrase is so varied, Mark. 5. 29. Luk. 8. 44.

both] This seemes to be too severe a sentence, if such a thing were done of ignorance; therefore it is probable, this punishment was the reward of a witting and willing transgression.

cut off] See Annot. on vers. 5.

V. 19. beare their iniquitie] When God will not beare with them, but bringeth the reward of their sin upon them.

V. 20. childlesse] Either their lives were to be cut off before they became parents, by the severitie of this Decree; or God would not blesse their bed with successefull conception: Or, if they had children, they should out-live them, and die childlesse, vers. 21. and if their children lived, they should be reputed as bastards, and not numbred among the Israelites.

CHAP. XXI.

Vers. 1. Defiled] It is considerable; first, how this uncleanesse was contracted, viz. by touching the dead, lamenting, or being at their buriall, or within the place, or Tent, where any lay dead; by which was contracted a ceremoniall uncleanesse for seven dayes, Numb. 19. 14. 16. Secondly, why the Priests were prohibited this approach with reference to the dead; and that was upon reasons, partly generall, belonging to all the religious, as to professe their faith and hope of the resurrection of the dead, 1 Thes. 4. 13. and partly particular, for especiall admonition of puritie to the Priests as being types of Christ, and by neerer and more frequent communion with God professing more godlinesse then other men.

for the dead] Heb. for the soule. The soule is put by a Synecdoche, (of the part for the whole man) and by a Metonymie, one part for another, the soule for the body; so also, vers. 11. See Chap. 17. vers. 15.

V. 3. virgine] For if she were married she was of another Family, and to be buried, and mourned for by her kindred of that family; but the Priest was permitted to mourn for his next kindred onely, and of his kindred for onely sixe of both Sexes, viz. his father, and mother, for his sonne, and his daughter, his brother, and sister, if she were a virgin, els not; the wife is not mentioned; yet since none of these is so neere as the wife, (for man and wife are one flesh) she is to be conceived as virtually included, or reasonably presupposed in the naming of the rest: and whereas Ezekiel is forbidden to mourn for his wife, Chap. 24. 16, 17, 18. it seemes by the expresse prohibition, to be an extraordinary exception, from an ordinary rule, or practise. And whereas Eleazar and Ithamar were forbidden to lament the death of Nadab and Abihu their brethren, Chap. 10 6. the reason is, because they died as malefactors, by divine vengeance; in which respect their mourning for them would have been a kind of murmuring against God himselfe; besides, if they had defiled themselves, the service of God must have beene intermitted longer then was meet for their sakes; there being no other at that time to performe service in that kinde.

V. 4. being a chiefe man] The preeminence of his place and calling, must exempt him from the common condition of the people. The words are also rendred for a chiefe man, and then the meaning is, that though a chiefe man die, he may not accompany his body to buriall.

V. 5. nor shave the corner] See Annot. on Chap. 19. vers. 27, 28.

V. 6. the bread] The shew-bread, or meat-offerings; or all the food that came, by way of Oblation, to the Priests his servants, might be called bread; for in Scripture, whatsoever serveth for mans sustenance, is often so called; See vers. 17. 21.

therefore] Holinesse is pressed upon the Priests in especiall manner, because they must both by doctrine, and example, worke upon the people to be holy also; and if they be profane, their scandalous lives bring contempt on the name, and service of God, as if they were profane or common things.

holy] Hebr. holinesse in the abstract; importing an extraordinary degree of holinesse; as if they should not be carnall at all, but meere spirituall, all holy, even as holinesse it self.

V. 8. sanctifie him] The sense of these words is varied with reference to the person, to whom they were spoken; if to Moses, the meaning may be, that he was to take care of their holy carriage, as much as in him lay; if to the people, the meaning is, that their opinion of them, and behaviour towards them, should be such, as hath a savour of holy reverence with respect of their calling, in reference to God.

V. 9. burnt] Burning was the severest kinde of death: to this the Priests daughter was doomed when others were not, for fornication only, to die at all; Exod. 22. 16, 17. now since this penalty was not imposed with any especiall respect to age, or sexe; it is like, the Priests wife or son, if guilty of the same sinne, was to be punished in like sort, because of the dishonour done to the Priesthood by their meanes; for which cause the connivence, or indulgence of old Eli to his wicked sons, was the more displeasing to God.

V. 10. High-priest] The High-priest might not mourn for the dead, though of his neerest kindred; in this he was differenced from the inferiour Priests; as also, first, in that they ministred daily, he but on the solemn day of expiation; Secondly, the holy anointing oyle was poured on his head, Chap. 8. vers. 11. the rest were but sprinkled, and that not with pure oyle, but with oyle mingled with blood, vers. 30. Thirdly, he had eight holy garments, they not so many, nor any so glorious as some of his. The High Priests refraining from mourning, and funeralls, was apishly followed by the Devils priests. Gell. lib. 10. cap. 15. Noct. Attic.

uncover his head] See Annot. on Chap. 10. 16.

V. 11. go into] He shall not go into the house where any dead body is.

for his father, or for his mother] Though out of naturall affection, he may be sorry for them, he must not by any externall token of mourning professe it, no, not so much as by his presence at their funerall; because he was to be observed, or noted, rather for qualifications of grace and holinesse, then for the affections of flesh and blood.

V. 12. prophane my sanctuary] Either by forsaking the Sanctuary for a ceremoniall, or immoderate mourning; or by staying from the Sanctuary for a ceremoniall uncleanesse, or by coming to it again before the time of cleansing, prescribed, be expired.

crown] By this crown may be understood, either the Golden plate put upon the Mytre, Exod. 29. 6. or the oyl, called by the same name, which served for separation from others, and for prelation above them, especially in reference to typicall representation of Christs royall Priesthood.

V. 13. in her virginity] The High Priests wife was therefore to be so pure, because she was a type of the Church, 2 Cor. 11. 2. Rev. 14. 4. as the High Priest her husband was of Christ.

V. 14. a widow] In this the marriage of the High Priest (for in this particular the prohibition is not given to inferiour Priests) was more precise, then the ministers of the Gospel need to be; but in the other exceptions, there is a morall reason for them, which was not peculiar to the Priesthood, but belongeth to modesty, honesty, and decency of the Evangelicall ministery.

of his own people] Whereby, though it be meant, that usually the Levites should marry within their owne tribes, as the rest did; yet because they had no separate portion of the land of Canaan by themselves, as the other tribes had, but were in a manner mingled among them by their dwellings; this restraint of marriage was not so strictly observed among them, but that they might sometimes marry with daughters that were not of their own tribe; as Jehoiada married Jehoshabeath the daughter of Jehoram king of Judah. 2 Chr. 22. 11.

V. 15. prophane his seed] Making them unfit for the holy Priesthood, by marrying any unchast, or defamed woman; that upholding the holinesse, and purity of his Priesthood, he may breed the more reverence in the people, to the religion and worship, wherein he was a principall and most eminent agent: and therefore he was not to marry a woman eitheir corrupted by whoredom, or defamed by report; no, nor an honest widow,

(but a virgin only) unlesse her deceased husband were a Priest, Ezek. 44.22. nor a woman divorced for what cause soever.

V. 17. any blemish] For as the sacrifice by death was a type of Christ, and therefore must be without blemish; Exod. 12.5. Levit. 22.19. 1 Pet. 1.19. so the Priest by oblation was a type of Christs free-offering up of himself, and therefore he was to be without blemish also: And now though such blemishes do not disable men from the ministery of the Gospel, such remarkable deformities as apparently procure contempt, should discourage any from undertaking that calling; especially when they are to be set up to the publike view, and therewithall to disdain; whereby the ministery is neither so awfull or fruitfull, as by another it might be: but that which in the Evangelicall ministery is most liable to exception, is such blemishes in the minde, or manners, as make them unable to be teachers, unfit to be examples to their flocks, as is required, 1 Pet. 5.2,3.

bread] By which is meant all Oblations allowed for food, especially the Shew-bread, which the inferiour Priests every sabbath, brought new, and set upon the table of the Shew-bread, and took away the old. See vers. 6.

V. 18. flat nose] The originall word Bharum in the radicall sense of it, signifieth rather cut off, then depressed or flat.

V. 22. he shall eat] Though the blemished Priest may not offer, he may eat of the offerings; because eating was no type of Christs person, or his actions: in not being allowed to offer, hee was in worse condition then other Priests; in being allowed to eate, he was in a better state then they that were unclean, for they might not. chap. 22. vers. 3.

both of the most holy] There was a difference, and kinde of preeminence in things dedicated to God; but if they were to be eaten, he was to have his part, how holy soever they were.

V. 23. nor come nigh]. The altar was without the Tabernacle, and by the door of it, he that had a blemish might not come so farre as to the Altar, much lesse might he come into the Sanctuary, or doe any Priestly office there, though by birth he were of the Priestly kindred.

CHAP. XXII.

Vers. 2. Separate themselves] Meaning, that the Priests abstaine from eating holy things, as long as themselves are polluted; which requires a separation from them for a certain time, untill they be cleansed. See vers. 4.

V. 3. goeth unto] That is, to eat thereof.

from my presence] Hebr. from my face; From me, or by me; so that he shall not live in my sight, nor have a being as he hath had.

V. 4. What man soever] the Hebrew is, man man; That is, any man, this or that, if he may be called man, or be of mankind; and so it extends to women also, who had no more priviledge of eating holy things in a condition of uncleanesse, then men had.

that is unclean] By touching any dead thing, or being at the buriall of any dead body.

or a man whose] That man shall be unclean: not he that toucheth him; though touching other unclean things, do cause a ceremoniall uncleanesse.

V. 6. The soul] That is, by an ordinary Synecdoche, the person; the better part being put for the whole. See Annot. on chap. 21. vers. 1.

V. 10. no stranger] That is, not a Priest, or of the family of the Priests, though living in the same house; for sometimes in one house there may bee two families; and herein there is difference between the portion of the Priests, and of the people, though in the same sacrifice; that the Priests portion is to be eaten only by them of his family; but the portion which belonged to him who brought the offering, might be imparted to any Hebrews, if they were not debarred from a part by some legall uncleanesse.

V. 11. he shall eate] He that is but a Sojourner, or Guest, may not eate of the holy things; nor he that is hired by the day; for such an hired servant is meant, vers. 10. but the bought servant, and he that was born in his house, as constant persons in the Priests family, might eat thereof.

V. 12. stranger] See Annot. on vers. 10.

she may not eate] But the Priests wife may eate, as in the right of her husband, being with him one flesh by the bond of marriage.

V. 14. fift part] That is, he shall repay the principall, and a fift part over and above, as a forfeiture for the offence, and a caveat against the like in future time: see Chap. 5. 15. & 16. And this satisfaction was to be made to the Sanctuary, if the wrong were in any thing belonging to it, and to the Priest, if it were in that which was his peculiar portion.

V. 16. or suffer them] Or load themselves with the iniquitie of trespasse in their eating what they should not.

V. 18. strangers] That is, Proselytes, or Converts to the Religion of the Hebrewes.

V. 19. a male] The whole burnt-offering was to be onely of the male kinde, Chap. 1. 10. the peace-offering, Chap. 3. 1. and sinne-offering might be of the females, Chap. 4. 32. & Chap. 5. 6.

V. 23. but for a vow] The lesser blemishes, as the lack of a tayl, (which in slinted sacrifices was not to be wanting, Exod. 29.22. Levit. 8.25. & Levit. 9 19. and the like may be said of the eares) did not hinder the acceptation of a free-will-offering; but that which was offered by vow, was to be perfect, as that which was required by obligation of the law; which was to minde the offerer of the perfection of Christ, of whom the sacrifice was a figure; and of that perfection which every one was to presse after, as in imitation of him. Some take this exception to be onely of such blemishes, as were either excessive or defective in quantitie, for length or shortnesse, for greatnesse or smalnesse; but if there were an excesse or defect in the number of parts; as if a sheepe had more or fewer then foure legges, it was to be rejected as monstrously mis-shapen. And there be some who take this free-will-offering for a gift for the use of the Priest, not to be sacrificed unto God; nor so tendered, as to be turned into money to buy somewhat which is fit to be presented in sacrifice to God. If that which was offered were in its owne kinde fit to be rejected.

V. 25. strangers hand] The sacrifices of God must be offered, and are accepted without respect of any person, but his whom they typifie, Jesus Christ; therefore a blemished sacrifice will not serve, or be received from an Israelite, or from a Proselyte; but they might receive money from strangers, whether in Nation or Religion, which might be converted to some service of the Sanctuary, whether for sacrifice or otherwise; Josephus lib. 2. of the Warres of the Jewes, Chap. 17. But no uncircumcised person might by himself present any thing; though in it selfe perfect, to be offered to God.

V. 27. seven dayes] See Annot. on Exod. 22.30.

V. 28. in one day] By this, as by the ordinance against eating bloud, God meant to admonish his people of mercy, and to restraine them from crueltie.

V. 30. leave none] See Annot. on Chap. 7. vers. 15.

V. 32. profane my holy Name] By bringing it into contempt with the Nations, by your profane and corrupt manners: See Annot. on Chap. 18. vers. 21.

which hallow you] Who give you holy Laws to live by, and the grace you have to live according to those Laws.

CHAP. XXIII.

Vers. 2. Holy convocations] Called and met together for an holy businesse; for hearing of the Law, and for putting up prayers, and giving prayses to God.

V. 3. Sabbath of rest] Heb. rest of rest.

no worke] Worke in the generall is forbidden on the Sabbath, and in particular the dressing of meat on the Sabbath, is forbidden; and the like restraint is partly expresst, and partly understood of the day of expiation. But for other festivals, worke in generall is not forbidden, but servile worke; that is, worke of a mans worldly calling, wherein servants chiefly, though not onely, were employed.

in all your dwellings] The observation of the Sabbath was not onely in the Sanctuary, as other Feasts were, but in private habitations, tents, or houses, as other Feasts were not: for that purpose there were built divers Synagogues, not onely in Jerusalem, but in divers other Cities, Act. 15.21.

V. 4. seasons] The Sabbath was kept every weeke, and the other Convocations but once a yeare.

V. 5. first moneth] The moneth Nisan, which answereth to part of March, and part of Aprill; which was made the beginning of the moneths, Exod. 12. vers. 2. for Ecclesiasticall account, though for Civill matters, the yeare was reckoned from Tizri, which answereth to September.

at even] The feast of unleavened bread began with the Passeover, on the fourteenth day of the moneth; but at the second of the two evenings (whereof see Annot. on Exod. 12.6.) which was the beginning of the fifteenth day, and continued seven dayes, during which time, no bread but unleavened was to be eaten.

V. 7. servile worke] Or bodily labour, saving about that which every one must eate, Exod. 12.16.

V. 8. seventh day] The first day of the feast, and the seventh were to be kept holy; in the rest they might worke, unlesse the Sabbath fell on any of them; yet all of them had the same number of sacrifices, above the ordinary preparation of every day. See Numb. 28.24.

V. 10. When ye be come] It appeareth hereby, that though these lawes were ordained in the Desert, they were not generally and punctually to be observed there, (though some of them were, as that of the Sabbath) but in the Land of Canaan.

harvest] That is, Barley-harvest, which is ripe about the end of March, and the beginning of Aprill, but especially about bout Jericho, for there the corne is ripe ſooner by fifteen dayes, then about Jeruſalem, or any other part of the land of Canaan: Joſeph. Antiq. lib. 3. chap. 10.

a ſheafe of] Hebr. an Omer. For before it was offered it was dryed, and threſhed, and the graine ſeparated from the chaffe, as Joſeph. ſheweth lib. 3. cap. 10. and punned or ground to meale, and that ſifted, that onely the fine flowre might be offered; and ſo it might be meaſured in an Omer: and after this they were allowed to reape for themſelves, which before they might not doe; at leaſt they might not dreſſe any of the new corne for food, before this oblation were made. But ſince the word Omer, ſignifieth alſo an handfull, Deut. 24. 19. ſome would have it taken here for a ſheafe, as verſ. 14.

V. 11. on the morrow after the Sabbath] Not the weekely Sabbath, but the holy day of the feaſt of unleavened-bread, called a Sabbath, verſ. 7. and the ſecond day of the feaſt, which is the ſixteenth day of the moneth Niſan; from which day were reckoned the fifty dayes ended at Pentecoſt, or Whitſontide, reckoning that ſecond day incluſively. Pentecoſt, or Whitſontide was kept in memoriall, firſt, of the Iſraelites coming out of Egypt, Deut. 16. 10, 12. ſecondly, of the Law given at Mount Sinai: thirdly, for gratefull acknowledgement of the fruitfulneſſe of the Land of Canaan. Some make a myſticall alluſion hereof, to the giving of the Evangelicall law at Jeruſalem in the feaſt of Pentecoſt, Act. 2. 1, 2, 3. and to the firſt fruits of the Chriſtian converts, reaped by the Miniſtery of the Apoſtles, according to our Saviours ſaying, Joh. 4. 37, 38.

V. 12. an he Lambe] At this feaſt were ſerved in three courſes of ſacrifices; firſt, the continuall daily ſacrifice: ſecondly, the ſeptenary ſacrifice offered every of the ſeven dayes: and thirdly, this offered with the firſt-fruits, prefiguring Chriſt who was the firſt-borne of every creature, Col. 1. 15. and the firſt-fruits of them that ſlept, 1 Cor. 15. 20. Col. 1. 18. and by whom theſe firſt-fruits were ſanctified.

V. 13. two tenth deales] Which is the fifth part of an Ephah, or two Omers: ſee Annot. on Exod. 16. verſ. 16. and therefore two, or double to the uſuall proportion of a lambe, Numb. 15. 4. becauſe here was added another occaſion of the ſacrifice, viz. a gratulation for the fruits of the earth, and therefore was the meale doubled, not the Lambe, becauſe it came of the fruits of the earth, as the Lambe did not.

Hin] See Annot. on Exod. 29. 40.

V. 14. untill] Untill they have offered unto God, as to their Maker, and maintainer, a portion of his owne increaſe, as a tribute, or chiefe rent, for that they have and hold under him; they were not to take any thing for their owne uſe.

V. 15. morrow after] See Annot. on verſ. 11.

ſeven Sabbaths] That is, ſeven weeks; for that being the principall day in the week, carrieth the name of the whole weeke; (as the ſoule the chiefe part of man, ſtands for the whole man). So the Phariſee is to be underſtood, when he ſaith, he faſted twice a Sabbath, that is, twice a weeke, Luk. 18. 12. for twice a day he could not keepe a faſt.

V. 17. two wave loaves] At the feaſt of Pentecoſt every family (as ſome conceive) was to bring two leavened loaves, as the firſt-fruits of their increaſe to the Prieſts, becauſe it is ſaid, they ſhould bring them out of their habitations; but that notwithſtanding others take it that it would be too great a proportion of bread for them, and that ſo many could not be waved by the Prieſt with the peace-offering, as is appointed, v. 20. therefore it is more probable that they were a common oblation, made at the publique charge, and offered alſo in the name of all the people in covenant with God. Againſt this is objected, that they were to bring it out of their habitations, which imports a pluralitie; for two loaves were too few to come out of many habitations: to which it is anſwered, that it muſt be of the wheat of the land of Canaan, not of a foraine Countrey where they had no habitations; and yet it might be that this common charge might, by courſe, be ſo diſtributed among the people, that it might be rather accounted a common or generall thing, then of particular coſt or concernment of particular perſons.

with leaven] Becauſe the Prieſt ſhould eate them, as Chap. 7. 13. and they ſhould not be offered to the Lord upon the Altar; for no leaven was there preſented. See Annot. on Chap. 2. verſ. 11.

V. 18. ſeven lambs] To theſe in the feaſt of Pentecoſt were added other oblations, whereof ſee Num. 28. 27.

V. 20. wave them] See Annot. on Exod. 29. 24.

holy to the Lord] They were ſaid to be holy to the Lord, becauſe the Prieſt as his ſervant, ſhould be maintained by the wages and allowance of his Lord and Maſter.

for the Prieſts] Wholly for the Prieſt, becauſe being offered for the whole congregation, it was too little for every one to have a part; and no man in ſuch a common intereſt, having right to challenge a ſingular portion to himſelfe, all was aſſigned to the Prieſt; though in other peace-offerings he had onely a part, Chap. 7. 32, 33.

V. 22. thou when thou reapeſt] The charge is intimated firſt in the plurall number, when ye; but preſently changed to the ſingular number, thou: to direct every one to make a particular application of the generall to himſelfe.

V. 24. ſeventh moneth] That is, about the end of September.

a Sabbath] Or an holy day, or ſolemne feaſt unto the Lord.

Trumpets] This was on the firſt day of the moneth Tizri, that is, of September; the firſt moneth for civill account: See Annot. on Chap. 25. verſ. 3. And yet this ſeventh moneth, as if it had beene the Sabbath of moneths, as the weekely Sabbath was the ſeventh of dayes, was eminent for the multitude of ſolemnities above any other; for in that moneth was the feaſt of Trumpets, of Tabernacles, and the ſolemne Atonement or Expiation obſerved. This feaſt of Trumpets was kept, at leaſt the firſt day of it (as it is received by tradition among the Jewes) in remembrance of Iſaacs deliverance from ſlaughter, when his father was ready to offer him up in ſacrifice, Gen. 22. 11, & 12. and it is called a memoriall of blowing of Trumpets, becauſe it was in the beginning of that moneth, which had many feaſts in it, to which the people were to be called together by blowing of Trumpets; and for that the Trumpets were to ſound at the oblation of the ſacrifice on dayes of rejoycing, and other ſolemne dayes, eſpecially in the New moone, Numb. 10. 10. Pſal. 81. 3. and this joyfull noiſe was made, with a ſpeciall memoriall of the yeere of Jubilee, which was begun in this moneth; and when it begun, the ſolemnitie of it is ſuppoſed to be ſuch, that the Trumpets were ſounded not at Jeruſalem onely, where the ſacrifices were offered, but throughout all the Cities of Iſrael. Some thinke it was called the feaſt of Trumpets, with reference to the Ram by which Iſaac was ranſomed from death; becauſe ſome Trumpets were made of rams horns, Joſh. 6. 20. Others ſay this feaſt beares the memoriall of the miraculous victorie over Jericho, at the Iſraelites firſt entrance into the Land of Canaan, when the wals of it fell downe at the ſound of rams hornes, Joſh. in the place fore-mentioned.

V. 27. afflict your ſoules] By faſting, mourning in confeſſion of ſinne, and ſupplication for pardon: ſee Levit. 16. 29. This is thought to be the memoriall of the ſinne about the golden Calfe, and of the pardon granted upon the repentance of the people.

V. 32. from Even to] That is, from Sunne ſetting, to Sunne ſetting; ſo was the old Sabbath and other feaſts meaſured: in Chriſtianity, as the day is changed, by occaſion of the reſurrection of Chriſt; ſo alſo is the time of the beginning of it changed from evening to morning, and that upon the ſame ground; for Chriſt roſe not in the evening, but in the morning, Matth. 28. 1. Quere.

V. 34. Tabernacles] This feaſt was to be kept in gratefull memoriall of Gods providence, and protection of the Iſraelites in the wilderneſſe, where they had no houſes, but moveable habitations, as Tabernacles, Tents, and Boothes, Winter and Summer, for fourtie yeares together, verſ. 43. And it was inſtituted alſo, for thankeſgiving to God for the fruits which the yeare before brought forth; not onely their corne, but the fruit of their vines and olives, and were all uſually gathered at this time, to wit, in September, when this feaſt was celebrated, Deut. 16. 13, 14. See Exod. 23. 16. They that turne this Hiſtory into Myſtery, make an alluſion of it to Chriſt and to Chriſtians; to Chriſt taking our tabernacle of fleſh, Joh. 1. 14. to Chriſtians, as they are pilgrims and ſtrangers in the world, having no certaine habitation, Heb. 11. 13. but travelling in this world toward heaven, as the Iſraelites in the wilderneſſe towards Canaan, 2 Cor. 5. 1. See Zach. 14. 16, 19.

V. 36. on the eight day] The feaſt of Tabernacles conſiſted of ſeven dayes, verſ. 34. yet when thoſe were paſt, (though the formalitie of the feaſt were finiſhed) the eighth day was kept with publique ſolemnitie, and it may be with ſo much the more, becauſe untill that time twelve-moneth it was not to returne; for that reaſon, (though in conſtitution it were but equall with the firſt day) in obſervation it might exceed it, and ſo be called the great day of the feaſt, Joh. 7. 37. In this it is probable they had a gratefull remembrance of their peaceable ſettlement in the land of Canaan, after their many intricate and troubleſome windings, and wandrings in the wilderneſſe.

V. 38. Beſides the Sabbaths of the Lord] If other ſolemnities were coincident with the Sabbath, the oblations belonging to the Sabbath did not excuſe the coſt of the concurrent feſtivall; for the oblations belonging to it were to be performed, as if it had happened ſingly by it ſelfe.

beſide your gifts, and beſide all your vowes] No oblations that were voluntary, whether with vow, or without vow, would ſuffice to diſcharge the coſt of the ſacrifice, due to the ſolemnitie of any ſpeciall feſtivitie. N.

V. 43. boothes] Built of boughs, which in the generall were made of goodly trees, and thicke trees, verſ. 40. fit for ſhelter and ſhadow againſt the weather: in particular, they are named,

Palme-trees, and Willowes of the brook, in the same verse; which might be usefull to binde the boughs together: and in Nehemiah, there are mentioned branches of thick trees in generall; and in speciall, Olive branches, and Myrtle branches, Nehem.8.15. these were set upon the roofes of their houses, and in their courts, and in the courts of the House of God, and in the streets, Nehem. 8. vers. 16. their use was, as hath been noted, vers. 34. In this feast of Tabernacles they carried boughs in their hands, Joseph. Antiq. lib. 3. chap. 10. Among these feasts there is no mention of the feast of new moones; whereof see Numb.28.11. To all these in after times, were added, the feast of Purim, for remembrance of the deliverance of the Jews from the conspiracie of Haman, Esth.9.vers.17,26,28. and two more of lesse warrant, 1 Mac. 4. 56. & 2 Mac. 1. 18. These Boothes were not to be set up out of their Towns, or Cities, but out of their houses, in the streets, and in gardens; and sometimes they were placed on the tops of houses, as Nehem. 8. 16. and this feast of Tabernacles continued seven dayes, during all which time, they did not wholly forbeare all bodily labour, but spent the most of it in feasting and rejoycing.

CHAP. XXIIII.

Vers. 2. That they bring] The Priests, and Levites were to doe the service of the Sanctuary, but the people were to beare the charge; since the ministration was not for the Ministers themselves, but for the people also: hence were their oblations, Exod.23.15. & Chap.30.13. and it is like the treasurie, Luk.21.1. was to receive the gifts and oblations of well disposed persons for the maintenance of the Temple, and for the sustenance of them that did service in it.

V. 3. vaile] Which vaile separated the Holiest of all (where was the Arke of the Testimony) from the Sanctuary; so it is without the Holy of Holies.

V. 5. bake] It seemeth by 1 Chron. 9.32. & Chap.23.29. to be the service of the Cohathites (which was one of the families of the Tribe of Levi) to bake the bread.

two tenths] That is, in measure two Omers; of which, see Annot. on Exod.16.16. and in weight every cake was thirteen pound and an halfe, allowing for every three ounces of flower, one ounce of water to temper it withall.

V. 6. two rowes, sixe on a row] They might be variously disposed either in longitude, one by another, or in altitude, one upon another; as in the Scheme in the Geneva Bible.

V. 7. on the bread for] Or, in stead of the bread; for it was burnt every Sabbath, when the bread was taken away.

memoriall] See Annot. on Gen.9.15,16.

V. 8. Every Sabbath] That there may be the more store for the maintenance of the Priests, and that it be not too stale by staying too long unchanged; and the new that was brought, was, it is like, hot from the Oven, that it might not be too dry before the weeks end.

from the children of Israel] From, It is like, being twelve, that they had one from every Tribe: Of the Levites eating the Shew-bread, see 1 Sam.21.

everlasting Covenant] So perpetuall Statute, vers.9. See Chap. 3.17. & Numb.19.21.

V. 9. made by fire] The bread in this respect may be said to be holier then other oblations, because it is constantly and continually presented to God, and as in his presence, is called vers. 10. in Hebrew, the bread of faces. Quest. But how is it made by fire? Answ. It is not said, that it is made by fire, but it is compared with those that are made with fire; or they may be said to be offered with fire, because that which was laid upon them was burnt with fire, and that, it may be, with some reference to them, in their stead.

V. 10. whose father was an Egyptian] When the Israelites came out of Egypt, there came with them a mixed multitude, Exod. 12. 38. whereof the greatest number of strangers were (no doubt) Egyptians, such a one by his fathers side, (though by his mothers side an Israelite) was the blasphemer. It is like his mother taught him to speake; his father, to blaspheme: that is the danger of mixed marriages; for children, like the conclusion of a Syllogisme, follow the worser part.

V. 11. blasphemed] Heb. bored through. For he that is so minded, would both bore his name, and gore his person, if he could.

V. 12. that the minde] Because the punishment for the blasphemer of God in particular, was not yet appointed; Moses might have put him to death by vertue of the law against cursing father or mother, Exod 21.17. but he thought that too light, and therefore consulted with God about it.

V. 14. lay their hands] To testifie their personall charge of the sinne upon him, and to expresse their desire, that the evill of punishment may light upon his head, who is guilty of the evill of sinne; but on their own, if they in this accusation should by slander, and murder, take away first his innocencie, then his life.

V. 15. curseth] This seemes to be a more hainous sinne, then blasphemie fore-mentioned; betwixt which there may be this difference, that blasphemy may be any impeachment of the the divine honour, whether inconsiderately, or deliberately, whether with malice or without; but cursing implies an intestine and deepe malignity: howsoever in this place they were both capitall to the offender.

beare his sinne] That is, shall be punished.

V. 16. stone him] Death was inflicted for the like offence against man; and God inflicts no more (though the sinne be infinitely more heinous) for blasphemie against himselfe; an example against partialitie to our selves, and too much severity in prosecution or punishment of those that offend us.

V. 19. so shall it be done] See Annot. on Exod.21.24.

V. 20. Breach for breach] Not according to every mans grudge, or desire of revenge; but as the Magistrate shall award the cause being heard.

V. 22. for the stranger] Though in ceremonials the stranger had neither priviledge in the use, nor prejudice by the omission of them, yet in capitall crimes, if they and the Israelites sinned alike, they must be punished alike.

CHAP. XXV.

Vers.2. A Sabbath] That is, a rest from the toyle of tillage and culture, both of fields, and vineyards. Of the reasons of this, see Annot. on Exod.23. vers. 11. This Law was dated at Sinai; for thence and then it was delivered, when Moses abode so long with God in the Mount; but it was not to be put in execution, untill they had beene sixe yeares in possession of the Land of Canaan: in the Sabbaticall yeare Deuteronomie was to be read unto the people, Deut. 31.10,11. Hebrew servants were to be released, Exod. 21.2. debts were to be remitted, Deut.15.2. and the ground untilled; and whatsoever fruits it brought forth, they must not be gathered as any ones proper goods, but left to common use.

V. 3. Sixe yeares] The Jewes beginne the count of their Civill yeare in September; for then all their fruits were gathered for the yeare following; the Sacred, which served for the Anniversary order of the festivals, and other Ecclesiasticall matters, was from the moneth Nisan, which answereth to part of March, and part of Aprill.

V. 5. owne accord] By reason of the corne that fell out of the eares the yeare past.

undressed] Heb. of thy separation. That is, which thou hast separated from thy selfe principally, and left free for common use, vers.16. or which thou haddest wont in the sixe years to appropriate, or separate to thine owne use; or, (as some conceive, according to the Hebrew word, Nezirecha) because the fruits ungathered, make a shew or resemblance of the Nazarites, whose locks were worne long, without any cutting.

V. 6. the Sabbath] The rest of the Land; that is, that fruit which the Land bringeth forth in the yeare of her rest from the labour of the husband-man.

V. 8. seven Sabbaths of yeares] That is, fourtie nine yeares; and in the beginning of the fiftieth yeare was the Jubilee, so called, because the joyfull tydings of libertie were publikely proclaimed by the sound of the Trumpet, or Cornet made of a Rams horne, at the end of the fourtie ninth yeare, for the release of men from servitude, debts, mortgage, and the restitution of estates to the first owners, from whom in the former yeares they had been alienated. During this whole yeare there was neither sowing nor reaping, and when it was expired, the next yeare, which was fiftie one, began the reckoning for the succeeding Jubile.

V. 9. the tenth day of the seventh moneth] The Jewes antedate the beginning of the Jubile ten dayes sooner, but if the Trumpet were not sounded till the tenth day, it is like the solemnity began not till then; and the day of expiation led the way to the Jubile succeeding; and in reference thereto, it might minde the people of sowing in teares, before reaping in joy, Psal. 126. 5. and of a disposition to pardon their offending brethren, as they expect pardon for themselves in the day of expiation.

day of atonement] That is, the day of reconciliation with God, which was celebrated on the tenth day of the seventh month.

V. 10. inhabitants] Which were in bondage.

a Jubile unto you] Some take the word from Jubal the first inventour of instruments of musicke; because it was a yeer of rejoycing; but the more received etymology is from Jobel, which signifieth a ram, because the Jubile was proclaimed in the townes and cities of Israel with the sound of trumpets made of rams hornes. The first Mosaicall Jubile was about the yeere 2501.

his possession] Of immoveable goods, as lands, and houses, which was no wrong to them that bought or took them before, because they were not put over from one to another without the condition of restitution (either expressed or implyed) in the yeere yeere of Jubile; and the price was proportionable, more or leſſe, according to the diſtance, or neerneſſe of the yeare of releaſe; and this God ordained, partly for reſtraint of concupiſcence of others eſtates, (for men would not ſo much deſire them upon theſe terms, as if they might purchaſe them for perpetuity, to them, and their heires for ever) and partly that they ſhould not be too proud of what they obtained, ſince they muſt be ſure to part with it againe: and it was likewiſe for the comfort of ſuch as were decayed, & impoveriſhed; & to preſerve ſuch an equalitie as might keepe out Tyranny and confuſion of tribes and families, which were to be upheld in their eſtate and condition, whether of ſufficiencie, or plenty and dignity, wherein they had formerly been. Beſides this, it may be (as ſome conceive) that this reſtitution in the yeere of Jubile, was a type of reſtitution to a right and poſſeſſion of the celeſtiall Canaan upon the ſound of the trumpet of the reſurrection, though men forfeited their right by ſin, and were (as it were) caſt out of it by excommunication out of the church belowe, a type, as well as a part of the congregation of the firſt born above. Heb.12.23.

V. 12. holy unto you] Firſt in the generall, for that which gives occaſion of ſo much rejoycing to men, is cauſe of much thankſgiving to God, and of ſo much more holy ſervice to him, as they receive beneficence from him. Secondly, with eſpeciall reference to the great joy of the acceptable yeere of the Lord, by the redemption of Chriſt, of which this yeer of Jubile was a type. See Iſay 61.2. and 63. 4. 2 Cor.6 2.

out of the field] Whence it was not to be changed from a common to a proper right or uſe, as when it was laid up in the barn; but was to be left free for every one to eat; wherein for that yeer, no mans intereſt was more then anothers; and therefore it was to be left there, where any might have, and no man debarred from his portion.

V. 15. according to the number of yeeres] If the Jubile to come be neer, thou ſhalt ſell better cheap; if it be far off, dearer; and ſo as the ſeller or ſetter muſt not demand too much; the buyer or taker, muſt not bid or give too little. See the next verſe.

V. 20. What ſhall we eat the ſeventh yeer?] There was the more cauſe of this doubt, becauſe the Sabbaticall yeere and the yeer of Jubile coming together, they were ſuſpended from ſowing and reaping both thoſe yeers: but it was as eaſie for God to make them amends for that forbearance, by a more abundant bleſſing, as Malach.3.10. as for a ſhorter time. See Annot. on Exod.23.verſ.11.

V. 21. command my bleſſing] God hath an abſolute power of bleſſing; when men bleſſe, they do but pray that he would bleſſe; but he bleſſeth by authority, and if he command ſtones to be made bread, Matth. 4. 3. the ſtones ſhall relent, and become both ſoft to the teeth, and ſatisfactory to the ſtomack: this command of Gods bleſſing upon the ſixt yeere, to bring forth enough for it ſelf and the ſeventh, ſheweth, that beſides the naturall, there was a ſupernaturall fruitfulnes in the land of Canaan.

V. 23. for ever] But in the yeer of Jubile, it muſt return to the family to which it formerly belonged.

V. 24. a redemption] It ſhall not be ſold, but with covenant of redemption; or he that taketh it to mortgage, ſhall yeild to a redemption, if not ſooner, yet at the yeere of Jubile.

V. 27. count the yeeres] He that enjoyed it, abating the money for the yeeres paſt, he that redeemed it was to pay for the yeeres to come according to the ſumme received, at the former contract of alienation.

V. 28. goe out] from his hands that bought it.

V. 31. But the houſes] There is no generall rule but hath ſome exception; and here is one (of great moment) from the ordinary redemption at the yeer of Jubile; houſes in villages that had no walls, were to be redeemed in that yeer, but not houſes in walled cities; for they muſt be redeemed within a full yeer, or not at all: and this was either in favour to cities, the better to furniſh them with inhabitants, & to keep the houſes in good repaire; or for caution to the owners, that by ill husbandry they might not be put to part with them; or elſe, becauſe houſes in cities, no nor cities themſelves were ſo diſtinctly ſorted to tribes, as houſes in the countrey, and the lands annexed to them; for the Levites had cities in ſundry tribes, and yet had no divided portion of land allotted to them, as the other tribes had: What is here ſaid of houſes, may be applyed to ſome parcells of ground in walled towns; as that which David bought (mount Moria) for the building of the temple in Jeruſalem; the like is held of ſuch grounds as yeild no profit, as gardens of pleaſure, and the potters field for buriall.

V. 32. at any time] Others could not redeem their alienated lands or houſes, but at the yeere of Jubile, if the taker would not releaſe them ſooner; but the Levites had a priviledge for recovery of their poſſeſſions at any time.

V. 33. their poſſeſſion] Which conſiſted in houſes, cities, and their ſuburbs, which were meaſured to a certain number of cubits round about them; not ample portions of lands, corn, fields, paſtures, and vineyards, as the other tribes had.

V. 34. ſuburbs] Of theſe ſuburbs ſee Annot. on Num.35.5. there is ſomewhat contrary to this in practiſe, Acts 4. 36,37. but by this time the conſtitution of the Jewiſh ſtate was much changed.

V. 36. uſury] See Annot. on Exod. Chap.22.verſ.25.

V. 40. unto the yeere of Jubile] If before that time he had not made uſe of his Hebrew priviledge of his releaſe in the ſeventh yeere, Exod.21.2. yea, thoſe that had their ears bored thorow as a ſigne of their perpetuall bondage, were now ſet at liberty. See Annot. on Exod.21.verſ.6. and the Annot. on Exod. 12.14.

V. 41. he and his children] And his wife, if he came in married, elſe not. See Annot. on Exod.21.4.

V. 42. my ſervants] So were the Hebrews, not onely by the common right of creation, but by particular right of redemption from tyrannicall ſervitude in Egypt.

as bondmen] That is, unto perpetuall ſervitude; for an Hebrew might not be brought under ſuch bondage by another, ver. 46. and that they might be more willing to exempt their brethren from ſuch an heavy, and long-laſting yoke, he giveth them leave to lay it on the necks of heathens, verſ.44.

V. 45. your poſſeſſion] A perpetuall poſſeſſion; for they ſhall not be bought out at the yeere of Jubile, though they were Proſelytes, or converts to the Jewiſh religion; for the difference betwixt an Iſraelite and one of another nation, and the preeminence of the one above the other, was a priviledge of pedegree from Abraham, Iſaac, and Jacob, and not of profeſſion, though he that forſooke his religion, was not worthy to enjoy this priviledge; and he that ſincerely embraced religion, (though an alien in nation and nature from the Iſraelites) no doubt had a more eaſie bondage then another bondman.

V. 46 for ever] When their maſters dye, their children ſhall inherite the maſterly power over them, and they ſhall abide in bondage as long as they live.

V. 50. yeare of Jubile] This was a figure of our freedome purchaſed by Chriſt, Joh. 8. 36. and of reſt and relief from all aggrievances in the kingdome of Heaven: for it had all the priviledges of the Sabbaticall yeare; and beſides them, in this fiftieth yeare, all fruitfull lands, and houſes in the countrey returned to their firſt owners, though they had been ſold over and over an hundred times.

number of yeares] Which remaine yet to the Jubile, as if a man ſhould ſell himſelf for 50 ſhekels, to ſerve from one Jubile to another, and from the bargaine making had ſerved ten of the yeares, he muſt be redeemed for 40 ſhekels; and ſo in proportion, according to the rate payed, and time run up.

V. 53. in thy ſight] Thou ſhalt not ſuffer him to intreat him rigorouſly, if thou know it, and canſt help it.

V. 55. whom I brought] God renders this for a reaſon, why they ſhould not be perpetuall bond-ſlaves; becauſe they were his redeemed from the ſore bondage of Egypt: So the great redemption of Gods elect from the ſpirituall Pharaoh the devil, carrieth with it a comfortable expectation of leſſer deliverances, ſo far as may ſerve for Gods glory, and his ſervants good.

CHAP. XXVI.

Verſ. 2. And reverence] See Annot. on Chap.19. verſ.30.

V. 4. raine] By promiſing abundance of earthly things, he ſtirreth up their mindes to conſider the rich treaſures of ſpirituall bleſſings.

V. 5. your threſhing ſhall reach] Your old ſtore ſhall be ſo much, and the new returne ſo ſoone, and be ſo plentifull, that before you have threſhed up your former proviſion of corne, you ſhall be invited to the vintage; and before that be gathered in, (it will be ſo copious) the new ſeed-time will come upon you.

V. 6. through your land] In the furious march of a warlike enemie, who rangeth up and downe a land, to ruine and root out the people.

V. 8. five of you] A ſmall number of yours, ſhall put to flight many troopes of your enemies: as Judg.7.22.

V. 9. eſtabliſh] By reall and ſettled performance of what I have promiſed.

V. 10. becauſe of the new] Either becauſe now the new will ſecure them from want, though they liberally ſpend up the old; or becauſe by the abundance of new, they ſhall want roome to lay it up, unleſſe they take away the old.

V. 13. upright] The yoke boweth downe the head and neck, and maketh men rather of a groveling, then upright poſture; but they that are freed from the yoke, goe upright.

V. 15. breake my covenant] Mine, becauſe I firſt propounded it, and have authoritie to require it; and for my part ſhall aſſuredly keepe it, if you doe not ſet me free, by your revolt from your owne undertaking; for thereby you breake it, and I am not bound, if you forſake me, to cleave ſtill unto you.

V. 16. conſume the eyes] Or, overheat the eyes. The word Kaddahhah, in the Originall ſignifieth the diſeaſe (which Latins

26. 16. appoint over you] Vulg. & Stephanus, Visitabo. Munster, inducam. Tremel. præficiam. Calvin. Constituā. The same word is in Gen. 39. 4. and there Munster renders it by Constituit And the Engl. made him Overseer; which agrees well with yᵉ Dutch Annotations. Put over you, viz. as so many Commanders, who shall Lord it over you; and like severe Judges, punish you —— Visitare faciam super eos Mordan?

tine Authours call the Kings Evill) that is called the Jaundies, which ariseth from a distempered head, and turneth the colour of the eyes.

V. 18 seven times] That is, many times more, or more extremely. See Annot. on vers.24.

V. 19. as iron] Neither heaven shall distill a softening rain, nor the earth be in any disposition to receive it; neither of them shall be of any more use to helpe forward the fruits of the earth, then if they were the one Iron, the other Brasse.

V. 24. seven times] It is often in this Chapter used for many times: as vers. 18,21,24,28. so Prov. 24.16. & Chap.26. 16. Psal.119. 164.

V. 25. quarell of my Covenant] Breach of Covenant betwixt God and man, breakes the peace, and breeds a quarell betwixt them; in which he will take vengeance of mans revolt, if by repentance and reformation, his wrath be not appeased.

V. 26. staffe of your bread] That is, the strength whereby the life is sustained, Psal.104.15. & 105.16. Ezek. 4. 16. & Chap.5.16. or supported from falling into the grave, as a staffe upholdeth a feeble body, which otherwise would fall to the ground.

ten] That is, many. See Annot. on Gen. 31.7.

one oven] One oven shall be sufficient for ten families; not for the greatnesse of the oven, but for the scantnesse of provision.

by weight] Too light weight, either to satisfie the appetite, or to sustaine the strength. This is a great token of scarcitie, Ezek.4.16. Neh.5.6.

V. 29. of your sonnes, and of, &c.] The extremity of hunger breakes the strongest bonds of law or nature, and turnes the kindest kisses of the lips, to biting with the teeth. See Lam.4.10.

V. 30. high places] Where, after the manner of the Gentiles, the Jews set up memorials, and altars for Idols.

upon the carkasses] Images are called carkasses, because they are bodies without soules; as Psal.115.4. yet so, that Idolaters are often so deluded, as to thinke the false gods doe animate them, informe and quicken them; and because they are as loathsome unto God, as dead and stinking carkasses to men.

my soule] God is not as man compoled of essentiall or integrall parts, a body, and a soule, and severall members; but in the Scripture condescending to our capacitie, both a soule, and passions of the minde, and parts of the body are ascribed unto him.

V. 31. sanctuaries waste] All places of publique worship, (wherein you either dishonor me by your hypocrisie,) as the Tabernacle, Exod. 25. 8. and the Temple, 1 Chron.22.19. or honour your Idols by your Idolatry.

not smell] I will not shew any acceptance of your sweetest oblations.

V. 33. a sword after you] You shall have enemies, and no heart to fight with them, nor safetie by flying from them.

V. 34. enjoy her Sabbaths] Being eased from the wicked weight of such inhabitants, which brought upon it heavy curses, and toyled, and tired it out with continuall tillage.

V. 39. of their fathers] For as much as they are guilty of their fathers faults, they shall be punished, as well as their fathers.

V. 41. accept of the punishment] As throughly deserved on their part, and justly inflicted on Gods part; so that they glorifie his justice, and kissing the rod of their correction, implore his mercy.

V. 43. while she lieth] See Annot. on vers.34.

CHAP. XXVII.

Vers.2. A singular vow] Vowes are religious promises of our selves, or those persons, or things, which are in our disposall and power, with reference unto God, and with a purpose to binde our selves by the vow for that, wherein before we were free. A singular vow, is a vow of a singular person, for himselfe, or for any thing by vow separate, and set apart from common, to a sacred use; the word in the Originall hath a more emphaticall signification then isexpresst (in the translation) importing somewhat of a miracle.

the persons] For of such were vowes sometimes, as 1 Sam. 1. 11. It was also a personall vow, when a man vowed abstinence from some things (otherwise lawfull) with respect unto God, (as in the vow of the Nazarites to forbeare wine, strong drinke, and the eating of grapes, moist or dry, Numb.6. vers.3.) or to serve at the Tabernacle by carrying of water, or wood, or ashes, or sweeping the court, or by any other ministeriall attendance upon the Levites in their service of the Sanctuary; as the Gibeonites and Nethenims, Josh.9.21,27. So might women vow their assistance, as by weaving, washing, making, or mending the garments of the Priests. Now if a Levite vowed any thing above the dutie of his place in his ordinarie course, he was to performe both his ordinarie dutie whereto his calling did oblige him, and that whereto by vow he was engaged afterward.

V. 3. thy estimation] The order proposed in generall, is applied to every one in particular according to the different estimation of his person, whereof the rules and rates follow afterwards; or thy estimation, may be the estimation of the Priest, in such cases as are not punctually determined.

thy estimation shall be] That is, if he will redeeme his vow, he shall pay so much for the maintenance of the Priest, and service and repaire of the Sanctuary.

fiftie shekels] By the yeare, that is, for every yeare 50. shekels; (as is conceived) for if the shekels had beene rated by the yeare, a single shekell for every severall yeare, it should have beene rather fourtie shekels for the fourtie yeares, then fifty.

shekell of the Sanctuary] See Annot. on Exod 30.13.

V. 4. thirty shekels] We are not by the different rate set upon a male and female, to value the difference of their persons, or sexes, but rather their service, because a man for the most part is able to doe more profitable and advantageous service, then a woman; so also vers.5. yet there is a different price, vers.6. where there seemes to be no preeminence in abilitie for use and service.

V. 5. five yeare old] If his parents have made a vow concerning him; for one so young could not by vow dispose of himselfe.

V. 6. from a moneth old] See Annot. on vers.5.

V. 8. poorer] Then that he can beare, or pay the estimation or rate according to his age, then the Priests shall value him, &c. this may be meant chiefly of such a one as was of abilitie when he vowed, but was by mishap made poorer when he should have performed what he had formerly vowed.

before the Priest] That may be inferiour Priests; for there is nothing to make the matter peculiar to the office of the High-priest.

V. 11. uncleane beast] Unlesse the Dogge were excepted, Deut.23.18.

V. 12. good or bad] That according to the qualitie of it, the Priest may make the value more or lesse.

V. 13. a fifth part] This was set down to make men stedfast in their vowes; and if they be not, for a penaltie of their levitie, if they faile, or fall off: the like addition was to be made for redemption of an house, vers 15. which they might be willing to give; because otherwise it could not be redeemed, no not in the yeare of Jubile: and also for dealing falsly in the holy things, Chap.5.vers.16.

V. 14. sanctifie] Or dedicate as by a vow, saying; This house shall be holy unto the Lord, and so separated for an holy use; if he redeeme his vow, or his house from his vow; he shall pay the rate which the Priest set upon him; else the Priest was to keepe the possession of it in perpetuitie.

V. 15. fifth part] See Annot. on vers. 13.

V. 16. according to the seed] That is, according to the proportion and value of the seed, which is fit to be sowne upon such a parcell of ground; as if it will take an Omer of Barley, it shall be valued at fiftie shekels of silver from Jubile to Jubile; that is, a shekell for a yeare; and this was so low a price, that the worst ground was worth it. Some take it, that the fifty shekels were to be for one yeares rent, and so the whole time from Jubile to Jubile would be about five hundreth shekels; but the former rate is more received.

of barley] That graine is especially mentioned, because it was most usuall in Africa, and other Easterne Countries.

V. 17. sanctifie his field] That is, dedicate his field by a vow, to bestow the price or profit of it to the service of the Sanctuary.

from the yeare of Jubile] That is, as soone as the Jubile is past, and onward towards another Jubile.

V. 18. after the Jubile] That is, at some yeares distance after the former Jubile.

it shall be abated] The yeare of Jubile shall be abated, and no price reckoned for that, because that yeare the land was to be free: nor is more price reckoned for the rest of the yeares, then according to the remainder of them after the vow to the yeare of Jubile.

V. 19. fifth part] See Annot on vers.13.

V. 20. not redeeme] Neither he nor his next kinsman, Chap. 25.25. See Gen.v.73.

or if he have sold it] This is not meant, as some conceive, of him that dedicated the field by vow; for he could not sell it, having vowed it before, (unlesse he had redeemed it, which is here denied) but of some officer of the Sanctuary, as a Steward, or Treasurer, who managed such matters for the best behoose and benefit thereof: so that though (hee) be the same word, the person may be varied: yet others conceive it to be meant of the person vowing, when either he neglected to redeeme his vow, or fraudulently sought to transferre the title of the field vowed, from God to another; in which cases he lost all liberty of redemption; and though he that bought it might possesse it untill the yeare of Jubile, yet then it was not to returne to the seller, but to the Priest, by vertue of the precedent vow; yet so that the Priests were to transferre the right of it to some of the same Tribe; and first of all, to the neerest kinsman of him that vowed it; because the Land was divided betwixt the other Tribes, (among whom the Levites had no part allotted, Numb. 18.20.) whose portions were not to be confounded.

V. 22. which is not of the fields of his possession] Wherein he had rather a tenant right as a Leasee, then a right of inheritance; and in such a case he was not to adde a fifth part, as in the redemption, vers. 19.

V. 23. thy estimation] He gave the rule in generall, in the first part of the verse, of the Priest, in the third person; but puts it afterward, for instance, to present application of the Priest in being; so the meaning is, the Priest shall reckon, as thou for example, who art the Priest, for the present, shalt value it, so shall it be. So is it, vers. 12.

V. 24. shall returne] This, and the two precedent verses, may best be joyned together in one continued exposition, thus; If any man have bought a field, and before it be redeemed, have vowed it unto the Lord; when the yeare of Jubile is come, then he shall give the worth of it from the time of his vow to the yeare of Jubile, unto the Lord; and the field shall returne to the first owner, the vow of the buyer cannot alienate it from him; because it was not in his power to give away that right, which was by Gods expresse law in the yeare of Jubile due to another; for though it had passed by sale through never so many hands, it must be his at the last, to whom it belonged at the first.

V. 25. Gerahs] A Gerah was a piece of silver, weighing sixteene graines of Barley corne.

V. It is the Lords] It is his already, by his expresse law designed for sacrifice, Exod. 13. 2. Numb. 8.17. therefore not to be dedicated to him by a vow. Because a vow must be of such things as wherein the vower hath a particular interest, as his owne, though that interest cannot be any other then derivative from, and dependent on God; but such things as were not dedicated to God for sacrifice, might, or rather must be redeemed, whether of man or uncleane beasts. And though vowing and redeeming seeme contrary acts, yet a vow in one sense might be made with a purpose of redemption in another sense; as Samuel was vowed to God for service, yet with an intent to redeeme him from sacrifice, 1 Sam. 1. 11.

V. 27. an uncleane beast] Which though it might not be offered in sacrifice to the Lord, the price of it might be of use to the repaire of the Sanctuary, and the maintenance of the Priest.

shall adde] That is, if he will redeeme it. This is not to be understood of the first-borne of uncleane beasts, which the possessor was to redeeme by law, (without the addition of a fifth part) because as first-borne, they were generally belonging unto God, though not by way of sacrifice; but of other uncleane beasts which were vowed voluntarily, vers. 11. See Annot. on vers. 13.

V. 28. devoted thing] That is, so absolutely devoted unto God, as that it is not subject to redemption; but they rather devoted it to execration, that shall alienate it to any other use, then that whereby God may be glorified, whether in his service, or by his justice: whence the gifts of the Temple are styled anathemata, Luk. 21. 5. that is, gifts hanged up upon the wals or pillars of the Temple.

V. 29. put to death] The Hebrew word Hherem, which is rendred by devoted, coming fron Hharam, which signifieth to consecrate, or curse; (but most usually to kill, or to destroy,) may be varied in the exposition of it, according to the difference of things or persons, to which it is applied; for applied to a thing without life, (as a field is said to be Hherem, vers. 28. and the case is alike in other things also, set apart for Gods portion, Josh. 6.19.) it signifies either the alienation of it from all Civill right, and the perpetuall consecration, or dedication of it to the maintenance of Gods service and Sanctuary; (and if it were sold, or let out by the Steward, or some Officer belonging to the Sanctuary: for such dealing, in such affaires, it was in the yeare of Jubile to returne to the right of the Sanctuary againe, and to be disposed of, for the use and service thereof;) or the execration and destruction of it: If the thing called Hherem, were a living creature, and not of mankinde, it was either cleane or uncleane; if cleane, it was to be offered in sacrifice to God; if uncleane, the neck of it was to be broken: See Annot. on Exod. 13. 13. If of mankinde, it was either of such as were acceptable to God, or execrable to him; of the former sort were the Levites, who were chosen by God for the service of the Sanctuary all the dayes of their lives; in which respect they were Civilly dead, that is, so estranged from other worldly callings, and commerce, as if they were dead; and to continne so long in that service as that they must dye in it; and in this respect onely is the word Hherem, for the latter acception applyed to them, if they were such as were odious to God, as wicked men, and things belonging to them, which were abhorred of God for their sakes; then if he devoted them to destruction, there was no reprieve or preservation of them; Hherem applied to them was a fixed doome of their destruction, as of Idolaters, Exod. 22.20. and Canaanites, Deut. 20.17. especially the Amalekites, Deut. 25.19. See also 1 Sam. 15. 3. 26. So that the manner of devoted things or persons called Hherem, was different from all others which might be redeemed; these being devoted absolutely and perfectly, with a resolution either expresse or implicite, to be irrevocable, never to be redeemed.

V. 30. all the tythes] Out of the yearely increase, the first-fruits were deducted; out of the rest the tenth was taken for the Levites, Numb. 18.21. out of the nine parts remaining, was another tenth taken, and brought to Jerusalem, and there eaten by the owners, Deut. 12.6,7. and this second tythe was every third yeare distributed to the poore, Deut. 14.28,29. The tythe here meant is of the first sort, because if it were redeemed, a fifth part must be added.

V. 31. fifth part] Besides the value of the thing it selfe. See Annot. on vers. 13.

V. 32. rod] The Rod coloured at the further end with red, to marke the tenth of the cattle, that came out of the fold; whose doore was so little, that onely one could come out at once; and so counting one, two, three, &c. the tenth was touched with the red Rod, and marked for the tithe.

V. 33. both it, and, &c.] This penaltie was to prevent the change, as vers. 10.

THE ARGUMENT.

FOr the Title most in use among all Authours except the Hebrews, viz. Numbers, it is given it from the many numbrings reported in it; the first whereof is most memorable, wherein the people in the second moneth of the second yeare of their departure out of Egypt are reckoned to sixe hundred thousand three thousand five hundred and fiftie, besides the Levites, who are not comprehended in that account, Chap. 1. vers. 45, 47. To this number are added many more, viz. a second kinde of numbring of the offerings of the Princes; a third of the Ministers of the Tabernacle; a fourth of the searchers that were sent to discover the Land of Canaan; a fifth of the Rebels, Korah and his company; a sixth of the fornicatours joyned to Baal-Peor; a seventh, of those that were new borne in the wilderness, the old stock being consumed before the possession of the Land of Canaan; and an eighth, of the Cities of refuge: This for the Title.

And for the Contents of the Booke, it is partly Historicall, partly Doctrinall; for the Historicall, besides the record of these numberings, we have the storie of the peoples travels, their troubles, their murmurings and rebellions, their punishments, their straits and enlargements, dangers and deliverances, their combats and conquests, and the most notable things they did or suffered by the space of thirty nine yeares, wherein they rather wandered, then regularly iourneyed in the Desert; their sinnes casting them backe from the borders of the Land of Canaan, when they were neere the possession of it. In this Story the order of time is not noted, save for that which belongeth to the second yeare of the peoples iourneying from Egypt, towards the Land of Promise, and endeth at the eleventh moneth of the fourtieth yeare, for with that beginneth the Story of the Booke of Deuteronomie, as is evident by comparing of Numb. 1.1. with Deut. 1.3. For the story of the time betwixt these termes there is little or no mention of any Chronologicall note, though there be many remarkable occurrences delivered, as Chap. 16, 17, 18, 19. The Doctrinall part containeth additions and explanations of sundry Lawes, some morall, more iudiciall, but most of all ceremoniall, given by God for the sanctification and preparation of the people for the Land of Canaan, especially for their observation when they were possessed of it: Some observe many parallell references of the New Testament to this Booke, which are not unworthy of a serious consideration; as

CHAP. I.

Vers. 1. OF Sinai] In that place of the wildernes that was neer to mount Sinai; which was the twelfth mansion of the Israelites, where happened all that which is set downe from hence to the 11 verse of the tenth chapter of this book.

in the Tabernacle] Not in the door of the Tabernacle, in the presence of the people (as at some other times) but in the holy of holies, whereof more particular mention is made, Chap. 7. 8, 9.

second moneth] Which containeth part of Aprill, and part of May.

V. 2. Take yee the summe] There was one numbring of the people before this, and another after it, three in all; the first is that of Exod. 30. 11, 12. and chap. 38. vers. 25. when they were called, and numbred for contribution to the building of the Tabernacle, when every one gave half a shekel for an offering to the Lord, as a ransome for his soule; figuring thereby the redemption of Christ: the next numbring was that of this place; which was done, not onely that the number of the people might be known, but that they might be the more orderly disposed, and placed about the Tabernacle: and the third and last was in the last yeer of their travell, viz. the 40. when the former generation was worne out; for there was not a man of them remaining except Joshua and Caleb whom Moses and Aaron numbred in the wilderness of Sinai, Numb. 26. 63, and 64. their posterity was numbred for possession, and partition of the land of Canaan: and this was in the plaines of Moab, Numb. 26. 3, and 63.

of the children of Israel] None were numbred but the Israelites, though there came with them out of Egypt a mixed multitude of people, that were not Israelites; nor all that were so, but onely such as were able for warre; women, children, sicke persons, and decrepit old men being omitted; of which sort it is like there were not many, since at their coming out of Egypt, there was not a feeble person among their tribes, Psal. 105. 37. Some suppose they were not numbred, because God had promised an innumerable multiplication of them as of the stars, Gen. 15. 5. and (which much more overreacheth all reckonings of Arethmetick) as of the dust of the earth, Gen. 13. 16. which seemeth to have warrant from these words, But David took not the number of them from 20. yeeres old and under, because the Lord had said, he would increase Israel like to the starres of the heavens. 1 Chro. 27. 23.

poll] In Hebrew, their skulls, for their heads; their heads for their bodies; their bodies for their persons; by a Synecdoche; the meaning is, man by man.

V. 3. Upward] How far upward is not specified; but the Jewes began the account at 20, and ended at 60.

V. 4. head of] Who was the first-borne of his tribe, lineally derived by succession from one of the Patriarchs the sons of Jacob, from first-born to first-born, by a direct line of descent.

V. 5. stand with you] That is, Moses and Aaron, and assist you when you number the people.

of Reuben] The tribes were ranked partly by seniority, partly by dignity of their birth; first the issue of Jacob and his wives, then those that came of the handmaids; and of the wives, first the sons of Leah, then of Rachel.

V. 11. Benjamin] Benjamin is named before those who were elder then he, because they were the sons of hand-maids.

V. 16. renowned] For their wisdome, gravity, and goodnes, and so meet to be Statesmen, and to stand for their tribes in any common consultation, or resolution, that might concern them.

Princes] Or Captains, or Governours.

V. 18. declared their pedegrees] Shewing every man his tribe, and his ancestors, whereby they might the better observe the rules of marriage in their tribes, the redemption of their estates; and might observe the fulfilling of the predictions of them, Gen. 49.

V. 21. of the tribe of Reuben 46500] Though Reuben were the Arch-Patriarch, Jacobs first-born, the beginning of his strength, and the excellency of dignitie of power, as he stiles him, Gen. 49. 3. (for that had been the priviledge of his birth-right, had he not forfeited it by his incestuous incontinence with Billah his fathers concubine, Gen. 35. 22.) yet since he committed that offence, he foretold him that he should not excell; which may be meant divers wayes, and particularly by reason of the paucity of his tribe; whereby he is over-numbred by all his brethren but three, Gad, Asher, and Benjamin; and so some part of the curse of incest, Lev. 20. 20. came upon his posterity.

V. 22. generations] The word here is of a larger acceptation then a family, or housholds; for it may comprehend the descendent off-spring, which may people a whole province, or countrey: for to instance in the tribe of Judah, there were of them that were fit for warre 74 thousand, which, with all the rest not reckoned in the muster, will be much too many for one house or family, and enow to store divers townes with a sufficient number of inhabitants.

V. 27. threescore and fourteen thousand and six hundred] Prophane infidells will not beleeve that one man should have so great an increase in 250 yeers space; but how easie was it for him to multiply one into so many, in so many yeers, who out of nothing made all things in six dayes space? Gen. 1. See Annot. on Exod. Chap. 1. vers. 12. This is the greatest number of the progenie of any of the tribes, whereby it appeareth that Judah had the preeminence, not onely of dignity royall, but of multitude of his off-spring above the other tribes; to which may be added that from his tribe descended the Saviour of the world, called the lion of the tribe of Judah, Revel. 5. 5. with reference to this Patriarch compared to a Lion, Gen. 49. 9. Numb. 24. 9. and that very fitly, because of the courage of that tribe. See Annot. on Gen chap. 49. vers. 9.

V. 37. of the tribe of Benjamin thirty five thousand and four hundred] In the 46. of Gen. 21. his sons are reckoned more; as here the descendents from him are fewer then of any of the Patriarchs; there is a tyde and an ebb in the multiplication of families, as God pleaseth to enlarge or contract their numbers; so that he who at first might be called great Benjamin for his many children, is now but little Benjamin, Psal. 68. 28. in respect of the smalnesse of his increase, and at one time this tribe was neer to a nullitie, Judg. 21. 3.

V. 46. six hundred thousand] A very great multitude from 70. persons which was all the stock, from whence it multiplied in Egypt, Gen. 46. 21. See Annot. on vers. 27.

V. 47. But the Levites] They were exempted from these musters, being consecrated and separated for the service of the Sanctuary; for which cause they were to encampe about the Tabernacle next unto it; vers. 50. yet that it might appear it was no losse to serve the Lord, (thongh wicked worldlings think otherwise, Job 21. 15. Mal. 3. 14. Amos 8. 5.) when their tribe was kept out of the accompt, the number was no lesse; for at a former

In the 2d Chapter is described the Order of the Israelitish Army in their Encampments & Marches in the Wilderness. 'tis apprehended, that when they were drawn up, they all Faced inward; so as to have the Tabernacle before them: Judah Faced Westward; Reuben Faced Northward; Ephraim Faced Eastward; Dan Faced Southward. When the Trumpets sounded a March, Judah first drew forth, and led the Van: then Reuben fell in: Then followed the ARK in the Centre; after that, marched Ephraim; and Dan brought up the Rere; having the most numerous Army, next to that of Judah. Jacob's Blessing gives Military Skill to Dan. Bilhah Rachel's handmaid was his Mother. See Num. 10.

This vast Army of able Soldiers, amounted to Six Hundred Thousand, and Three Thousand, and Five Hundred & Fifty. So that computing all that were under Twenty years old, and all that were past age for Military Service; and considering that the Levites were not Numbred: the Women & Children: besides the mixed Multitude: The whole Body might probably, exceed Three Millions; A prodigious Company to march with their Cattel and Baggage, and be sheltred, and subsisted in a Barren Wilderness! At this Muster, Simeon was the greatest Loser; he lost 37100. Num. 25. 14, 15. And Manasseh was the greatest Gainer; he gain'd 20500. / Issachar gain'd 9900. / Ephraim Lost 8000. and became the least of all the Tribes except Simeon. Hence I conjecture, that the Prophecies Gen. 48. 19. & Deut. 33. 17. concerning the Superiour Fruitfullness of Ephraim, have not hitherto had their Evident Accomplishment. But if the Aborigines of America should appear to be chiefly Ephraimitish: we need seek no further for a Demonstration.

Taking all together one Tribe with another, and this Muster falls short but one Thousand, Eight Hundred, & Twenty of the former. In Judgment God remembred Mercy; and made his Power manifest in his wonderfull Preservation of them.

former computation, the Levites numbred with the other Tribes about a yeare before this, the totall summe was 603550; Exod. 38.26. and now at this time just the same number, the Levites left out; yet were the Levites numbred afterward, but neither with the rest of the Tribes, but by themselves; nor from twenty yeares old and upward, as for the service of warre; but from a moneth old and upward, Numb. 3. 15. with reference to the Sanctuary; either for service to it, or maintenance from it; and that Gods blessing might appeare in the multiplication of that Tribe, as well as in the rest.

V. 51. stranger] Whosoever was not of the Tribe of Levi, (in respect of this office or service) was a stranger; but in respect of offering incense, he that was not of the seed of Aaron, (though a Levite) was a stranger, Numb. 16.40.

put to death] So also Chap. 3. vers. 10. either by humane punishment, or divine vengeance, as 2 Sam. 6.6. Numb. 16.32.

CHAP. II.

Vers. 2. Wine standard] In the twelve Tribes were foure principall standards; so that every three Tribes had their standard, banner, or flagge; for the Israelites, above others, were the Church Militant, being to make roome for themselves in Canaan, by expelling the Canaanites; and of that Church it might especially be said, That it was terrible as an armie with Banners, Cant. 6 4.10. for the hearts of the enemies melted at the tidings of them, Josh. 7.5. How these Ensignes were differenced, we finde not in Scripture; some Jewish writers affirme, that they were distinguished according to the colours of the precious stones, that had the names of the Tribes engraven on them, Exod. 28.21. And some thinke they were distinguished by the portraiture of beasts, or other things, to which they are likened in the Scripture; especially in the 49. of Genesis, where Judah is compared to a Lion, Issachar to an Asse, Dan to a Serpent, Naphtali to an Hinde, Benjamin to a Wolfe, &c. in each of the three under one standard, the middle Tribe had the preeminence, to which the two Tribes on each hand were, if not subject in power, yet somewhat inferiour in honour.

farre off] About two thousand cubits; that distance was to be kept betwixt the people and the Arke; Josh. 3.4. which is thought to be the measure of a Sabbath-dayes journey, Act. 1. 12. the distance betwixt Mount Olivet and Jerusalem, which was seven or eight furlongs, which make an English mile: thus farre they were to keepe aloofe for reverence; and no further, for Religions sake; that the Tabernacle might be within their view, and they ready for recourse unto it (especially on the Sabbath day:) and it is like, (as some conjecture) that the doores of their Tents were so set, that being opened, they might set their faces towards the Tabernacle.

about] For better defence, more ready accesse, and prospect; which betokened Gods gracious presence in the midst of his people, Ezek. 43.7. and his saving protection of his Church, and guarding it on every side.

V. 5. Issachar] Judah, Issachar, and Zebulun, the sonnes of Leah, were of the first standard on the East.

V. 9. all that were numbred] The first were neere thirtie thousand more then any of the other standards; these went foremost, the Tribe of Judah being of a Lion-like boldnesse, fit to be the Leader: the Tribe of Dan was next in number, and last in order, that both before, and behinde, there might be the greatest force; the one to encounter all dangers in the front of the armie; the other, to withstand the pursuite of enemies in the rere.

V. 9. of Judah] Those three Tribes under one standard, tooke their denomination from the chiefe, which was Judah.

V. 10. of Reuben] Reuben, and Simeon, the sonnes of Leah, and Gad the sonne of Zilpah her maide, were of the second standard.

V. 14. Reuel] The same man is called Devel, Chap. 1. vers. 24. which difference proceedeth of the similitude of two Hebrew letters, Daleth and Resh: which sheweth that the Hebrew letters were the same in forme, and figure anciently, which we have at the present: this difference in proper names altereth not the sense; and in other words, the sense will shew which is the right writing.

V. 17. shall set forward] Being taken in pieces, and carried (by parts) by the Levites, according as it was distributed among them, who were to take it downe, and set it up, Chap. 1. v. 51. in the Hebrew, it is to dissolve, and build up.

V. 17. midst] That it might be in equall distance from, and equall neerenesse to each one; and that all might have indifferent recourse unto it: and about the arke, and next unto it were the Levites placed.

V. 18. on the West] Heb. toward the sea. For the Sea lyeth on the West-side of Palestine.

Ephraim] Because Ephraim and Manasses supplied the place of Joseph their father, they are taken as Rachels children; so they and Benjamin make the third standard on the West.

V. 25. Dan and Naphtali] The sonnes of Billah Rachels hand-maide, with Asher the sonne of Zilpah, Leahs hand-maid, made the fourth standard on the North.

V. 43. standards] For under every one of the foure principall standards; besides which it is like there were others of lesse eminencie, yet sufficient for distinction of the severall Regiments, and for direction of the souldiers in their march; for though they were very many, yet were they put into very good order, wherein consisteth both the beauty, and usefulnesse of any great assemblie; whether in the Church, Levit. 24. 4,6,8. Colos. 2.5. 1 Cor. 14. last: or in the Campe, 1 King. 20. 14. 1 Chron. 6.32. or in the Common-weale, Exod. 18.21,22.

CHAP. III.

Vers. 1. Generations] Families, and kindreds; not simply the children; for the descendents or posteritie of Moses are not here set downe, but of Aaron.

Aaron and Moses] Aaron was the elder brother of Moses; both of them of the Tribe of Levi; though Moses were the Civill Magistrate, Exod. 18.21,22. Aaron was the Priest, whose sonnes, and not the sonnes of Moses, are here set downe; because the Priesthood went by naturall descent from Aaron, and so did not the government descend upon the sonnes of Moses; therefore Gerson mentioned vers. 17. was not Gerson, or Gershom the sonne of Moses mentioned, Chap. 2. vers. 22. but one ancienter then Moses; for he was his great uncle, as appeareth by comparison of Exod. 6.16, &c. & Numb. 3.17, &c.

V. 3. consecrated] Heb. whose hands he filled. The reason of the phrase, see Annot. on Exod. 28.41.

V. 4. before the Lord] This is, when they came before the Lord to offer strange fire, by fire from the Lord they were destroyed, Levit. 10.1,2.

sight of Aaron] While their father lived.

V. 6. present them] Offer them by Aaron, for the use of the Tabernacle.

minister unto him] By doing service, and giving assistance in the holy ministration.

V. 7. his charge] That is, Aarons; in executing his commandement, and a carefull over-sight of the things of the Tabernacle, principally committed to Aarons trust.

whole Congregation] In a watchfull care over them, to keepe them in order.

V. 9. and to his sonnes] Aarons sonnes the Priests served in the Sanctuary, in praying for the people, and offering incense, and sacrifice; the rest of the Tribe of Levi served for inferiour officers unto them.

wholly given] Given given, according to the Hebrew which doubleth the word, to signifie an universalitie in the persons; as wholly given without exception of any one; and an intireneesse and intentiveneesse in the service, so as that they are given wholly, and onely to attend the service of the Sanctuary, according to the command of Aaron, and his sonnes the Priests.

V. 10. stranger] The Levite in respect of the Priests peculiar office was a stranger; and the other Israelites were strangers in respect of the office of the Levites; and the usurper of either was punished with death, vers. 38. being convicted of his fault before, and judicially condemned. See Annot. on Chap. 1. vers. 51.

V. 12. instead] The first-borne were Gods, not onely by a generall right of Creation, but by a particular right of Redemption from the destroying Angel, Exod. 12.23. who in man-kinde were in especiall manner to serve him; in other creatures the first-borne were to be sacrificed unto him, if they were cleane beasts; and if they were not, they were to be ransomed at a price for the maintenance of the Tabernacle; but from henceforth, for the first-borne, I have chosen the Levites to my service in their stead; and he chose rather to be served by one Tribe, then by a number taken out of many Tribes, for prevention of Idolatrie, & division in Religion; and by the Tribe of Levi rather then any other, for their zeale of his glory in revenging the indignitie done unto him, in worshipping the golden Calfe, Exod. 32. vers. 26,28.

V. 15. from a moneth] They were numbred in their childhood, because they were chosen for the first-born; but not untill they were a moneth old, for then were they first purged from the impuritie of their birth, Levit. 12. 4. and so the fitter to be dedicated to the Sanctuary; but they began not their service untill they were twentie five yeares old, Numb. 8. 24. and from thirtie to fiftie, they were to beare the burdens of the Tabernacle, Numb. 4.3. but in Davids time, and afterward they were to begin their service of the Tabernacle at twentie yeares old, 1 Chron. 23. 24. Ezra 3.8. but then either they were trained up untill twentie five, and then first trusted with any charge; or the ſcarcitie of the ancient men, or forwardneſſe of the younger, might bring them the ſooner to that ſervice.

V. 25. The charge] To keep, care for, or to looke to, and to carry the Tabernacle and its furniture when it was removed.

V. 25. in the Tabernacle] They were not (when they watched) in the Tabernacle, but had their ſtations in convenient places about the Tabernacle, for the ſafegard of it, and the things that were in it; for the Levites might not enter into it at all, but the Prieſts only, who there performed their miniſtery by courſe.

V. 31. their charge] The chiefe things in the Sanctuary were committed to the Cohathites; perhaps becauſe Moſes and Aaron were of that Family, from whence all the Prieſts conſequently were deſcended.

V. 32. chiefe over the chiefe] That is, next unto the High-prieſt, he ſhall have the preeminence and over-ſight of the Princes, or chiefe of all the Families of the Levites.

V. 36. boards] The woodden worke and the reſt of the inſtruments were committed to the ſonnes of Merari; and becauſe they were heavie, they had foure Waggons and Oxen allowed for removall of them, Numb. 7. 8.

V. 37. pinnes] Which faſtned in the ground, ſerved to ſtretch and ſtay the cords, ſtrengthen the pillars, and to keep the curtains from waving to and fro with the wind.

cords] There were two ſorts of cords, for ſeverall uſes; the one ſort was carryed by the Gerſhonites, verſ. 26. the other by the Merarites in this place.

V. 38. Of the children of Iſrael] That none of them ſhould enter into the Tabernacle, without Gods appointment.

V. 39. twentie and two thouſand] The particulars forementioned are more by three hundred then this totall ſumme; out of which Aaron the Prieſt, and the firſt born of the Levites, born ſince their coming out of Egypt, are thought to be deducted, as being Gods own portion in a more ſpeciall manner then the reſt; or if in ſo great a number it be like that there were more then 300 firſt born, it may be ſome of them might be omitted, becauſe they were for remarkable blemiſhes not to be permitted to ſerve with others at the Sanctuary; and ſome, for ſome other reaſons, might be left out; or the leſſer number might be omitted as not conſiderable in reſpect of the greater, as Gen. Chap. 15. verſ. 13. but 400 yeares are mentioned which in exact account were 405.

V. 41. cattell of the Levites] Not that they were to be offered up in ſacrifice; for they were the Lords portion, though they were reſerved, and ſerved onely for the Levites proviſion. Levit. 27. 30.

V. 43. twentie and two thouſand two hundred ſeventie three] Unleſſe they abounded in females (who had nothing to doe in the ſervice of the Sanctuary, this was no very great increaſe for ſuch a number, as is reckoned, Chap. 1. verſ. 46. yet it is more then the Levites (who were taken in ſtead of the firſt born) by two hundred ſeventie three, for the redemption of which a price is ſet down, verſ. 46, 47. the totall whereof amounted to 1365. ſhekels, which were to be given to Aaron and his ſonnes, verſ. 48. and to be proportioned (for the payment) to the Iſraelites, either by lot, or ſome other rule, which might be received, and approved by the Prieſts and people.

V. 45. ſhekel of the Sanctuary] See Annot. on Exod. 30. 13.

twenty Gerahs] See Annot. on Levit. 27. 25.

CHAP. IIII.

Verſ. 3. From thirty] Theſe were to beare the heavier things of the Tabernacle, which were to be carried by men. The time of the Levites beginning their ſervice of the Sanctuary, was at the age of twenty five, Chap. 8. 24. and for ſome ſervices, and for preparation to a compleat miniſtration; they were ſometimes taken at twenty yeares of age. See Annot. on Chap. 3. verſ. 15.

V. 5. take downe] viz. When the Tabernacle was to be removed; it is hence probable that the inferiour Prieſts might come into the Holy of Holies, (though not to miniſter, for that was peculiar to the High-prieſt,) to remove it, and the things that were in it.

covering vaile] Which divided the Sanctuary from the Holy-eſt of all. What a covering this was; ſee Exod. 26. verſ. 31, 32, 33.

V. 6. ſtaves thereof] Or, barres; That is, put them upon their ſhoulders to carry it, for the ſtaves of the Arke were not to be removed.

V. 7. Shew-bread] See Annot. on Exod. 25. 30.

continuall bread] The Shew-bread was called continuall bread, becauſe it was to continue on the Table all the weeke, untill the Sabbath, and then the old was taken away, and the new ſet in the place thereof, Exod. 25. 30. Levit. 24. 8.

V. 11. golden Altar] Which was for the burning of incenſe.

V. 13. Altar] The Altar of braſſe, which was placed in the open Court, where all might ſee it; yet when the Tabernacle was removed, that was to be covered as well as other holy things.

V. 15. burden] Theſe were to be carryed on the ſhoulders of the Levites, and not to be carryed on Carts, as the wooden works, Numb. 7. 8. God was diſpleaſed not only with Uzzah his touching of the Arke, but that it was carryed in a Cart, 2 Sam. 6. which ſhould have been carryed only on the ſhoulders of the Cohathites, Numb. 7. 9.

not touch] Nor offer to beare them, before they be covered.

die] For that fault Uzzah (though a Levite) was ſmitten dead by the Arke ſide, 2 Sam. 6. 7.

V. 16. ſweet incenſe] Whereby is not meant that Eleazer alone was to offer incenſe, or ſacrifice, but that it was his office to provide, and to take care that neither meats, nor oyle, nor incenſe to be offered, ſhould be wanting.

daily meat-offering] That is, the offering of flowre, which was kept to be offered with the continuall, or daily burnt-offering.

V. 18. cut ye not off] That is, be not ye an occaſion, or permit none occaſion by your negligence (in keeping or covering the holy things) that they may either ſee, or touch what they ſhould not; whereby they may be cut off, and die for it: So Jer. 38. 23. burning the citie, for cauſing it to be burned.

V. 19. to his burden] Shewing what part every one ſhould beare.

V. 23. from thirty yeare] See Annot. on Chap. 3. verſ. 15.

V. 25. hanging] Or vaile, which hanged between the Sanctuary and the Court.

V. 26. which is by the Tabernacle] Which Court compaſſed both the Tabernacle of the Congregation, and the Altar of burnt-offering.

V. 32. by name] That is, ye ſhall make an inventory of all things which ye commit to their charge.

V. 41. doe ſervice] Which were of competent age to ſerve therein; that is, betwixt thirty and fifty; which was ſo ordered by divine providence, that that family which had the greateſt and heavieſt burden, had the moſt ſerviceable men, to wit, thoſe of the Merarites, who in their totall number were fewer then the other families; yet exeeeded any one of them in the number of thoſe who were neither too young to begin the ſervice, nor too old to continue it.

V. 49. as the Lord commanded] So that Moſes neither added, nor diminiſhed from that which the Lord commanded him.

CHAP. V.

Verſ. 2. Put out] By theſe excommunications, or ſhuttings out of humane communion, God taught his people how pure he would have them to be, eſpecially from all defilement of the ſoule, which was much worſe then any uncleanneſſe of the body; (this of leproſie not excepted, though ſo like it, that the one is ſignified by the other.) There were other legall uncleanneſſes of leſſe offence, which did not defile by touching, nor ſhut men out of any ſociety, but ſacred.

V. 6. that men commit] That is, of humane errour, or common frailtie; otherwiſe, if it were a witting and a willing wrong, the recompence muſt be made in further meaſure then a fifth part.

V. 7. with the principall] That is, by returning full recompence for the wrong, and a fifth part above; that the feare of lawfull loſing, may make him leſſe forward for unlawfull getting: this order of reſtitution ſheweth the fault to be (as the Hebrew word Maḥal, or Magnal, ſignifieth) theft, or ſome ſuch like fault, as tends to a neighbours hurt in his eſtate.

unto him] Verſe 6. it is called a treſpaſſe againſt the Lord, here it appeares to be a treſpaſſe againſt man, and indeed is both; for when man is unjuſtly endamaged, God is impiouſly diſobeyed; who would have all to doe no worſe to others, then they would have others to doe unto them, Matth. 7. 12.

V. 8. But if] If the man be not alive, or not to be had, againſt whom the treſpaſſe is committed, then the recompence muſt be tendered to his kinſman; that is implied in theſe words, but if he have no kinſman, &c.

unto the Lord, even to the Prieſt] What is given to the Lords Miniſter, is as it were given to the Lord; and ſo a defrauding of him of his due, is a ſacriledge againſt the Lord, Mal. 3. 8.

V. 10. ſhall be his] The firſt-fruits appertained to the Prieſts in common, other oblations were the Prieſts in particular who did adminiſter; unleſſe the partie (that brought an oblation) mention, that he gave it for the ſervice of the Sanctuarie. See Ezek. 44. 30.

V. 15. no oyle] Onely in the ſinne-offering of jealouſie was neither oyle nor incenſe offered; not oyle, (as ſome conceive) becauſe it betokens mercy, and tenderneſſe, (becauſe it ſofteneth, and maketh ſtiffeneſſe pliable) but a jealous man will

4.23.–perform the Service] to war the warfare, margin./ Fight the combat– Dutch.

[illegible]. Cap. 4. V. 3.– Host I that comes into this Warfare. Understand an holy and Ecclesiastical Warfare, in which the Service of the Tabernacle was to be exactly observed according to the Orders once inststuted; Even as the Soldiers in military affairs, each one must discharge his duty– according to his Orders and Commands. Dutch.

man will shew no mercy, Prov. 6. 34, 35. nor incense, because that is a symbole or figure of a good name and fame, and jealousie is for a matter of reproach and infamie.

V. 17. holy water] That is, the water taken out of the laver, placed betwixt the Tabernacle and the Altar of burnt-sacrifice, Exod. 30.18. or the water of separation, or a purification for sinne, Numb. 19.9.

dust] That might be called holy dust, for the place of Gods especiall presence was holy ground, Exod. 3. 5. yet the taking of dust, might admonish her of the doome of death upon the guilt of sinne, Gen. 3.19. Or of the baseneſse of such as gave themselves to unlawfull lusts, worthy, as dust, to be trodden under foot; for dust was ever a signe of baseneſse, and griefe, Lam. 3.29. Psal. 7.5. & 22.15. Job 2.12.

V. 18. uncover] It is as great a shame for a woman to be uncovered, as to be shorne, 1 Cor. 11. vers. 5. 6. this then was for her shame; or it might admonish her (being now to come to triall of her innocencie, or guilt) of Gods all-seeing eye, who seeth the most secret sin, all things being uncovered and naked in his sight, Heb. 4.13.

bitter water] Verse 24. not called so, as Exod. 15. 23. & 2 King. 2.19. (though it could not be of any good taste;) but it was bitter in the effect, if the woman were guilty, very bitter; for it was as bitter as death, 1 Sam. 15.32. and unholy to her, though called holy before, vers. 17.

V. 19. causeth the curse] A double curse, if the woman hath beene an adultereſse, and denied it upon oath; one for adultery, another for perjury; yet the water did rather discover the curse, then cause it; for the efficacie was from Gods justice, not from that ceremonie.

V. 21. curse and an oath] That is, accursed, and detestable for the oath.

thigh to rot] By the thigh may be understood a like meaning to those words in the other sexe, Gen. 46.26. and so the justice of God appeares, in matching the punishment to the sinne, as well for the part, as the person offending; as Judg. 1.7.

belly to swell] Not as women with childe, by a graduall increase; for it was a sudden swelling, with such a violent extension of it, that it was neere to bursting: and this was a usuall miracle among the Jewes, and an undoubted assurance that their Religion was of God.

V. 22. Amen, Amen] That is, be it so as thou denouncest, Psal. 41.13. Deut. 27.15, &c. This doubling importeth vehemencie and assurance, Neh. 8.6. Psal. 72.19. & 89.52.

V. 23. these curses] That is, the words whereby she cursed her selfe.

in a booke] Or, paper. The Hebrewes use to call any writing a booke.

blot them out] Of the Table-booke, with the water in a spunge, or linen cloth.

V. 28. free] The water of it selfe had none either discerning vertue, or destroying vigour; but God used the same potion both for poyson, and for medicine; thereafter as the woman was innocent, or guilty.

V. 30. spirit of jealousie] So vers. 14. That is, a jealousie so violent, as if it were carried along with a spirit, or some supernaturall cause.

V. 31. guiltlesse] Though the woman be innocent, his suspition shall not bring him in guiltie, if he had probable reason to induce him to it.

CHAP. VI.

Vers. 2. Man or woman] Then were Nazarites of both sexes.

Nazarite] See Annot. on vers. 4.

V. 3. strong drinke] All liquor that doth inebriate, or incline to drunkennesse.

moyst grapes, or dried] The abstinence was so strict, that he must have neither meat nor drinke from the Vine; and so must neither drinke wine, nor sip vineger, or dip in it; nor eate grapes though dryed up into raysens.

V. 4. separation] Or, Nazariteship. Nazir is one separated from the common state and libertie of this life, with speciall dedication of himselfe unto God; whereof there were some who were separated by a voluntary vow, for a certaine time of their owne setting, (concerning which the Law determineth nothing) and some were Nazarites for their whole life; such an one was Sampson, Judg. 13.5. and Samuel, 1 Sam. 1.11. Of the former sort Moses treateth here, and Luke Act. 21.23.

V. 5. no rasour] Nor Cisers, for by them the locks might be cut off as well as by a rasour.

V. 6. no dead body] Neither to mourne over it, nor to bury it; the word in the Originall is Soule, but it is taken for the person, and in this case the person is taken for the body; see Levit. 21.1. in this the Nazarite was like unto the High-priest, Levit. 21.11.

V. 7. uncleane] See Annot. on Levit. 21.1.

father] Having vowed himselfe to God, he must preferre his vow to him, above any ceremonious observances to his neereſt kindred, Matth. 8.21, 22.

upon his head] The suffering of his haire to grow, was a signe of his consecration to God.

V. 9. shave his head] His haire by the dead being legally defiled.

seventh day] From the pollution; for by the dead body an uncleanneſse was contracted or caused for seven dayes, Numb. 19.11. and on the seventh day, he that was before ceremonially uncleane, was ceremoniously cleansed, vers. 12.

V. 11. hallow his head] Beginning his vow againe the eighth day, when he is purified; for the dayes that were before shall be lost; because his separation was defiled: vers. 12.

V. 14. he shall offer] Upon a sudden, unwitting, and unwilling defilement by the dead, the Nazarite was to offer for his purging, vers. 10. but though he knew nothing by himselfe, he must end his vow with manifold oblations; among which a sin-offering must be one, since no votarie is so sincere, and precise, but he may offend, though he knew it not; and therefore by this he did acknowledge himselfe a sinfull man.

V. 18. at the doore] Publiquely, to testifie that now his vow was at an end.

in the fire] Some take this fire to be the fire of the Altar; others think it was the fire of the kitchen which served to boyle the peace-offerings; which yet was no profane fire, though not so holy as that of the Altar; for the haire which was consecrated to the Lord, might not be put into any profane place: and this sheweth that the whole man should be holy to the Lord, even to an haire; as his providence reacheth to the numbering of our haires, Matth. 10.30.

V. 19. sodden shoulder] The right shoulder was due to the Priest raw, Levit. 7.32. but in the offering, he was to have the left shoulder sodden, and this was his peculiar portion of the Ram of the Nazarite, which in other oblations was not his due.

V. 20. wave-offering] See Annot. on Exod. 29.24.

after that] Not after the terme of his vow, but after the performances formerly required for his releaſe; for as his vow was made solemnly to God, so he cannot be fairely discharged of it, without a solemne dismission from God.

drinke wine] Though wine onely be mentioned, yet is he for other particulars of the vow of a Nazarite restored to his libertie, as before he vowed.

V. 21. besides that] At leaſt he shall doe this, if he be able to doe no more.

V. 23. on this wise] Or thus in a set forme of words.

ye shall blesse] See Annot. on vers. 24.

V. 24. The Lord blesse] It is ye shall blesse in the precedent verse; the Priests blessing was Optative, and yet it was more then an ordinary praying; because it was a part of their Priestly calling to blesse in the name of the Lord, or by his command, Deut. 21. 5. and for that they had with the command a promise, vers. 27. of this Chapter.

V. 27. put my Name] They shall pray in my Name for them.

CHAP. VII.

Vers. 3. Covered wagons] That the people might not see what was carried in them, and that the carriages might not be hurt by raine, or haile, or snow.

V. 8. sonnes of Merar] That is, because to them was committed the woodden worke, or heavieſt part of the Tabernacle; which required the more assistance both of Carts and Oxen. See Annot. on Chap. 3. vers. 36.

V. 9. their shoulders] See Annot. on Chap. 4. vers. 15.

V. 10. for dedicating] That is, when the Priests first sacrifice was offered upon the Altar by Aaron, Levit. 9.1.

V. 11. dedicating of the Altar] The Altar of the whole burnt-offerings, which was anointed, as the vessels of the Sanctuary were; but besides that, it had an especiall dedication, and that was by daily anointing and oblation of sacrifice, according to the prescript, Exod. 29.36, 37. therefore for the dedication of the Tabernacle, (but especially of the Altar,) did the Princes daily present their oblations.

V. 12. offered his offering] This offering was made the first day, of the first moneth, of the second yeare, when the Tabernacle was erected and consecrated, Exod. 40.18. though the mention of it (for speciall cause no doubt, albeit it appeare not unto us) be brought in in this place: they offered in the same order wherein they encamped about the Tabernacle; and each chiefe Captaine offered not for himselfe onely, but for his Tribe; and every one is called Prince but the first, whereof the reason may be, for that having the honour to be the first, it could not be doubted but that the title was due unto him, as well as to the rest.

V. 13. silver

V. 13. silver chargers] These were not for the use of the Sanctuary, (where were used golden vessels onely) but for some service of the Court, or Altar of burnt-offerings, as for the shoulder and the breast of the sacrificed beasts, and the offerings of meale, and oyle, and wine, &c.

V. 14. gold] As the principall persons, so the principall things, are not too good for the service of God.

V. 84. the dedication] This was the offering of the Princes, when Aaron did dedicate the Altar.

in the day] That is, in the time; for this dedication continued for twelve yeares.

V. 87. meat-offering] By the Law every burnt-offering was to have a meat-offering, of flowre, and oyle mingled, and wine for a drink-offering, whereof see Numb. 15. vers. 3,4,5.

V. 89. betweene] According as he had promised, Exod. 25. vers. 22.

CHAP. VIII.

Vers. 2. Over against] On every side of the bulke, or shaft of the candlestick; there was no window in the Tabernacle, therefore there was need of artificiall lights.

V. 4. beaten worke] Beaten out of one piece, and not made up of divers pieces; Of this candlestick, see Exod. 25.31. & Chap. 37.17.

V. 6. cleanse them] All the nation was to be holy, Exod. 19. vers. 6. but especially they who were to make so neere approach unto him, as the Levites, Levit. 10,3.

V. 7. water of purifying] In Hebrew it is called the water of sinne, because it is made to purge from sinnes; it was mixt with the ashes of a red Cow, Chap. 19.9.

V. 10. the children] Meaning some of the chiefe among them, in the name of the whole.

their hands] The imposition of hands was used in benedictions, and ordinations, not onely in the Old Testament, as Gen. 48. vers. 17. 20. Numb. 27. 23. but in the New: See Act. 6.6. & Chap. 13.3. 1 Tim. 4.14. 2 Tim. 1.6. The peoples putting their hands upon the Levites, was partly to testifie that they gave up all carnall and worldly respects and interests in them, and bequeathed them wholly to God, and that they did approve of their office in behalfe of themselves in whose stead they stood in the performance of many of their ministrations.

V. 12. thou shalt offer] By Aaron the High-priest, who was to offer the Levites, vers. 11. or it might be Moses himselfe, who might therefore be numbred among the Priests, Psal. 99.6.

V. 15. goe in, to doe] The service of the Levites in the Tabernacle, strictly and properly taken, was but to take, and carry the things of the Tabernacle; but here the Tabernacle is taken more largely, not onely for the curious worke, which was carried from place to place, but for the outward Court, where stood the Altar of burnt-offering; where the Levites were to be serviceably assistant to the Priests in their office; but otherwise into the Sanctuary came onely the Priests to minister, and not the Levites.

V. 19. the service of] Which service the Israelites should doe themselves, if the Levites did it not for them.

Sanctuary] Because the Levites goe into the Sanctuary in their name, as well as in their owne.

V. 21. offered] Heb. lifted them up. The word is the same which is used of lifting up of oblations, Exod. 29.28. and it may be the ceremonie was the same; at least the Levites were set up in eminent view, that all might see them when they entered upon their function; which it may be they did not all at once, at the first consecration of them, but so many as the service of the Tabernacle for the present required.

V. 24. twenty and five] At that time they were entered into the Tabernacle, to be trained up, both by institution, and example; and at thirty yeares of age, they were to officiate and undertake the execution of their charge.

V. 25. cease] From such services as were toylesome, and required much strength of body to undergoe them.

V. 26. But shall minister] In singing Psalmes, instructing, counselling, and keeping things in order; for such offices they might doe so much the better, as yeares and experience made them the wiser.

CHAP. IX.

Vers. 1. IN the wildernesse] The Passover was kept but this once in the wilderneſſe; and then (as some thinke) for want of meale to make unleavened bread, they kept it with Manna; yet being here not very farre from Midian, they might be furnished thence with so much as might serve the turne for one Passeover; which is brought in here, though it were celebrated before the numbring of the people in the beginning of this Booke; for this was in the first moneth of the second yeare after the peoples departure out of Egypt; and the numbring of the people was in the second moneth of the second yeare, Chap. 1.1. For the Spirit that indicted this Booke, with the rest of the Scripture, tyeth himselfe to the observation of truth, not to the order of time, which upon good reason may be sometimes left, though that reason doe not appeare.

V. 2. appointed season] Though time be but a circumstance, the command of God maketh it a necessary part of mans obedience, Matth. 5.23,24,25. compare Levit. 23.34. with 1 King. 12. 33.

V. 3. at even] Heb. betweene the two evenings. See Annot. on Exod. 12.6.

V. 6. by the dead] By touching of a dead corps, or being at the buriall of it; by that the party was uncleane seven dayes, Numb. 19 11. and an uncleane person might not eate of the holy things, Levit. 22.4.7.

V. 7. wherefore are we] They have given the reason before; yet that doth not satisfie them: their zeale of the Passeover was such, that they would either have that stand for no reason, or else that they might in such a case have some dispensation, that they might not be debarred from it untill another yeare.

offer an offering] The celebration of the Passeover, by the slaying of the Paschall Lambe, was the offering of a sacrifice unto God, Exod. 12.27.

V. 8. what the Lord] Religious doubts are to be resolved by God; and now he speaketh not in an extraordinary manner, as he did to Moses; we must take the Scripture, Gods written word, for our Oracle, and rely upon that, not on any mans word without it, much lesse against it, Esa. 8.20.

V. 10. uncleane] Uncleanneſſe, and absence from home, are only mentioned; but there are other impediments as great as these, as sickneſſe, especially the pestilence, warre, captivity, child-bearing, &c. which may be reasonably understood as just impediments, though not expreſt.

V. 11. second moneth] So that they that have lawfull lets, have a moneth longer granted unto them, 2 Chron. 30.2. but no more; for if in the first or second moneth it were not kept, it must be forborne untill the returne of the yeare.

V. 12. ordinances] Even in all points as the Lord hath instituted.

13. beare his sinne] That is, his punishment; and his punishment shall be to be cut off for neglect, but especially for contempt of the Lords holy ordinance; for that omission of dutie is dangerous (as well as commission of sin against God).

V. 14. one ordinance] See Annot. on Exod. 12.49.

V. 15. and at Even] See Annot. on Exod. 13. 21. & 40. vers. 38.

appearance of fire] So it was in the night; and in the day the Lord guided them by a cloud, for that was best discerned in the day, as the other in the night.

V. 18. At the commandement of the Lord] As it was visibly signified unto them for their encamping, or journeying thereafter, as the cloud remained on, or removed from the Tabernacle; which appeared openly and evidently in their sight.

V. 21. by day or by night] God must be obeyed without any exception of time or season.

V. 23. by the hand] Under the charge and by the ministery of Moses, Mal. 1.1.

CHAP. X.

Vers. 2. TWo] No more are here commanded, yet more were afterwards used; yea Solomon (as Josephus saith) made two hundred thousand Trumpets according to the ordinance of Moses, Joseph. Antiq. lib. 8. Chap. 2. therefore the mention of two, is no prohibition of more.

of silver] Because that metall gives a better sound then gold, and more precious then any other metall; and therefore the best for price, and use, both together.

of one whole piece] That is, of such a piece of silver as by beating out with the hammer may be sufficient, without any piecing: so was the golden candlestick to be made, Exod. 25. 31. The fashion of these Trumpets is described by Josephus Antiq. lib. 3. chap. 11.

V. 2. thou mayest use] By make thee, and thou mayest use them, we must not understand that Moses himselfe must make or sound them, but that by his appointment they were to be made and sounded; as when we say, such a Lord, or such a great man built a Castle, or a Citie; the meaning is, not that he was either Mason, or Carpenter; but that he caused it to be built, 1 Kin. 8.43. Gen. 10.11. And David is charged to have killed Uriah with his sword, in that he was the cause of his killing; but the deed was done by the hand and sword of an Ammonite, 2 Sam. 12.9.

V. 3. they shall blow] That is, the Priests, the sonnes of Aaron the High-priest, vers. 8. and they shall blow, first, at the removall of the Campe: secondly, at the solemnitie of Feasts, 10.29. Hobab] Nimis crassè hallucinati sunt, qui putarunt Hobab esse Jethro socerum Mosis. —— Tunc octogenarius erat Moses, qui tamen longe aberat ab annis solam. Sed ex quarto capite Judicum tollitur omnis dubitatio, ubi legimus posteros Hobab adhuc tunc superstites in terra Canaan. to summon and call the people to them: thirdly, at the oblation of Sacrifices: fourthly, at the denunciation of Warre. Of their use Josephus saith, that one of them was to call the people together, the others the Rulers; and when both were sounded, both Rulers and people were to come together, Joseph. Antiq. lib. 3. cap. 11.

V. 4. are heads] That is, above the rest of tenne Tribes (as the head is above the rest of the body) whether in preeminence of site or place, or of power and authoritie.

V. 5. East part] That is, the host of Judah, and they that are under his ensigne.

V. 6. South-side] Meaning the host of Reuben, and those that are under his ensigne.

V. 7. not sound an alarme] In warres there are distinct sounds, both for marching forward, and retreating back; this alarme was for preparation to march with armes against the enemie; and it was a shrill broken sound, so distinct from all others, that they that heard it might know what is meant, and so prepare themselves for the battell, vers. 9. 1 Cor. 14. 8. therefore when the people were to be gathered for any assembly of peace, the Priests were not to sound an alarme of warre.

V. 8. the Priest shall blow] Onely the Priest must blow the Trumpet, so long as the Priesthood lasted.

V. 10. of your gladnesse] In the feast after your peace-offerings, when ye rejoyce for any blessings bestowed, or for any perill or plague removed: It was blowne also at times of present or imminent misery, for solemne humiliation, Joel 2. 15.

beginning] In the new Moone, Psal. 81. 3. rather in the new, then at the full Moone, lest it should be taken to be an honour to the Moone, because it is then most glorious; and because they counted their moneths from the first day of the new Moon, when looking backe upon the moneth past, they might be remembred of precedent favours from God, or of their offences against God, and so admonished of thankfulnesse, and repentance; and looking forward to the new recourse of time, might by prayers to God, and watchfulnesse over themselves, be comfortably carried on from one new Moone to another.

V. 11. the twentieth day] The Israelites kept this station at Sinai almost a whole yeare, abating about thirteene dayes; for it appeares by Exod. 19. 1. that they came thither on the third day of the third moneth of the first yeare; and they departed thence the twentieth day of the second moneth of the second yeare, as this verse sheweth. N.

V. 12. Paran] Paran is the generall name of a great wilderneſse, of the length of eleven dayes journey, of which the wilderneſse of Sanai is a part; but is taken sometimes particularly for the first part of the desert next Arabia; sometimes for the last part, next to the land of Promise; and so it may here be understood; the whole was a most barren and fruitlesse place, which made Gods maintenance of so great a number, for so many yeares together, most miraculous.

V. 13. first tooke] They first of their Campe, in the order forementioned, Chap. 2. and by the sound of the Trumpet commanded, vers. 2.

V. 17. bearing the Tabernacle] With all the appurtenances thereof, except the heavier part thereof, which was carried on waggons, Numb. 7. vers. 6, 7, 8. Which sheweth, that the Church (whereof the Tabernacle is a type or figure) is both military, and moveable, not fixed to any place.

V. 20. Devel] See Annot. on Chap. 2. vers. 14.

V. 21. Sanctuary] That is, the most precious furniture of the Sanctuary, which was to be borne upon the shoulders of the Cohathites, such as are named, Chap. 3. vers. 31.

against they came] The Gershonites and Merarites went before with the Tabernacle it selfe, according to their charge, Chap. 3. vers. 25. & vers. 35, 36. that it might be set up, against the Cohathites came with their burden of sacred utensils, or things to be used for the service of the Tabernacle.

V. 29. Hobab] Was one of the names of Jethro Moses father in law, Judg. 4. 11. who is said to have three or foure names, (Revel, Jethro, and Hobab) but here it seemes to be the name of Jethro's sonne, and brother to Zipporah Moses wife, who might have the same name with his father; and that he, rather then his father, is here meant, there be two reasons; first, because Jethro Moses father in law is called Revel, Exod. 2. vers. 18. but this Hobab is here called the sonne of Raguel, or Revel: (for the word in the Originall is the same) Secondly, because Jethro Moses father in law, was by Moses dismissed into his countrey of Midian, Exod. 18. 27. but this Hobab Moses would not dismisse, though he desired to depart, vers. 30. 31. and that he did not depart, appeares in the next verse.

V. 30. not go] That is, not yet; because it appeares that his posteritie and kindred dwelled in the Land of Canaan, among the Israelites, Judg. 1. 16. & Chap. 4. 11. 1 Sam. 15. 6. so that either he was perswaded to goe with them, or else to come into the Land of Canaan after them: See the Annot. on the foregoing verse.

to mine owne land] The land of Midian.

V. 31. in stead of eyes] That is, to see about; being better acquainted with the condition of the wilderneſse then they, yea then Moses himselfe, though he had lived thereabouts about fourtie yeares; because many particular passages might be forgotten, and some changed so as to need a new direction; and though they were to be guided in their journey not by him, but by the cloud and fierie pillar, Chap. 9. vers. 18. which was a generall conduct; besides that in the particular accommodation of so great a company, he might advise, and direct many wayes for the best conveniencie of the people; and to this, because he holdeth his peace, it seemeth he consented.

V. 33. Mount] That is, Mount Sinai, or Horeb.

before them] Though when they encamped, the Arke was placed in the midst of the Tribes; yet when they marched forward, it might be (as some hold it was at all times) carried before them: and for these three dayes journey, it must not be understood as if the Arke were before the rest of the Troopes the distance of three dayes journey; but that for three dayes space, it was carried before them, in the way they went, the cloud staying over the Arke, where God chose a station or resting place for the people.

V. 33. to search] Implieth some knowledge, which the Ark had not; some doubting and uncertainty, which God who led the Israelites, could not have: this searching then is to be referred to the people, who had knowledge to follow their guide, but did not know where he would dispose of their rest.

V. 35. Rise up Lord] As Chap. 6. 23. there is a set forme of blessing the people; so here a set forme of praying to the Lord, both when they moved, and when they rested, vers. 36.

CHAP. XI.

Vers. 1. Complained] Of what they complained of, whether the barrennesse of the wilderneſse, or of wearisomnesse of their way, by journeying three dayes together, with their little ones, or of want of flesh, (for that is here thought to be their sinne, though particularly set down afterwards, vers. 4) it is not very cleare; but that their complaining was wicked, is plaine by their punishment, which was an hot vengeance from the Lord, for breaking of his Law; which being published by fire, the transgression of it was punished by fire.

uttermost part] There (it is like) the murmuring began, among the mixed multitude; therefore there God first beginneth the punishment with them.

V. 3. The name of the place Taberah] But vers. 34. it hath another name given unto it, for it is not strange that one place hath severall names, upon severall occasions; as this from the punishment is called Taberah, that is, burning, and from the cause and the effect Kibroth Hattaavah, that is, the graves of concupiscence; which sheweth, that the burning was not an utter consuming, for so there would be no use of graves; but a dead blasting, as by lightening: or some might be utterly consumed by fire, and others so killed, that their bodies might be reserved for buriall afterwards. Yet some conceive that this Taberah, or burning, was in the three dayes journey, before their coming to Kibroth Hattaavah; and so they presuppose a double murmuring, out of vers. 4. whereas others take both their murmurings to be one, as Psal. 78. vers. 19, 20, 21. is the place one; the difference is not of any great moment, nor is there any more then twilight, or probable conjecture to clear it, which may vary the resolution, according to the capacitie, or affection of the reader.

V. 4. mixt multitude] Consisting of Israelites, and those strangers that came out of Egypt with them, Exod. 12. 38.

who shall give us flesh] They had herds and flocks, but not enow to give them milk, and furnish them with flesh; having besides their own great multitude, a mixed multitude of Egyptians, and other people, Exod. 12. 38. see vers. 22. of this Chapter.

V. 6. dryed away] The vehemence of their concupiscence to flesh, made them fret, and pine away; as Amnons lust to Tamar, made him leane from day to day, 2 Sam. 13. 4.

V. 7. Manna] See Annot. on Exod. 16. 15.

Bdelium] (As some take it) is a white Pease; others say it is yellow; but it is an odoriferous, or sweet-smelling white gum of a tree in Arabia, so called, Plin. Nat. Hist. lib. 12. cap. 9. See Annot. on Gen. 2. 12.

V. 12. conceived] Am I their parent? are they begotten, or conceived by me? that none may have the care of them but I?

V. 14. beare all] The burden of government of them, or provision for them.

V. 15. kill me] I had rather die then see my griefe and misery thus daily increase by their rebellions; which maketh the condition of Governours many times more capable of pitie, then of envie.

V. 16. gather unto me seventie] Moses had before, by the advise of Jethro, Exod. 18. taken up some subordinate assistants in Government under him; reserving matter of the worship of God, and greater causes to himselfe; now these prove too many, and too heavy for him, therefore he hath other assistants assigned him by God.

V. 17. take of the spirit] By the spirit is meant the gifts of the spirit; 1 Cor. 14. 32. & vers. 25. of this Chapter; and taking of the same spirit, is not meant taking away from one, to give to another; but a communication of the same graces, and of the spirit in Moses, or his spirituall gifts; whereby he had not the lesse; as a candle which lighteth another, hath not the lesse either heat, or light, then it had before.

upon them] He will first put gifts upon them, before he put them upon an office; yet these seventie Elders afterwards were a setled councell, for the Government of the people in the Land of Canaan, and were called the Sanhedrim, or Synedrion; yet they that succeeded, did not succeed them in gifts; nor did these first seventie alwayes enjoy them.

V. 18. sanctifie your selves] By this is meant, that they should doe their parts, for an holy preparation of themselves to receive both abilitie, and authoritie to governe the people.

wept in the eares] The weeping of the eyes is most apparent to the eye; but weeping with a noise (as there might be) was to be perceived by the eare: but this is a speech after the manner of men, for God hath neither eares, nor eyes, nor any such carnall parts as we have, since he is a most pure spirituall essence.

V. 20. a whole moneth] Hebr. a moneth of dayes. That is, an intire moneth, not abating or wanting one day.

at your nostrils] The offensiveneſse of it shall fume out of your stomach, with an unsavoury sent at your nostrils.

despised the Lord] By contempt of the Manna, which in a miraculous manner he bestowed on you.

V. 21. And Moses said] A little before, vers. 15. his passion was too strong; now his faith was too weake; the worthiest of Gods servants are subject to faults and failings in this life.

V. 24. gathered the seventie] There were wanting two of this number (as is plaine by vers. 26.) yet the full number is noted, the name of the whole given to the greater part: See Annot. on Chap. 14. vers. 33.

V. 25. And tooke] See vers. 17.

and did not cease] Their gifts did not cease, or depart from them; nor they cease, upon all fit opportunities, to make use of them; yet some hold, they had not this assistance of the Spirit in the Land of Canaan.

V. 26. written] That is, inrolled or written in some book, as men fit for the imployment forementioned.

but went not out] That is, not out of their Camps, or Tents, unto the Tabernacle of the Congregation, as was required, vers. 16.

V. 28. forbid them] Besides the sixtie eight which prophesied in Moses his presence, and were joyned to him, there were two more, who out of Moses his sight, and without his knowledge, prophesied; which Joshua suspecting to be prejudiciall to the right and reputation of Moses, he desires they may be silenced. Such blind zeale was in the Apostles, Mark. 9. 38. Luke 9. 49. Joh. 3. 26.

V. 30. into the camp] Out of the Tabernacle, into some of the Tents about it.

and the Elders] Who were enabled by the same Spirit, and called by the same authoritie to be Assistants in government to Moses; See Annot. on vers. 17.

V. 31. a wind] A South wind, Psal. 78. 26. which sheweth that it was a miraculous wind, for though Quailes flie with the wind, yet not with such a wind, but with the North wind, as Pliny observeth, lib. 10. cap. 25.

Quailes] This is the second time that they were fed with flesh in a miraculous manner. Of the former time, see Exod. 16. 13. &c.

a dayes journey] In circuit or compasse about the Camp, not a dayes journey by distance from the Camp.

V. 32. stood up] Or, rose up. Whereby is not alwayes meant an upright posture of the body, which was not suitable to this action; for the fowle was but two cubits high above the earth; so that they must rather stoope down, then rise up to take them; but by this word is sometimes noted a rising up from what was in doing before, and a ready addresse to some other action; so here.

night, and all] The same men (though never so fleshly minded) could not endure so long labour; yet some might be so greedy, as to defraud themselves of their naturall rest, to be plentifully furnished for their lust; but it is like that when some were weary, others came in their stead, and so the gathering continued all the while.

ten homers] Or heapes, for so the word is sometimes taken, as Exod. 8. 14. G. pag. 74.

spread them] As in their coming, so in their keeping there was an extraordinary providence of God; for if they were killed when they were spread round about the Campe, it was strange that they were preserved sweet, untill they were to be eaten; if kept alive in pens or cages, it was more strange, that they were supplyed with sufficient provision to nourish them; unlesse we say they were every day furnished with new store (as with Manna) except the Sabbath, Exod. 16. 18, &c. which seemeth not to be so in this place.

V. 33. And while] This was at the moneths end; for so long God promised to feed them with flesh, vers. 20.

plague] God sometimes granteth mens desires in judgement; Hos. 13. 11. and sometimes denyeth them in mercy, 2 Cor. 12. 9. This plague is thought to be the burning vengeance, as vers. 3. the same punishment for the same murmuring, whereof in the beginning of the Chapter the sinne is set down in generall, and the plague in particular.

CHAP. XII.

Vers. 1. Miriam and Aaron] A sister, a brother; a Propheteſse, and a Priest, against their brother, a Prophet and chiefe Magistrate; What relations and endowments can secure a man from offensive exceptions?

Ethiopian woman] Or, Cushite. There was an Easterne Ethiopia, so was Arabia called; in that was Madian (the countrey of Moses his wife) or bordering so neere upon it, as to borrow the name of it; but in latter times the westerne Ethiopia (which is beyond Egypt) is onely called by that name. The offence, it is like, was most betwixt the women, and (as is probably thought) Zipporah as Moses his wife, because of the honour of her husband, tooke too much upon her, and gave too little respect to Miriam, who looked for much, because she was a Propheteſse.

V. 3. very meeke] And so bare with their murmurings, although he knew them; Moses was so modest, that he would not thus have praised himselfe, but that the Spirit overruled his minde, and guided his hand unto it; so that it is not so much Moses his commendation of himselfe, as the Spirits commendation of Moses.

V. 6. Vision] Visions and dreames were the means whereby God, in those times, did oft reveale himselfe unto his Prophets: visions were revelations to such as were awake; dreames to those that were asleepe: See Annot. on Gen. 15. 1

V. 7. in all mine house] That is, in all Israel, which was Gods Church; or in all the offices and acts of a good man and a just Steward, faithfully and fully discharging the trust reposed in him.

V. 8. mouth to mouth] That is, more familiarly and frequently then by visions; and more clearely, and assuredly, then by dreames; and as by way of friendly, and constant conference, whereby full information may be given, and received, rather then in visions and dreames, which were transient.

similitude] So farre as any man was able to apprehend, which he calleth his back-parts: See Annot. on Exod. 33. 23.

V. 9. departed] Removing the cloud the signe of his presence; but not forward, as by way of conduct; but upward, over the Tabernacle, where it usually did hang.

V. 10. Tabernacle] From the doore, or entrance into the Tabernacle, whither the cloud came downe, when the Lord spake to them.

leprous] Miriam, and not Aaron, is leprous, because she was first in the fault, and (it may be) also a mover of Aaron to it; or more passionate and peremptory in her reproofes of him, or reproaches against him, then Aaron was.

V. 12. as one dead] As excluded from the society of men and women, by the law of separation of lepers, Levit. 13. 46. and so in respect of societie, as dead and out of the world.

halfe consumed] As a childe halfe consumed by the corruption and rottennesse in his flesh, is a very loathsome thing to looke upon, when he is new borne, so is a leper.

V. 14. spit in her face] In his displeasure; the face is the table of beauty or comelinesse; and when it is spit upon, it is made the seate of shame; and if spitting on the face be cause of shame, see Isa. 50. 6. and separation, much more if the heavenly Father cast contempt upon his undutifull daughter, and defile her face with such a filthy disease as leprosie; must she be ashamed to be seene, and so shut out of the society of Israel.

V. 15. brought in againe] Which was done without the ceremoniall expiations prescribed in the case of leprosie, Levit. 14. because her cure was as miraculous as her disease; and therewithall her restoring to societie, as authentique as her separation from it.

V. 16. in the wilderneſse of Paran] To which they passed from the wilderneſse of Sinai. There is a mountaine called Paran, and that mountaine, and the plaine under it, might be called Paran, as by a more especiall name: but this part of Paran, the place of their pitching, was by an especiall title called Rithmah, Numb. 33. 18. Of Paran, see Annot. on Chap. 10. vers. 12.

of their fathers] That is, of the Israelites.

shall ye send] The number being changed from the singular to the plurall, we must understand Aaron as joyned with Moses, or that the people were to make choyce of fit men, and present them unto Moses, by him to be sent to view the land.

V. 16. Jehoshua] His name before was Oshea, which signifieth, to save, Jehoshua he shall save in Hebrew, which in Greek and Latine Authours is rendred Jesus; and therefore many of the Ancient Writers call Joshua Jesus: this name might give him heart and hope of good successe in battell, thereby to save Gods people, and destroy their enemies, as our Jesus did.

V. 18. see the land] It is like, they went not all together, but rather each man severally; or two and two, went to divers quarters, that with more speed, and lesse suspition, they might make the discovery.

V. 19. good or bad] As for situation whether pleasant, or wholesome, (or to the contrary) or for store, whether plentifull, or barren of fruit, of wood, and water; and for the breeding of cattell, whether they were great, or little, apt to miscarry, or usually prosperous: see 2 King.2. 19. text and margine, and the 20. vers. This might be learned by inquirie, but not upon a sudden view.

V. 21. Zin] Which was in the wildernesse of Paran.

Rehob] A Citie in the West part of the land of Canaan, belonging to the lot and Tribe of Ashur, and coasting towards Sidon, Josh.19.28.

V. 22. Hebron] The place where Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob with their wives were buried, Gen. 23.19. & 49.31. this was also called Kiriatharba, Gen.23.2.

V. 23. betweene two] These two are thought to be Caleb and Josiua, because they were most forward to commend the fruitfulnesse of the land: but what need two to carry one cluster of grapes? Answ. They might be best carried whole between two; though they were not too heavie for one to carry, yet one might be weary in carrying them farre; since it is like they were great, and bigger haply then those which grow in some part of Asia, as big as a Cowes udder, or little childe, Plin. lib. 14. cap. 1.

V. 27. him] That is, Moses.

V. 28. children of Anak] Which are taken to be a generation of Giants, vers.33.

V. 29. Amalekites dwell] Not in the Land of Canaan, but they so neerely border upon it, that they may hinder the Israelites passage into it, or be ill neighbours to them when they are in it; or they might be said to dwell there, if they lodged in their Tents, pitched in a convenient place, to withstand the passage of the Israelites. This is spoken for discouragement, to which end they tell some very great untruths, vers.32,33. and therefore we need not labour much, to make good these words.

V. 30. Caleb stilled] They began to murmur against Moses upon that report; and Caleb (who with Joshua) was of the number of the spies, pacified them.

V. 32. eateth up] Meaning the Giants were so cruell, that they spoiled and killed one another, and those that came to them; or they might by that imply, that the land was so barren, that with the great paines, and small returne for their seed and tillage, the Inhabitants were toyled out, and in a manner eaten up; or that the ayre was unwholesome, and so the people were destroyed by diseases.

V. 33. giants] See Annot.on Gen.6.4.

CHAP. XIV.

Vers. 1. VVEpt] That is, such as beleeved the lies of the spies, and were discouraged by them.

V. 4. a captaine] Their great passion putteth them upon a very mad motion; for who could conduct them back into Egypt? how could they be furnished with food in that desolate wildernesse? would God againe raine downe Manna for Rebels, or send Quailes to sustaine them? and by what meanes would they passe the Red Sea? would it againe stand on heapes that they might passe on dry ground? God would not surely worke any saving wonders for such desperate Apostates, who thus returning toward Egypt, deserved all the plagues of Egypt to way-lay them, and overwhelme them.

V. 5. fell on their faces] By such humilitie they might pacifie their murmuring, especially it being publique, before all the Congregation; and with that gesture they might joyne in supplication to God, to pacifie the people, and to spare them, that they might not be destroyed; as in vers.33.

V. 6. rent their clothes] See Annot.on Gen.37.29.

V. 9. bread for us] We shall as surely cut and kill them with our swords, as with our knives or teeth we cut the bread we eate; and shall root them out as we eate up this: agreeable to that manner of speaking is Deut.32.42.

V. 10. all the Congregation] The greater number are most out of order.

stone them] It is the condition of them who would perswade in Gods cause, to be persecuted by the multitude; who through ignorance, inconsideration, and unruly passions, (wherein they are examples, and incitements to each other) mistake good men, and good meanings, to the danger of their lives, for whose safetie they should sacrifice their owne.

the glory of the Lord] A bright cloud appeared, signifying the especiall presence of the Lord.

V. 13. Then the Egyptians] The speech through height of passion is suspended, and may be thus supplied; If thou destroy the people, the Egyptians will heare of it, and take occasion to blaspheme thee, as vers. 16.

V. 15. as one man] Not caring for a multitude more then for one single man; or destroying them as suddenly, as if so many heads had but one neck to be cut off at once.

V. 17. the power] He desires mercy, yet willeth God to declare his power; but he meaneth, his mercy to the Israelites, and his power in assisting them to conquer the Canaanites.

V. 18. by no meanes clearing] Moses pleading with God for mercy, bringeth in a description of God, set downe by God himselfe, which he impartially repeateth, because God in prayer would be spoken of in such manner; yet Moses while he sueth for mercy to many, may hereby intimate an assent to Gods justice, if he please to exercise it upon some principall offenders in this rebellion; which if they were cut off, there might be more safety for the rest: or he might by the words next following intimate a deferring of his justice untill the third and fourth generation. Reade Exod.32. which will cleare this doubt, touching this mention of mercy and justice together.

V. 20. thy word] In that he destroyed them not presenly, but left their posteritie to enter.

V. 21. But as truly] Notwithstanding I shew favour to the Nation upon this thy request, I will doe justice upon the rebellion; and so by undoubted evidences of my iustice, and mercie, and miraculous power, will fully shew forth my glory throughout the earth.

V. 22. ten times] That is, many times, a certaine number for an uncertaine, as Gen.31.7.

V. 23. they shall not see] This commination is not made against all, but in probability, onely, or chiefly against those men who were murmurers, betwixt the age of twentie, and fiftie.

V. 24. Caleb] Joshua was joyned with him; for though he be not mentioned in this place, else-where he is, vers.30.38. & Chap.32.12.

another spirit] They two, Caleb and Joshua, were more faithfull spies, and reporters, then the other ten; and were both more patient to suffer adversitie, and more valiant to offer an assault upon the enemy.

V. 25. into the wildernesse] They are now come to Rithma Cades, so neere the promised Land, that onely the Mountaines of Idumea were betwixt them, and it; and God biddeth them goe back towards the Red Sea, as it were renouncing their conduct, because they desired a Captaine to bring them back into Egypt, vers.4.

V. 30. I sware] Yet was not God forsworne, because he promised but upon condition, and the condition on the peoples part was obedience, as Psal.89.30,31. Deut. 31. 16, 17. and that condition broken by them.

V. 33. fourtie yeares] Wanting five dayes; for they came out of Egypt the fifteenth day of the first moneth, Chap. 33. vers. 3. and they entered into Canaan the tenth day of the first moneth of the fourtie first yeare of their departure, Josh. 4. 19. but in so many yeares so few dayes are not considerable: See Annot. on Chap. 11. vers.24.

beare your whoredomes] That is, the punishment of your spirituall unfaithfulnesse, disloyaltie, and disobedience, contrary to the duty of a wife to her husband; before you come into the promised Land, you shall (for the wickednesse of your revolts, and rebellions, that you may be punished in them) wander in the wildernesse untill your carkasses be there consumed.

V. 34. my breach of promise] Because a covenant made upon conditions betwixt two parties, when it is broken on the one side, cannot be whole on the other; which, speaking after the manner of men, may be called a breach of promise; though God be so faithfull and firme in his promise, as that he will never breake for his part, unlesse the failing of his people (for their part) set him free.

V. 37. by the plague] Threatened, vers.12. or some other sudden vengeance from God.

before the Lord] That is, at the place of Gods especiall presence; see vers. 10. 1 Chron.13.10. Or, before the Lord. That is, they die such a death, as that it was evident Gods especiall hand was with it, as the immediate executioner of it.

V. 41. Transgresse] They confesse they sinned by rebelling against God, but considered not they offended in going up without Gods commandement; for in that guidance or leading which he had appointed for them, he did expresly command that they should obey, and follow; and implicitly forbid that they should be leaders of themselves; much more was their wickednesse to go up against the expresse prohibition, as they presumed to do, vers.44.

V. 45. Hormah] Which name was afterwards given to the place: see Chap.21.3.

CHAP. XV.

Vers. 2. Your habitations] In the Land of Canaan, where ye shall have fixed dwellings, and not wander nor dwell in Tents, as now you doe.

V. 3. tenth deale] That is, the tenth part of an Ephah, to wit, an Omer; what that is, see. Annot. on Exod.16.36.

V. 4. of flowre] Which is offered onely with the holocaust, or whole-burnt-offering, and with the peace-offerings; but not with the sin-offering, or trespasse-offering.

Hin of oyle] See Annot. on Exod.29.40. The fourth part of an Hin is fourtie ounces, that is, three pound and foure ounces Troy weight, reckoning twelve ounces to the pound; according to this, gold, silver, pearles, precious stones, electuaries, and bread are weighed.

V. 9. three tenth deales] See the first Annot. on vers. 4.

V. 14. so shall he doe] If he be a Proselyte, and embrace the same beliefe and religion with you.

V. 15. One ordinance] One ordinance here, and one law, vers. 16. are to be understood for matters of religion, wherein an Israelite and a stranger came under one rule; for in Civill matters there was much difference; for which see Levit. 25. vers.44,45,46. & Deut.23.20.

V. 20. first of your dough] Which is made of the first corne ye gather and bake; but not onely that was to be given, (as some resolve) but as they were to set apart at least the sixtieth part of of their harvest fruits, to be given in the name of the first-fruits unto the Priests; so as often as they baked, they were to give a cake unto the Priest, which was not to be sent to Jerusalem, nor were the first-fruits to be sent thither; but to be given to the Priests, where they dwelled and performed some of their holy ministration. See Annot. on Numb.35.2.

V. 22. if ye have erred] As by oversight, or ignorance. See Levit.4.2.13.

V. 24. burnt-offering] This bullock for a burnt-offering, and the goate for a sin-offering are added to the ordinance, Levit.4.13. for the sinne of the whole Congregation.

V. 30. reproacheth the Lord] For by this presumption, he maketh as if God were an ignorant God, that did not know his wickednesse; or a careless God, that would not; or an impotent God, that could not punish his rebellion.

that soule] That is, that person; see Annot. on Levit. 5.1.

cut off] Either by the hand of the Magistrate, where his presumption deserveth death by the law; or by immediate vengeance from the hand of God, as Chap.14.vers.37.

V. 32. gathered sticks] The Sabbath in respect of cessation from workes, was precisely observed in the wildernesse; but so were not sacrifices.

V. 34. not declared] But was it not declared what should be done when it was expresly decreed that the Sabbath-breaker should be put to death? Exod.31.14. & 35.2. Answ. First, though the Law was a killing letter in the rigour of it, yet it might admit of some favourable construction of necessitie, which might make the offender capable of pardon: Secondly, (which is more certaine) though there were a law to put to death a Sabbath-breaker, yet it was not declared what manner of death he should die; and of that the question. being proposed, the answer is made by declaring the kinde of death he must suffer, which is set downe in the next verse.

V. 35. stone him] Capitall punishments among the Jewes were either by 1 strangling; (which was not done by hanging as some conceive, (though it seeme otherwise, Deut. 21.22,23.) but by putting a towell about the neck of him that was to die, (standing) two executioners plucking the towell contrary waies untill he were stifled; 3 yet when execution was done, in some cases, viz. in the fourth of those that follow, the dead body was to be hanged up for a time for caution to others, which was limited in the place fore-cited) or 2 by slaying with the sword: 3 by burning: or 4 by stoning: of these, the two last were most painfull, and therefore inflicted upon the greatest offenders. This may seeme to be too severe for so small a trespasse, but it may be it was done presumptuously, or with publique scandall; howsoever it is not a light offence, (though many make little of it) to doe needlesse workes upon the Sabbath day.

V. 38. fringe] The fringe and riband on the border of the garment were helpes to memorie; so that when men looked on them they might be admonished of their duty to God; which being upon the borders of their garment, or upon the foure quarters, they could not which way soever they went in company, but be in the view of those that met or followed one another: It is thought our Saviour wore such, which was touched by the woman, who by a touch was cured of her disease, Luk.8.44.

V. 39. after which ye use] That is, after those things which are the delightfull objects of your hearts, and eyes, ye goe a whoring; that is, you breake your vowes of loyall love and affection to me, who have married you to my selfe, and like whorish wives, prostitute your selves to Idols. See Hos.2.vers.2. & 19.

CHAP. XVI.

Vers.1. Korah the sonne] In being the sonne of Izhar, he was cousin german to Moses and Aaron; for his father Izhar was brother to their father Amram; compare this place with Exod.6.18.

sonnes of Reuben] See Annot. on vers.7.

V. 2. before Moses] And not only before him, but (as it is in the third verse) against him and Aaron. This sheweth the boldnesse of their rebellion, that they were not afraid to begin it in his presence.

men of renowne] Men of note, and name, for their parentage, and parts; and now notorious for the abuse of them by an impious conspiracy and rebellion.

V. 3. Tee take too much] Too much state, too much power, too much honour, too much holinesse, in appropriating those administrations to your selves, wherein all the people might partake with you, and make as neere approaches to God, and with as much acceptance, as you doe; and therefore they may offer incense, and present their own oblations, and offer their own sacrifices as well as you; which may be probably collected from the prayer of Moses against them, Respect not thou their offerings, which, though it may be first meant of the incense mentioned in the following Chapter, because they began their usurpation with that; yet it is like they meant to goe on with the like intrusion into the Priestly office in other services appropriate unto it. This presumption was not ended with Korah and his company; we see the practise of it in the present ages among the people of severall sects, taking upon them the preaching of the Word, and ministration of the Sacraments, and the exercise of Ecclesiasticall discipline, which belongeth not to them.

holy every one] They flatter the people, while they slander their Governours, to stirre them up to sedition against them; and their flattery ascribeth that praise to all, which is to be found but in very few, the praise of holinesse; perhaps because God required they should be so, Exod. 19. vers. 5,6. and they promised they would be so, because of his especiall presence among them.

V. 4. fell upon his face] See Annot. on Chap. 14.vers.5.

to Korah] As the Ringleader of this rebellion, which he is thought to have raised of indignation, and disdaine, that Elizaphan the sonne of the fourth or youngest Family of the Cohathites, was made a Prince of his Tribe, and that himself, being of the second Family and his elder, was neglected. Compare Exod.6.18. with Numb.3.30. And he exasperated Dathan, Abiram and On with this pretence, that they being of the Tribe of Reuben the first-born of Jacob, had more right to the supreme authoritie then Moses.

V.5. to morrow] To morrow the Lord will manifestly declare, whether he hath made choice of us for his chiefest services or no, and whether he accompt all the Congregation so holy, that they may come as neere the Altar as we, and offer sacrifices as well as we.

V. 7. yee take too much] He layeth the same fault to their charge justly, wherewith they wrongfully charged him; so did Elijah retort the accusation upon Ahab, 1 King. 18.17,18.

yee sonnes of Levi] Korah was a Levite, and he had others of his Tribe of the same conspiracie, but Dathan, Abiram, and On were Reubenites, and therefore called the sonnes of Reuben, vers.1.

V. 8. yee sonnes of Levi] He addressed his speech principally to Korah Captain of the Conspiracie; yet so, as that what he said to him concerned all of them; and therefore though he began with Korah in the singular number, he presently turneth his speech unto the plurall.

V. 9. seemeth it a small thing] The lowest degree of peculiar service unto God, is a great honour to the sonnes of men, though men of renowne, vers. 2. So that he that was in dignitie a King, disdained not the office of a door-keeper in the house of the Lord.

V. 10. neere] Neerer then the other Tribes, to doe service at the Tabernacle; though not so neere as the Priests, to offer sacrifice to God; for the Levites were to minister unto the Priest, Prieſt, the Prieſt unto God by offering incenſe, verſ. 40. and ſacrifice. See Chap. 18. verſ. 2, 3, 7.

V. 11. againſt the Lord] See Annot. on Exod. 16. 7.

what is Aaron] What hath he done, what hath he aſſumed? but what the Lord hath put upon him? and what is he in compariſon of him? if you take offence at the ſetling of the Prieſthood upon Aaron, and his poſteritie; it is Gods doing, not Aarons, and what is he to God?

V. 12. Moſes ſent] Korah was preſent with Moſes, and he ſent for theſe Conſpirators, who were abſent, to wit, Dathan, Abiram, and (it is like) On, named in the firſt verſe, though here he be not.

V. 13. with milke and hony] That which Joſhua and Caleb ſaid in commendation of the Land of Canaan, Chap. 14. 8. they ſpeake in the praiſe of Egypt; and ſo both ungratefully, and preſumptuouſly they preferre the land of their cruell bondage, before that of Gods gracious promiſe.

V. 14. put out the eyes] Wilt thou make them that ſearched the Land beleeve that they ſaw not that which they ſaw; or make us ſo blinde, as not to ſee how thou haſt deceived us, in promiſing us plenty in a fruitfull land, and leading us up and downe in a wilde and deſolate wilderneſſe, where there is neither milke nor hony; but an extreme want of all neceſſary ſuſtenance? and wilt thou not onely afflict us with famine; but domineere over us with pride, as if thou wert not a brother, or companion among us; but a Prince over us?

V. 15. neither have] He refutes their objection, by alledging his moderation and equitie toward them; neither taking any of their goods from them, nor doing any hurt unto them; which is not their manner who uſurpe authoritie over others, or who have it, and abuſe it: See the 1 Sam. 8. 11.

V. 16. before the Lord] At the doore, or entrance of the Tabernacle.

V. 19. all the Congregation] That is, that were of their faction.

glory of the Lord] Shining in the cloud over the Sanctuarie; ſee verſ. 24. & Chap. 14. 10.

V. 21. conſume them] Societie with ſinners is dangerous to the godly, Gen. 19. 15. and ſeparation of the godly is dangerous for the wicked, Gen. 19. 22.

V. 22. one man ſinne] Meaning Korah the principall incendiary, who inflamed all the reſt into an heat of rebellion; in compariſon of whoſe wickedneſſe, all the reſt were in a manner innocent.

V. 24. and Abiram] On here againe muſt be underſtood, though he be not mentioned, as verſ. 1.

V. 26. in all their ſinnes] That is, puniſhments; by a figurative ſpeech whereby the cauſe is put for the effect; and ſo neere of kinne is the guilt of ſinne, and ſmart of paine; that one terme may ſtand for them both; See Gen. 4. 13. text & margin. & Chap. 18. verſ. 1. & 32. of this booke.

V. 29. If theſe men] Moſes ingageth the truth and honour of his office upon a miracle to be wrought for the ruine of preſumptuous Rebels, and that preſently to come to paſſe, verſ. 5. in the ſight and view of many hundred thouſands of people; an undoubted evidence of Gods concurrence with the Miniſtery of Moſes, and therewithall an undoubted aſſurance of the Divine truth of Moſes his writings.

V. 31. as he had made] Moſes had no ſooner ſpoken the word, but God made it good by his deed; at once avowing Moſes and Aarons authoritie and integritie; and avenging his owne, and their cauſe, in the juſt and miraculous puniſhment of the conſpirators impiety.

V. 32. their houſes] That is, their families, or houſholds; for they had no houſes in the wilderneſſe, but onely Tents; or their Tents and what was in them; ſee Joſh. 7. 15. 24.

V. 33. all that pertained] Little infants not excepted; who though not guilty of their ſinne, were taken in their ſnare; their parents being puniſhed in them, in whom their memorie might have flouriſhed, after a well-led life, and naturall death: and though they were little, they had ſinne enough in their nature to deſerve the ſhortening of their lives; yet God, while in juſtice he killed their bodies, might in mercy ſave their ſoules.

V. 35. that offered incenſe] Uſurping the Prieſts office, they are puniſhed by fire wherein they offended; See Annot. on Levit. 10. 2. by the fire of the Lords Altar, whence they kindled the incenſe of their Cenſers.

V. 37. ſcatter thou the fire] That is, the fire of their cenſers, as ſhewing that the Lord rejected it.

hallowed] That is, ſeparated from common uſe; the reaſon is rendered in the next verſe, becauſe they were offered before the Lord.

V. 38. a ſigne] Or memoriall of Gods judgement againſt the preſumptuous conſpirators; and of his vindication and clearing of the innocencie of his moſt faithfull ſervants.

V. 40. no ſtranger] All the Levites (except the ſonnes of Aaron) were ſtrangers in reſpect of the Prieſts office, or ſervice, and in reſpect of the Levites office; all the other: See Annot. upon Chap 1. verſ. 51.

as Korah] In uſurping an office, or ſervice without the warrant of a lawfull calling unto it, and doing it in other manner then the Lord allowed.

V. 41. But on the morrow] In this murmuring of the people ſo ſoone after a miraculous judgement, both by deſtroying fire from above, and a devouring vengeance from the earth below; the Devil may be thought to ſet himſelfe againſt God, as the Inchanters of Egypt did againſt Moſes, to make the contumacie and rebellion of the people a miracle, as well as Gods judgement upon the rebellious.

V. 45. conſume them] There were two deadly plagues before; the ſwallowing up of Korah, and that which appertained to him, verſ. 33. and the burning of thoſe conſpirators which offered incenſe, verſ. 35. and now a third is threatned, and in part executed, verſ. 45, 46. for murmuring againſt Moſes and Aaron, and charging them with murdering the people of the Lord, verſ. 41.

V. 46. from off the Altar] For it was not lawfull for that purpoſe to take of any other fire, but that on the Altar of burnt-offerings; ſee Levit. 10. 1, 2.

V. 47. put on incenſe] Incenſe was to be offered onely upon the Altar of inceuſe in the Tabernacle; but this was done as upon an extraordinarie occaſion, ſo by extraordinary warrant of Divine inſpiration.

V. 48. betweene the dead and] The Plague ſeemeth to have beene a preſent and ſpeedy peſtilence, which went along among the company as fire in a field of Corne; ſo Aaron ſtanding betwixt thoſe that were already dead, and thoſe who yet alive were in greateſt danger of preſent death, by his Mediation (wherein as High-prieſt he repreſenteth Chriſt) pacified Gods wrath, and ſtayed the Plague that it proceeded no further.

CHAP. XVII.

Verſ. 3. Aarons name] Why not Levies name, as well as Reubens, Simeons, &c. Becauſe the queſtion was not ſo much whether the Tribe of Levi ſhould miniſter unto the Lord, as whether the Prieſt-hood ſhould be ſettled on Aaron, and his ſonnes.

rod of Levi] Though Aarons name were written on a rod, it was not that rod which he uſed in working miracles, but an ordinary rod, like the reſt of the Tribes; for ſo the buds, and bloſſomes, and Almonds that came out of it, might appeare more miraculous: yet ſome thinke it was the ſame miraculous rod uſed in miraculous operations before Pharaoh, becauſe that was laid up before the Lord, Numb. 20. 9. and that rod which was laid up before the Lord, was Aarons rod that budded, Heb. 9. 4. unleſſe there were two rods laid up, and but one expreſly mentioned.

V. 4. before the Teſtimony] That is, before the Arke, wherein were the tables of the Law, Exod. 25. 16. whereby was teſtified Gods covenant with his people.

V. 6. twelve rods] There is uſually twelve Tribes without that of Levi, and with him there was thirteen, chap. 1. but then Joſeph is divided into two, which here, though two was to be reckoned but for one, yet ſome conceive there were twelve rods beſides the rod of Aaron, though it cannot be gathered from the Hebrew Text.

V. 7. of witneſſe] Or, teſtimony. See Annot. on verſ. 4.

V. 8. for the houſe of] (For Aaron was the firſt of the ſtocke of Levi, that was born of his fathers family) to declare that God did chooſe the houſe of Levi, to ſerve him in the Tabernacle; and ſince it is called the Rod of Aaron, it notes the preeminence of the Prieſts, the ſons of Aaron, above the Levites.

V. 8. almouds] a miraculous ſpring, for a dry Rod to bring forth buds, and bloſſoms, and fruit, and all at once, or all within a very little ſpace.

V. 10. againſt the rebells] That others preſume not to uſurp the office of the Prieſthood, as Korah and his company had done; for (when the judgement by fire, and ſwallowing up of the earth, being out of ſight would be out of minde) that Rod would be of ready uſe to correct the preſumption of thoſe that would adventure upon the like in after times; and it might prove a barre to keep them back from ſuch over-bold undertakings.

V. 12. all periſh] So many ſorts of death, by the ſword, by fire, by the opening of the earth, by the peſtilence, making quick riddance of ſo many, will (if it hold) in a while leave very few of us alive.

V. 13. any thing neere] Extream feare makes them aggravate the danger above meaſure; or elſe they meane it onely of ſuch as being no Levites, make too neer approches to the Tabernacle, or meddle with holy things, without ſufficient warrant for that purpoſe.

with dying] The words are a paſſionate expoſtulation with God,

God, in sense thus, Wilt thou not, O God, withdraw thine indignation from us, untill by killing, thou hast consumed us? and such an Interrogation is virtually an ardent deprecation of danger, as Psal. 85.5,6. Esay 64.12.

CHAP. XVIII.

Vers. 1. Beare the iniquitie] I speake to you that be Priests, not to the Levites; if you trespasse in any thing concerning the ceremonies of the Sanctuary, or your office, or suffer any one to usurpe the service of my Sanctuary, against mine order, or to make neerer approaches to any holy thing, then I permit: the offence shall be imputed unto you, and you shall be punished.

V. 2. of witnesse] See Annot. on Chap. 17. vers. 4,7.

V. 3. thy charge] That is, thy charge, or appointment touching the services of the Sanctuary.

and the charge] Of the Tabernacle, as it is distributed among them, Chap. 3.

nor you] To suffer others to offend, whom we may hinder, is to be guiltie of their sinne, and in danger of their punishment.

V. 4. a stranger] See Annot. on Chap. 16. vers. 40.

V. 7. within the vaile] Of the Sanctuary, for the inferiour Priest; within the vaile of the Holy of Holies, for the High-priest.

V. 8. by reason of the anoynting] That is, of the service or office, to which by anoynting thou art consecrated.

V. 9. from the fire] That which was not burned by way of Oblation to God.

V. 10. most holy place] That is, for eating; for that which was indeed the most Holy place, or the Holy of Holies, was within the second vaile of the Tabernacle, into which none might enter but the High-priest, and he only once a yeare; not to eate, but to make a solemne atonement; but among the places where men might eate, some were held holier then others, as Jerusalem is called the holy Citie, Matth. 4. 5. where the Passeover was eaten, though in private houses; and in respect thereof, and of any part of the campe, the Priests Court was the most holy place for such a use.

male] Of the sinne-offering, and trespasse-offering onely males must eate; but to the peace-offering women were admitted; Levit. 10.14. Deut. Chap. 12.18. & Chap. 16.11.

V. 13. first ripe] The first fruits and tenths are distinct tithes of different revenues of the Sanctuary: the tenthes are better known then the first fruits, therefore of these it is to be observed, that they are of foure sorts; First, a sheafe of the first ripe corne presented the second day of the Feast of unleavened bread, Levit. 23. 10. Secondly, two wave-loaves at the Feast of Pentecost, Levit. 23. 17. Thirdly, a cake taken first out of their dough, before they made use of their weekely baking, Numb. 15. 21. Fourthly, in the seventh moneth, the moneth of September, when all their fruits were gathered in, they were to pay a part in the name of first-fruits of all their increase, of corne and wine, before they served themselves with any of them; and this was paid not in the proportion of tithe one for ten, but one for fourtie at the most, and for sixtie at the least, usually betwixt fourtie and sixtie.

cleane] This limitation was observed, when any of the first-fruits were offered in sacrifice to God; otherwise if they were given only for the use of the Priests, they might be eaten by any to whom he allowed them, whether ceremonially cleane or uncleane.

V. 14. devoted] That is, separate from common use, and fit and profitable for the use of the Priests; unlesse it be devoted as a sacrifice to God.

V. 15. first-borne] See Annot. on Exod. 13.2.

of uncleane beasts] Some thinke the uncleanneese here mentioned, is not in respect of kinde, as the Horse, and Mule; but in respect of accidentall qualitie, as when a sheep is blind, or lame: but it is more probable, it is to be understood of both.

V. 16. Redeemed] That is, of mankinde, not of other creatures.

a moneth old] The first-born might be redeemed by this law before the mother was purified, viz. before the fourtieth day; though commonly their redemption was deferred till the day of purification of their mother.

V. 17. Holy] That is, appointed for sacrifice, and therefore not to be redeemed from death.

V. 19. of salt] That is, sure and stable; because salt makes things to keepe or last long without corruption. See Annot. on Levit. 2.13.

V. 20. in their land] In the land of the Hebrewes thy brethren.

I am thy part] Thou shalt set thy heart upon me, as thy most precious portion and inheritance; I will make sufficient provision for thy maintenance, though thou have not a particular share of land, as other Tribes have: Or, I am thy part, that is, I will ingage my selfe for thy supply, and thou shalt have allowance out of my portion. See Josh. 13. 14.

V. 21. Levi all the tenths] All the tithes were paid to the Levites, not to the Priests; and out of them the Levites paid a tenth to the Priests, Neh. 10.37,38. See vers. 26. of this Chap.

V. 22. beare sinne and die] Disobedience to God, though in a small matter, brings deadly danger upon man.

V. 23. they shall beare] See Annot. on vers. 1.

V. 27. as though it] As profitable, and acceptable as the fruit of your own ground, or vineyard, had you an equall portion with the rest of your brethren.

V. 28. to Aaron the Priest] That he may make distribution thereof among the Priests.

V. 29. out of all] The Levites were not onely to pay a tenth out of their tenth to the Priests, Nehem. 10.37,38. but the tenth also of other things, as of the suburbs of those Cities (which belonged to them) reaching from the wals to a thousand cubits round about, Numb. 35.4. The Tribe of Levi was so much lesse then any of the other Tribes, that they were every one of them three or foure times greater, Numb. Chap. 3. & 4. yet they had the tenth of all, vers. 21. of this Chap. so that though they were fewer in number they had more meanes or maintenance then any other Tribe: the Priests who were now but two (of full age) besides Aaron, had the tenth of the Levites, who were 8580. Numb. 4.48. and this was about the hundreth part of the profits of above sixe hundred thousand men: moreover, they had first-fruits of the yearly increase, which at least were a sixteenth part, which was more then the tenth; they had also votive, and free-will-offerings, redemption mony of persons, and things devoted unto God; the first-borne also of oxen, sheepe, and goates in kinde; together with the sin-offering, and trespasse-offering; they had the first-fruits of the bread of the families of the people; and of whole-burnt-offerings they had the skinne; yet more, they had some Cities, and suburbs; and whatsoever oblations they had, they were all of the best: See Jer. 31. vers. 14.

V. 30. heaved the best thereof] That is, given the best for an heave-offering.

V. 31. In every place] Some Tithes, as common things, might be eaten in any place; such were these; but some were limited to distinction of place, with limitation of persons, as vers. 10.

32. beare no sinne] See Annot. on Chap. 16. vers. 26.

neither shall ye pollute] By giving the worst things unto the High-priests, having received of the best sort from the people.

CHAP. XIX.

Vers. 2. Ordinance] According to this Law and Ceremony yee shall sacrifice the red Cow; this Heifer, as a beast without blemish, holds conformitie with other sacrifices, (as they with Christ, whereof they were figures) for he was without blemish or spot of sinne, 1 Pet. 1.19. but as red, and free from the yoke, it differed from other sacrifices; yet agreed more with the Antitype Christ, covered with his owne bloud, issuing from the many wounds on his head and body: And in that the Heifer was to be free from the yoke, it was because being destinate for a sacrifice of expiating of sinne before God, it was not fit it should first be imployed in the service of man; and it noted Christs freedome from the yoke and bondage of sinne, as it is phrased, Lam. 1. 14. and from subjection to men, Matth. 17.26,27. Joh. 10.17,18.

V. 3. without the Campe] Because it was to be saccrificed for the sinnes of all the people; and therefore being figuratively under the guilt of so great iniquitie, it was held very uncleane; and the Priest that killed it, and he that burned it, were to be uncleane untill the evening. And if we consider this sacrifice as a Type of Christ, as it was; it holds conformitie with him, who suffered as a Malefactor without the gate of Jerusalem, Heb. 13.12. as malefactors did without the Campe, Levit. 24. 14. and as bearing the guilt of all the Israel of God, Isa. 53.6. and yet in himselfe the Holy one of God, Act. 2.27.

one shall slay] It is not said by whom the Heifer shall be slaine, or burnt, vers. 5. and for the word One, though it be not in the Hebrew Text, yet it is supplied for the congruitie of the sentence, which runs better in sense with it, then it would doe without it. It seemes it was not Aaron the High-priest that was to doe it, but rather Eleazar, to whom it was presented, by whom it was brought without the Campe, and the bloud sprinkled, vers. 41. and who was next in dignitie to Aaron, Chap. 3.32. and at this time the number of inferiour Priests (besides them) was very few, if it were a number, for some thinke they were but three that were of full age; yet in that it is said, [shall slay her before his face] (that is, Eleazars face,) it appeares to be some other, and not Eleazar; so also doe the words [in his sight, vers. 5.] import.

V. 4. before

V. 4. before the Tabernacle] That is, turning his face toward it; though being out of the Campe, he were a good way from it.

V. 6. skarlet] By that deepe red colour, is sometimes signified the great guilt of sin, Isa. 1.18. especially of cruelty and bloud-shed, vers. 15. and the bloud of Christ washing away that guilt; and though red, yet making the sinner white, Revel. 7.14.

V. 7. wash his clothes] That is, Eleazar, signifying that uncleanesse cleaveth to the most holy actions of the most holy persons, Heb. 7.27,28.

V. 8. he that burneth] That is, an inferiour Priest.

V. 9. cleane place] Where no dead carkasse, dung, or other filth was laid; as on the contrary, the stones, rubbish, and dust of a leprous house was to be put in an uncleane place, Levit. 14. 40,41. whence the ashes were yearely to be distributed in the Cities of Canaan, and so kept, that they might be in readinesse for generall use.

it shall be kept] That is, the ashes, (for in the Hebrew the word is in the singular number) or part of the ashes shall be kept to mingle with water: See vers. 17. & Heb. 9.13.

a water of separation] Because they that were separated for their uncleanesse, were sprinkled with it, and made cleane by it, Chap. 8.7. from a ceremoniall pollution. It is also called holy water, because it is ordained to an holy use, Chap. 5.17. and used in an holy manner.

V. 12. with it] That is, the water of separation, which some thinke did serve only to purge the uncleanesse contracted by touching the dead: others extend it to all ceremoniall uncleanesse whatsoever.

third day] He was to be sprinkled with this water of separation the third day after his pollution was known, and the seventh day, vers. 19. and if he omitted the first sprinkling, he had no benefit by the second on the seventh day; yet the first sprinkling might be, (if the third day were omitted) on the fourth or the fifth day, and yet stand as for the third; and from thence he must expect the seventh day so much the later, as it was longer before he had his first sprinkling.

V. 13. cut off] So that he should not be esteemed to be of the holy people; but as a polluted and excommunicated person: some hold that if it were known, he was to be put to death by the Sentence of the Judge, if unknown, by the Judgement of God; except in case of ignorance, for then if he touched any uncleane thing, and knew it not, he was (when he knew it) to offer a sacrifice for it, Levit. 5. vers. 3,6.

V. 14. all that is in] By this precise ordinance touching the dead, there was a caveat given against all guilt of blood: for if to come into the place where a dead man lay, rendred a man uncleane; how uncleane must he be, who made a living man a dead carkasse, by a murderous act? See Gen. 4. 10. & Esa. 1.15.

V. 15. open vessell] Which taketh in the ayre of the Tent ceremoniously tainted or uncleane, when they left dwelling in Tents; the same Law in proportion served for houses, at least for the roome or chamber where the dead was laid, or through which he was brought.

V. 18. a cleane person] One of the Priests that is cleane.

V. 19. wash his clothes] Because he had been among them that were uncleane, or else had touched the water wherewith another had been sprinkled, vers. 21.

V. 20. purifie himselfe] By undergoing the ordinance or ceremony of purification, though himselfe be rather passive then active in it.

cut off] See Annot. on vers. 13.

V. 21. wash his clothes] See Annot. on vers. 7.

toucheth] Except for the ordinary and legall use of cleansing others by it from ceremoniall uncleanesse.

V. 22. untill even] He that touched an uncleane thing was to be uncleane seven dayes; vers. 14. but such a person or thing touched at the second hand by another, could make him or it uncleane but untill even.

CHAP. XX.

Vers. 1. OF Zin] Some read Sin, as the vulgar Latine, but corruptly; for it is not the same word, as the difference of the first letters shew, for the former is written with Samech, this with Tsadi; nor the same place mentioned, Exod. 16.1. where it rained Manna, for that was but the eighth mansion, this is the thirtie third, but as some reckon it, the twentie third.

first moneth] This was the first moneth of the fourtieth yeare after their departure out of Egypt; for their next removall was from Kadesh to Hor, which seemeth to be in the same yeare when Aaron dyed; and he dyed in the first day of the fifth moneth of the fourtieth yeare, after the children of Israel were come out of the Land of Egypt, as is expressely said, Numb. 33. 38. so that from this Chapter to the end of Deuteronomy, are described the passages of the fourtieth or last yeare of the journeying of the Hebrews in the wilderneſse.

Kadesh] As this was another desert from Sin in the eighth mansion, so this was another Kadesh then that which is called Kadesh Barnea, for Kadesh Barnea was in the Southerne confines of the Land of Canaan; but the Kadesh here spoken of, was (though Southward also) farre off, in the confines of Idumea, or uttermost border of the King of Edom, vers. 14,& 16. of this Chapter.

Miriam died] The sister of Aaron and Moses, she died foure monethes before her brother Aaron, when she was of the age of one hundred and thirtie yeares, and about the yeare of the world, 2524. Miriam obit.

V. 5. wherefore have ye] This people was very prone to murmure against their Governours, and that most of all in the cause and quarrell of the belly, when they wanted provision of meat and drinke; and the verse sheweth the wilderneſse wanted both; and they wanted patience to keepe the Peace with their Superiours; O how unquiet a thing is warre which causeth famine, and by that wherein it ends, begins new brabbles! See Joseph of the warres of the Jews, lib. 6. cap. 11.

V. 8. rod] It is not certaine whether this was Moses his rod wherewith he wrought wonders in Egypt, and smote the rock in Horeb, Exod. 17. 5. (although some without doubt affirme it was that) or Aarons rod that budded, and brought forth Almonds, and was laid up before the Lord in the Sanctuary, Numb. 17.8.10. but the difference is not great, the miracle lieth not in the rod, or the relation to Moses and Aaron, but in the power of God.

V. 8. speake] Command it to give water.

V. 10. must we fetch] By this question he seemeth to bewray some distrust of such a supply of drinke, as he did of supply of flesh, Numb. 11.22,23. and what is probable of him by this verse, is charged upon him and Aaron both, vers. 12. & vers. 24. The errours of Moses in this particular passage are conceived by some to be 1 his immoderate anger: 2 his speaking to the people, when he should have spoken to the rock, ver. 8. 3 his smiting of it when he should only have spoken to it with the rod in his hand, or stretched it towards it; and smiting it twice, as in a pang of passion; but others excuse him, and say, he did not know whether God promised water upon condition they would cease from murmuring: but the next words shew that both he and Aaron were in fault.

V. 12. ye beleeved me not] They did not doubt of the power of God whereof they had sufficient evidence, even for such a miracle as this, Exod. 17.6. nor of his will; but in regard of the wilfulnesse and murmuring of the people unworthy to be supplied in such a miraculous sort; and in this doubt and displeasure at the people, something was too passionately said or done, which might occasion or confirme incredulitie in them. See Psal. 106.32,33.

sanctifie me] That is, honour me, because God is most to be honoured for his owne holinesse, and by the holinesse of men, which consisteth in beleeving his word, and obeying his command.

which I have given] By which is not meant the whole Land of Canaan; but that which was beyond Jordan in their passage out of Egypt, for then he was in that part on this side Jordan, which was given to the Tribe of Reuben, Gad, and halfe Tribe of Manasseh.

V. 13. sanctified in them] That is, in Moses and Aaron by shewing himselfe mighty, and maintaining his glory, which shineth most in holinesse; for his power is an holy power; his wisdome an holy wisdome; his justice an holy justice; and so he getteth himselfe honour above all cruell Tyrants, crafty Politicians, and unjust Judges.

V. 14. thy brother Israel] Because Jacob (of whom came the Israelites) and Edom (of whom came the Edomites) were ~~heathen~~ brethren.

V. 16. an Angel] Which conducted them in their way by the cloud and pillar of fire: yet some, by this Angel or Messenger, understand Moses.

in Kadesh, a citie] Or at Kadesh, that is, hard by it, in that part of the Desert which is so neere it, that it taketh the name from it, Chap. 33. vers. 36.

V. 17. neither will we drinke] As thine, but when we have made them our owne by paying for them.

V. 18. lest I come] A threatening denyall, as if he had said, Doe not passe by me, lest I come out, &c. or, if thou offerest to passe, I will resist thee with the sword.

V. 21. turned away] Went another way toward Canaan, fetching a compasse about the land of Edom and Moab, Judg. 11. 18. and so passed not the next way through his land, as they desired; but through the coast that bordered upon it, Deuter. 2. vers. 4. which was a way rather round about, then through it.

V. 24. ye rebelled] Why then was not Moses as well as Aaron doomed to death, since both are charged with the same sinne, sinne, vers. 12. and of both it is said in the same place, that they should not bring the people into the promised Land. Answ. God prolongeth Moses life a little further, yet so, as that he did but see the Land from Mount Nebo, Deut. 34.4. where he died; and so of him, as well as of Aaron, was the prediction, vers. 12. verified.

V. 26. upon Eleazar] Who was to succeed his father Aaron in the Priesthood, and so did his sonnes succeed him untill the time of the Judges, but then (for what cause it doth not appeare) the Priesthood was translated to the posteritie of Ithamar, the other sonne of Aaron; Joseph. lib. 1. Antiq. ch. last; but it never went quite out of his family, as Josephus saith, Antiq. lib. 20. cap. 8. which is denied by Sigonius de Repub. Hebr. lib. 1. cap. 2.

V. 28. died] In the one hundred twenty third yeare of his age.

there] That is, in Mount Hor; and whereas it is said, Deut. 10. 6. that he died in Morea; the answer is, that Hor and Morea are the same place, for Hor is an hill in Morea, which is the place round about it, and where the Israelites pitched, Num. 33.30. & 37. for when they had thence journeyed in the wilderneſse to and fro for fourtie years together, it is very like they came more then once to the same place.

CHAP. XXI.

Vers. 1. The way of the spies] By that way which the spies (which searched the land in the second yeare of their journeying from Eygpt, that is, thirty eight yeares before this time:) some understand it of the way which King Arad had sent spies to see which way Israel would goe, who (by intelligence) had learned that they were returned from the Red Sea: See Chap. 33. 40.

V. 2. vowed a vow] Of vowing: See Annot. on Gen. 28. 20. Of this kinde of vow, see Levit. 27. 29.

V. 4. the land of Edom] They were to compasse it, (but not to passe through it) and destroy it, for so were they charged, Deut. 2. 5. though by the name not of Edom, but of Seir, for so was Esaus or Edoms Countrey called.

V. 5. light bread] Meaning Manna, which they account light, as if it had little substance in it for their nourishment, in comparison of the more solid and substantiall diet which they had in Egypt; and which now by common use, was to them as unpleasant, as they thought it unprofitable: See Prov. 27. 7.

V. 6. fiery Serpents] So called, because those who were bitten or stung with them, were so enflamed with the heat thereof, that they died.

V. 8. fiery Serpent] That is, a Serpent of the colour of fier, as burnisht brasse is, Rev. 1. 15. Ezek. 1. 7. This was a figure of Christ; for as they that looked upon the brasen Serpent lifted up upon a pole, were cured of the hurt they received by the fiery Serpents; vers. 9. so they that fixed the eye of faith on Christ, lifted up also, Joh. 3. 14. upon the Crosse; were cured of the biting or sting of that old Serpent, who hath many stings, which he shooteth out like darts; and those darts are fiery, Ephes. 6. 16.

V. 13. Arnon] Some take Arnon for a rock, some for a brook running betwixt the Moabites, and Amorites.

V. 14. Wherefore it is said] These two verses import some miraculous conformitie betwixt what God did at the Red Sea, and what he did at Arnon in the borders of Moab: what the former were, we finde in Exodus: for the latter, there is reference made to a book which is not extant, or else latent, that we know not where to find it. Some say, that as the Red Sea served for a passage to the Israelites, yet drowned the Egyptians; so the high rocks at the brook of Arnon fell upon the enemies of Israel, and made a moer easie and even passage for the Israelites; so the Jewish Rabbins relate, and some Christian Writers too easily beleeve them.

V. 17. Spring up, O well] In the Hebrew it is ascend; for fruitfull springs bubble and rise up, like a seething pot.

sing ye] Ye that receive the commoditie thereof, give praise to God for it, or with respect unto it; or sing ye at it, or about it.

V. 18. The Princes digged] That is, caused it to be digged; the principall men of the Tribes, the chiefe Magistrate, and chiefe Minister smote the ground with their rods or staves, the ensignes of their dignitie, (as Moses did the rock) or with their journeying staves began to digge; and God caused thereupon a well to spring up, as water issued out of the rock, Num. 20. 11. or they digged places to receive the water that came out of the rock, 2 King. 3. 16, 17.

of the Law-giver] That is, of the Lord himselfe, so called, Isa. 33. 22. or Moses under God.

V. 24. Jabok] The name of a River arising out of Arabia, and watering the Region of the Ammonites.

strong] For the people were tall and strong like Giants, Deut. 2. 20.

V. 26. of the Amorites] For if it had beene the Moabites, the Israelites might not have possessed it, Deut. 2. 9. yet that which the Amorites had taken from the Moabites, the Israelites received and possessed, vers. 31. Numb. Chap. 32. vers. 33.

V. 27. in proverbs] A Proverbe made in scorne of Sihon King of Heshbon, (a Citie of the Land of the Amorites; see Judg. 11. 18, 19. over whom Sihon was King) which is part of the curse threatened to the wicked, Deut. 28. 37. this was the Proverbe used in these words [Come unto Heshbon, &c.] and those times.

V. 28. a fire] That is, warre; so called, because it is raised and pursued in heat of wrath, or, (as the common saying is) with fire and sword.

V. 29. Chemosh] Who worshippest the Idol Chemosh for a God; Chemosh was the Idol of the Moabites, 1 King. 11. 7. who was not able to defend his worshippers, which tooke the Idol for their father: Some take this to be the Idol Bacchus.

he hath given] That is, the Idol Chemosh hath given those that escaped the sword to be captives; which is ascribed to the Idol by way of derision both of him, and of the opinion of the people, who conceived there was such power in him: See Judg 11. 24.

V. 30. we have shot] Bragging words of Sihon and his party, concerning the conquest of Moab.

CHAP. XXII.

Vers. 1. Plaines of Moab] Once belonging to the Moabites, since to the Amorites, and from them wonne by the Israelites, and in their present possession.

on this side Jordan] Those that were at Jericho were beyond Jordan from Egypt; but the place where they pitched at this time, was on this side Jordan to travellers journeying towards Canaan; and it is said to be by Jericho, because Jericho was situate about seven or eight miles from Jordan, and over against the place where the people encamped.

V. 2. Balak] King of Moab, vers. 4.

V. 3. Moab] The Moabites, or people of Moab.

V. 4. Moab] The King of Moab, or the Moabites.

of Midian] Who were the Senate or Governours of the Midianites, though descended from Abraham by Keturah, Gen. 25. 1, 2. having made defection from their faith, they tooke part with the Moabites their neighbours; and it seems also, their confederates, Numb. 25. 17, 18. This Midian is not that which is situate toward Mount Sinai, where Moses kept the flocks of Jethro; but another Midian farre off that place, neere unto the Moabites; with these Midianites their neighbours, doth the King of Moab consult.

V. 5. Balaam] The Diviner or Sooth-sayer, Josh. 13. 22. proved to be a bad man by his following of enchantments, Numb. 24. 1. and by his desire to curse Israel, and by building of Altars unto Baal, whereof in this and the next Chapter; yet some take him to be a Prophet (as he is styled, 2 Pet. 2. 16.) and a Prophet of God, because God had such intercourse with him, and because he particularly prophecied of Christ to come, and because he speaketh of God as his God, Chap. 24. vers. 13. yet they acknowledge him a wicked man, for such may prophecie in Gods name as well as in Christs, Matth. 7. 22.

river] Euphrates.

V. 6. whom thou blessest] Either the King of Moab flattered him exceedingly, or God suffered his sorceries to prevaile very much, as he did those of Simon Magus, Act. 8, 9. 10. which they doe the more, because they are the causes of many evils, which by evill spirits they bring upon men, and they sometimes take them away to seeme good; and so the Devil doth more hurt as an Angel of light, then as the Prince of darknesse.

V. 7. reward] Thinking to bribe him with gifts to curse the Israelites.

V. 8. this night] He taketh time to consult with his devillish Oracles, though he pretend the direction of a better Spirit.

as the Lord shall speake] Though he were a prophet of the Devil, he would seeme to receive the revelation from God.

V. 9. God came] Though the Devil be to many in stead of God, 2 Cor. 4. 4. yet God will keepe an overruling power in his owne hand, and both reveale his mind to whom he will, as Matth. 7. 22. and restraine their wils as pleaseth himselfe.

what men are] God putteth this question, not that he needeth information; but to draw from them a ground of his treaty and proceeding with him, as he dealt with Adam, Gen. 3. 9. and with Cain, Gen. 4. 9.

V. 12. God said] God warned him in a dreame that he should not consent to Balaks wicked request.

V. 16. let nothing] The wicked seek by all meanes to promote their naughty purposes, though they know that God is against them.

V. 17. great honour] He thinks Balaams ambition would be be bribed with honour, though he were not so covetous as to be wonne with rewards.

V. 19. more] He knew he could doe nothing without the Lords leave and helpe; and he hoped yet that God might yeeld to him, and then for advantage and advancement, he would yeeld to the King of Moab.

V. 22. kindled] God granted his request in his wrath, being angry with his motion against his revealed will, vers. 12, 13, 32. and for that (though God bade him) he went upon his owne Errand with a minde (for gaine, or glory) to curse his peculiar people, whom he had blessed, vers. 21. See Chap. 11. vers. 19, & 20.

V. 24. the Angel] Appearing to him the second time, in another place.

V. 28. opened] Gave her power to speake; or the Angel of the Lord formed his owne words by the mouth of the Asse, as the Devil did his, by the mouth of the Serpent, Gen. 3. So at this time the Asse was wiser then her rider, though a Prophet; according to that, 1 Cor. 1. 27.

V. 29. a sword] The Apostle chargeth this Prophet with madnesse, 2 Pet. 2. 16. And it is plaine his present anger was a fit of madnesse; for else the strangenesse of the speech, being no lesse then miraculous, might have affected him with feare, and have made him as patient as his beast; but his fury was his frenzy, and in his fit he cals for a sword to be put into the hands of a mad man, to kill his Asse for saving his life from the sword of the Angel.

V. 31. opened the eyes] For whose eyes the Lord doth not open, they can neither see his anger, nor his love. The Angel appearing in a visible shape to the Asse, was not seene by Balaam, till the Lord opened his eyes, which (as to that object) were as shut, or blinde; though not to other things, Luk. 24. 16.

V. 33. slaine thee] For thou wouldest have slaine thine Asse, for going a little aside from thy way; how much more doest thou deserve to be killed, for going so crosse and contrary to Gods will?

V. 36. border of Arnon] Neere to the place where the Israelites were incamped.

V. 40. offered oxen] Or slew oxen and sheepe. Offering implieth usually sacrificing, though the same word be used also for killing onely; and so the killing might be for a present to entertaine Balaam, and the Princes, and Elders of Moab and Midian together: and as sacrifices to God, were attended and followed sometimes, with feastings among men; so was it with Idolaters, the Devil and his servants being Apes in imitation of God, and his servants for outward observances. See Num. 23. 1. & Chap. 25. 1, 2.

V. 41. high places of Baal] To a Chappel built to Baal on Mount Abarim, which divided the Moabites from the Kingdome of Sihon and Og. Idolaters set their sinne on high, being no more ashamed to serve Idols, then the godly to doe service, or offer sacrifice to the true God. In the Plaine neere this Mount, the people of Israel pitched their Tents.

CHAP. XXIII.

Vers. 1. Seven altars] He builds altars to consult with God, he should first have consulted with God about the building of his altars.

V. 2. Balak and Balaam] Among the Gentiles, Kings oftimes used to sacrifice, as did the Priests.

offered] It is not said to whom they offered; but it seemeth it was not to Chemosh, the god of the Moabites, Chap. 21. 29. but to the God that spake unto Balaam, ver. 4.

V. 4. met Balaam] In some evident apparition, whereby he might know who it was that spake to him.

I have offered] He would now bribe God with sacrifices, (as the King of Moab would doe him with offers of reward, and worship) to turne the blessing of his people into curses.

V. 5. thus shalt thou speake] As it followeth, vers. 8, &c.

V. 7. of the East] Aram, or Syria; of which name there were divers Countries, but this is that which was called Aram Naharim, or according to the Greekes, Mesopotamia. Joseph. Antiq. lib. 4. cap. 6. Both which words note the situation of it betwixt two rivers; and the rivers are Tigris and Euphrates. This Aram is in situation East-ward from the land of Moab. See Deut. 23. 4. & Isa. 2. 6.

V. 8. How shall I curse] How easie a thing is it to wagge a wicked tongue? yet without Gods leave, neither King nor Prophet can have so much power against his people: How easie is it for him to binde their hands to the peace, who so bindes their tongues to the good behaviour towards them, as to make them fall to blessing, when they would be cursing?

V. 9. dwell alone] They shall have their Religion and Lawes apart, not communicating therein with other Nations, Esther 3. 8.

among the nations] Among the profane or idolatrous Nations; severed from them as Gods peculiar people.

V. 10. dust of Jacob] The infinite multitude of Jacobs or Israels posteritie are as the dust of the earth, Gen. 13. 16.

let me die] He would be like the godly in an happy death, but he cared not to be like them in an holy life; but his end is not like to be the same with theirs, unlesse he walke the same way with them, Prov. 11. 7. Numb. 31. 8.

V. 13. but the utmost part] Chap. 22. vers. 41. There are the same words without the word but; The meaning is, that in his former prospect, Cha. 22. he so saw the utmost part, and that he saw on each side, and the middle within; but here he had but a view of a part of the utmost part, and he would have him curse that in the name of the whole.

not see them all] For being so many as to be compared to the dust of the earth, too many for the fourth part of them to be counted, vers. 10. the number might dismay him; therefore he must see but a part, and in that curse the whole.

V. 14. Pisgah] Is a place of height or exaltation, and so is taken for an hill, in generall; yet there was an hill in the Land of Moab called Pisgah in particular, Deut. 3. 27. & Chap. 34. vers. 1.

V. 19. hath he spoken] He hath said I shall not curse, and if he said it, he will make me make good what he hath said; and I cannot say more or lesse in this matter, then he is pleased to put into my mouth, vers. 20.

V. 20. to blesse] The blessing as from Balaam, was vaine; because he was a wicked man; but as he was commanded by God to blesse, so it was not vaine, though he were a wicked man.

V. 21. He hath not beheld iniquitie in Jacob, neither hath he seen perverseneſſe in Israel] The divers readings of these words, and the abuse of them to countenance some new conceipts tending to corruption in Doctrine, and dissoluteneſſe of life, hath made the clearing of them somewhat difficult: If we should take them for the words of Balaam (as a wicked man loving the wages of unrighteousnesse, and desirous to curse where the Lord had blessed) we might passe them over without any great scruple, nor need we be sollicitous to suit them with an Orthodox exposition; But they are generally conceived to be the words, not so much of Balaam, as of the holy Spirit, which overruled the spirit, at least the tongue of the mad Prophet, and made him speake the wisdome of God in a mystery; which some hereticall Novellists would turne to a mystery of iniquitie, supposing the meaning of the words to be; That God saw no sinne at all in Jacob, nor any transgression in Israel. For refutation of which wicked Glosse, we are to distinguish of the ambiguities of termes in this Sentence, whereof the parts are, 1. The Persons. 2. That which is attributed to them. 1. For the Persons, they are two, God and Jacob, or Israel. For the first, there is no doubt, but the first word hee referreth to God, called El, vers. 19. & in the 21. verse Jehovah. 2. For the other Person, it is noted by two Titles Jacob and Israel: for the great Patriarch of that Nation had those two names, and in this order, for he was first called Jacob, and afterward Israel, of which names you may read, Gen. 25. 26. & 32. 28. and the reason of them, Gen. 27. 36. & Chap. 32. 28. by both may be understood either the person of Jacob or Israel, or his posteritie; and the posteritie may be conceived under a double distinction, the one as taken totally for the whole body of the people; or particularly, for some eminent persons among their Tribes: the other distinction is, that it may be taken subjectively or objectively; subjectively, as supposing Israel to be the subject in whom that evill is inherent; or objectively, that it is object against which that is committed. This for the persons; Now for the attributes they are various according to the difference of the persons to whom they are ascribed; as to God seeing, and that may be interpreted three wayes: 1. For a sensible apprehension; 2. For an intellectuall contemplation; 3. For a morall approbation. Secondly, for that which is attributed to Jacob or Israel, all that is set down under two Titles, iniquitie and perverseneſſe, of which the Originall words are to be explained, and for them, the former of them rendered Iniquitie is Aven, and Aven signifieth, as Schindler sheweth, Pentaglot. col. 38. First of all, griefe, sorrow, sadnesse, Gen. 35. 18. Secondly, it signifieth strength, Gen. 49. 3. Deut. 21. 17. Thirdly, violent strength, injury, injustice, (which causeth griefe also) and iniquitie, Job 11. 14. Prov. 30. 20. Psal. 5. 5. Fourthly, some take it for some hainous iniquitie for kinde or for degree; in particular, for idolatry, and for an idol in particular, Esa. 66. 3. as our translation hath it, and so the Chaldee renders it, and Schindl. Pentagl. col. 39. but Arias Montanus translates it vanitie, and there may well be a communication of these two, for an idol is nothing in the world, 1 Cor. 8. 4. and so we finde that Bethel when it had been the habitation of the golden Calfe, 1 King. 12. 28, 29. afterwards was called not Bethel, but Beth-aven, that is, the house of vanitie, Hos. 4. 15. the like sense is to be given it upon the same ground, Amos 5. 5. The other word which is here turned perverseneſſe;

verſeneſſe, is Hhamal or Ghnamal, which ſignifieth toyleſome labour or moleſtation of the body and minde, both paſſively, Pſal. 25.18. & 73. 5. and actively, Pſal. 94. 20. & 55. 11. & 7. 15. ſo according to the Greeke verſion; and the French expreſſeth it by extortion.
